THE (New Montreux)
SERMONS
OF M. IOHN CALVIN

Vpon the fifth booke of Moses called Deuteronomie:

Faithfully gathered word for word as he preached them in open Pulpet;

Together with a preface of the Ministers of the Church of Geneua, and an admonishment made by the Deacons there.

Also there are annexed two profitable Tables, the one containing the chiefe matter; the other the places of Scripture herein alledged.

Translated out of French by ARTHVR GOLDING.

AT LONDON, Printed by Henry Middleton for THOMAS WOODCOCKE.

Anno Domini 1583.

To all the faithfull which hold the holie faith of the true Catholike Church, and generallie to all Christian Readers: Greeting in Iesus Christ our Lord and GOD. Amen.

It is not without cause, that the psalme speaking of the great benefits which GOD had bestowed vpon the Lewes, among whom was his Church at that time, doth cheefly magnifie the grace which he had vttered towards them in deliuering vnto them the sure rule of his seruice, the true maner of good life, & the right way of saluation, aswell by the writings of Moses and other his seruants, as also by the liuely voyce of them agreeing with their writings. For without that all the abundance and prosperitie which they could haue had, had bene but as records against them to haue increased still the measure of their condemnation. Therefore hauing spoken of Gods defending of the gates of the holy citie Ierusalem, of his blessing vpon the inhabitants thereof, of the peace and quietnesse that was in all castles about it, and of his carefulnesse in his seruice, the loadstarre to life, the opener of our vnderstanding, and the gouernour of our wits: the faithfull following whereof is the way to welfare, the procurer of peace, the path of true pleasure, the entrie of immortalitie, and the harbourer of happinesse. Or, if we haue an eye to the maner of the deliuering thereof, it is most woonderful, accompanied with many great myracles, signes, and tokens, and honoured with the glorie and maiestie of Gods owne presence. If to the intent of the Lawe giuen; it is the repaying and reforming of man according to the Image of his maker, in true holinesse and righteousnesse. If to the end of the Lawe, it is to drine vs vnto Christ, that by him wee might be saued. If to the obedience which it requireth; it is altogether spirituall, holie & euerlasting. All which things are not onelie great, but the greatest that can be, and fuller of maiestie and glorie than can be expressed or conceived by man. Again, if we haue an eye to the partie by whose seruice and ministry this law was published; hee was a man peculiarie chosen of God, indued with most excellent giftes, full of the holy Ghost, such a prophet as neuer had his like, (Christ onlie excepted) a figure of Christ, familiar with God, a perfect paterne of a good gouernour, and a verie father of his Commonweale. Or if we haue an eye to the parties to whom it was deliuered; they were a people whom God had purposely chosen, redeemed, and deliuered from most miserable thraldome, to the intent to be their King, and to dwell among them, and that they should be vnto him a holie people and a royall Priesthoode for euer: which things are surelie most excellent and singular prerogatiues. And as for the Preacher of these Sermons, by whom the sayde things are laide forth, and expounded to the better vnderstanding of the Reader: it is well known, that for the manifold talents and excellent giftes which God had bestowed vpon him, and for his diligent and most painfull employing of the same to the beating downe of Idolatrie and superstition, so the winning of folke vnto God, and to the edifying of Christs flock: he was in his lifetime, and yet still is, a man of great reputation and renowne. As for mine owne trauell in translating this worke, I humbly submit the iudgement and censure thereof to your Lordships fauourable acceptation, the obtainement whereof shall greatlie increasemy gladnesse in that I haue done any thing whereby the Church of GOD is or may bee any what edified. Written the xxj. of December, 1582.

Your good Lordships most humble abovvaies at Commaundement,

ARTHUR GOLDING.

heede to their wordes, that they may go forward in Christianitie: it is full certaine that therein he comprehendeth Moses as the foremost of them al. And in as much as he wrote of Iesus Christ, as Christ himself auoucheth in expresse words in y<sup>e</sup> fifth Chapter of S. Iohn: it may well be concluded ( according also as saith the Apostle to the Hebrewes) that his speaking and writing was to beare record of the things that were to be spoken afterward, namely by the son of God & his Apostles, as we read them written in the new Testament. Now among the books of Moses, al such as can skil of the wil easily grant, that as Deuteronomie is the last, so it teacheth whereto the other books tend, shewing the meane how to fare the better by them, yea and containing as it were the summe of the. Therefore it is very likely, that that was the cause which moued our welbeloued brother or rather good father Master Iohn Caluin, that most faithfull minister of the Gospell of Iesus Christ, to preach and expound the same in the Church, because that by his setting forth thereof, he should after a sort cõprehend the other next three also, so farre forth as the vnderstanding of them should be needfull for the people. His sermons therefore were faithfully gathered in order, like as his sermons were which he preached vpon other books of y<sup>e</sup> scripture, wherof many haue beene printed here already. And in the meane time til all the rest of his sermons may by Gods helpe be brought to light, it hath seemed good that these same should be put forth first in the meane while: the impression wherof should not neede any commendation or preface, but that the long continuance of custome requireth it. For as many as haue heard true report of the person and skil of that good man Master Iohn Caluin, wil be sufficiently drawne to the reading of his sermons, by finding his name here set vnto them: assuring themselues that they shal not finde any thing in them, but such as agree with Gods spirite, that is to say profitable, good, and holy things. As touching the principall and notablest points that are to be found here, there might very well be made a rehearfall of them, to giue the readers some tast of the whole booke of the said sermons, at their first entry. But forasmuch as it is better that euery man should hie him to the reading of them, and to heare the preacher himself speake as it were in his owne person, we purpose not to enter into such discourse, which might peraduenture be somewhat with the longest. Onely we will touch one point, wherof some word hath beene cast forth already heretofore: that is to wit, that this booke of Moses beeing well read and vnderstood, doth shew sufficiently who they be that holde the true religion, and resolueth a question wherof men leeme partly to doubt yet at this day, and partly to determine ouer boldly after their owne fancie, against the expresse word of God. We speake not here of Turks, Iewes, Saracens, and such other, which are commonly called Miscreants, or Infidels as they be in deede: but we speake of the nations which haue long time borne the renowne of Christianitie, because that through Gods gracious goodnes some signe of holy baptisme hath continued amongst them, and Iesus Christ is professed there in name. We see then that there is great variance nowadaies. The one faith, that Christianitie requireth, that in seruing God, men should, or at leastwise may haue images, & set them vp in churches for Christian people: the other side vpholdeth on the contrary part, that it is a vilanous defiling of religion, and an vtter forsaking of the true Christianitie, and a taking in of a bastard religion in steede of it. If men can finde in their hearts to heare Moses speake in this booke (as they needes must, or else be conuicted of renouncing God the Father and his soune our Lord Iesus Christ who is very God and euerlasting life, and of resisting the holie Ghost) he sheweth the thing which he forgetteth not in his other bookes also, namelic that God could neuer away to be serued after that fashion, but euermore expresselic forbade images in case of Religion, and threatened his owne people with horrible punishments, if they held not themselves contented with that single order, to rest thereupon without attempting any further. Were there no more but the onely text of the second commandement, it were ynough and sufficient. For (as Moses wrote in the twentieth of Exodus, and hath rehearsed againe at large in the fifth of this present booke,) God saith, Thou shalt not make to thy selfe any grauen image. And to the intent that no man should vse any wrangling by standing vpon the particular, he addeth, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heauen above, or in earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth. Moreouer, to shew that he will not haue raen to yeelde them any part of his seruice, how little soeuer it be: he addeth, Thou shalt not bowe downe to them, nor worship them. Last of all he addeth a horrible and dreadfull threate, that he will take vengeance vpon the transgressors and their children, to the thirde and fourth generation. This commaundement then is set downe in so expresse termes, that the matter is as manifest as may be. And therefore the lusty laddes that haue helde the people in error, perceyuing the great gaine which they and their bellies reaped, by this meane or occasion of mingling Images with religion, haue ouerleapt this second commaundement, and diuided the last commaundement into two, that the full number of tenne might be found there still. Bur besides this, Moses deliuereth so often expositions of it euen in this selfesame booke, and setteth forth so liuely and precise discourses therof: that if any man will not giue place thereunto in these dayes, this prouerbe may well be verified of him, that none is so deafe as he that will not heare: and that he is ouerpreached vnto, which hath no care to doe well. For as touching the arguments which some haue alledged for that purpose in these latter yeres, although they haue bene oftentimes chafed and rechafed, yet are they so starke and stiffe for colde, that they haue no force nor might to giue any holinesse to Images in the Temples of the Christians, as hath bene well shewed to the forementioned gainelayers in due time and place, and shall still hereafter whensoever they list to giue care. And as for vs, we haue on the one side, to continue in praying vnto God, that he vouchsafe to touch the heartes of the people and of their leaders and gouernours, effectually by his holy spirite, so as they may well vnderstande this point, which would be a good meane to appease Gods wrath, and to open a great gappe to the reformation that might insue from better to better. And on the other side it standeth vs on hand to strengthen our selues in the infallible certaintie of the holy Christian religion and true Apostolike faith, which we holde with the other holy Churches that are reformed. And as concerning this point, no doubt but it is an inuincible fortresse vnto vs, that we are able to shewe forth this thing from age to age: namely, first of all that the true Apostolike and Primatiue Church had no Images at all in their holy meetings, whether it were in Temples or elsewhere, ne willed the people to kneele downe to them, or to set them vp before them. That likewise aforesometimes when the Church was gouerned by the Lewes, both after their returne from Babylon, and euen in the captiuitie it selfe, the good and faithfull sort did warily keepe themselves from it: that if yee mount vp yet higher, the true Prophetes were commended for crying out against Images and the manner of worshipping of Images, and the holy Kinges were well liked of God for pulling downe, razing out, and rooting vp the occasions of such superstitions among their people: that the good Iudges and gouernours had doone likewise before the kings: and that euen Moses himselfe (who was auncienter than any others that haue left any bookes of long time) spake of them after the same manner, and dealt accordingly thereto, because he had both the administration of the doctrine and the gouernement of the common weale together, which was not ordinarie afterwarde in others. Yee see then, yee see howe the true Catholike Church is on their side which follow the Gospell, whatsoeuer men list to say to the contrarie. And nowe that we be deliuered from outward Idolatrie, it standeth vs on hande to looke neerely to our selues, that our life bee agreeable to the purenesse of Gods seruice, so as wee shunne Couctousnesse (which also is named Idolatrie) ambition, excesse and vanitie of the worlde, taking good heede (as much as is possible for vs to doe) that no man bee withdrawne from the Gospell and the loue thereof through our vndiscreeete dealing: to the ende it may appeare that whereas the disobedient doe seeke excuses and take occasion of stumbling, they doe it without any cause giuen on our behalfe. Furthermore the strange blindness or rather wilfull stubbornesse which is to be seene nowadaies in a number of them that call themselves Christians, ought to make vs so much the earnest in praying, to the end aforesaid, that is to wit, that our good God may vouchsafe to worke so effectually in the hearts of all men, as well great as small, Kings, Princes, and other gouernors, as their subiects: as the wretched world may not alwaies continue at the A, B, C of Christianitie, without learning any further. We terme the second commandement an A, B, C, bicause it is and euer hath been one of the first and surest groundes of the true religion, and is (as ye would say) a necessary appurtenance to the first commandement. For whosoever mingleth the worshipping of Images with the seruing of God, doth as much as in him lyeth, to set forth other gods than the true God. And it is a maruelous thing, that the world becommeth neuer the wiser for all the great number of punishments which God hath powred out, and stil powreth out to warne vs to come to repentance. For within these fiftie yeres, since which time God of his grace hath set vp the preaching of the gospell in diuers places: besides his sufficient smiting of the people of the earth with his rodde in former yeres, he hath also made them feele his scourges diuers wayes, in punishing their contempt of his holy doctrine. Yet notwithstanding we hope that God (conditionally that we continue in prayer) wil one day shew by more abundant effect, that he hath heard the prayers of his sillie faithfull ones, euen in this behalfe, and draw the rest of his churches out of the miserable desolation, which hath lasted now too long by reason of our finnes. And hereof we haue good hanfel in the furtherance that he hath giuen already to the gospell, notwithstanding that Satan hath spit out his spite against it on all sides. For albeeit that the holy doctrine doe founde in the eares of the poore people in diuers places, the sacraments of Baptisme and of the Lords supper be mitted purely, the praises of God doing shirely to mens vnderstanding in the psalms and songs, and the father is woorshipped in the name of Iesus Christ our hope and the onely aduocate of wretched sinners: yet are there a number which hope, or at leastwise wish, that as the sunne hath been eclipsed this yere, so there might be an euerlasting eclips of the preaching of the gospell: but by the helpe of God and of our great day sunne Iesus Christ, they shalbe deceaued. And in the meane time while Gods kingdome may enlarge it selfe stil further out here below, we pray al such as are desirous to haue the vnderstanding and vse of the doctrine of this godlie booke of Moses, to take the paine to reade these present Sermons of the faithfull seruaunt of God Master Iohn Caluin: of whom like as the speche and pen serued the Church as long as he liued, (whatsoeuer some Balaams bable to the contrarie:) so we beleue y his writings wil by Gods help edifie al men continually hereafter. Moreouer it were a needles thing to warne men, and to pray them to take heede that they make not the Printer to lose the fruite of his labour, and his cost which he was faine to be at in the printing of this present worke, were it not for the greedie and vnstiable couetousnesse that reigneth nowadaies in men of that trade, by reason whereof diuerse times they ouerrun one another without any honestie or conscience. Surelie we had forborne to giue this warning, and had leuer to haue let the Printers alone to deal with their owne peculiar cases, as they listed among themselves, if it were not for one reason which inforceth vs to fall purpose into that matter: which is, that in some places they not onelie print againe in such hast the bookes of that excellent teacher Master Iohn Caluin that were erst printed here, as it is pitifull to see the workmanship of the imprinting so ill corrected: but also moreover, some haue gone so farre, as to print in Master Caluins name the vnperfect copies which they haue gotten by peccemeale or stealth where they could come by them. We know not what they meane by it: but surelie they doe wrong both to the author, and to the Church of God. Yea and they open a gappe which may be dangerous in time to come, whensoever any man will foyst in bookes stained with wicked doctrine, to make them passe forth vnder the name of a faithful seruaunt of God, as euery man knoweth hath bin done to diuerse ancient doctors of the Church: Insomuch that euen S. Paul wara-neth the Thessalonians to beware of letters & Epistles that were made to run abroad in the Churches [vnder his name], as though he had been the very author of them, Truely, so long as it shall please our good God to preferue vs & the Church wherein he of his grace hath made vs shepherds: it is our duetic to find fault with such as wil needs father any other bookes vpon Caluin than his owne, or by their falsc additions corrupt those which he hath made truelie. But yet is it much better to prevent y<sup>e</sup> danger aforehand, & to eschew the occasions thereof as neere as may be. Wherefore, in Gods name we beseech all such as haue any written copies, specially of the said authors sermons, not yet printed: to forbear the putting of them forth, vntill they haue first bin duely conferred with the originals, which are here in y<sup>e</sup> keeping of one of the Deacons. And as touching them that are minded to print againe any worke of y<sup>e</sup> said author that is printed already, we pray them to haue regard to the common profit & edifying of the Church, rather than to the furtherance of their owne peculiar gaine.

And here withal we commend you all to the grace of God. The Lorde Iesus be with you, who is of y<sup>e</sup> seed of Dauid according to the flesh, the verie son of the holy virgin Marie, the very Christ, & God blessed for euermore as S. Paul hath expresse written, and so haue we alwayes beleued & do beleue all of vs. Amen. Deare brethren, we commend our selues to your prayers. From Geneva this moneth of Ianuarie, 1567.

Your humble brethren, the Ministers of Gods word.

The Deacons and disposers of the goods that are giuen in almes to the poore strangers that are come hither into the cite of Geneva for Gods wolds sake: to all faithfull and true Christians, helth and peace from our Lord Iesus.

IN so much as our good & faithfull shepherds the ministers of this church, peraduenture fearing to be ouerlong or tedious to their readers, do in the end of their preface inade to these sermons, but (as it were glancinglie) touch one point, which notwithstanding is of great importance for the poore strangers that are come into this towne: to our seeming it would be thought neither amisse nor strange, if we for our duties sake, declared the thing somewhat more at large, which they spake in one word, concerning the printing of the sermons of our late good father M. Iohn Caluin. Nowe then, for the better vnderstanding of the whole, you must consider that from the yere of our Lord 1; 49 forth on, the late M. Dennis Ragueneau being fled hither, gaue himselfe to the gathering of the Sermons word for word, which M. Iohn Caluin did ordinarily make: and that with such swiftnes and cunning, through the vse of certain notes & shapcs, as few words escaped him euen from the beginning. Which thing when they saw which had the charge of the poore strangers at that time: although they had not any great sum of money wherwith to releuee the present needs: yet failed they not to take such order, that y<sup>e</sup> said writer was entertained after a sort with some part of the same money, to the intent he might haue wherewith to maintaine himselfe and his small familie, while he gaue himselfe wholly to the gathering of these sermons, & to the ingrossing of them faire againe afterward, because he should spare no time to any other businesse than that. He vndertooke the charge, with condition that he should copie out all the Sermons faire, into bookes of a certain scantling or syfe whereby they should be made, which he should deliuer to one of the Deacons to be faithfully kept, as a peculiar benefite belonging to the poore strangers, at whole charges the saide writer was intertained. And forasmuch as afterward the number of the faithfull increased daillie in the realme of France, and many that could not heare the liuely voice of this good seruant of God in the pulpit, were desirous at leastwise to see the things in writing, which he preached openly, and praied to be made partakers of them: in that onelic respect and none other, the writer had leaue giuen him to deliuer copies of whatsoeuer sermons were demanded of him, to the end that such as received them at his hand, might profite themselves by the doctrine of them, howbeit vpon condition that the same should not afterward in any wise preiudice or hinder the poore, for whom

whom the originall copies were carefully preferred (as hath bene said), that they might be printed to the common benefite of them all, whensoever it should please God to giue them abilitie, as was done afterward. By reason hereof some which had gotten out copies that came to whole books, taking opportunity of the liberty which our Lord of his infinite goodnesse and mercie gaue to the realme of Fraunce, sticke not to cause some of them to be printed, not onely to the great hinderance of the poore, who by y<sup>e</sup> meanes were bereft of the thing that belonged vnto them: but also to the disaduantage of all the faithfull, inasmuch as those copies were neuer overlooked & conferred with the originalls, which are kept diligently here: which is such a deede as we know not how to name in one word, and therefore do willingly leaue the iudgement thereof to such as see wheteto it tendeth, and what sequelle may insue of it. For if euery man may haue libertie to print at his pleasure, al the sermons which he can pretend to haue bin so gathered, whereas notwithstanding they haue not bin conferred with the originall copies which we haue here: who shall let them to falsifie the most part of the true sermons by adding or diminishing, and by mangling or nipping of them after their owne fancie? It is well known that the abusing of the names of Gods good and faithfull seruants, is no new thing. If such libertie be giuen, & men deale as they haue begun, in this case: what wil come of it, but that y<sup>e</sup> doctrine of saluation shall stand as it were at the courtesie of such as will make their owne deuices flie through the whole world, vnder pretence of setting the name of this good man to the titles of them? For sufficient prooffe whereof, and to the end it should not be thought that we do wrongfully & without cause giue inkling of the things aforesaid: we will briefly touch what hath bin doone herein a fewe yeares since; namely that there haue bin certaine men, who without any forecast, haue bin so bolde as to cause certain sermons vpon the Prophet Danyel to be printed, without vouchsafing to see the originall copie, or to be aduertised thereof from hence. And to couer their whole doings the better, they alledge that their so doing was for the glorie of God. Yea marie: but that should haue bene done without the hinderance of other men. And it is a wonder to see how such folke dare boast themselues to be of the reformed religion. For to thinke that Papists are the doers thereof, there is no likelihood at all, considering the hatred that they beare to that good man. Therefore it is not to be doubted, but that they be of that sort which crowd themselues into the number of the faithfull, and of the reformed Churches, and will needs seeme to be great Christians. But let all men iudge whether it be a dealing meeete for them that feare God, so to filch away y<sup>e</sup> things that belong to the poore members of our Lord Iesus Christ. And this thing bringeth vs to the remembrance of another deede, whereof we be constrained to make our moane likewise to the whole world, to the end that such as wittingly withhold the goods of our poore folke, may aduise themselues better than they haue done hitherto, and make amends as they ought to do. The matter concerneth them that print or daylie cause to be printed, or which haue heretofore printed the Psalmes made into meeter by M. Beza. There is none of them all but he knoweth right wel, that he cannot with good conscience, ne ought also to print them, without paying to our poore folke the thing that was promised and agreed vpon before they were euer once put in print, as all of them can well ynough tell. Yet notwithstanding the most part, and in maner all that haue had to do with that matter, would neuer yet pay aught of that which they ought to haue doone, for any thing that could be tolde them of it. But let them vaunt themselues to be good and faithfull Christians as much as they list: they shall not easilie make men beleue that they haue so much conscience as the Papists had in that behalfe. For how ignorant so euer the Papistes were, yet would they neither take away nor withhold the things which they knew to belong to the poore. And therefore it is a great shame, that they which professe the Gospell, which resort to the Christian congregations, which receiue the holie supper of our Lord Iesus, and (to be short) which will needs be mustered in the aray of the faithfull, do no better, bethinke themselues of the discharging of their duties. Surely we maruell how they dare prease to the open Sermons, whete they be so often condemned, at leastwise in generalitie. But it is seene by experience, that they be no whit moued with them, but doe fall asleepe, inso much that they thinke not that the great number of threatnings which are vttered against all such as behaue not themselues trustilie towards their neighbours, and against such as withhold other mens goods, specially the goods that are appointed to the poore, do concerne themselves. Yet notwithstanding, howsoeuer any of them both doe take the matter, they shall one day be faine to feele to their cost, that whatsoeuer is doone to the poore members of the sonne of God, he taketh it to be done to his owne selfe, so great store doth he set by them. Wherefore it were nowe high time that all such folke should looke more neerely to themselves and to their ductie, and not suffer themselves to be so caried away by their vnuly fancies and affections, which hinder them to make any conscience in withholding the poore folkes goods, and in turning them to their owne priuate v<sup>s</sup>e. As touching some other sort of Printers, which sticke not to print againe immediatlie the copies that others haue printed at their great charges afore, and by that meanes doe bring to passe, that many good men dare not adventure to print (among other things), a great number of the same authors sermons which are here, and belong to our poore folke: the warning that is giuen thereof in the preface of the said ministers, (notwithstanding that it be verie short) ought well to restrain them, and to make it seeme to the world, that there is at leastwise as much modestie & honestie in them, as there appeareth to be in the wretched Papists that deale with the Art of printing. For they would be ashamed to haue it cast in their teeth, that they had inroched one vpon another. Thus much haue we thought good to adde in this behalfe, assuring our selues that none of the faithfull and of such as feare God will thinke amisse of this warning, which we haue bin driuen to make in discharge of our ductie, which ought alone to be a sufficient excuse for vs if any man should think that the things which we haue vttered are not material. But we hope that al men of good discretion & sound vnderstanding, will iudge that we neither could nor should haue let slip so good an occasion as this, to warne such as print or cause things to be printed, to do their duties towards the poore. At Geneua the 12. of Februarie, 1567.

The same Deacons.

IT falleth out well to the purpose, that when the former warning was ended, there remained a voide roome to put in this addition, which shall serue for a confirmation of the things that were spoken concerning the former maner of dealing, vsed in the printing of the sermons vpon Danyel. For immediatly vpon the getting of a copie printed at Rochell by Bartilmew Berton, in the yeare of our Lord 1565, he that nameth himselfe the first author of the putting of them abroade, gaue forth that they had bin kept as it were in prison by the space of twelue years or thereabouts, & that the Author of them had suppressed them and held them fast locked vp, with such other like sayings deuised of his owne braine. But therein he sheweth insufficientlie by what meanes he came by those copies, which were neuer kept backe from any that were desirous to haue them, so it were but to reade them, albeit that they were kept from such as would copie them out to defraud our poore folke of the benefite that was lawfully gotten for them. And whereas he reporteth that the copie which he caused to be imprinted, fell into the hands of a friend of his: he should at leastwise haue inquired how that came to passe, and by what title his friend made it his owne, so as he durst cause it to be printed. But it is apparant how great his fault was against our poore folk: and what pretence so euer he make, no man can doubt what zeale or affection draue him to do that thing. By the way, God grant that the Readers be not disappointed of the profit which they should reape of those sermons, & that they be put forth according as they were gathered, wherof we neither can nor wil iudge, vntill we haue read them throughly, & conferred them with the originall copies which we haue heere, which thing we will by Gods helpe doe ere it be long, that we may faithfully warne the readers thereof, against the next imprinting of them againe.

The first part of the document discusses the current state of affairs and the need for a new approach to the problem. The second part describes the proposed solution and the steps that will be taken to implement it. The third part discusses the expected results and the potential benefits of the proposed solution. The fourth part discusses the risks and challenges associated with the proposed solution.

The proposed solution is a comprehensive approach that addresses the root causes of the problem. It involves a series of steps that will be taken over a period of six months. The first step is to conduct a detailed analysis of the problem.
 This will involve gathering data and conducting interviews with key stakeholders. The second step is to develop a detailed plan of action. This will involve identifying the specific actions that need to be taken and the resources that will be required. The third step is to implement the plan. This will involve monitoring progress and making adjustments as needed.

THE SERMONS

of Master Iohn Caluin

upon the fifth booke of Moses called Deuteronomie.

On Wednesday the xx. of March. 1555.

The first Sermon upon the first Chapter.

Here followe the wordes which Moses spake to all Israell beyond Iordan, in the wildernesse, in the plaine against the red sea, betweene Pharan and Tophell, and Laban, and Hazerot, and Dizahab.

2 There are eleuen iourneyes from Horeb by the way of Mount Scir, to Cades barne.

3 And it came to passe, that in the fortieth yeere, the first day of the eleuenth moneth, Moses spake to the children of Israell, according to all that euer the Lorde had commanded him to say vnto them.

When God caused his lawe to be publisht in mount Horeb, after his coueyng of the people out of the thral dome of Egypt, there by he shewed to what ende and purpose he had had pitie of his people in deliuering them: that is to wit, to be glorified thereby, as the marke wherunto we alio must referre all the gracious gifts which he bestoweth vpon vs. Zacharie the father of S. Iohn Baptist, speaking of the great and souereigne deliuerance that was made in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, saith, that Gods discharging of vs from the hand and tyranny of our enemies, was to the end that we should serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse all our life long. And this is a doctrine very common throughout the whole holy scripture. And for the same cause also is it sayd by the prophet Esay, that God hath created a people to set forth his prayse. Seeing then that the Lawe was giuen to the people, to make them perceiue why they had bin deliuered from the bondage of Egypt: it was good reason that they should yeelde themselves to the obeying of God, which had shewed himselfe their redeemer in such wise. Neuertheless the people were vntowarde, and could not finde in their hartes to yeelde themselves plyable, in hearkening to the things that were tolde them in the name of their God. Yet ought they of right to haue done it, seeing they had receiued so great & so inestimable a benefit. For God had vttered the mightie strength of his arme in deliuering the people. There fore ought they to haue considered thus: Behold, our God hath magnified himselfe towards vs after a wonderfull fashion, we haue had as it were a visible presence of his maiestie, if the heauens had opened and God had shewed himselfe to our eyes, we should not haue had a greater and more vndoubted assurance of his pteerensse vnto vs, to warrant vs that he was our leader. Seeing then that God is so come downe vnto vs, and that it hath pleased him to impart his goodnesse in such wise vnto vs: is it not reason that we should be wholly his? And seeing he hath reached out his hand to redeem vs, ought we not to be his heritage, inasmuch as he hath gotten vs by his owne mightie power? Had the people had one drop of wisdome, they should haue yeilded themselves with all humilitie, to receiue the doctrine that was preached to them by Moses. Yea and whar authoritie deserued the Law, which was so confirmed with such store of miracles? For when God had chosen Moses to be his prophet: he not onely commaunded him to speake, but also tooke him vp into the mountaine, and separated him from the companie of men, to the ende that when he should come to set forth his Law, the people should accept him as an Angell, and not as a mortal creature. He was there fortie daies without cut eating or drinking, to shewe that he was exempted from the common sort of men, and that God had taken him vp as it were into his heavenly glorie. And when he came downe againe, his face shone as bright as it had bene another sunne. Where as men attribute hornes vnto him, it is saide that he had sunne beames rounde about him, that is to say, he had such a brightnesse as he was faine to weare a yeele before his face. And whereto serued that, but to ratifie and confirme the lawe which God had giuen and committed vnto him, and to make it knowne that it was not a doctrine deuised by a mortall man? Besides this, there was thundering and lightning and trumpets founding [in the aire,] so as it seemed that all the world should haue gone to wracke: and there was not any place either high or lowe, which did not shake & tremble when God went about to vtter his voice.

Seeing then that the lawe was so well sealed and with such maiestic: must it not needs be that the people were worse than blockes, when they hearkened not to their God speaking with such force? Yet for all that, the lawe was despised, & euen while God was preparing of his seruauit Moses to set it forth, behold, the people coulde not abide to tarie the bringing of Gods wil vnto them, but made them a Calfe of golde, and fell flatly to setting vp of new superstitions, euen in spite of God, of whose power and sauour they had so often had experience. Againe, when the law was once giuen, the people trembled & quaked for a while, in somuch that they were enforced to say, if God speake any more vnto vs we be vtterly vndone: there is no way vs but death: and therewith they stood aloofe from y<sup>e</sup> mountaine, according also as they were commanded. It should seeme then that there was some reuerence. But the issue shewed that all was but hypocrisy, and it appeared well that they were not rightly touched in their hearts, nor had taken liuely root to profit in the doctrine. We see then in effect, that when God did first of al publish his law, it had verie skant & slender hearing, & the people were not yet disposed to submit theselues to it as they should haue done. By reason wherof God was faine to returne to it againe, notwithstanding that the people deserued not that God should cause Moses to serue still in that office. For was it not reason that they which had so despised the liuing God, should thenceforth haue ben left destitute of all truth: that y<sup>e</sup> diuel might haue taken possession of them? that hee might haue made them starke blinde: that they might haue starued for want of liuely foode? and that they should haue ben poysoned with all the deceites and errors of Satan? Of a truth, y<sup>e</sup> people were well worthy of such reward. But God had not an eye to the deserts of that wretched people. For he surmounted their sinnes with his infinite goodnes, & proceeded in teaching of the still, euen when they had shewed theselues most stubborne & rebellious, and had matched their vnthankfulness with such willfulness, as there seemed to bee no way to come neere them to doe them good: & yet did God euē then vse his mercie, and vouchsafed to assay whether the people would suffer themselves to be brought backe againe or no. And that is the cause why Moses did not onely set forth the Law in Horeb, but also vsed vehement exhortations therewithall, because he saw the lightnes and vnconstancy of the people, indeuoring and streiming himselfe by all means to bring them backe againe vnto God.

Yet notwithstanding, God vouchsafed still, that in the end there should be an abridgement of the law, & that the same should be confirmed as it is conteined in this booke. And that is the cause why it is intituled Deuteronomie, which is as much to say as the Law repeated. Not that God bringeth in any newe thing here: but for that he blameth the people for their foresaid lewdnes, shewing that his doctrine had ben ill obserued, like as when children do not profit wel at schole, but play the grosse Asses, when they haue spent a whole yeare and are neuer the further forward, they must bee faine to returne againe to their Apic. And why? For notwithstanding that they haue heard their schoolemaister, yet they be as ignorant as they were before, in somuch that in teede of learning any thing, a man shall see them continue still alwayes at one staye. So then, our Lorde vpbraideth the people of Israel with their brutish dullnesse, in repeating his lawe vnto them the second time. As if hee should say, Ye be verie ill scholers: for I haue trained you sufficiently in my Lawe. The doctrine comprehended in the ten commandments conteineth the full perfection of all wisdom. Yet hath not all this bene ynough for you, because yee haue no cares at all, or else they be too long, so that of all this while nothing is entered into your hearts, or rather yee haue not hearde what I saide vnto you. And therefore you must bee faine to turne backe againe to your first lesson, and to your Apic: I must be faine to open my Lawe againe vnto you, and to chawe your meate vnto you, that you may digest it the better. And because yee be so dull vpon the spurre, I must be faine to prick you forward, and to vse greater force to waken you, that the hardnes of heart which I see in you may be amended.

Thus we see in effect, what the groundwork of this Booke is: that is to wit, that God hauing erit already giuen his law to the people of Israel, and warranted it as much as was requisite: vouchsafed because of their hardhardnesse & stubborneesse, to giue a larger declaration therof, than Moses had put in writing as yet. And hee hath not onely opened the meaning of the Law, but also exhorted the people to keepe it better than they had done before, vpbraiding them with their lewdnesse in that they had bene so vnrule and so ill disposed, to receiue the instruction of their maker and redeemer at the first time. Nowe, all the thinges that wee see in this people, belong vnto vs. And would GOD wee resembled not the Iewes in any thing, I meane as in these pointes. But if euer there were too much hardenesse of hearte in them, howe much more is it to be founde in vs nowadayes? For our Lorde hath spoken more than once vnto vs. If the law were well warranted in the hand of Moses, hath the gospel bin lesse confirmed vnto vs in these daies? If the earth were shaken then, if the trumpets sounded, if the lightnings flew abroad, if thunder clappes were heard: the Gospel also shaketh both heauen and earth as now, as it is saide by the Prophet Aggeus, and alleaged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrews. Also we heare what S. Paul speake of it in the third Chapter of the second Epistle to the Corinthians. The message of life and saluation (saith he) which is contained in the Gospel, must needs be glorified as much or moie than the doctrine of the Lawe, which was dead of it selfe and coulde not giue men life.

Heb. 12. 26.

2<sup>a</sup> Cor. 3. 7.

Seeing then that God hath vttered so great mercie in the Gospel, and his preaching of it vnto vs hath not bin for once and away, but wee haue our eares beaten with it euery day: let vs see if we be good scholars, and whether we beare in minde the things that haue bene tolde vs, so as God is honoured at our hands. Are we linked vnto him? Alas, it is nothing so. For continue God neuer so much in setting forth his doctrine vnto vs, wherein we do as it were fee his heart laid open vnto vs: yet are we locked vp on our part, and we giue him no entrance, but rather wee be gadding and full of vanitie, and we be so farre off from being touched with the doctrine, and from receiuing it to holde our selues wholly to it, & to set our minds vpon it, and to be fed in right obedience to it: that rather the cleane contrarie is to be seene. And so wee see that the Iewes are as a looking glasse wherein we may behold our owne rudenesse, frowardnesse, vnthankfulnesse, & wilful stubbornnesse against God.

Yea and we be more blame worthe than the Iewes for giuing so slender care to our God. For as I haue tolde you already, the people of olde tyme ought to haue thought themselves bounde vnto God, and to haue yeelded and giuen ouer themselves wholly to his seruice, because he had deliuered them from the thraldome of Egypt. And what is it that God hath rid vs from now at this tyme? Is it but from the tyranny of a mortal man, or of some earthly people? No, but we know that he hath ransomed vs from the chains of sin and of the dæuel, he hath pulled vs out of the gulfe of death, he hath drawne vs out of the dungeons of hell, and he hath not onely promised vs the land of Chanaan for an inheritance, but also opened the heauens vnto vs in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, who hath taken possession thereof for vs, to the end we might be sure that our abiding place & euerlasting rest is made ready for vs there. Seeing then that God hath bound vs in such wise vnto him, is not our vnthankfulness double, yea or rather an hundredfold more shamefull, than the vnthankfulness of the people of olde tyme?

Furthermore, whereas God hath vouchsafed to hold on in the office of instructing, to teache the people which was so rude & rebellious: let vs assure our selues that he doeth the like towards vs nowadaies. Yea & it is requisite for vs, he should so doe (as I haue saide already): or else what would become of it? But sith wee see that God is so gracious as not to bee weary of teaching vs; though it boote vs not at the first day, nor at the first yeare: let vs assure our selues of his dealing wth vs after that sorte from day to day, is no more than needeth. And it is a point well worth the marking. For men haue itching eares, and be desirous to heare alwaies new things: & if the doctrine of God be preached and set forth to them euery day, it becōmeth irksome to them & they wax weary of it. For to their seeming it is enough to speake of it once or twice, and they consider not how they forget the things which they ought to haue borne away. So then, to the end we wax not weary of the doctrine that is preached vnto vs: let vs marke that it is needful for vs that God should put vs still in minde of the things that he hath taught vs already: for our wits are short towards him. And therefore let vs be thinke our selues well, & whensoever it is tolde vs that there is but one God in whom we be, & that he is not only our maker, but also our father, & hath adopted vs to be his children, and moreouer tied vs to him by a much streiter band, in that he hath redeemed vs with the blood of his owne sonne: whensoever we be put in minde of these things: although we haue heard of them before, yet let vs not say, tush, these things haue bene preached to vs long ago: but let euery of vs enter into himselfe, & examine himselfe, & see whether the things we haue heard heretofore, be well printed in our hearts. Let vs then enter into account after this sort. And why? For if we remembered well, we be set in this world to the end to glorifie our god: would we not be more mindful to discharge our dutie towards him? If we considered the fatherly kindenesse that hee vseth in calling vs his children, and which he hath shewed towards vs once already in adopting of vs in the person of his own sonne: & if we mark how dearly we cost our Lord Iesus Christ whē he did set vs free frō endlesse death: should we not be desirous to giue our selues wholly to our God? Should we not be moued to yeelde him another manner of reuerence than we do? Now therefore, whensoever we be vnruly, so as we world carie vs away, & we be intangled in earthly lusts & affections: let vs assure our selues it is because we haue not giuen good eare to our God, when he spake to vs, nor taken heede to it when he warned vs of our duties. And therefore it is good for vs to be put in minde of it, and to haue God come backe againe to vs & to say vnto vs, yee were ched folke, what mane yee? When I haue once taught you: the doctrine that is contained in my word ought to sōke thoroughly into you, and yet notwithstanding you be still like little babes. This is it (say I) which we haue to doe, to the end we may finde saour in Gods worde, and be nourished therewith as with our ordinarie foode. We must assure our selues, that the appointing of this order that we should be preached vnto all the tyme of our life, and that wee should haue our eares beaten continually with the things, which we ought to vnderstande in one or two monethes, is not in vaine.

Furthermore, if we doe not so, if we subdue not our selues to the hearing of our God, & suffer our selues to be taught by him all the time of our life: let vs be afraid least he execute the vengeance vpon vs, which he threatened once to the people of Israell by his Prophet Esay, saying that his lawe should be to them as a booke shut vp and sealed, so as if it were offered to men of skill, they should say, the letters are not to be seene, there is a scale vpon then, I cannot tell what is within it: And if it were offered to ignorant and vnlearned men: they should answer, we be not booke learned, we neuer went to schoole, we cannot reade. Loe how God punisheth all such as walke on in their brutishnesse, and wil neuer submit themselves vnto him. True it is, that God beareth with vs for a time, and that (as I said afore) although we be worthy to be cut off from his house, & to be bereft of his truth, so as he should giue vs vp into Sathans handes, to be blinded with lies and to be paysoned by him: yet notwithstanding, our God hauing pittie vpon vs, assayeth still to winne vs to himselfe. But if we continue still in refusing the good doctrine, and become neuer the better for it at the yeares ende, then we were at the first day: at length this threat must needs light vpon vs, namely that we shall take the holy scripture in our hands, and haue it preached vnto vs, and yet we shall vnderstande neuer a whitte of it, though we be neuer so witty: and that when as the vnlearned shall say, I wote not what it meaneth, it shall also bee as a letter folded vp and fast sealed, euen to them that are skillfullest and sharpest wited. Wherefore let vs stande in feare of such threatnings: and least our light bee turned into darkenesse, let vs take holde of the opportunite which God offereth vs nowadaies, that we may fare the better by his conuall speaking to vs after that sort.

True it is that the thinges which are contained here were spoken to the people of Israell, and might haue profited them in their time: but yet doe they also belong vnto vs at this day, and they be as a common treasure whereof God will haue vs to be partakers. For as wee shall see hereafter, the Lawe was not onely giuen as a rule whereby to lue well: but also grounded vpon the couenant which God had made with Abraham and his offspring. And by vertue of that couenant, we are become heires of the heauenly kingdome, as sheweth Saint Paul. To seeke our saluation, wee must resort to the promise that was made to our father Abraham: and to bee of the householde of Gods Church and members of our Lorde Iesus Christ, we must be of Abrahams spirituall linage. Herby then wee see, that this doctrine not onely serued till the coming of the sonne of God: but also serueth still to our behoofe, and shall doe so still to the worlds ende. For it is a building that is founded vpon the euerglasting couenant, from whence as from the true fountaine thereof, our saluation springeth as I said afore.

same is spoken also vnto vs: and wee must receiue it in such wise, as wee must vnderstande that God hath shed forth his grace through the whole worlde by the coming of his onely sonne, and builded vp the heauenly Ierusalem, to the ende that we should all be linked together in one holy brotherhoode, to cal vp to him as our father all with one mouth. Sith it is so then, let vs vnderstand that it is good reason that wee should giue ouer our selues vnto him, and that he should hold vs in awe, and enjoy vs, & that like as he hath vouchsafed to giue himselfe vnto vs, so we on our side should be wholly his, to yeelde him the dutie which children owe to their father: and that when we be negligent and slowe therein, we should at least wise be moued with the exhortations that are conteyned in this booke: and that seeing God calleth vpon vs so earnestly, we should not stop our eares against him but euerie man awake, and one of vs rebuke another. Yea and that if we were wise, we should not tarry till God quickened vs vp so sharply, but rather preuent him, howbeit that we ought to be moued to be ashamed of our lewdnesse and to returne againe vnto God, at leastwise when hee falleth to correcting of vs by thundering out his threatnings against vs, and by vpbroyding of vs with our sinnes. Thus see yett what wee haue to marke in generall vpon this booke.

Nowe let vs come to the text that I haue rehearsed afore. These are the wordes which Moses spake vnto the people in the wilderness in the plaine (or champion grounds) beyond Jordan, euen from Horeb vnto the places here before rehearsed. Herein we haue to note, that God intended to rebuke the people for their not keeping of the lawe, which had not onely bin preached to them by mouth, but also set downe in writing: as if a man should make an instrument or conueyance of some bargaine betwene two parties. And God himselfe vouchsafed to ingraue his Lawe (at leastwise the ten commaundments) in two tables, to the intent they might be remembered the better. For albeit that the doctrine was cleere ynough of itselfe, & god had provided to preserve it from forgetting: yet did not the people receiue it. Therefore as nowe he casteth them in the teeth, as if it should be saide vnto vs, Behold, the Gospell of our Lorde Iesus Christ hauing bin preached with such power and maiestie, is also lesen in writing. Wee haue had the Gospell preached vnto vs nowe a long time, euen the same Gospell which is set downe vnto vs in Bookes. Therefore are we too vnexcusable, if we cannot tell what God saith to vs there. If a man should speake after that maner, it were a blaming of vs for our beastlinesse. Again, if it should be saide that where as we were baptized in the name of the sonne of God, when we were babes, yett wee knowe him not: that being come to mans citate, wee be so brutish that after so often hearing of Gods truth, yett we be still but noouies in it: and that we can scarcely tell what it is, or at leastwise haue neuer taken any tast of it at all: such maner of openiung of the gospell vnto vs, how it hath bin offered vs of long time & after diuers fashions, were as a framing of an inditement against vs. So now likewise Moses, to witness openly to the people that they had shewed themselves too vnthankfull towards God, saith expressly: These are the words that I vttered and preached vnto you from time to time, not for a day or two, but euer since the publishing of the Lawe in the mountaine of Horeb. And because you shewed your selues so ill disposed, I haue not ceased to put you still in remembrance of the things that you had heard before. Now let vs learne hereby, to bee the better quickened vp, and sith wee see it hath bin Gods will, that euen from the beginning of the worlde, his truth should haue some certaine record among men, and that he hath not ceased to set it forth still, and to raise it vp againe when men haue gone about to burie it by their spitefulnesse: let vs acknowledge his wonderfull goodnes in so doing, and be moued to receiue the things that shall be spoken vnto vs. Marke that for one poynt.

But to the end wee may bee the better disposed: we must also weigh this saying which Moses addeth, Euen according to all that God had commanded him. Nowe by this preface he sheweth, that he brought not any thing of his owne, ne meant to subdue the people to his owne dotages, nor to any thing that he could haue deuised of his owne reason and wisdom as in respect of men, but that he did simply obey God, as a faithfull & trustie messenger, without swauing aside either to the right hand or to the left. Nowe if Moses who had so excellent a record as wee see, in such that God neuer raised vp any Prophet equall or like vnto him: If Moses prince of all Prophets next vnto Iesus Christ, and the chiefe of all vnder the olde Lawe, doe neuertheless protest that he putteth not forth any thing of his owne head: I pray you what shall others do? May they compare themselves with him? No: but put the case that they be as highly aduanced and placed as he: yet notwithstanding, the furthest that they ought to goe, is but to set forth the things that God hath commanded them. And therefore let vs learne, that here all mens traditions are shut out of doores. And hereby it appeareth, that the Pope hath marred and corrupted the whole order of the Church, by his taking vpō him to be a Law-maker, to deuise lawes & to lay them vpon mens necks at his owne pleasure, to forge & contriue newe articles of faith, and to inforce men to receiue his inuentions as the holy scriptures. Was not this a turning of all things vpside downe? Yes: for God neuer ment that men should haue such libertie and sway in the Church, as to set forth any of their owne inuentions there, but he himselfe onely will be heard there. Marke that for one point.

But there is yet more in it: for it is not onely said that Moses spake according to the charge that was giuen him: but according to all that euer the Lord had commanded him. He sheweth then, y he did not as it were make a med'ie, or seeke by any means to bring in what he himselfe thought good, or to separate himself from Gods worde: but that he followed Gods will from point to point to the vttermost. Ye see then that there was a great singleness of heart in Moses, insomuch as he not only gaue forth the things that he had receiued at Gods hand: but also continued throughout in the same singleness of keeping himselfe within his boundes, so as he ranged not abroad to say, this is good, or that is good, thus or thus doe I thinke of this matter. No: but in all points he ruled himselfe according to the charge of his commission, vttering his message according as he had heard God speake it. Marke that for the second point.

Nowe herewithall wee be warned to receiue the doctrine here conteined, not as conning from a mortall man. In speaking vnto vs, Moses protesteth that he himselfe is not our schoole-maister though he rehearseth our lesson vnto vs; but that must alwayes be God and his holy spirit, that must be euen our Lord Iesus Christ, in whose hand the Lawe was giuen, as S. Paul speaketh of him. For he was the gouernour of the Church at all times. Ye see then that the thing which we haue to consider here, is that we must reuerently and carefully receiue the things that were giue vs by the hand of Moses. Not that we may think that any thing came of himselfe: but that God sent him and ordered him to be his instrument, so that when we receiue any thing that was spoken by Moses, wee may warrant our selues that God guideth an gouerneth vs by his owne pure truth, and that our faith resteth not vpon men nor vpon any mortall creature, but that the liuing God is the author, and will also be the warrant thereof.

Now after he hath spoken so, he saith, This he rehearseth of all these things was in the fortieth yeere, the eleuenth month, and the first day of the month. As if it had bene saide, when the people drewe nigh to the land of promise and were readie to enter into it: then did he reapeate the Lawe of God, and make an abridgement of it, and rehearse all the exhortations and warnings which he had made to them before. Not that Moses had helde his peace and kepiensence euer since [the giuing of the Lawe in] Horeb: for as I haue tolde you already, he ceased not to call vpon the people continually, because he sawe them so wilfull and stubborn, and so stiffnecked and hard to be bowed. But in the end, forasmuch as he drewe neere to his long home, and had as good as finished his race and should anon after depart out of this world, (as wee shall see that he did in the end of this booke;) he made a rehearsall of all the doctrine that he had preached by the space of fortie yeeres, of purpose: to raise & confirme it in such wise to the people, as their successours might bee edified by it after his decease, and the profit thereof redound vnto vs at this day, and wee be taught all the lessons conteyned therein. Neuertheless, wee see moreouer, that the people ought ere that time to haue bin thoroughly subdued, and to haue submitted themselves better vnto God than they did. For fortie yeeres are a good reasonable time to dispose a man to goodnesse if euer he will be good.

When wee see a man hath bin let chawe vpon the bridle by the space of fortie yeeres, and yet will giue eare to no counsell nor reason: it is then high time or neuer for him to bethinke himself, and to fall to better disposition and ripenesse of discretion than he hath done afore, if he be told of his fault. God therefore perceiuing his people to be so wilde, gaue them time and respit to become tame, & led them about by ſpace of fortie yeeres, which thing he did to the for their stubbornnesse sake, as we shall see hereafter. But ſ thing that we haue to marke at this present, is no more but that the cause why Moses spake now vnto the people, was for that he drew neere his ende, and God was at the point to take him out of the worlde, and also for that the people should be as it were renewed at that time. For it had bin saide to them that had refused to enter into the land of Chanaan, Your carckelles shall rotte here in the wildernesse, you be not worthy to possesse the inheritance which your God promised to his seruaut Abraham. Ye see then that when the people were after a sort renewed at the ende of fortie yeeres, then did Moses set forth the Lawe againe, and speake to them according to Gods commaundement. Nowe must we also apply this to our instruction. That is to say, when loeuer we haue bin so farre ouerfeene, as not to profit in Gods schoole, so as we continue Asses still, or at leastwise haue but pickled vpon the doctrine, without suffering it to worke any true liuelinesse in vs: if God subdue vs and prepare vs better by continuance of time to hearkē vnto him: let vs aduise our selues to make our profit therof, & let vs not be vncommendable. For what shal wee win by it in the end if we continue still vnruely, and be so stubbornne that God cannot ouermaister vs? Shall it not turne to our confusion? Therefore as well publikely as priuately, let vs bethinke vs to profite our selues by this warning, & if wee haue ill receiued the doctrine that hath bin long preached vnto vs heretofore: let vs consider that inasmuch as God doth not yet giue vs ouer, but vseth such mercy towards vs: his desire is to drawe vs still vnto him, and therefore let vs prepare our selues, that we become not stubbornne against him, but rather let vs learne to be meeke, and let vs giue way to the doctrine, that it may enter into our mindes and heartes. Thus ye see how we ought to behaue our selues.

Furthermore when God visiteth vs and sendeth vs any corrections, to humble vs and to abate our ouergreat vnrthankfulness and forwardnes: let vs turne ouer a newe leafe and returne againe vnto him. And when wee haue done so generally for the whole body of the Church: let euery of vs do the like priuately on his owne behalfe. If any man haue runne astray, and neuer knowne God aright, nor neuer submitted himselfe fully to the wholesome doctrine: if God visit him by sicknes, pouertie, or otherwise howsoeuer it bee: let him bethinke himselfe and say, Alas, the Gospell hath bene preached vnto me, but howe haue I receiued it of all this while? I knew not my God, and although I professed my selfe to bee one of his numbers, yet did it not touche me at the heart. Howe shall I nowe doe therefore? Sith it is Gods will to haue me to bee his scholler, it is good reason that I yeelde my selfe wholly to him, and that I reuerence him as I ought to doe my soueraigne maister and teacher. Thus ye see that the thing wherof wee be warned in this text: is that when we see how our Lordē indeuoureth by all meanes to bring vs backe, and is minded to beate downe the rebelliousnesse that is in vs, by rebuking our vices: & that he gathereth vs home to him when he sees vs go astray, to the intent to reforme vs: we must not kicke against the spur as I saide, but rather meekely and mildly seeke to bee governed by him, & to profit more and more in his word.

Now let vs cast our selues downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable faulces which we cease not to commit dayly against his Maiestie: praying him to vouchsafe to wipe them out through his free goodnes, and therewithall to bring vs home againe to him, and to worke fo in vs by his holy spirit, as our consciences may be mortified from day to day, vntill we be ridde quite and cleane of all the corruptions of our flesh, to be clothed againe with his righteousnes. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Munday the xxv. of March. 1555.

3 And it came to passe, that in the fortieth yeere, the first day of the eleuenth moneth, Moses spake to the children of Israel, according to all the things that the Lord had commaunded him to say vnto them:

4 After he had overcome Schon King of the Amorrhys which dwelt in He-febon, and Og King of Basan which dwelt at Astaroth in Édrai.

5 And so Moses began to declare the Lawe beyond Iordan in the lande of Moab, saying:

6 The Lord our God spake to vs in Mount Horeb, saying: you haue taried long ynough at this mountaine.

7 Turne ye and depart, that ye may goe to the hill of the Amorrhites, and to all the countries there aboutes, in the plaine about the hill, and in the lowe places towards the South, and vpon the shore of the red sea, in the land of Chanaan, and in Libanus vnto the Riuer, euen the great riuer of Euphrates.

8 Looke about ye, I haue set the land before you, enter into it and possesse the land which the Lord God hath sworne to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to giue it to them and to their seede after them.

Haue tolde you alreadie, that the doctrine which is contained here, is not the beginning of a matter, as though it had bin new to the people, and that God had not taught it them before: but a confirmation of the things that Moses had spoken in Horeb, because the people had not profited so well by them as they ought to haue done. And it hath bin declared further, that God had spent the space of fortie yeeres or thereaboutes in subduing y<sup>e</sup> people, which had bin ouertubborne euen at the very first, & could in no wise abide to take his yoke. For this cause is the time set out here, to the end that wee might vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> the people ought to haue framed themselves to some obedience, after so hard & so long a chastisement as they had endured. Besides this, there is one other circumstance: which is, that y<sup>e</sup> people had alreadie had some victorie against Oging of Basan and his neighbours, wherein they had had experience of Gods fauour. And I told you y<sup>e</sup> those things were worthy to be marked, because they bee the two meanes whereby God draweth men vnto him, to win them withal and to inioy them. On the one side he chastiseth them, to y<sup>e</sup> ende they may learne to obey him as being vnder his hand & authoritie: and on the other side he vseth gentleness, to make men in loue with him, and to consider that nothing is better for them, than to sticke to him at whose hand they looke for all welfare. And both of these are expressed here by Moses: namely that y<sup>e</sup> people had lingered in the desert fortie yeeres long, feeling Gods horrible punishment for their shrinking away fro him: & yet neuertheles, had overcome Schon & Og & such like kings, howbeit not by their own power, but by Gods helpe.

Wherefore let vs learne to profite our selues, as well by Gods scourges when wee bee beaten with them for offending him, as also by his benefites whereby he witnesseth that he is ready to receiue men to his mercie, and to haue pittie vpon them when they returne vnto him. And let such knowledge make vs teachable. Whensoever it pleaseth God to preache his worde vnto vs, let vs haue our heares open to receiue it: let vs be plyable to followe that which he commaundeth: & to be short, let vs yeeld our selues wholly to his goodnesse.

Now it is said here, that Moses expanded the Lawe, howbeit that in y<sup>e</sup> Hebrew there is a word which signifieth, that he vouchsafed, or listeth to declare the Lawe. And that serueth to shew still that he performed his commission with a free courage or willing minde. For it may bee that he whom God commandeth to teache his people, shall discharge himselfe thereof, howbeit but as it were by force: & such necessitie, if a man haue an eye vnto it, doth alwayes import a constraint, so that all that euer we can doe shall be nothing worth. And here the ministers of Gods worde are exhorted, not onely to preach the word that is committed vnto them: but also to do it with a free and cheerefull courage, according also to S. Paul auoweth it to be requisite, and protesteth that he himselfe did so. And therefore let the example as well of Moses as of S. Paul, serue for our instruction.

Moreouer, let vs marke also, that vnder this saying, of the Lawe, is comprehended the rehearsal of the things that Moses intended to make, of the things that were come to passe. True it is that the word Law betokeneth teaching and instruction: and therefore a man might aske at the first blush, what instruction there is in the report of stories. It is not without cause, y<sup>e</sup> Moses hath sayde so. For when God putteth vs in remembrance of our finnes, and of the benefites y<sup>e</sup> he hath bestowed vpon vs, and of the chastisements which wee haue receiued at his hand: it ought to teache vs to our profit. Gods setting of such things afore vs, is not to make vs pastime: but to the end, that on the one side we should be the better disposed to serue him, and to continue in his feare: and on the other side be trained and allured to resort vnto him, and to seeke all our welfare and all that euer belongeth to our saluation, at his hand. We see then howe it is not without cause, that Moses giueth the name of Lawe or Doctrine, to the rehearsal of things that were come to passe, for so much as by y<sup>e</sup> meanes the people ought to haue bin led vnto God, & to haue bin the better edified. And therefore let vs marke, that when we reade the holy stories, it is not onely to know what hath bin done, to y<sup>e</sup> end we may be able to talke of it: but to the end we should behold there the grace of God towards y<sup>e</sup> faithful in deliuering them. Also we must consider after what maner he hath exercised his children in patience, and made them to wade through many afflictions, that their faith might bee tryed: and consequently how he neuer forsaketh them at the point of neede and necessitie. Again we must consider the iustice that he hath executed in punishing such as haue done amisse and transgressed his will. If we haue such regarde and discretion with vs, the Stories will bee as an instruction to vs. For wee shall bee better assured by them, than if GOD did but simply tell vs what he requireth at our handes and what our ductie is. That then is the thing which we haue to beare in minde : & it will be a good preparatiue for vs to the things that are to ensue. For otherwise it would be thought an vnprofitable thing, to knowe that Moses chose men to gouerne the people, & that on the other side the people followed not Gods commaundement in pursuing their enemies, & such other like things. What haue wee to doe with those things, will some men say? But forasmuch as we be admonished, that all these things concerne our instruction: we must put them to such vse as nothing may be vnoccupied: assuring our selues that God procured our benefite & welfare, when he did set forth to vs as it were in a painted table, the things that belong vnto vs at this day, and may be applyed to our instruction.

Whereas it is sayde, That it is ynough that the people had taried a certaine time at Mount Horeb: herein wee see that Gods deliuering of the children out of the bondage of Egypt, was not to lay the brydle in their necke that they might go where they listid; but to be their gouernour for euer. And that is a thing that ought to stand vs in goodstead. For wee haue a president, that when God receiueh vs for his people, it is not only for a day or twaine, but of purpose to haue a continuall care of vs to the end, so as he will not leaue vs in the middle way, but proceede in guiding of vs still, vntill wee bee come to our right marke. And this is a verie profitable doctrine: for what a thing were it, if God should once giue vs his lawe, and set vs in a good trade: and afterwarde let vs alone without looking to vs? Wee see our owne frailtye, inso much that wee could not steppe one steppe but wee should bee readie to stumble or to start out of the way, and the incomberaunces are so manie and so great, as it would bee vnpossible for vs to ouercome them, if God assisted vs not. And therefore let vs learne, that when God hath once adopted vs, and chosen vs to bee of his flocke: it is not to the end we shoulde but only take a taste of his grace for a day: but to the end that he will continue in doing vs good: and his taking of vs into his government, is of purpose neuer to giue vs ouer, so as wee shall alwayes be vnder his protection, and he will neuer cease to increafe the good turnes that we haue felt and receiued of him, vntill wee bee come to the full perfection. Forasmuch then as wee see that he neuer leaueh his worke vnperfected, but goeth through with it, as it is sayde in the Psalme: it wrought well to cause vs to magnifie his goodnesse, and to encourage vs to giue ouer our selues wholly vnto him. And the same belongeth to the spirituall health of our soules, according to this saying of S. Paul in the first Chapter to the Philippians, that he which hath begun the good worke will goe through with it, euen vnto the day of our Lord Iesus Christ. Wherefore let vs marke, that whereas God declareh here by the mouth of Moses, that the people had taried long ynough about mount Horeb, and that he would haue them to goe forward: thereby he doth vs to vnderstand, that seeing he hath deliuered vs from the dungcon of death, and from the bondage of the diuell and of sinne: we shall haue him to be our guide for euer, so we hearken to his voyce, and doubt not but he thinketh vpon vs and will continually leade vs full.

Moreover he sayeth, Let the people turne and draw towards the hill of the Amorrites, & from thence inuade and possesse the land of Chanaan, whether it be the playne Countries, or the downes, or the desertes, or the sea coastes: for the land (saith he) is before you: that is to say at your commaundement, I haue deliuered it into your handes, nothing shall keepe yee from the possession of it, if it bee not long of your felues. Why so? For I haue sworne (sayeth he) to your fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob: I haue promised to giue it for an inheritance to them and to their seede after their decesse. Here first of all wee must marke the order that is set downe: for God sheweth the cause why he gaue that people the land [of Chanaan:] namely for his promise sake. And thereby he betokeneth, that the lande belonged not to them as by way of conquest through their owne power, nor yet for any desert of theirs, but only of free gift. God then assigneth this title to the children of Israel, and telleth them that they shall bee as much bound to his meere goodnesse when they bee brought into the land of Chanaan, [as they were before.] And in dede the orbe that Moses speakes of here, was made foure hundred and thirtie yeeres afore, euen in the person of Abraham, before any of them was borne. Seeing then that GOD had promised them the land, euen before they had done eyther good or euill, and before they were borne: it may bee concluded therevpon, that their possessing of it was not for any worthinesse of theirs, as though God had bene beholder to them for some seruice: but because he had made them heires of it, through his owne free goodnesse. Nowe if this bee verified of the earthly heritage which the children of Israel had: what is to bee saide of the kingdome of heauen? Are wee able to compass it? Can wee deserue at Gods hand to bee partakers thereof? No: but contrariwise, it is of his meere goodnesse that we be brought in thither, and shall haue fruition of it at the last day: for surely all that is spoken of the land of Chanaan, must serue vs for a figure and shadowe.

Therefore when as God telleth the people that they gat it not by their owne power, and sendeth them backe to the promise that he had made long ago: it is to shewe vs that whereas he is our father, whereas wee be mainteined by him in this world, and whereas wee looke for a better and more excellent life than this: we must not dreame vpon any desert or power of our owne, but attribute all wholly to his meere free goodnesse, in that he vttereth the infinite treasures of his grace and loue towards vs. Thus much haue we to remember in the first place.

Furthermore whereas here is mention made of an orbe: let vs note that God vouchsafed to stoop so lowe to the infirmities of the people, as to put them out of all doubt, by swearing by his owne name: and so doeth he nowe likewise towards wardes vs. For he is not contented to speake onely, and to telvs what he will haue vs to do: but he also confirmeth his promises with a solemne othe. And why? Forasmuch as wee be inclined to vnbeliefe, and would euer be wauering if we were not well vnderpropped: therefore doeth he sweare to the ende to stablish vs the better.

Seeing then that God sweareth to vpholde our weakenesse: let vs consider, first that we be too vntoward, if we cannot beleue his single worde: and secondly that his goodnesse is inestimable, in that it pleaseth him to beare with vs, and to sweare for the confirming of our beliefe. And herewithall we haue to note also, that we must not seeke Gods will in the aire, but content our selues with his word; and that seeing it hath pleased him to shewe himselfe vnto vs, and to giue vs warrant of his will, we must holde vs to it, and rest wholly vpon it.

Now then, will wee bee sure that God will neuer faile vs, neither in this lyfe, nor after we bee gone hence? Will wee haue an infallible hope of the heauenly lyfe? Let vs haue our eye vpon the promises: let vs not wander here and there as a nomber doe, which are carryed away with sonde curiositie: but let it suffice vs that God hath certified and taught vs, that he wil not onely be a father to vs to guyde vs in this worlde, but also that hee will neuer leaue vs, so as wee shall alwayes be gouerned by him, and that when hee hath tryed our faith, wee shall haue full fruition of the things that are promised vs: and when wee bee once ridde of this mortall body, wee shall bee rayf'd vp againe, and inioy an immortalitie which is hidde from vs as now. Let vs content our selues (say I) with this word of Gods mouth for all other things, & let vs not scan after our owne foolish fancies how the matter shall goe: but haue God once spoken the worde, let vs holde vs to it. And that is it which Moses meant here, in saying, God sweare to your fathers.

Moreover wee must note, that the doctrine which is set forth in the name of God, serueth not for one age onely, but for all euer, and keepeth his force and strength continually. Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob were dead and rotten in the earth when these things were spoken: but yet the promise that God had made to them was aluae still. Although then that men bee mortall and transitorie: yet is Gods worde euerlasting. And if it bee the seede of the vncorruptible lyfe, needs must it bee endlesse and exempted from all corruption.

Therefore let vs marke, that Gods speaking in olde time, was not to the ende that his doctrine should be buryed after an age or twaine: but that it should be set before vs to the ende of the worlde, and we receiue it with all reuerence. Lykewise at this day, although the Prophets and Apostles be dead: yet doth GOD worke still by them, & the word that is brought among vs in these dayes, not onely hath his liuely force, but also quickeneth vs, and ma-keth vs to receiue the food of our soules by it. Our saluation must needs goe forward, and wee must needs be stablished in it, in such wise, as wee may ouercome the worlde and attaine to the kingdome of heauen. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde, when as mention is made here, of the promise that God sware to the auncient fathers that were dead long time afore.

And it is sayd expressly, that Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob were their fathers: to the ende that they might knowe themselves to bee the successors of the blessing that had bin promised. And therefore he addeth, that God had sworne to giue that land to Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, and to their offspring. As though Moses should say, that Gods promise is not disannulled, but must now presently take effect, and be accomplished in their persons. Hath God said so, saith he: Then must you consider, that he spake it not onely to your fathers which heard the promise, but also to [you which are] their offspring. For it is expressly sayd, that Abraham should teach his children the wayes, rightes, iudgements, and statutes of the Lord. Then wait for the children of Israel, to haue receiued the promise that had bin made in olde time to their fathers, as if God had spoken it within fresh remembrance. And in deede wee ought to rewey well this circumstance. For it is not to those only which were at the beginning of the Gospell, that God sayth, I receiue you for my people: but his will is that y<sup>e</sup> same doctrine should be preached still, to the worlds end. Let vs note then, that we also are comprehended with them that heard the word of god at the beginning. And forasmuch as his grace reacheth our vnto all men, and is common to all ages: it becometh vs to giue eare to it, seeing it is appointed and offered vnto vs [as well as to them.] And why? For it is not to S. Peter and to S. Paul onely, that God hath sayd, I am your Sauiour: but he hath ordeyned them to be messengers of his goodnes, that we might be taught by their mouth, and we doubt not but God will doe the lyke to vs as he did to them. Thus yee see what we haue to consider, when as it is sayd that God promised the land of Chanaan for an inheritance to the whole Inage of Abraham, and vnto them that should descend of his race.

And in very deede it behoued the people alwayes to come back to this saying: I am thy God and the God of thine offspring after thee. And againe vnto this, I am the Lord which sheweth mercie to a thousand generations: as we shall see hereafter. Now, this was not said for that one tyme onely, it must be accomplished nowadayes also. The let vs consider y<sup>e</sup> God hauing once p<sup>r</sup>o- mised y<sup>e</sup> warrant of our saluation, will haue it goe forward dayly, so as we should knowe y<sup>e</sup> he calleth vs to the possesing of his kingdome, & that in vs he calleth them y<sup>e</sup> are to come after vs: In somuch that y<sup>e</sup> children which come of Christians, are already chosen of God to be his flock & of his household, & God hath takē the to himselfe already, euen before they come out of their mothers wombe. Is not y<sup>e</sup> knowledg of such doctrine an excellent strengthening to vs, when we see that God hath giuen our saluation a ground to build vpon, before we were borne or created? yes.

But here it might be demanded how the land was promised to the fathers which neuer had possession of it? For wee knowe that Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob acknowledged themselves to be but sojourners there, and that they had not the Lordship of the land, but that they were as

Gen. 47. 9. poore wanderers, and were tossed too and fro, insomuch that euen their water was taken from them, so as they had not water to drinke, and not onely were kept from comming to the pits that had bin digged already, but also were put from water when they had digged pits by their owne labor and trauell. Where is then the promise of God which he made to Abraham, concerning the giuing of the land vnto him?

Gen. 22. 25. and 16. 15. Hereby we be put in minde of that which the A- 10

Heb. 11. 13. postle sayeth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes: that is to wit, that the auncient fathers had not an eye to the visible land: but onely tooke it as a representation of the euerlasting dwelling place where vnto God calleth them: Insomuch that although Abraham had not anie possession in the land of Chanaan, yet was he Lord & inauer of it neuertheless, howbeit that he held himselfe contented wth the only sight of God gaue him therof, to the end he might haue his heart lifted vp into heauen, and wayt to haue his euerlasting abode there. Thus to be shorte, the Lordship which Abraham had of the visible land, was spiritual. For although in mans opinion he had no whit at all of it, but was like to haue bin driue out of it euery day: yet possessed he the thing that God had promised him.

But now if we make comparison between Abraham and vs, haue we not greater cause to lift vp our hartes to the kingdome of heauen than he had, seeing we not onely haue a mirror or image of it set before vs by God, but also that Iesus Christ hath in his owne person opened vs such a way thither, as our faith, may well attaine to the glorie of God? Therefore ought we to be the better confirmed in the promise that God hath made vnto vs, of aduancing vs into his kingdome to enter into it as his lawfull heires therof.

And although wee doc but as it were 50
creepe on alfour here belowe vpon the earth, and our body is to vs as a corruptible and transitorie lodging, and we be weyed downe with these base things: yet must our true dwelling place needes be aboue, and wee our selues must needes be citizens of heauen and fellows with the Angels aforehand, and possesse the thing aforehand by faith and hope, which wee haue not as yet in very deede, as the holie fathers haue done afore vs, who not withstanding had not things opened so plainly & manifestly vnto them, as we haue nowe, nor nothing neere.

Thus see you the maner how Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob were not disappointed of the land which God promised to giue them, although they neuer had the full fruition thereof themselves, but waited patiently til the conuenient time were come, for God to put their successors in possession of it after their deceasse. Sith it is so, let vs walke on vpon eath in sufferance of many conflicts, looking only vpon the things that are promised vs, nor doubting but that we be sure of the benefite of them already, although we holde them not in our handes, ne behold them with our eyes. For why? God cannot faile in his promises.

But now let vs come to the ioyning together of the things which Moses setteth downe: for he saith, Drawe towards the land and possesse it, for it is at your commandment, according as God swore to your fathers. Here Moses matcheth Gods promises, with the exhortations which he himselfe maketh: for the true fashion of building when men are to be brought vnto God, that they may honor him & serue him & seek his kingdome, is to begin at his free promises, & to viewe that he preuenteth vs through his owne mere goodnes, which he palleth not whether we be good or no, & yet although we haue not deserued ought at his hand, yet doth hee of his mere free goodnesse come vnto vs, & bynde himselfe to vs without any cause why. Thus ye see at what end we must begin. Againe, men must be exhorted & warned not to despise such a benefite, but to receiue it, & therewithall to inforce and indeuer themselves to answer God when he calleth them. This is the order which wee must obserue in this text of Moses.

Drawe hence (sayth he) and march forward. As if he should say, Go to, your God hath called you longer time than you be aware of. For in deede, the promise of saluation was giuen vs before we were created; yea euen before the creation of the world did God choose vs, as S. Paul auoucheth: and againe he hath fetched vs backe to him, when we were as cattell gone astray. Loe how Gods mere free goodnesse sheweth it selfe. We cannot alledge here any strength or any worthynesse of our owne: We cannot say, oh, God hath payed vs our wages for our comming vnto him: There is no such thing at all. But at such time as we were forlorne and damned, our God opened vs the gate of saluation: when we were in Satans bondes, he did set vs free: when we were become his vtter enemies & were banished out of his kingdome, he made vs heires therof. Therefore lyke as he hath freely preuented vs, and sheweth vs that it is of his owne mere grace, that we can attayne to saluation: so we on our side must not be negligent and slothfull: but seeing he hath spoken vnto vs, we must also answer vnto him: seeing that he sayth, Go, march on, let vs be going our way out of hand.

When there is any talke of doing good or of seruing God, the Papiests imagine by and by that men earne the kingdome of heauen by their owne desertes or merites: but the holie scripture holdeth the cleane contrary order, as wee see here. For why? It is not sayde that men bynde God to them by their meritorious deedes: but after that the inheritance is set before them, and that of free gift: and after itis

1. Pet. 1. 25

it is shewed them, that nothing beareth sway in that behalfe but onely Gods goodnesse: then is it sayd vnto them, March forward. And so wee learne to doo good, and to giue our selues to the seruing of God, & to become holy through his righteousnesse: not of purpose to make him beholden vnto vs, but to followe his holy calling, least wee should reiect his grace, howbeit that we cannot stirre one finger without Gods working in vs by his hoлие spirit. For whereas it is sayd, Get ye hence and march forward: it is not for that the people was able so to doe: but when God hath once encouraged vs, he printeth his doctrine in our heartes, and to the intent the same should not be vnauailable, he quickeneth vs vp; and to be short, he worketh so mightily in vs, that after he hath once giuen vs willingnesse, hee giueth vs also performance therewithall, according as S. Paul auoucheth in the second to the Philippians. Yet for all this, wee must beare well in minde the thing that I haue touched alreadye: which is, that Gods offering of his grace vnto vs, is not to the end we should as it were fall asleepe and make none account of it: but to the ende wee should be quickened vp to doe good, according to this saying, that his goodnesse and loue which hee beareth towards men, is vttered to the intent to purchase him a holy people fit for good workes, and [to the end] that we should walke in all purenes, wayting for the discouerie of the lyfe which he hath promised vs. And if this had place vnder the shadowes of the lawe: much more must we doe it now in these dayes. So then, let vs marke well; that Gods setting of the infinite riches of his goodnesse and mercie afore vs and his opening of the gate of heauen vnto vs, is to the ende we should mount vp vnto him, and rid our selues of all earthly affections, seeking nothing but to lift vp our heartes on high, and to passe out of this worlde, and to be discharged of all bondes and fetters that hinder vs and hold vs back, inducouing with all our might to come vnto him, as they that know how this present lyfe is but as a race, and that men must not loyter and linger here, but rather go still forward according to gods calling of vs, who sayth, Come, Come, drawe neerer to me. And if wee goe to him, we shall no more be in daunger of wandering here and there, but we shall keepe on our way to the mark that God hath set before vs, and we wil neuer rest till wee be come thither.

Now herewithall, to the intent to encourage the people, Moses telleth them that they shall not trauele in vaine. Go (sayth he) and possesse the land: and that is one poynt more well worth the noting. For if we should bestowe our labor, & not knowe that we shall fare euer the better by seruing God: we would become lazie, and our hartes would sayle vs euey minute of an houre. But when we be sure that we runne not in vaine, and that God wil reach vs his hand, so as wee neede not to feare but our matters shall come to passe, though Satan streyne himselfe to hinder vs: when we stand vpon such a sure ground that our Lord will put vs in possession of the thinges that he offereth vs: it giueth vs an vincible courage and constancie to outstand all temptations.

And therefore let vs wey wel these wordes where he sayeth, Get ye hence and possesse the land. God sayeth not singly to his faithfull ones, goe your wayes, see what ye can doe, trye your strength, and in the meane while leaue them at all aduentures: no, but he sayeth to them, Go to possesse. As if he should say, doe but onely apply your selues to serue me; and let me alone with the doing of it. For I will worke after such a sort, as he that endeuoreth to followe me shall not lose his labor, he shall not take paine in vaine, I will make all his doings to prosper. That then is the thing that wee haue to marke vpon this streyne. And therefore what excuse is there for vs, if we followe not our Lord whether soeuer he call vs, considering that this voyce, Go and possesse, ought to sound in our eares? And if it were spoken for y land of Chanaan, much more shall it be auowed and verified still at this day. Wherefore whensoever we be slowe to obey God, loath to part from this worlde, or astonished with distresses: let vs enter into such thoughts as these: Alas, is it possible for vs to come vnto God? how may I ouercome so manie and so great distresses? It fare surmounteth all my power and strength. When we be so incombred and brought in perplexitic and doubt, let vs bethinke our selues thus: well, seeing it hath pleased God to shewe himselfe to me, it is good reason that I should be contented with the assurance that he hath giuen me, and with the experience of his goodnesse which hee hath made me to feele. And so must we passe on forward still, notwithstanding all the temptations of distrust that may come in our heads.

And for a further confirmation of our selues, let vs also take to vs this saying of his, I haue see the land before you: for it expresseth yet better how they should possesse it. If men haue an eye but to their owne power, and consider but their owne abilities: they may well distrust and vtterly despair. But when wee knowe how it is Gods office to giue vs the strength which we want of our selues, and to performe our saluation whereof he himselfe is the founder: that is the thing wherein lyeth our trust. And therefore without presuming any thing of our selues, let vs runne on with a cherefull courage; but yet let vs consider neuertheless therewithall, how it is God that vttereth his power for the working of our saluation, and that he is the author thereof, and reserueth the leading of vs to himselfe, in such sorte, as the possession thereof is already in his hand. Now if we intend to fare the better by his doctrine, first let vs put out of our mindes all vaine imaginations of our owne strength, of our owne freewill, and of all that euer men haue surmised. For those are the thinges wherewith the diuell hath made men drunken, and beguileth them still, by bearing them in hand that they can doe much of themselves. And we see how the Papists are puffed vp with that diuinish pryde yet still at this day. There is defanting among them of their owne Freewill, there is defanting of their owne forwardnesse: and yet as able folke as they be, they doe no sooner set forth one step, but they be ready to break their necks. And well worthie: for God must needs laugh their ouerweening to skorne, yea or rather punish it, because it is a robbing of God. But whereas it is sayd, that it is God which hath set the land at their commandement: let vs vnderstand that there is no strength in vs, and that we must rid our selues of all selfetrust. And when we be so beaten downe, then let vs take heart againe, assuring our selues that God will goe through with his worke, and that he hath not forgot his cunning, and that he will neuer giue ouer till he haue brought the things to passe which he hath promised vs. Againe, if it were so that the land of Chanaan was to be set before the people of Israel, & that the same was to be done by  $\gamma$  hand of God: I pray you must not wee be fayne to haue the kingdome of heauen set before vs? [yes surely.] For that people had but mortall men to ouercome, that they might enter into the possession of a strange countrie. But we must ouercome Satan the prince of the world, we must ouercome an hundred thousand enemies that fight against vs, yea and all that euer wee haue of our owne must be done away. Wee must flye vp on high: and what a distance is there from hence to heauen? Then seeing it is so, let vs resort to our God, let vs put our selues wholly into his hand, let vs rest vpon his onely grace, and let vs call vpon him with lowlynesse and reuerence. And therewithall let vs walke on in such sort, as we suffer him to guide and gouerne vs, assuring our selues that hee will neuer fayle vs. For if we proceede after that fashion, we shall finde that the trust which we haue to attaine to saluation, will not puffe vs vp with all selfe-weening, but make vs to yeeld God his due honor in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them more & more, and that therewithall we acknowledge our infirmities, and perceyuing our selues to be poore and naked of all goodnesse, may runne wholly vnto him, so as we seeing that there is no cause why we should glorie in our selues, may seeke our whole glorie in his onely goodnesse and merreye. And that forasmuch as wee haue not nowe an onely Moses to leade vs into the land of Chanaan, but Iesus Christ which is come downe vnto vs to drawe vs vp into heauen after him: we may follow such a guyde, yeelding our selues wholly vnto him, and in no wise dragging backe from him, saying he will haue vs to come vnto God his father. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The third Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

9 And at the same time I spake to you, saying, I cannot beare you my selfe alone:

10 The Lord your God hath multiplyed you: and behold, you are this day in number as the starres of the skye.

11 The Lord the God of your fathers make you to increase a thousand times as many as you be, and blesse you as he hath sayd vnto you.

12 How shall I alone beare your comberance, charge, and strife?

13 Bring me from among you, men of wisdome and vnderstanding, and tryed men, according to your trybes, and I will make them your heades.

14 Then answered you me and sayd: It is good to doe as thou hast sayd.

15 Then tooke I the heades of your tribes, men of wisdome and skil, and made them gouerners ouer you, rulers ouer thousandes, ouer hundreds, ouer fifties, ouer tennes, and officers among your tribes.

Mong the benefites that God bestowed vpon the people of Israel after his deliuering of them from the thraldome of Egypt, one is that he did alwayes lay hold on them to gouerne them. For without that, what would become of men? If all things be well considered, there is lesse government in them, than in brute beastes. So the, it was needefull that God should take order for the gouerning of them. And now Moses putteth the people in remembrance how God had bin their guide at all times, and had not onely bin contented to rid them out of the horrible thraldome wherein they had bin held, but also had established such a government and state among them, as there was no let but in themselves, that they might not lue in quiet, and also walke in all kind of vprightnes. It is all one therefore as if Moses should say, See

See how greedily ye be beholden to your God: For he hath euey way prouided well for you: he hath continually pitied you, and by all meanes procured your welfare. And in very deede, the remembrance of Gods benefices, ought to prouoke vs continually to serue him the better: and when we see that he hath not sayled vs in any thing, is it not reason that we should be the more disposed to yeelde our selues wholly to his obedience? For he sheweth how deere we be vnto him, what loue he beareth towards vs, and what a care he hath of our welding, when he procureth it after such maner.

And by the way, we haue to note here for a speciall poynt, that when God setteth a good order among vs, and appointeth men to haue the guiding of vs: it is a singular present of his goodnesse and loue towards vs. True it is that the thing which is referred here by Moses, proceeded of the counsell of Iethro his father in law, as he himselfe sheweth in the cyghteenth of Exodus. And although Iethro was an heathen man: yet did God serue his owne turne by him in this behalfe. And so we see, that God applyeth all things and all persons to our benefice. Who would haue looked that a man which had none acquaintance with the people of Israel, sauing that Moses had maryed a wife out of his house, should haue come and giuen such counsell? But for doth God apply all his creatures to the benefice of his people, as I sayd afore.

Besides this, we haue to note the lowlynesse of Moses, in that he held not some of the counsell that was giuen him by one that was not so excellent as he himselfe, nothing neere. Moses might haue replied and sayd, what fellowe is this? For I am chosen of God to gouerne his Church, and to be the chiefe of it. I haue published his lawe in his name, I haue represented his maiestie, yea and he hath giuen mee such a visible signe thereof in my face, as though I were an Angell come downe from heauen, rather than any earthly man. I haue bin separated from the companie of mortall men by the space of fortie dayes, as though God had glorified me already: and shall a common person presume now to teach me? Moses then might haue cast forth such wordes: but he submitted himselfe to reason. Why so? for he knew that God dealeth his gracious giftes as it pleaseth him, in so much that the little ones may diuers times further the greatest and excellentest. And therein God intendeth to try the sobernesse and mildnesse of those whome he hath aduanced to degree of soueraintie. For when they forget not themselves, but are alwayes pliable, and it a man bring them any better aduice than they themselves wist of, they receiue it willingly, and yeld vnto it: it is a true tryal of their obedientnesse [vnto God.] Seeing then y Moses, who was chiefe among all the ancient prophets, could finde in his heart to yeelde to the counsell of his father in lawe Iethro, who neuer knew what true Religion ment, but had only a little taste of it in a shadow: what shal we do which are not come to y like glorie that Moses had? Wherefore let vs vnderstand, that although God haue bestowed his spirit most plentifully vpon vs: it is not to the end that we should hold skorne of the aduice and counsell of such as are meaneer than our selues. For y meane and very knot wherewith God will haue vs knit and joyned together: is that the great ones should stoop to the least, and all agree in one. Moreover, as hath bene declared already, although Iethro was the instrument to put Moses in mind of it: yet ought it to be imputed vnto God, who had a care to prouide for the benefice and safetie of his people, y he might not faile them in any thing. And to this intent is it that Moses speaketh thereof. Now let vs come to the words that are set downe here.

First he sayth, that he himselfe is not able to beare them any more alone, because they were greatly increased: for you be (sayth he) more than the starrs of the sky: and we knowe that they were more than seuen hundred thousand persons. Seeing it is so then, I am no more able (sayth he) to beare your charges, your incumbrances, and your strifes: and therefore you must bee faine to choose some men to bee in office with me, men of wisdomed and vnderstanding, and well tryed. First of all, whereas Moses protesteth that he was no longer able to beare the charge of the people: therein he sheweth vs, that such as are aduanced to any degree of honor or dignitie, must not be as Idols without doing any thing at all, but [are set in that state] with condition to take paynes, yea and to doe seruice for the welfare of the commons, in as much as God hath layed that burthen vpon their shoulders, for the vpholding of the common weale. And it is a poynt of doctrine well woorthie to be obserued. For we seee how all men are giuen to ambition, so as euey man seekes to be esteemed and honored, & all in deuaour to growe great. And why? Because wee consider not, that Gods aduancing of vs is to the intent we shoulde represent his person in this worlde. And surely that cannot be without incumbrance. The more honorable therefore that any charge or office is, the more paynfull and cumbersome it is. But for asmuch as men imagine an idle honor: that fancie of theirs carreth them into so fond or rather furious ouerlustinesse, that they passe for no more but to haue their owne swindge, and to mount vp on high, yea euen (duerſe times) to breake their owne neckes.

And on the other side it becoueth vs to marke well, how Moses sayth that he is not able to beare so great a charge: for it doth vs to wit, that he bewrayeth his owne infirmite, or at least wise sheweth it to be such, as he must be faine to beare a lower sayle. Thus then the second consideration which we ought to haue to correct all ambition and foolish iostinesse in vs with all, is that we must examine well our owne abilitie, and then shal we finde that it were more for our behoofe to creepe belowe vpon the ground, than to couet to growe great to ouerrule our neyghbors. These (say I) are the two respectes that may abate our pryde and fond desire of superioritie. The one is, that we assure our selues that the hygher a man is exalted, the more also is he bound both to God and to them ouer whom he is set, inasmuch as there is no preheminance without burthen, yea or rather without bōdage as I sayd afore. Marke that for one poynt. But we must also beare in minde, that wee haue no abilitie at all of our selues, and therefore much lesse is any man to be found sufficient to beare so great a burthen. There cannot so small a charge be committed vnto vs, but the same is able to make our shouldres shrinke, yea and euen to bow too. For our infirmities is so great, that whosoever sitteth himselfe throughly without hypocritic and soothing, shall see that he is able to doe as good as nothing at all. Therefore if we think wel vpon such weaknesse, it wilbe as a bridle to restraine vs from clymbing so high. For what followeth but vtter confusion, when men will needes be honored, and yet in the meane while not discharge their ducie, but rather make themselues as Idols, and moreover not

Furthermore wee must marke also for a thyrd point, that although Moses sawe the burthen to be ouerhaue for him: yet he did not quite and cleane renounce his calling, to giue ouer the office that God had committed vnto him: but sought to be helped and succored, saying, Let men be chosen &c. And this is well worthy to be noted: for there might haue bin two faultie extremities. The one is that which wee haue condemned already: that is to wit, that men haue not an eye to their owne slenderesse, but beare their selues in hand that it is a matter of no importance to be in authoritic. And that is it, that maketh him so rashe and bolde to gripe more than they be able to weelde, by reason wherof they see themselues confounded in the ende, but it is too late first. For this foolish ouerweening maketh men to forget them selues, and to take too much vpon them for want of considering their owne vnabilitie: and of such fond enterpryses can come nothing but euill, because God punisheth them for them.

Nowe there is also an other euill extremitie, which is, that when men see themselues to be very fraile, they become fainthearted and thereupon, if God call them to anie office of charge, they plucke backe their neckes because they see the burthen cumberfome for them, and woulde faine shake off the yoke, and shun the vocation that God calleth them vnto. That is a vice wherof we must beware. But there is a meane betweene both, which is, when we see that the cumberfomnesse thereof passeth our power: then to take as much thereof as we be able to beare, measuring our selues by our owne span, and moreover to pray vnto God to make vs meete to go through with the things that shall be commanded vs. Those are the things that are shewed vs here by the example of Moses. For he did not sling away the gouernement of the people: because that in so doing he should haue bin a rebell against God. We see how God delt with Ionas, for he ouertooke him though he fled away. Therefore we must not refuse to obey God vnder pretence of our owne feeblenesse, though the charges or offices which he alloteth vnto vs be so troublefome, that we must be faine to grone vnder them. Whatsoever come of it, let vs hold this rule: namely to submit our selues to Gods calling, and to followe him whither soeuer he will haue vs. And about all things let vs pray vnto him to supply our wantes: and in the meane time let vs not take too much vpon vs, but let vs measure our charge by our abilitie.

Were this wel followed, wee should not see so many outrageous disorders euerywhere as there be. For what hath caused so barbarous tyranny in the Church, as is to be seene in the Popedom? Behold, the Pope hath vsurped an vniuersall supremacie ouer the whole world. For there must needes be one head sayth he. Verily as who should say that Iesus Christ were discharged, who is ordeined to be the head both of men and Angels. No: but the Pope will needes thrust the sonne of God out of his place. But if he wist what it is to reigne ouer the whole world: would he not be loath to take vpon him so vnpossible a charge? yes: but it cost him nothing to call himselfe the vniuersal head, and to spread out his wings euery way. Therefore that diuillish pride of his was the cause of the breaking & renting asunder of the order which God had set, according as S. Paul speaketh of it in the fourth to the Ephesians, where he sayth that our Lord Iesus Christ is gone vnto heauen to fill all things, and yet in the meane while hath not forsaken his Church. For he hath ordeyned Shepherdes (sayth he) & men meete to teach. And he addeth that it is according to the measure of euery member, that we might all grow together, and Iesus Christ reigne ouer vs in cheefe place.

Eph. 1. 22.
Col. 2. 10.

Eph. 4. 12.

Thus doth Saint Paul distribute the offices in such wise, as euery man must haue his portion of them, because there is not any one man y<sup>e</sup> is able to doe all. But this order which ought to be vniouable, is rent asunder by the diuillish pryde of the Pope.

And afterward his taile, & the vermin of his clergie haue followed the same: for there is none of them all that mindeth his charge. When they angle for their benefices, doe they consider that Gods calling of them is with condition, that they shall yeeld an account of the soules that are committed to them? There is no talke among them but what a benefice is worth: and anon after, pomp and credite must be matched therewithall: and so they giue themselues to all licentiousnesse. A man shall see, not onely Bishops, but also Archbishops and Primates, which passe for nothing but for hunting, or drinking, or playing, or chambering: those are their ordinarie trades. And why? for it neuer came in their thoughtes, that the honour which they haue vsurped, shoulde be matched with any bond of ducie. And this hath happened, not onely in the Churchmen, but also in all estates.

ry of the would be catching and snatching to enlarge his territories: No: for there is not any one which hath but a countree of one league to rule, which findeth not himselfe throughly incumbered, if he haue a regarde of his office and dutie, as well towards God as towards his subiectes. And yet notwithstanding he that hath a countree of two hundred leagues vnder him, would faine subdewe the whole world to him. And why is that? Because he thinketh not vpon the burthen that Moses speaks of here. As who should say, there were not a rule giuen to all such as are in any preheminece or authorite, which is vttered & declared of God by y<sup>e</sup> mouth of Moses as of his herault: namely y<sup>e</sup> they be not Idols to sit ouer their people in pompe only: but y<sup>e</sup> they must beare the burthen of the people, which cannot be without an honorable kinde of bondage as is sayd afore.

Also this extendeth euen vnto priuate persons. There is not that man which seeketh not to get still more and more: and when he hath three times as much renewe as hee needeth for his household, yet is he stil laying of baytes, to ioine peece to peece. For no man bethinketh himself, How discharge I my selfe of that which God hath giuen me already? I haue goods vnder my hands, I haue an household, I ought to occupy my selfe in trayning my wife, my children, and my seruantes in the feare of God: I ought to haue mine eyes alwayes open, to see that nothing be done in my house whereby God may be offended. As touching my goods, I ought to vse them in such wise, as they may be employed according to Gods will. If I haue abundance, I ought to relieue such as haue want and neede. Howbeit, no man looketh to this geere, but such as haue goods are as guises to swallowe vp all that euer they can finger: there is no other talke with them, but how they may bring all things vnder their pawes, so as no man may be succored at his neede. For all is one with them, so they may make their hand. As for Gods honor, they passe not so much for it, but that they had liuer to be sorted in the world, and to reigne in it at their pleasure. And in the meane while they be still set vpon gathering, and they consider not that in so doing they doe but plunge themselues continually into greater cursednesse.

Wherefore let vs marke well the doctrine that is giuen vs here by the example of Moses: which is, that first of all euery of vs must consider, that when God vouchsafeth to put any goods into our hands, or to aduaunce vs to any degree: hee bindeth vs with the straiter bond, and we haue the harder account to make: to the ende we may learne thereby to holde our selues within the boundes of our owne slender abilitie, whē it pleaseth God to haue it so. Moreover let vs also haue a continuall eye to our owne infirmitie, so as we may acknowledge that our abilitie is very small: and if it please not God to aduaunce vs, let vs not beare enuy towards them that are in that daunger, and haue that heauy burthen vpon their shoulders. If they feele it not: it is so much the woofe for them. And for our owne part (as I sayd afore) let vs be contented that our Lord let vs alone sitting as it were vpon the ground, and let vs not couer to clumbe higher. Also therewithal let vs haue compassion vpon such as beare the hard burthen, & let vs pray God to giue them strength and might at their neede: for we see that if God let them alone, they must needs be vtterly idone. And thirdly, if it please God to put vs in any office, let vs be ready to obey him, at leastwise according to our abilitie. Howbeit, let vs not take too much vpon vs, least this olde sayd saw be verified vpon vs, that he which gypeth too much can hardly holde it. But let vs aduisedly offer our selues vnto God, that he may gouerne vs by his holy spirit, so as euery of vs may doe his duetie, and euery of vs employ himselfe according to his measure and abilitie, referring all our doings to the common weale, to the ende that God may be serued thereby, and our labor may redound to the benefite of the people committed to our charge. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to marke.

Now must wee also marke this saying of Moses, Chooſe ye men of wisdom and of good skill, men well tryed, that they may be set ouer you according to your tribes, euen ouer Thousandes, ouer Hundred, and ouer Fifties, as wee shall see afterward. Hereby it is shewed vs, that when men are to be chosen to beare office in the common weale, they must be chosen with discretion, and not taken at aduerture whoe ouer can thrust in himselfe first: neither must they be preferred at any mans pleasure for fauor or for some fond brauery: but in such wise as God may ouerrule the choyce, and such men be picked out as are known to be meete to occupy the roomes that they be called vnto. And specially wee must obserue that which is rehearsed in the eighteenth chapter of Exodus heretofore alledged: for there Iethro sayth that we must take such men as are stout, fearing God, louers of the trueth, and haters of couetousnesse. Who is he y<sup>e</sup> speaketh this? A poore heathen man, as I haue sayd already: & yet God gouerneth his tongue in such wise, as we cannot haue a better teacher than him, when we be about to choose men to gouerne a people. First of all he requireth men that are stout, such as are not womanish, but haue wherewith to go through with such a charge, and haue both good zeale, courage, and noble mindednesse. Howbeit, forasmuch as without the feare of God all y<sup>e</sup> vertues in man doe turne to euill: behold, Iethro who neuer heard anie one worde of holy scripture, doth notwithstanding perceiue ful wel y<sup>e</sup> it is vnpossible for a man to discharge his duetie in gouerning a people, vnlesse he feare God. If a heathen man could speake after that manner: what a shame is it for vs nowadayes, that wee should haue lesse discretion than he? And yet a man may fee with his eyes how the world goeth. Haue men this consideration w<sup>h</sup>em they when they goe about to choose officers of Iustice, that they will needes haue the feare of God to be the first thing in y<sup>e</sup> partie: True it is that men will pro-

feffe so, & euen nature compelleth vs to say, y<sup>e</sup> we had neede of men that are wise, and stout, verily as graunting courtly that there is neither wisdom nor courage, without y<sup>e</sup> feare of God beare sway. Againe, to expresse the fruites of the feare of God yet the better, Iethro addeeth, that there must be vprightnesse and truth. As if he should say, that a man shall neuer be meete to gouern, vnlesse he haue soundnesse in him, so as hee be not hollowharred, but walke on with a good conscience. And because that brybes doe blinde the eyes of the wise, and make good men to swaue from vprightnesse: he sayth that if we will haue men fit to beare authoritie, they must hate couetousnesse and despise the goods of this worlde, so as they can finde in their hearts to forbear the. Seing then that such a lesson is told vs by a heathen man: I pray you what a shame shall it be, that we which professe our selues to be brought vp in the lawe of God and in his Gospell, & haue our eares so much beaten with it, should still be nouices in the doctrine, or at leastwise put it so ill in practise among vs? And yet for all that, if we vse it not to our profite, it is written to be kept to our great confusio, & to make vs vnexcusable.

So then, let vs wey wel this saying where Moses exhortheth the people to chosse men of vnderstanding and wisdom, and tryed men. For if a man be put in office but vpon hope, without good knowledge and experience had of him: is it not a defiling of the seate of God and of Iustice? In deede God referreth to himselfe the soueraintie ouer all men, as he is also worthe to haue: and yet notwithstanding he wilbe serued by mortal men as by his ministers & officers: and therefore the seate of Iustice is (as ye would say) consecrated or hallowed vnto him, as shall be shewed in the next lesson. Now, there is taking of men at aduventure, and they know not what they ought to doe, nor how to behaue themselves. Well, such a one must needs make a tryal what he can do, & when he is once set in his seate, he wil haue an eye to himselfe, yea: Shall he y<sup>e</sup> would not take a Cowheard or a Shepheard into his house vpon bare hope, without knowledge or vnderstanding of him what he is: shall he (I say) go set a man in Gods seate, of whom he hath no knowledge, and of whom he hath no experience to iudge what he is? Now then, let vs be well aduized, & forasmuch as God graunteth vs the grace or rather priuiledge of choosing officers to gouerne vs, which is not common to all people: in any wise let vs not abuse that gift of God, or els we shall be amazed to see our selues bereft thereof. And foothly y<sup>e</sup> very cause why so many tyrannies are crept into the world, is that all nations haue forgone their freedome, so as there is no more election, by reason whereof Princes doe sell the offices of Iustice, & things are so out of order as is horrible to see. And whereof commeth that, but that when the people had the election in their hands, they abused it, & so were worthy that God should bereaue them of the honor y<sup>e</sup> he had done them? For is it not as good as a wilful prouoking of Gods wrath, and spying of him, when folke hauing free electio, whereas they should choofe men to serue God and to be as his officers, doe in stead thereof keepe rowtings in Tauerne or Alehouses, and euen as it were in skorne & mockerie of God, choofe such as are most vnthriftes & furthest out of order? See ye not how it is a peruerting of all order? To be short, it should seeme that men intended to thrust God out of his seat, when they set his enemies in it after that sort, & such as despise him, & such as seeke nothing else but to tread his name & Maiestie vnder their feete. When men deale so, is it any wonder that God sendeth such disorder into the world as wee see there is? Now then, it standeth vs so much y<sup>e</sup> more on hand to marke wel this doctrine, where it is saide that when God giueth a people libertie to choofe officers, they must not abuse it, but must vse discretion in choosing of them. Yea and forasmuch as we may often times be deceiued, it behooueth vs to resort vnto God, y<sup>e</sup> he may giue vs discretion & gouerne vs with his holy spirit, as though he had poynted them out with his finger whom we ought to choofe. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause why I laid y<sup>e</sup> elections shall neuer be wel ordered, except God ouertule them by his holy spirit.

Last of al Moses saith, I wil see that ouer you I rule you. He sheweth y<sup>e</sup> God had giuen him authoritie, & yea a man may see y<sup>e</sup> he imparted it vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, & shewed by his doings, as we haue seene afore, y<sup>e</sup> he chalenged not to himselfe an inordinate power, but acknowledged y<sup>e</sup> God had bound him to the common weale. So then, Moses hath authoritie & knowes well enough that Gods wil was to preferre him about the rest of y<sup>e</sup> people, & yet doth not he abuse his right for all that, but referreth all vnto the people. As if he should say, I will but onely shewe the way how to guide, and in so doing I will take the payne to myselfe, as for the honor, I giue it ouer vnto you. And the same mind ought to be in all good magistrats and gouerners of people, y<sup>e</sup> they may be able to maintaine the authoritie that is requisite: for euen to that end also hath God set them vp. But howfoener the world goe, let them not seeke their owne profite, but let them indeuour to make the selues fit ministers as nere as is possible, alwayes maintaining y<sup>e</sup> chiefe charge y<sup>e</sup> is committed vnto the.

But now let vs come to that which Moses interlatheth concerning the multitude of y<sup>e</sup> people. Your God (saith he) hath increased you, in such wise that you be now as the starres of the skye, and I beseech him to increase you a thousand times more: or els, he will increase you a thousand times more, according as he hath promised you. Here Moses, in alledging the hardnesse that he had to decide all cases, doth also shewe the people Gods blessing and grace. And thereby a man may see, that his chiefe trauell was to make the people conceiue the benefites y<sup>e</sup> they had receiued at Gods hand: and that is a lesson which we cannot be put in minde of too often. For on the one side wee see what vnthankfulness is in vs, how we shut our eyes at the benefites that God bestoweth vpon vs, Not y<sup>e</sup> we lyke not to haue them: but for y<sup>e</sup> we consider not from whence they come, that we might glorify the giuer of them. And on the other side wee abuse the giftes that we haue receiued, because wee bethinke not our selues

felues how it is God that hath put them into our hands. Nay, which worke is, wee see how men do so vaunt themselves of them, that Gods glorie is darkened thereby, as though they were not beholden to God at all. And not onely that, but it should seeme also that they arme themselves against him to bid him battell, for shewing of himselfe so bountifull towards them; and as shall bee shewed in the two and thirtieth Chapter, they play the ouerpampered Iades, which fall to kicking against their maisters. See (I say) how God is vnacknowledged of vs in his benefites. And afterward when wee haue forgotten him, wee growe after a sort heathenish, and all his giftes are defiled by vs. Sith wee see this, let vs consider that this doctrine cannot bee too often set afoore vs; namely, that when God chooseth vs to doe him seruice, he bindeth vs to him the more exceedingly. And therefore his opening of his benefites vnto vs, and his setting of them before our eyes, is to the ende wee should knowe that he is ready to continue them still towards vs, if wee let him not through our vnthankfulness. Therefore if we be often told of the free goodnesse of our God, and it be shewed vs how richly he hath powred out his benefites vpon vs; although it seeme to be a very common matter, and that we haue heard ynough of it before; yet let vs assure our selues, it cannot bee spoken too much. Wee see howe Moses, who is the true patterne of all Prophets and true ministers of Gods worde, behaued himselfe in that case. And in as much as he stood so much vpon that point: let such as haue the charge of teaching in the Christian Church, bee sure that they can neuer be too lawfull in that behalfe: & let all people also vnderstand, that the often putting of them in remembrance of Gods benefites, is not a needelesse and vnprofitable doctrine. Marke that for one point.

Furthermore Moses intent is that the people should perceiue and haue it manifestly prooued, that the great increase of them came not of the common order of nature, as we see that y world doeth multiply: but that it was a very miracle of God. And for the same cause doeth he also set downe the similitude that was behighted to their father Abraham. For God had shewed him the starres of the skie in a vision, and sayde vnto him: thy seede shall be as the starres of the skie. Like as the number of the starres is infinite, so shall thy seede be after thee. Now then to the intent to magnifie Gods grace, and to print it the better in the peoples heartes: Moses sayeth thus vnto them: you know what was promised to your father Abraham, how that his offspring should bee in number as the starres of the skie. Now therefore, see what a multitude is of you. For in very deede it is a wonder, considering howe small a number went downe into Egypt. When they went thither they were but one household, and little aboue threecore persons. But when they came out, they were not any longer sixtie, but welnere feuen hundred thousand, and it was within lesse than threec hundred yeeres, that this number was so increased. For the foure hundred and thirtie yeeres are to bee reckened from the promise made vnto the people. And wee see that Abraham was long time without child. In the end he had Isaac, who by all likelihood should haue bene made away. There was some likelihood that Iacob should be increased: he had twelue sonnes; but what was that in respect of such a multitude? So then, Moses ment purposely to declare vnto the people, y their multiplying came of y grace of God, yea euen after an extraordinary maner, and not after the course of nature. And yet notwithstanding, (which shall serue for an end) Moses prayeth vnto God to increase the people still, or rather assureth the people that he will increase them more and more. Although this multitude was a great trouble to Moses: yet doeth he not grudge at it, but receiue it as a blessing of God ioyfully, and glorifieth him for accomplishing so his promise. And therewithall he hath a care to provide for them by good meanes, seeking nothing but that God might be serued and honoured, and that the fauour which he had begun to shewe to his people, might continue till it were come to full perfection.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs to feele them, as we may come to him with true repentance to raue forgiveness of them, and he release them in such wise, as wee may seeke nothing but to giue ouer our selues wholly vnto him, for as long all the lustes of our flesh, and all the vntoward desires which plucke vs backe to the worlde, and turne vs away from the obeying of righteoufnesse. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

16 And I charged then your Iudges, saying, Heare your brethren, and iudge vp-rightly betwene a man and his brother, and betwene the straunger that is with him.

17 You shall haue no respect of person in iudgement, but heare the small as well as the great. Ye shall feare no mans countenance: for the iudgement is the Lordes. And the case that is too harde for you, bring it before mee and I will heare it.

18 And at the same time I commanded you all the things which you ought to doe.

WE haue seene already what warning Moses gaue for the choosing of men meete to gouerne the people. For (as hath bin declared) if they had taken iudges at all aduerture, it had bin a defiling of Gods seate. Therefore in that case, it behooued them to vse good discretion. But here Moses added a point which wee ought to marke well. For although he had procured, that such as were chosen were men that feared God, and were indued with singular giftes: yet ceased he not to put them in minde of their duety, and to warne them of the things that they had to doe. Wherein wee see, that euen the wisest haue neede to be taught, and the vprightest and iustest haue neede to be warned. And therefore if God haue set vs in the good way, and bestowed giftes of his holy spirit vpon vs: let vs not thinke that therefore wee haue no neede to be taught. For wee must be guided euen vnto the ende, and wee knowe that our perfection is not in this world, nor so long as wee beare our flesh about vs, and are conseruant here beneath. Againe, whom soeuer God hath honoured by setting them in state & degree of preheminance: let them vnderstand that they haue neede to be told of their duety, and to be quickened vp to discharge themselves accordingly.

But let vs come now to that which is contended here. The first charge that Moses giueth to them that are ordeyned to be Iudges and Gouernours, is to heare mens causes. Wherein he doeth vs to vnderstand, that they ought to be attentie and diligent to vnderstande every mans right. For if a iudge vouchsafe not to heare, howe shall he execute his office? Wee knowe that although men doe the best they can to iudge aright, yet their fraetie is such as they may misse: and if they be negligent too, then must all needes goe to confusion. Therefore it is not without cause, that Moses warneth the Iudges to vnderstande well mens cases. And he sayeth expressly, betweene the Lewes and betweene the strangers. As if he should say, euery man must be suffered to shewe his reason. Notwithstanding that the examination and sifting out of things may now and then procure fauour or hatred: yet the iudge that will doe his duety well, must forget all things that may turne him from the right way. And forasmuch as the stranger hath no vpholder nor stay to leane vnto: the iudge must supply his want. And although he can looke for no reward, nor for any great thanks at his hand to whom he may doe right: yet let him not forbear to discharge his duety, for he doeth acceptable seruice to God: albeit that there come no rewardes on mens behalfe, God is able ynough to recompence him.

Nowe then, such as are Iusticers haue their lesson here in writing: that is to wit, that they must maintayne right and equitie towards all men that are committed to their charge. For (as hath bin declared afore) the office of iustice is an honourable seruice. They that are set in authoritie are not aduanced to that high estate to the intent they should trample their subiectes vnder their feete, or make none account of them: but contrariwise they be bounde vnto them, and it is a kinde of seruice. For God hath not made principalities for a fewe mens pleasures, to y end that all mankind should be their vnderlings: but for the common welfare and benefit of all men. Then if gouernours vnderstand not that they be bound by Gods will and by the order of nature, so them of whom they haue the charge: they must be faine to yeeld an account vnto God for their abusing of his gift and of the honour that he bestowed vpon them. Thus much concerning the first point that we haue to marke here.

And herewithall let vs marke also, that if they be so greatly bounde vnto men: much more straitly are they bound vnto God. If a man be grieved in a matter of fiftie shillings or lesse, and the iustice cause him not to haue right: we see what is sayd here. But now, if the name of God be blasphemed, if his honour be defaced; if wicked and detestable things be done, and they that sitte in the seate of iustice and beare the sworde in their hande withstand it not, but are carelesse what iniurie be done vnto God: are they to be excused? No: for if they suffer but a poore man to be troden downe, so as he haue but one penny losse: they shall be blamed for it before God. But yet much more precious is the Maiestie of God, and the thing that concerneth his honour and seruice. Sith it is so, that Magistrates be bounde to minister right to every man, in things that are small and in manner of no valwe: let vs marke well that they ought in any wise to procure the maintenance of Gods honor, more carefully without all comparison, specially when the case concerneth the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ, wherevnto all the whole world is not to be compared, in as much as Gods glorie shineth forth there. And that is the second point which we haue to marke vpon this streine.

Againe, whereas it is sayde, that the Magistrates must accept no mans person: it betokeneth that they must not be moued with any mans riches, or pouertie, or byrth, or friendship, or any thing else. For in the holy scripture, this worde Person is taken for any qualitie in man, which may purchase him grace and fauour, or disgrace and disfauour. When wee speake of a person in our common speache, wee meane a man or a woman: but the Scripture meaneth meaneth a more speciall thing : namely that there should no regard be had what maner a one the man is, whether he bee our neighbour, our friend, a rich man able to doe vs good, a man of credit and authoritie able to reuenge himselfe of vs, or a poore man, a man of no allyance or kintred, or I wote not what else. All these accidentes which serue but to induce vs to liking or misliking of the partie, and to make vs swarue from the right way, are comprehended in the Scripture vnder the worde Person : as if wee should vse the word Vizor. And in very deede, all these accidentes which beare our eyes and beguile vs to make vs start out of the right way, are but as vizors. If a man come before vs without any qualitie : very well, we would heare him simply, and wee would not bee corrupted to iudge amisse. But if there happen any stoppe, by and by wee bee ouerraught, and our reason is so troubled, that wee iudge not any more as wee ought to doe. That therefore is a vizor, which yceldeeth fourth such a qualitie to bee seene in the partie, as maketh vs eyther to fauour him too much, or else to mislike him out of measure, so as wee keepe not an vpright and euen hand betwene the great and the small. And truly Moses declareth the same very well in this text, in that he sayeth, Thou shalt heare the small as well as the great : for it serueth to expound the worde Person, and there needeth none other glorie from elsewhere. And it is a phrase of speache which wee shall see in other textes hereafter. Therefore it behoueth vs to acquaint our selues with the termes and phrases of the holy Ghost, that the things which are contained here may not seeme straunge vnto vs.

Howbeit by the way, that wee may fare the better by the things that are declared here, let vs marke that the chiefe reason and ground of this doctrine, is because there is no accepting of persons before G O D. For the same cause ought Iudges to haue a stay of themselves, and to keepe them cleare from all considerations that may thrust them aside, or make them to swarue one way or other : namely (say I) for that they represent the Maiestie of God, in as much as he hath made them his officers. Now then, there is no accepting of persons before God, that is to say, when he iudgeth he hath no respect to the things that men regarde, and wherewith they bee drawn too and fro, so as they iudge not vprightly any more, because their excessive affections doe ouermaister them. And this saying, that there is no respect of persons with G O D, extendeth very farre. For when as Saint Peter speaketh of it, first in the tenth of the Actes, and afterward in his Epistle, he sheweth that God chose whom he listed out of the whole world, in so much as he passed not whether they were Iewes or Gentiles. Whosoeuer doeth good (saith he) shall haue the fauour of God, and as for Circumcision or vncircumcision, they shall none of them both bee made account of. True it is that God must bee saine to looke mercifully vpon vs, before we can do any good. For of our owne nature wee bee vtterly froward, and there can nothing come from vs but all maner of naughtinesse : insomuch that God should hate and abhorre the whole world, and cast vs away euerychone, if he should tarie till any of vs gaue himselfe to well doing : for our nature driueth vs alwayes vnto euill. But God chooseth his, without any abilitie of deserring aforehand on their behalfe: and yet notwithstanding, after he hath marked them to bee of the number of his flocke, he auoeth them & loueth them as his children and household folke, yea euen without regarding of what nation or state they be, whether they be riche or poore, or in credit, or indued with any good qualitie and handfomnesse, or any other thing. God then doeth as it were shut his eyes against all the respectes which are had in so great estimation. For he hath an eye to nothing but to foundnesse of heart, he doeth not vpon these vizors that are setene to the eye, according to this saying in another place, namely that the outward shewes deceiue not him, but that he looketh vpon that which is within. Thus much concerning the first point.

But wee must apply this texte to the same vse that Moses putteth it : which is, that after the example of God, wee must haue this vnpartialitie in vs, so as wee will not bee drawn one way nor other by the things that appeare in men. And this is a very profitable or rather needefull doctrine. True it is that this is spoken expressly to Iudges and gouernours, in as much as God hath taken the name neere to himselfe by setting them in his owne seate, and by willing them to execute his office in this world : and therefore ought they also to haue the greater care to followe vprightnesse, that they suffer not themselves to bee peruerted by the things that are to bee seene in men. But yet for all that, euery man for his owne part ought to take warning to followe Gods example, and to frame himselfe thereafter, according also as Saint Paul sendeth vs thither, when he speaketh of bondmen and of men of base degree that are easie to bee oppressed, because men take leaue to doe euill when they see that a sillie soule cannot reuenge himselfe, and that if he haue any wrong done vnto him he must bee saine to put it vp patiently : by reason wherof they presume y more boldly to say, O, as for him, when I haue done the worst to him that I can, he hath no meanes to hurt mee. Thus are wee the bolder when we see that men are base & haue no maintenance. But in this case Saint Paul saith that wee must liue vp our eyes to heauen, and that forasmuch as there is no respect of persons before God, wee must not thinke wee shall escape vnpunished when we abuse the priuiledge & authoritie that he giueth vs. He then y despiseth his neighbour ought to thinke thus: yet notwithstanding, we haue a comon iudge in heauen, & although I be now rich & honorable to the worldward, although I be in authoritie & estimation, yet when I come thither, all this geare must cease: and although my couterpartie be now despised, & haue no man to stand by him, yet hath he a defender in heaue.

Lo here (say I) what ought to beate downe all pride in vs, to the end that none of vs aduance himselfe, nor take more vpon him than is lawfull, ne thinke he hath leaue to doe euill, vnder colour that our counterpartes are of no credite and authoritie. Let vs not tarie till ordinarie Iustice doe redresse our extorsions, or till those whom God hath set in his place to iudge without respect of persons, doe punish vs for committing of some outrage: but let euery of vs remember this lesſon here, namely that inasmuch as God regardeth not any outward shewes at all, it behoueth euery of vs also to frame himselfe to the like vprightness and indifferencie.

And forasmuch as men doe alwayes put vs in feare, so as there spring from thence the forest and worst temptations that can be to hinder the performance of our dutie: Moses warneth Iudges expressly, not to be afrayde of men. Why? For the iudgement is Gods, sayeth he. Loc here a text well worthy to bee marked. I haue tolde you already, that which experience sheweth too much: that is to wit, that they which otherwise are of good nature, doe neuertheless ouerſhoote themselves through fearefulness. Ye shall see a man in the place of Iustice, who being not cuill of himselfe, would that all should goe well, it grieueth him when he seeth any faulr, and he could finde in his heart that euery man should brydle himselfe, or else that there should be some good correction when any men haue done amisse: but in the meane while, forasmuch as he seeth that there will be some grudging and misliking of the matter, [he thinketh thus with himselfe:] What shall I prouoke euery man to anger against mee? That man hath kinfolke and friends, and such a one is able to be euen with me if I trouble him. Againe forasmuch as naughtinesse reigneth euery where, and wicked folke haue their full scope, and are most in number: I shall bring all the world in my top, & if I minde to discharge my dutie, I must not set my selfe against two or three onely, but I see that all are corrupt, and there is no man but he resisteth wldoing. They therefore which otherwise feare God, and woulde minister right and iustice when they sit in iudgement, are letted through fearefulness. If they stand in awe of men, they shall surely bee shaken downe. And why? Because they bee not grounded vpon the foundation that Moses layeth here, namely that the iudgement is Gods. They knowe not (say I) that they offer great dishonour and reproche vnto God, when they preferre men before him. For he that swarveth from his dutie for feare, esteemeth me more than God. Why so? A Iudge ought to consider, that God hath set him in the place where he is, with another maner of countenance than other simple creatures. For he that sitteth in the seate of Iustice, sitteth in the roome of God, and is as his Lieutenant. A Iudge therefore ought to consider that: and if he doe not, he forgetteth God, whom he was bound to serue. It is all one as if a man being freed by his maister to doe him seruice, knoweth not whether there be a maister in the house or no, but fallies to singing and playing, and eateth & drinketh at his houres, and sleepech when he listeth, without hauing any care or regarde of his maister. Doeth not the seruant that forgetteth his maister after that fashion, deserue to haue men to spitte in his face? Nowe then, if Iudges consider not of whom they holde their estate and dignitie: their vnthankfulness or rather blockishnesse is too too shamefull & beastly. Againe, if Iudges knowing themselves to bee set vp of God, doe neuertheless thinke from their dutie for feare of men, and bee stopped and held backe from doing the things which they knowe they ought to do, because men are against them: what yeelde they vnto God? what estimation haue they of his power? And yet for all that, God hath taught them their lesſon, and promised them to stande by them, and to bee their defence. Seeing it is so, ought they not to make a bucklat of his inuincible power, and to fight lustily though all the world should step vp against them: Is not God mightie ynough to ayde them and succour them, if they trusted therunto, so as they woulde rest vpon it, and plucke vp a liuely courage and constancie to goe on in the right way? Yes: but else, if they bee moued by such temptations to swarue from their dutie: let them assure themselves that God will leaue them destitute of his power. Thus then we see, that this streine (as I saide afore) importeth a very profitable doctrine.

But yet wee must note also, that this perueyneth not onely to them that are in authoritie: but also to all men in generall. For there is as it were a comparision made betwene God and mortall men. And why? For nothing beguileth vs more, than that wee make too great reckening of men, and in so doinge either diminish the God, or abolish his highnesse. As oft as men come in our minds, God is no body in comparision: in so much as if wee put him in ballaunce, hee seemeth lighter than a feather: whereas men doe alwayes keepe their full weight with vs. Surely if wee were about to compare other men with our selves, wee coulde set them light ynough: for euery of vs woulde make much of himselfe. Or if wee were to consider one man with another: looke whom wee lyked off, he should giue greatest glosse to disgrace the things that were to bee mislyked in the contrarie partie: in so much that wee say, tishe what is he? he is no body. For why? Wee woulde make farre greater estimation of the other. Thus ye see howe wee coulde skill to disgrace men. But come we once to GOD, hee must bee as good as cast downe, and men must bee set vp in his place. Lo howe spytefull and frowarde wee bee. So much the more therefore doeth it stande vs on hand to mark this saying, where it is declared y if God come in place, it is not for vs to make any reckening of men. For it is a great trayterousnesse that men or creatures should bee in such estimation, that Gods right should bee defaced, or any thing bee plucked from him. And yet for all that, wee fee it too common a thing, & it hindereth vs that wee cannot serue GOD as we ought to doe. True it is that euery man is turned away by his owne lustes, insomuch that although wee haue none other to withstande vs, yet haue wee inwarde incumberances of our owne, and our nature is so sinfull, as wee cannot in any wise applie our selues to doe good. But yet is there this inconuenience more in it, that althoone as another man comes in place, by and by wee bee at our wittes ende. I would faine doe my dutie (say we), but what? Then must I purchase me a mā's displeasur. Wee see nowe adayes that a man cannot please men, except hee doe as the worlde doeth, and followe the byasse of other men. And againe, beholde heere my neighbour, hee will alwayes bee at deadly foode with mee, if I fashion not my selfe to his manner of dealing: beholde, such a man is my friende, I must needs beare him out. Hence come all priue packings and other lewde trickes, namely that euery man despiseth God, to please his neighbor or his friend. For whē vices reigne, as whoredome, drunkennesse, and other disorders, so as euery man is infected by y example of his neighbor, & one catcheth diseases of another: what is the cause of all this? It is for that we aduance men too much, and consider not that it were meete for vs to abate both great and small, and so frame our selues earnestly to the will of God.

Now therefore let vs bethinke vs so much the better of this doctrine that is set down here, not only for Iudges but also for all men in common: [That is to witte,] that forasmuch as the iudgement is Gods, we must not in any wise be shaken any more by mē, but giue God his preheminēce, & thrust downe all consideration of men, so as if men vex vs we set our selues against them, and be not so lewd as to rob God of that which belongeth vnto him, to furnish creatures therewith. Thus yee see what we haue to remember heere.

Moreouer also, whereas it is saide that the Iudgements is Gods: that speech importeth another good lesson. True it is that Moses speaketh heere of the roome that Iudges and Magistrates holde: as if hee shoulde say, they haue it not in fee simple or as a Lordship in inheritance, but as an office: and God in setting them in that degree of honour, resigned not his owne maiestie to say, Sirs, you shall reigne with absolute power, and I will henceforth bee no bodie. God therefore, when hee did thus set men in office, did not for all that diminish his owne estate. For hee holdeth still the soueraine dominion ouer all men, and they ought to bee but as instruments of his power, and consequently to serue him, and to referre all things vnto him. If this doctrine were well knownen, Kings and Princes would not lorde it so licentiously nowadayes as they doe, and men shoulde haue seene another manner of modestie in them at all times than is now seene. For they that are aduanced vnto honour, doe beare thein selues on hande that the worlde was made for them, and for their faire eyes (as they say): and there vpon they reiect all informations, lawes & statutes, and shake off the yoke from their necks, as though they helde all things at their own swindge, and God is no body at all with them. But yet in this text Moses telleth them, that be they neuer so great kings & princes, their superioritie ought not to diminish the autoritie of God, that his glory should not continue alwayes vnappaired. Why for? For what else are the princes of the world than Gods officers, to the end y by their meanes he might be obeyed, and al men do him homage, so as the highest should begin & giue example to the lowest: Seeing then that the iudgement is Gods: they that peruert the order of government when they be called to do their dutie, shalbe double blamed. And therefore shal Kings and Princes and al such as are in roome of Iustice, haue a vetie harde account to make. For if they do amiss, they be not bound alonely vnto men, neither haue they offended creatures onely: but they haue violated the maiestie of God, and defiled his seat. Why so? Because iudgement belongeth vnto him, and hee reseruet it to himselfe.

But like as it is said of the execution of Iustice: so let vs note that it belongeth also to the spiritual gouernement which god hath ordeined in his Church: yea and this doctrine ought to bee kept more straitly in that respect, than in the earthly government. Why? When God ordeineth kings, Princes and Magistrates: there withall hee giueth them autoritie to make Lawes. True it is, that they ought to learne them in his schoole, according as it is said that lawes and ordinances which are made in commō weales, do take their force of Gods wisedomie. But yet for al that, ciuil or polittic lawes are made by men. Yet notwithstanding God hath not resigned any thing, y lie should not hold stil the soueraine dominion ouer men, I meane euen in respect of outward policy. And as touching the spiritual government of the Church, we know that God will e heard, and that hee will haue his word obeyed aboute all things, so as men may not take vpon them to make Lawes & statutes, but must hold thein selues contented with that which hee commandeth them. For the rule that is conteyned in his word is the vety perfection on it selfe. Therefore when we go vp into the pulpit, it is not to vtter our owne dreames and dotages, why so? For God reseruet the mastership and chiefe superioritie still to himselfe, so as hee will haue mē to receiue his word, to rest wholly ther vpon without any swarung at all from it. Seeing that God hath once set it downe so: it belongeth vs to rest vpon it. Had this bin well obserued in the world, there should not be so great troubles & variiances at this day as there are. Whence come the variiances that are betwixt vs & the papists, but of y men haue not relieued vnto god y thing that belongeth vnto him, but haue framed articles of faith, lawes, and ordinances at their owne pleasure, & in the ende are come to this horrible confusion of mingling the inuentions of mens braines with the purenes of the holy scripture, so as they haue marred all things? And wherof else commeth it, that euen at this day, the papistes fight still for the maintenance of that tyrannie, that a man might not knowe God from his Apostles as they thein selues say, by which common peruerbe of theirs they condemne themselves and cut their owne throates? Wherefore let vs marke well this lesson wherein it is saide that the iudgements is Gods, that is to say, that the superiouritie which men haue, in what degree so euer it bee, is not to diminish Gods preheminece, but rather to maintaine it. What then are the stares of honour and all the dignities of the worlde? They are all meanes to bring to passe that God may reigne ouer vs, and to make all men to stoope to him, and to knowe him and obey him in all cases. So then, what ought kings, Emperours, and Magistrates to doe? They ought to see that God be exalted and magnified as he is worthie, and that all their subiectes doe him homage, and they themselves must shewe them the way. Againe, what ought schoolemaisters and fathers to doe, and all such as haue anie householde [or seruantes?]: Euerie of them ought to consider on his owne behalfe howe greatly God hath inhonored him? He that hath children ought to consider, thou holdest Gods place in this roome of a father, but yet hath not GOD stripped himselfe to clothe thee with his honour. What then? He is the father still, both of mee and of my children, therefore must I indeuer that he may be obeyed. The master must thinke thus: Is the mastershippe mine? No: but it is Gods, who hath granted mee that prerogatiue vnderferued on my parte. It hath pleased him to put this householde vnder my gouernement, but yet for all that, it is he that must rule me, yea both me and all that are vnder my subiection. After this manner ought wee to put this doctrine in vre.

And when wee haue passed through all the states of the worlde, wee must also come to the spirituall gouernement of the Church. Therefore let such as are ordeined to preach Gods worde, vnderstande that God hath not appointed them to set forth their owne dotages, and to speake what they list: but to thinke vpon Gods superiouritie, specially seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ is nowe declared to bee the heade of his Church, according to the euerlasting mastership which God gaue him ouer vs, in saying, Heare ye him. Seeing it is so, let such as haue the charge of teaching in the Church and are shepherdes and ministers, vnderstande that they must not seeke to aduance themselves, nor to be heard, nor to bring the people in a mafe with their owne inuentions; but [they must indeuer] that God may alwayes haue the ouerhand, and be obeyed, and his worde bee receiued purely and simple without any mingling or adding to it.

And like as they that are in that vocation and office, ought to haue mildnesse, and lowlinesse, that they vsurpe not the authoritie which God hath reserved to himselfe, yea and giuen to his onely sonne: so all Christians ought to thinke thus with themselves. Wherefore come wee to Sermons? Wherefore is there order in the Church? It is to the ende that GOD shoulde gouerne vs, and that wee shoulde haue our Lorde Iesus Christ to bee as our soueraine teacher, and that wee shoulde be his flocke to be led by him. Nowe this cannot bee done, vnlesse we hearken to his voyce, and discern it from the voyces of straungers, so as wee be not caried too and fro like wauering Reedcs with euerie winde, but stande fast fetled vpon the purenesse of the holy Scripture, and that our faith be so grounded therevpon, as the diuell may neuer shake it downe. Loc (say I) howe we ought to applie this doctrine to our vse, namely that the iudgement and authoritie is Gods. For if wee doe so, wee may well see many contrarieties in this world, men may assaile vs with many troubles, they may well set themselves against vs, and they may well speake against vs: but yet shal we still keepe on our pace. And why? for GOD is not variable. Although the diuell keepe neuer so great a stirre here beneath, yet is Gods purpose alwayes vnchangeable. And so is men by this that is saide of the truth, that it dureth for euer. It is not such a truth as is hidden or shutte vp in heauen: but it is saide expressly that it is the same truth which God vttereth to vs by his worde, as he witnesseth daily. Sith it is so, let vs looke vp to GOD, and yeelde him the gouernement that is due vnto him, that hee may reigne ouer vs: and then shal our faith bee vnvariable, though the diuell trouble and turmoyle all things vsfidedowne, and stirre vp neuer so much strife and contention. Thus you see howe we must put the doctrine in vre that is contained heree.

Nowe furthermore Moses saith expressly, that if there were any harde case, it should be brought vnto him. And afterwarde hee addeth for a conclusion, that hee had commaunded them all the things which they ought to doe. As touching the harde cases, Moseses referuig of them to himselfe, was neither for desire of praise nor for pride, but because they belonged to his vocation: hee knewe that God had ordeined him to the same purpose. And therefore let vs not bee afraid to keepe still that which God hath giuen vs, if wee execute the charge that hee hath committed vnto vs. For why? like as a man must not esteeme of himselfe, so must hee not surmise, oh, this is hatefull, it may be ill taken, it is subiect to slander: but wee must followe that which God commaundeth vs. And therefore let vs not take any thing vpon vs of our owne heade, that is to say, let vs not be raffe to say, this belongeth to mee, for ambition tickleth vs continually, and euerie of vs would haue I wote not what a priuiledge: wherefore let vs beware of such folly. Yet notwithstanding like as there shoulde no such boldnesse reigne in vs, as to vsurpe or take any thing vpon vs: so on the contrarie part, when GOD will haue any office or charge laide vpon vs, it becommeth vs to take it. True it is that men may chaunce to speake euill of vs for it, but wee must ouerpasse that, and keepe on our pace still. That is the thing which Moses hath shewed vs heree by his owne example.

And in his owne person, hee hath set vs as it

were a looking glasse before our eyes, to shewe vs that we must followe the order that God hath set, and not swauee from it at all. If wee doe not so, it is an vtolerable ynthankfulness. We knowe what infirmitie is in our felues: not onely in some one point but in all things are wee so fraile as is pitie to seee. But our Lorde hath well provided for all our needs, and giuen vs remedies for them. As for example, hee hath giuen vs meate and drinke to maintaine this transitorie life of ours, hee hath ordeined Magistracie to gouerne vs, hee hath ordeyned the ministrie of his worde to rule our soules, and hee hath giuen singular giftes of grace to severall persons, so as they bee able to giue vs counsell, and to comfort and encourage their neighbours, and to helpe them at their neede. What is to be done then? When ouer wee bee cumbered or in any perplexitie, let vs looke that wee vse the meanes of remedie that GOD giueth vs, yea and to vse them alwayes in his feare. For wee may bee abused, as wee haue seene. What is to be done then? We must not turne aside nor stoppe for such as haue neither right nor reason in them, but euerie of vs must further himselfe by such meanes as God giueth him, euen as though hee were going to God himselfe. And that will make vs to vse the order of Lawe lawfully, which thing men doe not now. And it is a point well worthe to be marked, to wit, howe men may repaile iniuries, and howe they ought to behaue themselves, when any of vs findeth himselfe intangled or in perplexitie, let vs pray to God to direct vs. If wee did so, surely wee would not goe to lawe but with trembling, and wee would say in our selues, I goe now to present my selfe as it were before my God. But howe goe men to it now adayes? Rather to seeke a cloke for all naughtinesse: so as there is neither craft, nor spite, nor any other wickednesse which is not to be founde there. And why? For without hauing any regarde of God, there is nothing thought vpon but howe to beguile man, or howe to winde them in by some wicked practise. So much the more neede therefore haue wee to marke well what is saide here, that is to wit, that according as God hath ordeined states and degrees among men: so must men dispose things and direct them by the order that God hath set and established.

And for a conclusion let vs also way well this which Moses addeth in the ende; namely, that hee had tauisht the Iewes all thinges which they had so doe. When hee saith so, it is all one as if hee shoulde protest, that they coulde not but know, that they stand not through ignorance, neither coulde say, Iooke it to haue bene otherwise, I knewe not what was to be done. You knowe (saith Moses) there is no let but in your selues, for I for my parte haue bene faithful to Godwarde: since the time that hee did put me in trust to instruct you, I haue taught you as hee commaunded mee: nowe therefore you cannot haue any excuse to hide you withall. And if Moses had such a care to teach the people in respecte of the earthly go-uernment: no doubt but hee was yet more diligent in teaching them the doctrine of saluation. That is the first poynt whiche wee haue to note. Doth Moses tell vs, that hee did not conceale nor hyde any thing from the Iewes, in the thinges that concerned their worldly duties, for the mainteining of some order and humane honestie among them? Then is it much more likely that hee first preached to them the grace of God, and afterwarde shewed them the rule of good conseruation and there withall tolde them of the couenant of saluation, which GOD had made with his people. It is certaine that nothing was concealed in that behalfe, but that hee vied an exquisite diligence, so as hee lefte not the Iewes in doubt without due warrant how to behaue themselves to Godward.

Nowe then, if Moses discharged his duetie after that sort, wee must conclude that the Lawe was a sufficient doctrine to instruct the people, and that hee vied not any shittes to carie them heere and there. Afterwarde came the Prophetes, which added yet a greater lighte. Last of all, the Gospell was preached through the whole worlde. Nowe then, can wee say that our Lorde hath not taught vs sufficiently, and that all the Prophetes, and the Apostles, yea and Iesus Christ himselfe haue giuen vs but halfe an instruction? Can wee say so? No: that were too vilinous a blisphemie. Nowe therefore, let vs haue our eares open to hearken to our GOD, and he will be a good school-maister to vs, and let vs bee contented with the doctrine that is contented in the holy Scripture. For there wee haue so perfect wisdom, as no fault can bee found with it. Nowe well therefore what we haue to marke vpon this streine, to the ende that euerie of vs may indeure to profite daily more and more. And if there bee any ignorance in vs, let vs assure our selues it is through our owne fault, in that wee be as blinde wretches, vntill God haue enlightened vs through his grace. Therefore it behoueth vs to pray him to open our eyes by his holy spirit. And on the other side, let vs not stop our eares against the thinges that God speaketh, nor pretende ignorance to excuse our naughtinesse. But seeing that God telleth vs, that he hath shewed vs all thinges by his worde which wee ought to doe: let vs holde vs to it without counting any nouelties, and without fond curiositie, for wee shall neuer scape from him; and therefore let vs not be gadding to receive euerie newe toy that is offered vnto vs. And so let vs ponder well the thinges that wee haue to marke vpon this text, to the ende that for as much as GOD hath nowe giuen vs a confirmation of his Lawe and of his Propheties, and directed vs to the right marke: wee may take the Gospell [alwayes] for our guide, in wayting till he haue gathered vs together into his kingdome.

to the ende we may returne to him with true repentance, and being ashamed of our selues flee for refuge to his mercy: and that forasmuch as we knowe hee hath fet it forth most largely and abundantly in our Lord Iesus Christ, wee may resort to him the more boldly, seeking continually for the great treasures which he hath prepared for vs in his kingdome. And [beseeching him] to guide vs so henceforth with his holie spirit, as we may liue in his feare, framing our selues vnto his righteousnesse, and seruing him according to his holie will, so that although wee might be hindered by the stumbling blockes and cumbrances which wee see in the worlde, yet wee may not cease to followe our good GOD, whether fouer hee calleth vs, notwithstanding that the worlde bee blinded with neuer so outrageous confusion and disorder. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs &c.

The fift Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

19 Then departed we from Horeb, and went through the wildernesse which is great and terrible, as you haue seene, along the way of the hil of the Amorrhites, as the Lord our God had commaunded vs, and we came to Cades barne.

20 And I said vnto you, come ye to the Hil of the Amorrhites which the Lord our God doth giue vs.

N this text Moses rehearseth, after what sort he had exhorted the people to take possession of the Lande that God had promised them, and by what meanes he would haue encouraged them to it. And that is to the ende that the people shoulde knowe their owne vnthankefulnesse and naughtinesse, in reiecting the benefite that was offered vnto them, and in that they obeyed not God, but were giuen too much to their owne sensuallie. This then which Moses doth here, is as it were an vbraiding of the Iewes, to ynd they might knowe howe it was long of none but themselves, that they inioyed Gods blessing no sooner: and that they might afterwarde yeelde themselves more pliable, and not bee so wilfull any more in their owne frowardnesse, but simple submit themselves to God as soone as they shoulde heare him speake. That is in effect the intent of Moses.

Neuerthelesse hee interlaceth also another matter therewithall: which is, that he telleth the people they be so much the lesse to be excused, because they had had experience of Gods goodnesse, in that he had led them with his mightie hande. For, their passing through the horrible and dreadfull desert, was not without the assistance of a singular and vnaccustomed power of God: where as they notwithstanding forgetting the goodnesse which they had felt, and which they ought to haue borne in minde for euer, did grudge at God, and became wilfull, and woulde not goe forward when he was redie to haue led them to the end. And that is the cause why Moses saith expressly, that they had sene. As if hee should say, you wrought euen against your naturall senses, when you went not on as your God communded you. The reason is this. So long as you suffered your selues to bee governed by his hand, and so long as you walked in the way that hee appointed you: did you not euen see with your eyes, that hee made you to ouercome all hardnesse? Was not the wildernes wherthrough you passed, a verie gulfe? And yet notwithstanding you scaped out of it. And how came that to passe, but by the wonderfull working of your God among you? Seeing y you heard his voyce, you were sure that hee was come among you. Then said I vnto you, now is there no more for vs to doe, but to inioy the lande which our God hath assigned to vs for our heritage. Goe, let vs fight, our God hath promised it vs, and hee will not disappoint vs. Wee knowe he hath wrought mightily for vs hitherto, and surely he will goe through with his worke. These and such other things did I alledge vnto you: And yet you followed not them as you ought to haue done. Wherefore acknowledge your vnthankefulnesse in that you refused to enter into the inheritance which God had promised to your fathers, and which he hath prepared for you.

Nowe by the way, the first good lesson that wee haue to gather here, is that forasmuch as God hath already vttered his goodnes towards vs in making vs to feele his blessing: wee be the more worthy to be blamed, if we rest not wholly vpon him, or put not our whole trust in him to walk on boldly & without douting. For although God had neuer shewed himselfe to our experience: yet ought wee to giue credite to his holie worde. And it is good reason that we shoulde do him the honour to beleue what fouer he faith or speaketh vnto vs: for as much as he is faithful, and his worde is better tryed than either gold or siluer, as it is saide in the Psalm. And there-therefore if there were no more but Gods vttering of his worde with his owne mouth: it were ynough to condemne the whole world for their disobeying thereof. But seeing that God hath confirmed his sayings by deeds, and hath shewed vs as it were to our eyesight, that his making of his promises vnto vs is not in vaine, but hee hath made vs to feele the things with our hands; so as we know in effect what his power is, and that it neuer faileth those which are his: if after all this teaching we fall to checking still, and be so stiffnecked as we will not bow to submit our selues to the things that hee speaketh, nor haue any will to obey him: I pray you doth not the greater condemnation lye vpon vs? What is to be done then? Let euery of vs consider aduisedly the good turnes that God hath done him, & let him marke them and note them that hee may beare them in minde. Verie well, God hath succored mee at such a pinch, I haue felt his helpe in such a case, I haue bene ayded at his hande, and he hath made me to perceiue his mightie power after such and such fashion. After this manner must we make rehearsal of Gods benefices, and of his helping of vs all the time of our life. And after as hee hath vttered himselfe vnto vs, so must we be the more confirmed to trust to his promises, and to rest wholly vpon them. Herewithal let vs be established in inuincible constancie, to goe which way fouer he leadeth vs, without feare of any distresse. Why so? For my God which hath neuer forsaken me to this day, will not giue me ouer now. As I haue felt [heretofore] that he giueth strength to those that are his: so am I sure that hee will reach me his hande and succour me still. So then there is no more for me to doe, but to commit my selfe vnto him. I see that this thing & that thing may cumber me, there are a number of temptations which may make me turne heade: but yet forasmuch as my God hath succored me hitherto at my neede: I doubt not but hee will doe the like vnto the ende. Thus yee see that the way for vs to eschewe the blame of vnthankfulness, is to call Gods benefices oftentimes to our remembrance, thereby to strengthen our selues still in trust that he will neuer faile vs vnto the end. Also this will serue to make vs ouercome all temptations: and although the diuel haue neuer so many meanes and stoppes to turne vs out of the right way, yet shall we not cease to goe on still. And why? Because the hope which wee shall haue gathered, of Gods former making of vs to feele his goodnesse, will serue to carrie vs ouer all tempestes in the middes of the sea: it will be as a boate, or as a shippe, or as a bridge to conuey vs safely ouer. To bee short, wee shall haue wherewith to strengthen vs continually, so wee shutte not our eyes at the assistance which God sheweth vs dayly. Thus you see generally what wee haue to gather vpon this saying of Moses. A non the matters shall bee layde out more particularly by similitudes.

Let vs proceede to the things that he addeth: namely, that being come to the hill of the Amorhythes, he saide, Let vs possesse the Lande which the Lord our God and the God of our fathers promised vs. For it is here before vs, that is to saye, at our commaundement, as hee had saide afore, for this is but a repetition of that which wee haue seene already. And heere Moses setteth forth the promise that God had made vnto the people, to the end to assure them of the Land in such wise, as they shoulde bee out of all doubt that it was their owne. And why? Because it had bene promised them of God. Beholde (saith he), thy God ment not to lye to thee, nor to beguile thee: and therefore thou maist assure thy selfe, that the thing which hee hath spoken shall be performed. Marke that for one point.

Neuertheless, to the ende that the people may the better vnderstande, that they were not to possesse the lande for their owne deserts sake: hee telleth them expressly, It is the God of your fathers that doth it. For the Lande was promised as well to Abraham as to Isaac and Iacob, before the Lewes which then liued, were borne. Thereby then are they put in minde, that they had not deserued such a benefite at Gods hande, but that it proceeded wholly of his free goodnesse. And so much the more were they to blame, in that they had felt such experience of Gods goodnesse, and their sinne also was so much the heinouiser, in that they acknowledged not the mercie that he had vsed towards them. That then is the effect of Moses meaning heere.

But we haue to note herewithal, that although the promise was then growen olde, yer had it not lost his force: neither ceased it to be still, though Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob were deade. True it is that the promise which had bene made, was not spoken to them that were presently alue at this time: [they to whome it was spoken] that is to wit, Abraham, and the Patriarks, were all deceased. But Gods promise & his truth die not with men, they haue not the course of a transitorie and sightfull life as wee haue. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God had promised the lande to Abraham, for him, his heires, and successors that shoulde descende of his race: although Abraham was rotten in the earth, and they that followed him together with all the Patriarks were consumed to powder and dust: yet the worde that GOD spake continued still, and forewent no whit at all of his force. This (I tell you) is a point which wee ought to marke well. For it is now long ago since the Lawe was giuen: so that if we haue an eye to the oldenesse thereof, it will seeme to vs to bee an outworne and deade thing. About a two thousand yeares after that, the Gospel was published to the world: and wee see that manie yeares, yea many hundred yeares are passed since. Then if wee shoulde measure Gods truth by time: wee might thinke it to bee a thing as good as buried and quite and cleane forgotten.

Moreouer they that first caried the Gospell abrode, are deade long agoe: but yer must we beare in minde, that Gods truth is euerlasting, and

and that although men be corruptible and paffe and vanish away: yet the doctrine of saluation abydeth alwayes vnappayred, so as the force thereof abateth not at all. That is it (say I) which we haue to beare in minde. For although it was in olde time that GOD spake to Moses and the Prophetes, and although it bee nowe long agoe since the Gospel was deliuered to the Apostles: yet must we receiue the doctrine thereof nowadayes, as being in full force still. And that so much the rather, in respect of this saying of the Apostle, that our Lorde Iesus Christe hath made the way fresh by his bloude. They that liued vnder the Lawe and the Prophetes ought not to haue despised the trueth that had bene manifested to their fathers, though it was done long time before: and yet did not God discouer it so openly to them as hee doth to vs. It is not for nought then that the Apostle saith, that the way which Iesus Christ made, is freshe. And why sayes hee so? His meaning is, that the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ cannot drye nor putrifie, but is alwayes freshe in remembrance before God, to the ende that wee shoulde bee assured of his trueth, which hee hath sealed with his death and passion. Seeing then that we haue such a pledge, we ought to be so much the forwarder to receiue Gods truth, forasmuch as wee perceiue that the force and vertue thereof dureth for euer.

Nowe must wee makke further howe Moses saith heere, Thy God hath promised thee the lande, It is before thee, possesse it. By these wordes he betokeneth, that wee must rest wholly vpon that which God faith, and not stande scanning after our owne fancies. For if men content not themselues with the things that God speaketh to them: where shall they seeke for greater certaintie? Or when they haue sought it, where shall they finde it? But it is an offering of too greate wrong to our GOD, when wee bee not satisfied with his vttering of his will, and with his warranting of the same vnto vs. For if therevpon wee bee still wauering and doubtful: what else is such vnbeliefe, but a replying against Gods trueth as though hee were not faithfull, or as though he went about to abuse vs by alluring vs with vaine hope? So then let vs marke well, that all our life long wee must content our selues with Gods worde, and when we haue it wee must followe it without seeking any further.

For looke howe many doubttes and mistrustes wee conceiue, so many ouerthwart nippes and priuie vpbraydings doe wee giue vnto GOD, as who shoulde say there were no certaintie in his saying. But wee knowe that nothing is more peculiar to him than his trueth. And so (as much as in vs lieth) wee make it a thing of nothing. Therefore it is a verie profitable warning when hee saith, The Lorde thy God hath promised thee the Lande. For hee speaketh still in generall, meaning that we must all our life long hold this rule of sticking simply to the word of God. A non the things shalbe laide forth particularly, as I saide afore.

But let vs marke well, that Moses hauing alledged Gods promise, and hauing saide that the Lande was at the peoples commaundement, because GOD ment not to sayle in the performance of the thing that hee had once promised: addeth afterwarde, Enter into it and take possession of it. Wherin hee sheweth vs that although GOD performe in vs al that hee hath saide: yet must not wee on our side bee idle, nor bee as blockes of wood, but wee must offer our selues to his seruice. For albeit that wee cannot stirre one finger to doe wel: yet hath GOD made vs instrumentes whereby hee will worke.

Therefore wee must goe forwarde when hee commaundeth vs, and wee must indeuer to apply all our members and wits to obey him. True it is (as I saide) that men are vtterly vnprofitable, yea and that their will goeth cleane backe from that which God commaundeth: but yet for all that, God ceaseth not to giue vs willingness, and when hee hath giuen vs willingness, hee giueth vs also performance, as saint Paul auoucheth to the Philippians: and therewithall hee maketh vs to doe it with feare and carefullnesse. When as saint Paul saith, Doeye, and also, It is Gods death: those two things seeme to bee contraries: but they bee not. For Gods working is in such wise, as hee imputeth to himselfe the things that hee doth in vs: and yet for all that, hee will not haue vs to bee slothfull and to fall a sleepe, but that euerie of vs should indeuour himselfe. Let vs learne then that whensoever God promiseth vs any thing, it is his office to accomplishe the whole.

Neuertheless he will haue vs to take paynes and to straine our selues, yea euen vs which are vtterly vnprofitable. And hauing giuen vs his power, hee will haue vs indeuour to make the thing available which he hath bestowed vpon vs, and to make it to bee profitable. That then is the thing which we haue to note here.

Howbeit, there withall there is also the conclusion which Moses maketh: namely when as hee saith, Fearre nos, bee not dismayed. And hereby hee doth vs to vnderstande, that although we bee armed and fenced with Gods promises, so as wee ought to bee sufficiently resolued, that hee will guide vs vnto the ende: yett shall wee haue manie occasions to make vs grudge and repyne, so as we might swarue aside from the right way, or vtterly forsake it, if we had not constancie to ouercome all the stoppes and lettes that the diuell thrusteth in our wayes: for of nature we be fearefull. True it is that in many things we be but too hardie. When any fond thing is to be attempted foolishly: in that case men neede not to be hartened, for they be but too bold already, to attempt this and that, & to mount about the cloudes as thee say. But when GOD shoulde be followed whitherfoeuer hee calleth vs: our eyes runne heere and there, vp and downe, wee bee at our wittes ende, yea and if a flye doe but whiske before our eyes or a strawe stirre at our feete: by and by wee are at a stoppe. Nowe seeing wee haue this vice in our nature, let vs determine to fight on all sides against this soe fearefulnesse, to the ende wee bee not helde backe from following God whetherfoeuer hee commaundeth vs, but that wee may ouer come all the temptations of Satan, though hee bee neuer so wylie in forging and framing of innumerable occasions in that behalfe, to turne vs away from our calling. And therefore let vs marke this warning giuen to the Iewes by Moses. For it is a warning to vs as well as it was to them, that it is vnpossible for vs to come thither as god calleth vs, if wee ouer come not this feareful-nesse and dismayednesse, that is to say, if wee fight not against all the incumbrances that satan can set before our eyes to make vs afraide.

 Therefore it standeth vs on hande to bee armed with strength from aboue. Thus you see howe wee ought to apply this streyn to our instruction.

Nowe the things will bee the plainer and better vnderstoode, if we make a similitude be-twene the lande that was promised to the children of Israel, and the kingdome of God whereunto wee bee called. For in good sooth, the land of Chanaan was but as a figure & earnest-penny of the kingdome of heauen. Had the auncient fathers letted their mindes vpon the lande which they sawe: they had had a verie poore rest and weake stay, for in verie deede they enioyed it not of all their life, they did but onely trauell through it as strangers and way-farers. Wee see that Abraham had not one foote of it in possession, sauing that hee purchased a litle peece to burie his wife in, no hee had not so much as water to drinke. Iacob was banished out of it a great parte of his life. Isaac and all the Patriarks had but their walke in it, they neuer possessed one foote of the land which God had giuen for an heritage to them and their issue. Wee must needs conclude then that the auncient fathers did not passe through this visible land, and that their acknowledging of it for their inheritance was after such a sorte, as they tended alwayes towardes heauen, and that was the marke which they aimed at. Seeing it is so, wee must make a similitude betwene this lande, and the inheritance wherunto GOD calleth vs, as it hath bene purchased for vs by our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Whereas hee saith That God made the people so passe through a horrible and dreadfull wilderness:
 the same belongeth vnto vs also, if wee consider in what state God founde vs, and whence hee hath drawn vs. For are wee not all damned and forlorne by nature? Hath not the diuell a tyrannous dominion ouer vs, from whence no man can deliuer himselfe by his owne power?
 Euen so, if wee consider where GOD seeketh vs when hee calleth vs to him: [wee shall finde, that] the wilderness wherethrough the Iewes passed is not so dreadfull and terrible, as is the damnation wherein wee were. For wee bee in bondage of sinne, wee bee vnder the thraldome of deat, atan reigneth ouer vs, and is king and prince of the whole worlde. Seeing then that GOD riddeth vs out of so misfe-rable slauerie, and setteth vs at libertie by his holy spirite: is it not all one as if hee shoulde make vs way through the gulfes of hell? Yes:

 for wee bee there in verie deede, and wee cannot come at Iesus Christ, except wee be brought out of the dungeons of death. Nowe then, if there were no more but this, that God hath ridde vs from the curse which was brought vppon vs by Adam, and wherein wee are all of vs fast shut and locked vp vntill hee haue pitie vppon vs: the experience of that one point ought to make vs perceiue his goodnesse. And if there were no more but that: it ought to giue vs courage to followe him, and to giue our selues wholly vnto him. For if wee bee flookishful, there is no excuse for vs, because his goodnesse is sufficiently warranted vnto vs, and it is long of none but our selues that wee bee not fully resolued and perswaded that hee will goe through with the thing that hee hath begonne. And that it is so, if euerie of vs bethought himselfe well, wee shoulde finde that God by infinite wayes made vs to ouercome the things that seemed vn-possible. But what? To set forth our owne valiant deedes, wee can well ynough alledge this and that, and our memorie is but too good.
 And though it bee but a thing of nothing that wee haue done, yet wee can kill to magnifie it and to make great reportes of it. Loe howe men can bee quicke ynough to remember all that euer they haue done in their life, that may set forth their owne glorie: but in the meane whyle wee doe wickedly forget the benefites of GOD. And yet worketh hee in such wise to-wardes vs, as ought to quicken vs vp to acknowledge his goodnesse, or else on the contrarie parte wee doe but thrust all vnder foote. Hee shall haue deliuered vs from manie after delays, and hee shall haue made vs to haue passed manie grate lettes, so as wee may haue thought that we had bene vtterly shut out and fordone, and hee shall haue reached vs his hand: and yet for all that, wee neuer thinke of it againe. Nowe then, where as wee see men to bee recheffe and slothfull in following GOD, it is because they forget his benefites which they haue had proo-of, and become like the Iewes. And therefore it behoueth vs all to acknowledge our fault in this behalfe, and to mourne before God, and to seeke redresse of it.

Thus yee see howe wee ought to put this text in vre by similitude: that is to wit, when the promises of the Gospell are set forth to bring vs to the kingdome of heauen: let vs consider whereat GOD hath begonne in vs, by what meanes he hath brought vs to him, and howe hee hath strengthened vs, to the intent to bring vs out of the damnation, wherof wee are founde worthy by too too apparrant conuiction. Nowe therefore if wee thinke there vpon, and consider thus with our selues, beholde, our God hath made vs partakers of his power, wee haue had too apparrant experience thereof, he hath deliuered vs out of y gulfe of hel, he hath ridde vs out of the bonds of the diuell and of death: let vs not doubt but hee will alwayes continue like himselfe hereafter, and hold out to the end.

Furthermore let vs also marke well this saying in this text: The God of thy fathers hath promised thee the Lande. Beholde therefore, it is at thy commandements, enter into it and take possession of it. The meaning is that we shoulde yeelde so much honour to Gods truth, as to bee fully and thoroughly resolved in our selues, that inas-much as hee hath adopted vs to his children, our inheritance is certaine and infallible in hea-10 ven. For to what purpose is the Gospell preached vnto vs, but to make vs knowe that GOD is our father, and that wee being become his children by his free adopting of vs, shoulde bee assured that the kingdome of heauen belongeth vnto vs? And in vnto deede for the same cause is the Gospell called the kingdome of heauen, forasmuch as it openeth the gate vnto vs, to the end that we nowadayes shoulde not doubt but that GOD auoweth vs to bee his heires.
 20 But we must haue a further consideration of the inheritance that God giueth vs, than of all the benefites that Moses speaks of. For it stood the Iewes on hande to haue helde them selues still to the thing that had bene spoken to Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob. But now is the Gospell another warrant vnto vs. For God is called the father, not onely of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, but also of our Lord Iesus Christ, who is our head in 30 such wise, that being once vnyted vnto him, we become partakers of his own substance and life, and therefore ] we must not doubt but that the inheritance of the kingdom of heauē belongeth vnto vs. Nowe then, like as Moses said vnto the Iewes, The God of your fathers: so must this voyce sounde in our eares, The GOD and father of our Lorde Iesus Christ, hath not onely promised vs the kingdome of heauen, but also giuen vs wherewith to assure our selues the better of it. For we haue the performance & effect there-
 40 of, in that our Lord Iesus Christ suffered death, to recouer vs the inheritance, wherof we were bereft and dispossessed in the person of our father Adam. Nowe then wee see after what sort we ought to looke vpon this doctrine: that is to wit, that although wee bee vnhappy wretches, although wee deserue to bee reiect- ed of our GOD, although there bee nothing but cursednesse in vs, and although that by nature wee bee plunged in the gulfe of hell: yet
 50 notwithstanding, seeing that God hath adopted vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ, and made vs all one with him by faith: wee neede not doubt but we bee heires of the kingdom of heauen. And why? For GOD cannot lye, and forasmuch as hee is vnchangeable, we haue sufficient warrant that wee shall not bee disappointed by putting our trust in him. Againe, wee haue our Lorde Iesus Christe, who is the mediator betweene God and men, and hee hath not onely 60 taken solemne recogniſances as a publike notarie: but also accomplished the things that were promised on the behalfe of GOD his father. He hath signed the euidence in such wise with his owne bloude, as wee see he hath payed that which hee owed not, and that which he was not to bee charged withall. So then let vs haue thus stedfast assurednesse with vs, that GOD auoweth vs for his children, and consequently that wee bee heires of eternall life. Howbeit, let vs alwayes take that assurednesse out of the Gospell, accordingly as wee see that Moses leadeth the Iewes thirther.

True it is that wee must not forget the hea- venly power that was vttered euerie where in the rynging againe of our Lorde Iesus Christe. But howe might we applie such a benefite to our selues, or how could we inioy it, if it were not by faith? Therefore like as our Lorde Iesus Christ hath purchaced vs the kingdome of heauen by his death and passion: so is it his will that comfort shoulde bee giuen vs nowadayes by his Gos-10 pcell, where hee witnesseth vnto vs that all that euer hee did was for our sakes and for our welfare: so that hauing that once, and being assured thereof, we may inioy the benefite that was purchafed for vs.

But yet in the meane while, wee must doe so much honour to the Gospell, as to beholde that thing by faith, which is hidden from our eyes. It is saide that the Lande is at thy commandement. Nowe if wee beleue our senses, wee cannot perceiue that the kingdome of heauen is ours, or in our hande: it will seeme to bee too farre off from vs, and that 30 wee had neede of wings to flie about the skyes. But what? Wee must so honour Gods worde (as I saide) as wee must not doubt but that the thing which is spoken there, is possible to be done, although wee conceiue not howe by our fleshly vnderstanding: faith must surmount all capacite of man. And if wee finde any hardnesse therein, let vs fight against our selues, and daily indeuour to recouer vnto God. For the way 40 whereby hee will be glorified at our hands, is (as I saide at the beginning ) that if there were no more but his bare worde, yet ought the fame to contrēt and suffice vs. But seeing he hath vouchsafed to deliuer vs this pledge which he hath giuen vs in the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ: we shall be the lesse excusable, if wee haue not a full and whole contentation. Seeing then that we haue such an assurance of the king-
 50 dome of heauen, let vs go and take possession of the lande. For (as I said afore) God will not haue vs idle.

True it is, that hee sheweth vs by the holy scripture, that there is not one drop of power in vs that tendeth vnto good, but that wee be wholly giuen to euill. And yet notwithstanding it is his will also that when he hath put his graui-60 ous gifts into vs, we shoulde make them auaylable, without chalenging any thing at all to our selues. For in this case it is not for vs to glorie in our selues, nor to trust in our owne legges, according whereto it is saide in the Psalme to such as are giuen to the worlde, that they must not trust in their owne strength, nor in the strength of their horses. If this bee saide of the things that pertaine to this flight-full life: what is to bee saide of the spirituall life which is much more excellent? So then with-

wout attributing any thing to our felues, let vs in-deuour neuer thelesse, seeing that God commandeth vs, and let vs goe on to enter into the possession of the spirituall kingdome whereunto he calleth vs. And that is the cause why I said that wee must euermore come backe to our Lorde Iesus Christ, and there seeke y thing that is wan-ring in our felues. For wee knowe that his suffering of his death and passion, was to exalt vs above the heauens: and although wee doe but creepe vpon the earth, or rather bee so loppehaue that wee sinke still downward, to plunge our felues in the bottomlesse gulies: yet will our Lorde Iesus lift vs vp, according as he himself was exalted, to the same end and intent, as is declared in the third Chapter of the Gospel of S. Iohn.

Iohn. 3. 14.

Furthermore, to the ende wee may bee discharged of all self-trust, let vs looke vpon the notable example that was giuen vs at the death of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For if wee will goe the right way to heauen, wee must followe the poore theefe to whom he saide, This day shalt thou bee with mee in Paradise. Howe can wee bee sure that GOD will bring vs to the kingdome of heauen, seeing that wee seeke hell, and all our affections, all our thoughtes, all our desires, all our powers, and all our workes, tend wholly thither, euen to separate vs from God, and to alienate vs from his kingdome, and to drie vs away from life and saluation? How may wee (say I) be sure that God will take vs vppe into his heauenly kingdome? Wee must haue recourte to this word that was spoken to the poore theefe: This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise. Seeing it is so that our Lord died, & that he entered into such gulies of sorrowe, that he was pinched so farre as to abide the tormentes that were due vnto vs, and not only abode y reproch and grieue of bodily dearch, but also felt y iustice of God, and became as a wretched offender to beare all the finnes of the world: let vs not doubt but he hath deliuered vs from the paines & anguish which wee should haue felt, and will life vs vp to himselfe, and therefore nowe let vs not be afraid of death. But first of all it behoueth vs to followe the poore theefe. What had he in him to bring him to the kingdome of heauen? He was fastened to a crosse, he had his armes and legges broken, he seemed to bee but a wretched carkaffe, there was nothing but re-proche in him. Thus then you see howe he was an owgly myrrour to looke vpon: and yet ne-uerthelesse, Iesus Christe promiseth him to make him his partaker and companion of his heauenly glorie. And what had hee benee all the time of his lyfe? So lewde and wicked both before God and man, that he was worse than condemned and accursed. Will we then be the heires of God? Wee must follow this theefe who had the preheminnence to goe before vs into the heritage of heauen. And how [ must wee follow him? ] Wee must acknowledge y naturally there is nothing in vs but vtter wickednesse, and that GOD might iustly holde vs accursed. Also wee must thinke our felues to bee as folke that haue their armes and legges broken, yea and as men vtterly dismembred, so as we haue not one whit of strength in vs, at leastwise as in respect of our felues. And: et for all that therewithall wee must not doubt but that God accepteth vs to him, when wee liue in with our Lorde Iesus Christ by right faith and pure affection, acknowledging him to be our king, and hauing our eyes fastened vpon the inuisible kingdome, as I saide afore. For if the wretched theefe which sawe death before his eyes, which was in as great tormentes as was possible, and sawe himselfe as it were behated of all the world, did put his trust in Iesus Christe: what ought wee to doe? Againe, in what state was our Lorde Iesus Christ at the same time? He hung vpon a crosse full of reproche and shame, all men did spit at him, all men did spite him. And yet, notwithstanding that reprochfull state, the poore wretch ceased not to behold life in death, and to say, Lorde remember me when thou commest into the kingdome. But now wee knowe that Iesus Christ is exalted to the right hand of GOD his father, and hath soueraigne power ouer all creatures:

so that if wee yeeld him not his due honour now that he is entered into his glorie, wee shall haue no excuse at all. True it is that he was once hanged vpon a gibbet full of reproch and shame: but yet wee see therewithall that the same was turned into glorie and triumph, so as the victo-rie which he obtained was more royall than all the triumphes of all the Princes in the worlde.
Seeing then that wee doe see that Iesus Christ hath ridde away all the slander of his crosse by the power of his resurrection: ought wee not at leastwise to looke vp to the kingdome where he dwelleth, whereunto he calleth vs, and which he hath purchased so dearly? Thus you see after what manner wee must put in vre this text of the possessing of the land which he hath promised vs and purchased for vs.

Besides this, when wee heare this saying,
that it is at our commaundment: let vs vnderstand that it were a disauulling of the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, if wee should not bee fully resolu'd of this inheritance, according also as Saint Paule sheweth. If thou say, Rom. 10. 7. who is he that shall goe downe into the deepe, it is all one as if thou shouldst serche vp Christ againe from death. Then if wee imagine with our felues, alas wee bee wretched creatures, there is nothing but vtter weakenesse in vs, euill doeth so ouermaister that wee wote not what ro do, the diuell tormenteth vs, on the one side, and on the other side wee bee so fraile as is pitifull to see, and wee bee in trouble and inquietnesse: if wee stande herevpon as quite out of heart and discouraged: Saint Paule sayeth it is all one as if we beleued not that Iesus Christ dyled for vs. For why? The death and Passion that he suffered are no trifling thing, but a thing of verie great price. Nowe then wee must take it to bee of power as it is, so that although wee see our felues in the mids of bottomlesse pits, yea & that very often and commonly, in somuch that when wee bee out of one gulie, by and by wee enter into another, and therewithall Satan hath such power against vs and wee on the other side are so feeble, that we can scarcely stirre one finger: yet let vs not forbear to assure our selues, that the inheritance belongeth to vs still: for that is the honour which wee must yeeld to our Lord Iesus Christ. But therewithall let vs go forward still. After what maner? Let vs call to minde howe the Apostle saith, that like as our Lord Iesus Christ went out of the Citie as reiect-ed out of the companie of men: so we must not disdain to become like him, and to beare the shame and reproche of his crosse: for it becometh the members to be fashioned like to their body. And therefore let vs determine to goe after him, For those are the true markes whereby he knoweth vs to bee his. And for performance thereof, let vs vnderstand that wee must forsake the world in general, yea and our selues too. For the matter standeth not alonely vpon going out of the world. True it is that so long as it pleaseth God to haue vs lodge here, here wee must abide: but yet howsoever we fare, we must euer haue one foote vp, readie to goe hence whensoever it shall please God to take vs to him: so that if wee will be heires of the heauenly kingdome, wee must be but pilgrims and strangers in this world. Yea and (which more is) wee must go out of our selues, that is to say, we must not leane to our owne will and wit, but wee must ridde our selues of all selfweeing, and couet nothing but to goe vnto God. And if the world shake vs off and make a mocking stocke of vs, (as we see now adays how the poore Christians are lightly esteemed, so that they bee taken to bee as the ofscouring of the world, or rather as myre & dung, as saith S. Paul) I say, if wee bee so reiect-ed of the whole world: let vs beare it patiently. For why? Iesus Christ went out of the Citie Ierusalem, bearing the reproch and curse of the whole world vpon him: and therefore let vs bee readie to bee fashioned like vnto him. Also therewithall let vs determine to separate our selues from all the vncleanesse that reigneth euerie where now adays in the world. And forasmuch as we can not possesse the heauenly heritage, vnlesse wee ouercome this doubting and fearefulnesse which plucke vs backe: inasmuch that if our mindes runne still vpon our owne feeblenesse, truly wee shall not neede any other thing to shake vs downe: whereas on the other side if we haue our eye vpon our captaine Iesus Christ, who alonely hath vanquished all feare, yea and euen death, and the diuell, & all his power: then may wee boldly goe on still, to ouercome all lets that may hinder vs or turne vs aside from following God whither soeuer he calleth vs: Let vs shut our eyes against all that euer may turne vs out of the right way, and let vs not doubt but that God wil alwayes be our guide, and worke in such wise, as he will outgoe all our desires, yea and all the hope that we can conceiue of him.

Heb. 13. 12.

Nowe therefore let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that being cast down in our selues, wee may resort wholly vnto him, and acknowledging our selues to bee wretched offenders that haue deserued his wrath and vengeance, (yea euen wout euer being able to recouer out of endlesse death and cursednes) flee for refuge to the redemption that is purchased for vs by the bloodshed of his onely sonne. And that seeing our Lord Iesus Christ hath payed all our debtes, to discharge vs of them, and to beare the condemnation that was due vnto vs, and forasmuch as he offereth vs daily the fruite and effect of his death and passion: we may not doubt but that he will accomplish the thing that he hath begunne in vs, and by his holy spirit make the power of his resurrection auailable in vs, to the end that we may leade a new life, and bee stablished in him more & more, till we be quite rid of all the corruptions of our flesh, to bee taken vp into his kingdome. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely, &c.

On Saturday the xiiij. of Aprill. 1555.

The sixth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

22 Then came you all vnto me and said, let vs send men before vs to search out the land for vs, and to bring vs word by what way we shall go vp into it, and into what Cities we shall enter.

23 That saying liked me well, and therevpon I tooke twelue men among you, of euery tribe one.

24 And they departed, and went vp into the Mountaines, and came to the riuer of Efcoul, and searched out the land.

25 And they tooke of the fruits of the Land in their handes, and brought them to vs, and brought vs word againe and said, The Land which the Lorde our God giueth vs is good.

26 Yet notwithstanding, you would not goe vp, but were disobedient to the commaundement of the Lord your God.

27 And you murmured in your tentes and saide, bicause the Lorde hateth vs, therefore hath he made vs to come out of the Countrie of Egypt, to deliuer vs into the hand of the Amorrhites, to cause vs to be destroyed.

28 How shall wee goe vp? Our brethren haue made our heartes to quaike, by saying: The people are more in number and taller of stature than wee. The Cities are great, and walled vp to the skie. And moreouer we haue seene there the sonnes of the Enakims, Ere Moses bringeth to their remembrance the things that are contained in the xij. Chapter of the Booke of Numbers, howbeit that there seemeth to be some diuersitie at the first blush.

For there he declareth that such as should haue espied out the land, were sent by the expresse commaundement of God: and here he maketh no mention of it, but saith it was done at the request of the people. Now these two things may very well agree: that is to wit, that the people should desire to haue the enteraunce into the land known before they went any further: and also that God should allow that desire, yea or rather euen preuent it, accordingly as wee knowe that in all things he guided this people with a passing fatherly care, as shall bee shewed in the next Lecture. Therefore there is no inconuenience in it, that God, to shewe the people what care he had to guide them, should appoint spies to be sent: and that therewithall the people also on their part should require it. So then we see full that God bare with the people, when he graunted to send men to spie out the land. And let vs marke, that it was a condemning of the people, when the thing that should haue bene to their helpe and furtherance, did plucke them backe. And it is not reported alone of those whome Moses speakes off, to the intent that wee should blame them: but they bee set forth as an example and looking glasse, for vs to see our selues in, and to fare the better by it. If God beare with vs and giue vs meanes conuenient for our infirmities: let vs apply them to our vse, let them stirre vs vp to obey him, and let vs not in any wise be hindred by them. This (say I) is the thing that wee haue to marke.

But the chiefe point is this that Moses addeth, namely, That the spies brought worde againe that the land was good, and that the people would not beleue it, but were disobedient to the mouth of God. It should seeme that Moses rehearseth not the storie as it is contained in the place before alledged. For there it is said, that of the twelue which were sent, there were but two that hartened the people to enter into the land that was promised them, and that the other ten laboured as much as they could, to discourage those which were not verie well disposed of them selues. Seeing it is so, why doeth Moses say here, that the spies reported it to be a good land, as though they had encouraged the people to doe as God had commaunded them? Wee haue to marke here, that Moses hath not an eye to the greater number nor to the multitude: but to the better fort of them. Although then that there was no more but Caleb the sonne of Iephone and Iosua the sonne of Nun, that made good report, and trauelled to make the people to obey God: yet are they preferred at Gods hand. Thus ye see that God esteemeth more of the sixth part than of all the rest. And it is a verie notable point, as wherof wee may gather verie good and profitable doctrine. For anon Moses will adde, that the greater part of those that were sent to spie out the land, saide that the Cities were great and walled vp to the skie. But as now he speakes but of the two that discharged their ducie.

Wee see then, that whensoever the greater multitude of men inclineth vnto euill, we must let them alone as though they were nothing worth. They bee not worthe to come in account, and wee must rather holde with a handfull of men whom wee see to teache vs faithfully and to giue vs good counsell: I say wee must rather followe one or two such, and let a hundred, yea a thousand others goe, than cast our selues into confusion with the greater multitude. And if euer this were needfull: it is needfull now in our time. For on the one side wee see how all things are turned vpside downe in the worlde: superstitions are so great and vnmeasurable as is pitie to see. If wee should frame our life to the common trade, what a thing were it? For all is infected with robbetrie, deceite, crueltie, treason, blasphemie, contempt of God, drunkennesse, whoredome, pride, and loosenesse. Nowe then, whosoeuer fashioneth himselfe to the custome of men, must forsake God and withdrawe himselfe from all goodnesse: he must giue himselfe to all lewdnesse, and plundge himselfe into all wickednesse. Lo to what point wee bee come. What is to be done: then? Let vs learne to looke vpon such as are able to guide vs aright, though they be but fewe in number: and let vs not be carried away by the greater multitude. For it wil not serue to shield vs before God, it wil not serue to lessen or to mitigate our fault. If we say, euery man did so: when I saw such a number of men followe that trade, I put my selfe in companie with them: & to my seeming, y thing that was so commonly vsed, could not bee but lawfull: the alledging of such fond excuses will stand vs in no stead, for we shall win nothing by them, as I saide afore. And therefore let vs follow those to whom God hath giuen the grace to shew vs y right way. Though there be but three or foure of them, let vs esteem them no lesse than if they were an hundred thousand. For God passeth not for the greatnesse of the multitude, as it is said alreadie.

Num. 13. 2.

32. & 14. 6.

Againc, on the other side, as concerning Religion: are they that stickc to the purenesse of the Gospell, more in number than the Papiſts, Turkes, and heathen men? No surely. Inſomuch that if wee bee compared but with the Iewes which are a curſed offſcouring, whom God hath ſo rooted out as there remaine verie fewe of them: yet notwithstanding the Chriſtians which are willing to giue themſelves ſimply to the ſeruing of God according to his word, are ſo fewe in number, as the other may farre paſſe them. What would become of vs then, if wee ſhould followe the greater number? And yet wee ſee howe a great ſort of ignoraunt folkes doe take vpon them to ſay, Tuſh, as for them that take vpon them to alter Religion, they bee but a verie ſmall number, and are they wiſer than all the world beſide? Thus you ſee how moſt men gaſe vpon themſelves, and caſt a ſtop in their owne way, to barre themſelves from coming to Gods truth. And what is the cauſe thereof? Euen their blearing of their owne eyes, by gaſing vpon the greater multitude which goeth to deſtruction,

But contrariwiſe, let vs condemne the whole world, as Noe was ſaine to doe in his time. And that condemning of his was not in vaine: for he and his houſhold were ſaued by it. And although they were not aboue eight perſons in all: yet durſt they ſet themſelves againſt ſy whole world; and ſo muſt wee doe. Though all the whole world criec out with one voyce, that it is not now needfull to reſt vpon the holy ſcripture, and that the opinions of the great wiſe men of the world ſhall ſtand: let vs giue care to that which GOD ſayeth. Albeit there were but one man that laboured to bring vs from the errors and ſuperſtitious that haue full ſcope euerywhere: yet let that one man bee more eſteemed at our hands, than a hundred thouſand others. For wee ſee the rule thereof that is giuen vs here,

And although Moſes was the writer of this Booke: yet is it the holy Ghoſtes dooing, who vſed him as an inſtrument. Now then, where it is ſaide That the ſpies reported it to bee a good land: wee ſee that the two are ſet downe at it were in the roome of all the twelue, and the other tenne are laid vnderſoote. For they were not worthe to bee remembered, and we knowe that God deſtroyed them for their vnuſtineſſe. Then if there bee any deceiters that ſeducer the common people, ſo as their wicked doctrine is receiued, and men like well of them, and in the meane while there are very fewe that teache vs to ſerue God purely: let vs heare thoſe fewe, & let vs not ſticke to ſay, Theſe are the teachers that inſtruct vs rightly what wee ought to doe. Though the number of their aduerſaries be neuer ſo great, let vs not make any account of theſe, for ſomuch as we ſee that God deſtroyeth them, & that they be as it were raiſed out of his booke: for behelde, this ſtorie written by Moſes is the very regiſter of God. Inſomuch that whereas on the one ſide ten men had conſpired to miſcarie the people, they were all reiecte, & God made no reckning nor account of them. And [on the contrarie part] whereas there were but two that encouraged the people faithfully: thoſe were put in number for all ſy reſt, for they were well worthy to be eſteemed as miniſters and ſheperdes in Gods Church, for their due perſeuering of their charge. Therefore if we marke this text, we ſhall be thoroughly armed and fenced againſt all the ſtumbling blockes ſy trouble moſt men, who when they ſee a ſort of dogges barking at Gods truth, are vtterly at their wits end, and knowe not what to doe nor where to become. Wherefore let vs looke to obſerue the rule that God giueth vs: & then ſhall wee euer keepe on our courſe, & neuer be turned out of the way for the troubles and diuiſions that we ſee in the world.

And hereunto alſo ought that to ſerue which Moſes addeth, You would not (ſaith he) but were disobedient. To whom? He ſaith not ſingly vnto God: but vnto the mouth of God. This manner of ſpeache might ſeeme harſh at the fiſt ſight: but yet it importeth good doctrine. Wee know that men are alwayes deſirous to excuſe themſelves whē they withſtand God and incounter his word: and yee for all that they ceaſe not to proteſt that they meane not to be againſt God. Their intent then is, that men ſhould not thinke them to doe that which they doe. But here to cut off occaſion of all ſtaringholes, the holy Ghoſt ſaith expreſſly, that we muſt yeeld to Gods mouth. And what is meēt by this mouth of his? It is his vttering of his will vnto vs, when he ſpeaketh to vs by his miniſters, by his Prophets, and by ſuch as he raiſeth vp in his Church to gouerne his people. That then is ſy thing that wee muſt take heede vnto: for God will not ſhewe himſelfe to vs in viſible maner. True it is that at the ſame time he gaue ſignes & tokens, to the end it might bee knowne that he himſelfe ſpake by Moſes: but yet in the meane while he vſed Moſes as his inſtrument, & therewith all confirmed his lawe which was publiſhed at that time. After him came the Prophets, and them alſo did God vſe as his mouth: but in the Gopſell wee haue his mouth open moſt of all. So then let vs marke well, ſy they which proteſt that their intent is to ſerue God, & in the meane while make none account of his word, as it is vttered and left in writing: are but hypocrites, yea euen ſhameleſſe hypocrites, becauſe the dedde it ſelfe proueth them liars. For whereas they on the one ſide ſay that their intent is to ſerue God: and God on ſy other ſide intendeth to trie our obedience by ſetting his word before vs: ſy ſame is a good triall to diſcerne whether our ſaying that we be his ſeruantcs, be ſo in good earnest or no. For thereby it appeareth, that they hearken not to his word, but rather reiect it, & preferre their owne opinions and fancies before it. And ſo yee ſee a point that yee ought to marke wel.

And hereby it appeareth how much ſy whole world is to be condemned now adayes. For ſy Papiſtes can well ynough ſay, ſy their intent is to be ſubiect vnto God: yea & to what purpoſe elſe do they take ſo great paines, & martyr theſelves in their fooliſh deuotions? All the Idolatries which they commit, they terme by the name of Gods ſeruiſe. But yet for all that, behold, wee haue the holy

holy scripture wherein God hath vtered his will vnto vs, and he will haue men to be ruled thereby. This is alledged to the Papistes, to the end they should not followe their owne lykings, but submit themselues to the bridle in such sorte as God hath layde it vpon vs, and beare his yoke quietly. But contrariwise, they will needes ferue God after their owne imaginations, as we see by the confused mingling that is among the, [which maketh it manifest] that they haue no care at all to obserue Gods commaundements. For their saying is, mee thinkes that this is good, thus were we taught by our fathers. Whereby we see that they doe flately resist Gods mouth. They will not stick afterward to say, O wee worship God. Ye amarie, but God will haue men to hearken to his mouth, and we knowe what maner a one that is: namely euen the same wherewith he hath spoken by Moses and the prophets, and finally by the Apostles by whom he hath taught vs familiarly all that euer hee would haue vs to doe. So then let vs nowe take good heede to this doctrine, for wee cannot disobey Gods mouth, that is to say his word, but it is a manifest despising of him: for they be things that differ not, neither can they be separated asunder.

Furthermore not onely the Papistes doe prouoke God by resisting his word: but also we see that euen they which possesse the Gospell, will beleue nothing but that which lykeeth theselues. For what reuerence hadh the holy scripture nowadays among a number of men? In dedde the word Gospell costeth them nothing: but in the meane while, if a man tell them that God sayth not any thing which is not there: euey man takes vpon him to bee an interpreter: or els hee sayth, mee thinkes this is harde, and as for that, I cannot digest it. And so, after as euey man mislyketh of the holy scripture, so taketh he leaue to reiect one thing or other, whereas notwithstanding, wee should in all pointes haue our mouthes shut when God speaketh, and our eares open to receiue whatsoeuer he sayth vnto vs. Forasmuch then as we see that the doctrine of the Gospell is so despised throughout the worlde, and euey of vs shooteth forth his owne bolt, and wee will needes haue such shiftes and deuises as lyke ourselues, so as if any thing seeme euill vnto vs, wee reiecte it: it may easily be gathered by the sight thereof, what horrible condemnation is prepared for all such as disobey the mouth of God. And therefore let vs learn to temper our selues with such modestie, and sobernes, that as soone as we haue any record of Gods truth, wee may yeelde vnto it without gainesaying. Let that serue for one poynt.

And morcouer let vs extend this doctrine yet to a further vse: which is, not to be inquisiue of Gods truth, furtherforth than it is vtered in the holy scriptures. For God will not haue vs to fall (as yce woulde say) to pulling out of his bowels, as they doe which will needes bee searching out of measure, and more than they haue leaue to doe. We shall see a number of fantastical fellows & giddibraind persons, which cast forth sond & tryfing questions, and turmoyle heauen & earth, & are neuer contented, but are alwayes busie & full of vniquietnesse. Now, this is a curfed & deadly disease. And therefore let vs learne to hearken vnto God when he speaketh to vs, & not to couet to know any more than he hath taught vs, & setteth daily before vs in the holy scripture. Let all our wisdom be to receiue y which is vtered vnto vs by y mouth of god. It followeth how Moses vpraided y people, that they murmured in their times, saying: Beholde, because the Lord hateth vs, therefore hath he brought vs out of the land of Egypt, and brought vs hither as to a buriall place. For our brethren haue made our hartes to quake, telling vs that they sawe Giants in the land, and that the townes are walled up to the cloudes. And to what purpose shal we goe? Here wee see that when men begin once to doe amisse, the mischief waxeth stil worse and worse, vntill it become to the full measure. It was an euill beginning aforehand, when the people resisted God, and would not followe to enter into the land at the commaundement of Moses.

But is this all? No, behold here is yet a much more curfed blasphemie, in that the people spyteth GOD, repnyng at his bringing of them out of Egypt, and charging him with hatred towards them. And wherof came this? No doubt but hee maketh it playne: namely for that men seeke couert in dooing euill, and make no conscience to accuse God and to blaspheme his holy name, to the ende to haue some colour wherewith to hide their owne wickednesse. Thus you see how men deale, when they cannot finde in their hartes to yeeld vnto God. They will needes still iustifie themselues in their disobedience, specially when God preacheth vpon them and holdeth them at a bay, yea and layeth in such euidence against them, as they be convicted: for then doe they seeke startingholes to iustifie themselues euen in despite of God, accusing him and laying all the fault vpon him. Truly this is a curfed kinde of dealing, but yet we see it is common, inso much that men doe make euen an arte of it. How many are there to be found, that wil not blame God to cleare themselues? If a man blame them for it, and charge them with their faultes: they will not graunt that their intent was so: but yet the dedde bewrayeth that it is so. If a man bee rebuked for his vices, with whom hath he to doe? In dedde it maybe y it is but a mortall man which findeth fault with him & sayth, thou hast done this or that: but yet must he vnderstand that the iudgement is Gods. When soeuer any man telleth vs that we haue done amisse: wee must not looke at him that speaketh, for Gods word is the iudge. Therefore must euey man cyte himselfe, and as oft as he is warned of any offence, he must offer himselfe to Gods iudgement feare, & consider y y is the place where he must appeare to make his account. Now let vs se how euey of vs is inclined or disposed to cōfesse his faultes. Nay, contrariwise we seeke al y shifts we can, to shroud our selues, & we haue our lurkingholes, inso much y euen whē we be too manifestly convicted of our sins, yet we ceafe not to wrangle still. But our Lord will not suffer vs to scape him so by our fond excuses. He followeth still vpon vs, and then begin wee to gnash our teeth at him. We see that these would excuse themselves. But when they fall to replying, with how for see we not that the euill is alieady apparant? Therefore when men perceiue themselves to be so preaced at by Gods word, they become as wilde beastes, they spit out and cast vp their poyson, they spite God apparantly, & rayle at his word. And would God y examples thereof were not so common as we see they be.

Wherefore let vs marke, that this text ought to serue vs as a looking glasse, wherein to behold the frowardnesse that reigneth throughout the world. And when we haue done amisse, let vs learne to absteine from wilfulnesse. For else in the ende we shall fall into the bottomlesse pit of blaspheming God, & if we continue in that stub bornes & vnwillingnes to acknowledge our own vices, in the end we shall fall to cursing God furiously, as it befell to these wretches of whome Moses speaketh here. For when men wil needs maintaine themselves after that sorte in their wicked quarels against God, they fall not onely into disobedience, but also into sturdinesse, yea euen into most shameful & beastly sturdinesse, as we see here. It was too grosse a fault already, when the people had said, how shall we goe, or what can we do, seeing the townes are so strong and the people so giantlyke? It was too much already to resist God after that fashion. But behold, here is yet a more excelsiue vnthankfulness. For in stead of bethinking themselves of Gods grace, in deliuering them from the thal-dome of Egypt they fall to rayling at him. What (say they?) Would God haue fetched vs out of the land of Egypt, if he had not hated vs? Now alas what hatred was it! When God pitied his poore creatures, they were euen at the last cast: they were intreated lyke wretched slaues, yea euen to the drawing of the bloud out of their vaines: they were so cruelly handled, as was horrible to see: & in the end the tyranny was grown so farre, that all their malechildren were murdered, of purpose to make cleane riddance of them, and to wipe out the very remembrance of them. Euen at this pinch, did God haue compassion vpon the people. Could any greater goodnes haue bin shewed? And when as he saith by his prophet, My people, what harme did I thee in bringing thee out of the land of Egypt? doeth it not appeare thereby that they were too too malicious and frowarde? I planted a vine [sayth God] and looked for good fruite: & now thou wilt choke thy maister with thy fowernesse.

Now then seeing that this deliucring of them out of the land of Egypt, was a singular warrant of Gods goodnesse, loue, and mercie towards them: must it not needes be that they were stark mad, when they twited God with his bringing of them out of Egypt, charging him that he did it of hatred towards them? Were it possible that men should ouerhoote themselves so farre, if they were not become starke deuals? No: but as I sayd afore, this doctrine is written of the Iewes that were in the time of Moses, to the intent that we should profite in the feare of God by their example, and beare in minde that they which will needes stand lo wilfully in their vices, shall in the end fall to flat spiting of God, and blasphemie his name. turne good into euill, deface his mercie as much as they can, mingle heauen and earth together, and make a helllike confusion of all things. Wherefore let vs stand in awe, and walke on in humilitie and warinesse, glorifying God. Againe, when we haue committed God any fault, let vs be afrayd, yea and euen mourne for it, and not pretend any matter or quartell against God, but rather flee to his onely mercie for refuge, being vtterly ashamed and cast downe in our selues. And so ye see what we haue to marke vpon this text, where it is sayd that the Iewes murmured in their terts, saying that Gods bringing of them out of the land of Egypt, was because he hated them.

Now furthermore it behoueth vs to marke, that the cause of their rayling, was for that they knewe not Gods power, notwithstanding that it was apparant to them. For although they had felt it enough, & more than enough to haue confirmed the withal: yet neuertheles, as soon as they heard speaking of the talnesse of their enemies, of their walled cities, & of their strong holdes: by and by their hearts faled them and they were vtterly dismaid. And why? Surely God had giuen them prooffe of his mightie power, to the intent they should haue trusted to him as I haue sayd heretofore. But what for that? They shut their eyes at all those things, and therewithall fell to grudging allsoone as they heard of any distresse. And euen so doe we. For when God calleth vs, or commaundeth vs to goe: we will see aforehand whether there be any lettes or no. How shall I goe, say wee? for there is this let and that let: and as for me, I haue no strength at all. And in the meane season we consider not that God is strong enough for vs, and that it is his power which maketh vs to walke on, and to ouercome all that euer the deuill trumpeth in our way. Now then, wee can neuer yeeld God his due honor, to trust in him, to put our selues into his hand, and to hope that he will helpe vs and giue vs the vpper hand of all things that may turne vs out of the right way: except we haue an eye to the benefitts we haue receiued before. And so we see that Moses rehearseth not here a single storie, y we might the better know what God hath willed vs to doe: but rather that he setteth before our eyes what we be, together with the vices that are but too common among vs, to the end we should learne to put our trust in Gods strength. What is to be done then? We see our owne frailtie, howbeit not so much as were requisite: but yet, that which we see ought to make vs hang downe our heads. Neuerthelesse, when we knowe once y there is no power in vs to follow Gods will: let vs step to the remedie, let vs not be out of hart for it, neither let vs doe as they doe which thinke themselves quit because they haue not wherewith to stead y urne, saying, oh syr, I am of flesh and bloud, I am a man. And what is that to say, but that thou art in sin, and vnclene? but manie men say so, to the intent to waite their handes of it. They may well say, as for me, I haue not so great strength: true it is that I ought to doe it, but I am not able. Yea marie, but is there not a God ȳ can do it for vs? yes: and therefore when we once knowe our owne weaknesse, let vs learne to seeke the remedie, forasmuch as god hath promised vs ȳ spirit of strenght, that being vntoed thereupon, wee may not doubt but that wee shall ouercome all our enemies, and all the assaults that can be made vpon vs. Furthermore let vs also consider ȳ power of our enemies, and the greatnesse of temptations. For wee haue not to doe with fleshe and blood, they that fight against vs are not mortall and transitorie men, but they be all the powers of the ayre, and the prince of the worlde practiseth all ȳ he can to discredit vs. Now therefore, when we once knowe the force of Satan, and the meanes that he hath to breake vs, and to vndoo vs; let vs not faile to take courage, and to bee of inuincible constancie. And why? for we know ȳ our God hath promised vs the vpper hand of al that cuer Satā shal practise against vs. And therefore it is he ȳ we must trust vnto. Thus we see generally how we ought to put this doctrine in vre.
what

Now haue we to goe through with the rest of the similitude which I glanced at here before: which is, that we must consider, that seeing God doth call vs nowadayes, not to the possessing of the lande of Chanaan, nor to be lodged here in this world for a fewe dayes, but to come to the heauenly lyfe, and to the immortall inheritance: it becommeth vs to take courage, and to acquaint our selues with this doctrine. And seeing that God hath told vs, that his reaching of his hand once vnto vs is not in vaine, and that he will goe through with his worke: wee on our part must determine fully to goe through with our course, and not to shrinke in the middes of the way. Thus ye see, first of all that we be more to blame than the leues of olde time, if wee hearken not to Gods mouth, considering that his intent is not, only to giue vs an earthly dwelling place to lodge in, but to call vs right forth to the kingdome of heauen, and to the immortall glorie; whereof wee be made partakers aforehand by hope. And besides this, wee see after what sorte our Lord hath called vs. For he hath not giuen vs such Spyes as were giuen to the people of olde time, he hath not giuen vs a doozen persons to report vnto vs what maner a land it is: but hee hath sent vs his onely sonne, who is a faithfull witnessse of the inuisible heritage, yea and he hath giue vs good hanfel thereof in his rising againe. Wee haue the twelue Apostles which were chosen according to ȳ number of the tribes of Israell, & they were as good as twelue r̄peters to make gods voyce heard throughout the whole world. And besides them, there hath bin a great cloude of witnessses, as the Apostle termeth them in the twelfth to the Hebrewes, whereby he meaneth that if we were not ouer dull, & worse than vnthankful & churlish: it might well suffice vs to haue such an infinite multitude of witnessses [to auow & warrant] our faith. Now then let vs learne, that if we fight vnder Iesus Christ, who hath told vs that sin is ouercome by his death and passion, & the bondes of death are broken to the intent to set vs free: it becommeth vs now to looke vpon he auen, & to march on boldly through ȳ world, forasmuch as he being risen againe, sheweth vs that the possession of righteounesse and lyfe is assured vnto vs, because the power of his spire is vntoed therein. Seeing we haue such a confirmation to warrant vs to the kingdome of heauen that is promised vnto vs: should we be cowardly? what excuse will there be if we play the dastards and nice cockneyes? But to the end we may obey our God and not prouoke his mouth: let vs fal to strengthening of our selues in him. For what cauled this wretched people to turne away so from his calling? Euen their considering of their enemies force according to their owne nature, and their forgetting of God and his power in the meane while. Let vs learne then to make such account of the strength of our God, as that wee may by the power of his spire gette the vpper hand in all encounters that hee bringeth vs vnto: for hee will not haue vs to be idle in this present lyfe. Hee coulde well enough fet vs in quiet at the first instant, so as wee shoulde not be troubled any maner a way, nor the worlde make warre against vs, nor we be tempted at all by our owne fleshe, and that Satan should bee far of from vs: God I say coulde well maintaine vs in ease at the first instant: but he intendeth to trye our patience: for he will haue vs to be men of warre. Wherefore let vs on our side fight, yea, let vs fight lustily: and if our enemies bee too strong for vs, (as wee finde that they be in deed) let vs flee for refuge to the helpe that our Lorde hath promised vs, and wee shall ouercome all lets if wee fight in the strength of our God. But yet let vs marke that wee must fight vnto death, and not dye once onely: but haue death present daily.

For what else is a Christen mans lyfe, than an induouing to renounce the worlde and all his owne affections? And therefore looke how many good thoughtes wee haue, so manie are the deathes of our owne froward nature: so as it is not possible for vs to serue God one day, but we must dy a hundred, yea and a thousand times: I saye wee must dye by beating downe the sinfulnesse of our owne nature: for wee bee full of vices. So then let vs marke well, that God is so farre of from making account of Liuet-hearted seruants, that delight in ease, commoditie and pleasure: that hee will not onely haue vs to fight, but also to be ready to dye, and to put the doctrine in vre which I come now to touch: that is to say, to be changed and renewed euerye minute of an houre.

Moreouer let vs note also, ȳ lyke as our Lord Iesus Christ was buried after hee had bin crucified and suffered ȳ reproch of his death: so must we be buried too. For it is not enough for vs to dye one day and no more, as some doe, (which haue good braydes, so as ye would thinke them ready to forsake themselves vterly, and there appeareth great willignes in them to renounce the world: but suddenly they will needes fall to resting there, and they can no skill of entering into the graue:) But we must holde out in it, so as when wee haue once learned to dye with Christ, and to crucifie our olde man as S. Paul termeth it to the Romans: we must also be ready to goe into the graue, that is to say, all that euer is in vs as in respect of the world and of our owne fleshe, must be vterly abolished, and wee our selues become nothing. To be thorse, wee must desire nothing but to haue our lyfe hidden with Christ, (as sayth Saint Paul to the Colossians) yea and to haue it hidden til his coming againe. But in any wise let vs beware that wee be not vthankefull: for we shall neuer take courage, but by considering the inestimable worthynesse of y good things whereunto God hath called vs. And therefore when we heare that the people considered not Gods bringing of them out of the land of Egypt: let not vs followe that trace, for it were the next way to put vs out of hart. So then, we shall neuer make anie account at all of Gods benefites which wee haue receiued already, and which he shall haue made vs to feele: except we haue our eye alwayes fast set vpon the promised land, that is to wit, vpon the euellasting lyfe. And therefore on the one part we must oftentimes be thinke vs of Gods benefites, and call to minde his goodnesse and mercie towards vs which we haue felt. But that is not all that we haue to doe: when wee haue once considered how God hath shewed himselfe to be our redeemer, how he hath taken vs out of the horrible blindness wherein we were, how he hath inlightened vs with the brightnesse of his Gospel, and how he hath done vs so many good turnes euen in respect of our bodies, as we ought well to vnderstand that he hath shewed himselfe a father and sauour towards vs: but specially when we haue thoroughly weyed or rather worshipped the goodnes which he hath shewed vs in all the spiritual benefites y we haue receiued at his hand: (for they be the excellentest, & we also ought to esteeme them more than al the bodily things that we could haue had at his hand:) whe we haue once considered all these things: then must we also be thinke our selues whereunto it is that God calleth vs, that is to wit, to the kingdome of heauen. Therefore we must alwayes haue our countenance as it were set fast vpon the heauenly lyfe, and looke thitherward, so as all our wittes, all our desirs, and all our indeuors tend thither. For if we haue not an eye to the kingdome of heauen: wee must needes shrinke at euery incounter euery minute of an houre. Thus then ye see what wee haue to doe in that case. And moreouer to the intent our hartes quail not as Moses sayth here: let vs in deuer to strengthen our selues with the power of the holy ghost, and consider that (as it is sayd by the prophet Esay, and alledged by the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes,) the Gospel hath this propertie and nature with it, that when wee feele our knees weake and trembling, when our armes are feeble and after a sort brood and broken, and when we be hemmed in on all sides with impediments that hinder vs from following our vocation: it maketh vs to resort to Gods word, which ought to strengthen vs and to make our armes and legges sound and lustie againe, and specially to strengthen vs in our hearts and mindes.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as we may repent vs rightly of them, and being ashamed in our selues resort vnto him, assuring our selues that (as he hath promised to receiue all wretched sinners that come vnto him vpon trust of his grace by meanes of the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ) wee shall be accepted of him and and his wrath pacified towards vs, though wee haue prouoked him neuer so much. And let vs pray him, not onely that wee may obteyne forgiveness of our sinnes past: but also to guide vs henceforth by his holy spirite, and to drawe vs from all the vanities of the worlde, so as hee fashion vs according to his owne righteousnesse, and make vs feele the fruite of the victorie and triumph that is prepared for vs in heauen. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to people & nations of y earth, &c.

The seuenth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

29 And I sayd vnto you, dread not, neither be afraide of them.

30 The Lord your God which goeth before you will fight for you, lyke as hee did with you in Egypt before your eyes.

31 And in the wildernesse where thou hast seene how the Lord thy God bare thee (euen as a man beareth his sonne) in all the way which ye haue gone, vntill ye be come vnto this place.

32 And yet for all this, you haue not beleued the Lord your God, 33 Who to prouide you a place to pitch your tentes in, went before you in the way, in fyre by night to giue you light in the way that you should goe, and in a cloude by day.

Hardinesse were well taken, it were an excellent vertue worthie of great prayse, and exceedingly requisite in a mans life. For if wee be fearefull, and haue not a stout courage to dee well:

it will be an easie matter to caue vs to all naughtinesse. But yet for all that, the worlde knoweth nothow to bee hardie . And that is the cause why men are so much giuen to rashnesse, & so bold & ouerbold to aduerture vpon foolish matches without aduise. But if we aduerture vpon things on our own head & fancie, & put not our trust in God; it is a building without a foundation. Neuerthelesse, it is not for vs to looke for Gods helpe, further forth than he hath bound himselfe to it by his promises . The way then that we ought to be hardy, is that when we haue once fought our Gods will, we obey it simply without attempting any thing at our owne pleasure. Be wee once at that point, wee must examine our owne strength and abilitie, and finding nothing but weakenesse there, wee must vterly distrust our felues and resort vnto God. And forasmuch as he of his owne free goodnesse vouchsafeth to assure vs that hee will not leaue vs at our neede: wee must thereupon conclude, y we cannot miscary being vnder his protection.

Now then wee see that the true hardinesse which God alloweth of, is when men trust not to themselves, ne leane to their owne wit and reason, but yeelde themselves wholly to him that ought to gouerne them, and depend vpon his grace for all things which they want, and thereupon goe forward stoutly, without shrinking or swaiaing one way or other. And this lesson is shewed vs in the text that I rehearsed euen now out of Moses. For there hee exhorteeth the people to hardinesse, and sheweth them why. The Lord your God (sayth he) will fight for you. As if hee should say, If you esteeme your felues the more for your great multitude, or thinke to ouercome your enemies by your own power: it is but foolish presumption, and God wil punish you for being so puffed vp with pride . And if ye should attempt any thing without Gods leaue and without hauing his worde for it: that also were an ouerweening which should not scape vnpunished.

But forasmuch as God is on your side, and you haue his promise that he will not faile you, and you be not come hither but by his leading of you with his owne hand: Be not afraid . Thus sendeth he them to Gods will, to the ende they should not doe any thing which is not lawfull. Again, he will haue them to leane altogether to Gods promises, and because they could not haue in themselves the things that were requisite: he will haue them to hope that God will assist them. Now, this was spoken to the Iewes whom Moses gouerned at that time: but yet is it a doctrine whole vse is euerlasting in Gods Church, as is sayde afore. We haue not the Chamaites for our enemies against whom to fight: but yet doe wee knowe y this present life of ours shall not be idle; but that God will haue vs kept occupied lyke men of warre that are waged to battell. And who be our enemies? Satan with all the flutes that he hath, and all the vnbeleeuers through whom we must passe. For here wee be mingled with such as seeke nothing els but the destruction of Gods children, we haue infinite temptations, and to be short wee neede nether to go out of our felues to finde incounters enow: for all our lustes, and all that springeth of our flethe, is deadly enmitie against GOD, as sayth S. Paul to the Romans. Seeing then that God hath ordeyned that wee should mainteine battell all our lyfe long, and wee haue a greate sorte of enemies, yea and those vary mightie and strong, which neuer cease troubling of vs: it behoueth vs to get vs hardines: for if we flinck, anon we be ouercome. Therefore it standeth vs on hand to be armed with innumerable consti-

Rom. 8.7.

But yet for all this, the matter lyeth not altogether in being desirous to serue God, & to attaine fro the foolish attempts y eary men away.

For there may be some that are pliable enough, & which would faine doe the things that God commaundeth: but therewithall they be puffed vp with a fond selfeweeuing, bearing themselves in hand that they be able to compasse the things that they haue to doe, and trusting to their owne reason. But our Lord cannot abide to be robbed of the honor that belongeth vnto him. For what haue wee whereof it is lawfull for vs to boast? When we haue gathered all our powers vnto vs, wee shall finde them to be nothing but a vaine and fond shew. And therefore wee must bee faine to put to the second poynt which I haue touched. Which is, that here we be warned to submit our selues to the obedience of God, so as we seeke the things that he giueth vs leaue to seeke, & aske counsell at his mouth what things he lyketh and alloweth: to the intent that knowing our selues to bee ouerweake, yea and that there is no wisdom, strength, nor towardnesse in vs, but that alour powers fayle vs: wee may pray him to guide vs and to giue vs good direction, and to hold vs vp with strong hand, so as wee ground not our selues vpon our owne weening or opinion, but altogether vpon the assurance of his worde. Hath God promised to helpe vs? then let vs not doubt but he will doe it. Haue we no promise at his hand? then must wee needes be at our wittes ende, till he comfort vs and strengthen vs by shewing vs his wil. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vpon this text of Moses.

And therefore although it be vnpossible for a christen man to step one step without falling; yet must wee not be out of hart. The reason is, because wee haue Gods promise, that he will fight for vs. Our fighting (sayth Saint Paul) is not against fleshe and blood; beholde, all the powers of the ayre are against vs. For the diuill is named the prince of the world, he is about vs, and holdeth vs as it were betwene his pawes and in his throte, so as he is lyke enough to swallow vs vp euery minute: of an houre lyke a lyon: and we haue neither strength nor force to withstand him.

But yet for all that, we must conclude, that forasmuch as we be in the protection of our God, we be sure of the victorie, if we fight well. Therefore let this saying be well printed in our minde, that the Lord our God will fight for vs. When there is any question of doing well, the Papistes cling to their own freewill, and it seemeth to the that God layeth the bridle in their necke, so as they be able to doe this and that, whereby they overthrow themselves as they be worthy. But contrariwise let vs flee to our God, and hope to haue him doe the things that we cannot doe.

Further more let vs marke well, that this doctrine could not stande, vnlesse wee were vnable to fight for our selues. For were wee of power to resist our enemies, Gods fighting for vs were more than needed. Then doth it follow, that his fighting is because wee haue no power at all, because our armes are as good as broken, and because wee bee lame from the sole of the foote to the crowne of the head. And in good sooth, if the Iewes hauing to doe but one lie with mortall and transitorie enemies, needed to haue God to fight for them: what had we need of? I pray you, when wee see Satan and all the world ready to giue assault vpon vs, yea and that he hath already gotten the forehand of vs, and in the meane while wee haue neither wall, nor banke to holde them out, but (which is worse) all our owne lustes are as darts wherewith Satan may serue his turne to wound vs with all: can wee defend our selues, hauing so hard a battell to beare out? No: and to wee see how the poore papistes are deceued, in perswading vpon their owne freewill, and in bearing themselves on hand that if they haue neuer so little helpe of God, they can well enough get the vpper hand of Satan. On the contrary part, it is not sayd that God will supply some little default with his power, and that wee must fight first to prevent him: it is not sayde so, but that it is our God that fighteth for vs. It followeth then that all that euer wee doe, is done by the onely power that hee giueth vs, so as it is borrowed of him.

True it is that we would fayne runne, & that wee make great inducers to serue God: but whereof commeth that, but of this, that knowing our selues to bee vterly vnable, wee presume not vpon any power or abilitie of our owne, but doe feele that we be not yet come to perfection? And so, to be short, all our fighting commeth of the meere grace of the holy Ghost.

True it is that God worketh not in vs as in logges or blockes: for his will is to exercise vs as I haue sayd already. Therefore when we should doe well, wee must haue a good mouing and a liuely affection: and although wee haue bin led and drawen away, yet must wee take courage to enforce our selues, that God may worke in vs as in his instruments. To be short, the battels of the faithfull are paynfull enough: but yet for all, we must come backe to this point, that it is God which worketh by vs, and that all that euer wee doe proceedeth of him, inasmuch that without him wee could not stir one finger, no nor so much as thinke one good thought. And so yee see how this saying that the Lord our God fighteth for vs, is accomplished. When wee be once come to that poynt, although our enemies be neuer so terrible, yet let vs not be as men dismayed, assuring our selues that God alone is strong enough for vs, and that although all the world should set themselves against vs, yet ought wee not to care for them.

Haue wee made that account once, with full purpose to withstand all Satans assaults: we must also put the same doctrine in vre in all the rest of our lyfe. And so, when wee see in our selues beset with neuer so many wicked persons, and that they lie in wayte for vs, continually following their lewd practises and deuities: what haue wee to doe? Wee must walke on playnly and vprightly, and not hold with the hare and hunt with the hound as they say.

When wee see that the wicked labor all that they can to overthrow vs, let vs not doe as they doe, but let vs looke what God commaundeth vs, & frame our selues thereafter. And besides besides that, let vs consider, that we shall bee as a pray to them, if God had vs not in his keeping. But seeing hee hath promised vs that hee will haue a care of vs, (as in deede he is our father) and that he will maintaine vs in our iust quarrels, and set himselfe against all such as labor to oppresse the right: forasmuch as hee of his infinite goodnesse vouchsafeth to take our case in hand: let vs goe on hardily, and although our enemies be neuer so wily, & haue the world at will, and haue a number of practises ready for vs: let not all this abash vs, nor make vs to step out of the right way. For why? seeing that God is on our side, what a shame were it to preferre mortall men before him, as though they were able to get the vpper hand of him? So long then as the creatures are not able to preuaile against God, let vs assure our selues of the victorie, forasmuch as it cannot but fall on our side. Thus you see how we ought to apply this doctrine of Moses to our vse.

Furthermore we must also wey well this saying which he addeth, namely that God had giuen them a hartie thereof in Egypt, so as they had good warrant to put their trust in him, and that throughout the wilderness he had ruled them lyke little babes, and borne them in his armes. Seeing it is so (sayth hee) that you haue had proofe of the power of your God in deliuering you from the handes of your enemies: and seeing you haue also perceiued his fatherly care towards you, and that not for one day onely, but for a long time together: You be too too vnthankfull if you make not this conclusion, that he will no more faile you hereafter. To bee short then, to confirme this people withall, Moses alledgeth here the experience of Gods fauor which they had had. And although this poynt hath bin treated of heretofore: yet forasmuch as it is repeated again by Moses: I must needes rehearse it againe and put you in remembrance thereof: for there is no superfluitie in the speech of the holy Ghost. Wherefore let vs marke well, that when God putteth vs in minde of his former helpe and grace, his meaning is that wee should thinke well vpon the great number of benefites which we haue receiued at his hand. And the same ought to serue vs for a warrant, that he wil continue to the end. For he is not lyke mortall men which alter and change their minde: neither is his abilitie abridged: and to be short, he neuer ceaseth to do men good: whereas on the other side, if a man haue done his friend a pleasure, he will perchance be willing to doe as much for him the second time. But if his friend make none end, he will be wearie of him. For he may say he is not able to doe for al men, and that he hath other friends whom he must doe for, as well as for him. Againe, we know that men are not constant. But there is no such thing in God, for the more good that we receiue of him, the readier are his riches for vs, and they neuer diminish. And as for him, he doth not things by fittes as creatures doe, but he continueth alwayes in one will. There is not so much as any ouershadowing in him, as sayth Saint James, to shewe that he is alwayes lyke himselfe, and keepech continually at one stay. Thus may we assure our selues of Gods grace for the time to come, by our former experience of his succouring of vs at our neede heretofore, in that he hath reached vs his hand. To be short, all the good that God doeth vs, ought to serue vs to confirme our faith.

But nowe let vs see what our vnthankfulness is. For hath there passed any day since our coming into the world, wherein God hath not assisted vs a thousand wayes? yea and did we not finde him a father, before we knew him, yea and euen before we came out of our mothers wombe? How should the childe be nourished in the mothers wombe whē he is there as in a graue, vnlesse God vttered a wōderfull goodnesse therein? Be we once entered into the world? behold, wee be hemmed in round about with miseries. Could we passe ouer one minute of an houre, if God shewed not himselfe to haue a continuall care of vs? Now then seeing that our God hath vttered himselfe vnto vs so manie wayes: is there any excuse for vs if wee be still in doubt and distrust of him, so as wee cannot leane vnto him? Againe let euery man looke vpon himselfe [how God hath dealt with him particularly.] For besides the common course of this worldly lyfe, and the things that are ordinary to all men, euery man ought to consider thus: Go to, I haue bin in such a daunger and in such a necessitie, and god hath helped me. How hath he wrought with me vnto this day? Hath it bin long of my selfe that I haue not bin vndone and destroyed a hundred thousand times? was it through mine own power, that I haue bin preferred? No. Then must it needes be that I had his helpe to saue me, during the time that I was as good as senselesse. And afterward he shewed me the lyke fauour againe, when I had not yet any discretion to acknowledge it and to honor him for it. Now if I haue receiued so many benefites of him: ought I not to hope that he will continue to doe so to me still hereafter? Let euery man then bethinke him of the benefites that he hath receiued at Gods hand, as well for his soule as for his body: and then shall wee be sufficiently conuicted, that he hath powred out the riches of his goodnesse vpon vs, and that in such sorte, as we may well trust in him, that he will neuer forsake vs nor put vs out of minde. After this manner must wee put this text in vre, where Moses speaketh to the Iewes and sayth thus: consider what you haue found at the hand of your God vnto this houre. How hath hee dealt with you? how mightily hath he ouermaistred the lad of Egypt, and deliuered you from the bondage wherein you were? And besides this, Moses noteth here a double circumstance, whereby the people were conuicted of gods mighty working in their behalfe. For (sayth he) He hath sought for you in Egypt, yea euen before your eyes. As if he should haue sayd, that the miracles which God had wrought, were not darksome nor done in hudgether mudder, but so openly, and apparently, as the people could not say, we knowe not how the case standeth. God then shewed himselfe after a visible manner in that behalfe, so as yee cannot but knowe that he reached out his arme. That is the first of the two circumstances.

The other is this where hee addeth, that from the time of the peoples deliuerance, God had maintained them, yea and that with such kinde of gentleness, as a father that had borne his child in his armes could not haue done more for him. Now these two poyntes belong to vs. For they bee the too meanes whereby God procureth and furthereth our saluation, vntill he haue brought it to full perfection. On the one side hee fighteth for vs: for wee shall neuer bee without enemies as hath bin declared already. If wee be not acquainted with God, the deuill will reigne peaceably ouer vs, and wee shall delight to bee vnder his tyranny, as they that are naturally giuen thereunto. But if God call vs to him: then shall wee feele the deuill vterly against vs, and wee shall see the world inflamed with deadly hatred towards vs. To be shorte, there will be such a sorte of enemies to bidde vs battell, as wee shall not knowe on which side to turne vs. Lo in what plight Gods children are. Now then, his power must bee fayne to maintaine vs, and to fight the battell: and if he haue done it for the Iewes, hee must be fayne to doe it now for vs too.

Esa. 91. 2.

Thus yee see that the first meanes whereby God sheweth himselfe to be our Sauour: is that hee armeth vs against our enemies, or rather that hee himselfe is our shield, our strong holde (as he nameth himselfe oftentimes in the scriptures,) our bulwarke, our captaine, and to be short, all that euer wee bee. Mark that for one poynt.

Now herewithal, when God hath so strengthened vs, and giuen vs the vpper hand of all assaults that could be put vnto vs: he must be fayne to vpholde vs still within. For else should not wee be able to goe one step, and wee should want all that euer belongeth to our saluation. And euen as a young childe should dye, if it were not succoured: euen so is it with vs. If a little childe be let alone, hee will cast himselfe into the fire or into the water, hee could not take one bit of bread to feede himselfe withall, hee must be borne in armes, hee must be swaddled, hee could not dresse himselfe, hee would starue for cold sooner than come to the fire, and to be short, wee see that a young babe before hee come to some age, is the miserablest creature that can be deuised: and euen so is it with vs in respect of our God. Let vs see as much store by our selues as we list, as wee see that men doe, glorying maruolously in their owne opinion: and yet is there more infirmitie in vs than in little infantes. He must be fayne to rule vs, hee must be fayne to feede vs, hee must be fayne to carry vs, hee must be fayne to clothe vs, hee must be fayne to doe all for vs. For if wee haue any witte at all, it is of his gift: if we haue any strength, it cometh of him: if wee haue any abilitie or helps, it is he that giueth them. True it is, that wee could not inioye the least benefite in the worlde, but by sayth, I meane to our profite:

but yet for all that, it is hee to whome wee be beholden for all. Now therefore, when wee once perceiue that God hath giuen vs strength and stoutnesse to outlast the temptations that Satan hath stirred vp against vs: that wee haue not bin wofulde to death by his venomous darts and arrowes: that wee haue not wallowed in the mucke of this worlde: that wee haue not bin caught in the snares of the wicked: that they practises and wiles haue not preuailed against vs: and that God hath succoured vs at all assays: I say when wee haue perceiued that: let vs also consider that God hath borne vs, that he hath fed and nourished vs, that hee hath clothed vs, and y<sup>e</sup> he hath as it were put our meat into our mouthes. The thing then whereupon wee must sette our mindes, that wee may well bethinke vs of Gods benefices: is that the same must sette vs for a warrant and confirmation of our sayth, both in lyfe and in death.

But yet the similitude that Moses vseth where hee sayth, as a father beareth his childe: deserueth to be well weyed. Truly if there were no more but this, that God compareth himselfe with a fleshly father: it were a singular record of infinite and incredible loue. What a one is GOD if he be taken in his maiestie? Are wee worthie to come to him so familiarly? Now then seeing hee taketh vpon him the person of a man, and a creature, and lykeneth himselfe to them that beare their children: therein we see how hee humbleth himselfe, of good wil to accept vs in like case as if we were his owne children. And what a token of loue is that? Now as for vs, wee be nothing worth: needs then must wee acknowledge an inestimable goodnesse in our God, when he putteth off his maiestie, to make himselfe lyke a man.

Neuertheless hee contenteth not himselfe with this similitude onely, as we shall see hereafter in the song. For there hee lykeneth himselfe to an Eagle, which stretcheth out his winges to cary his young ones, and to trayne them to fore in the ayre. Seeing that God putteth himselfe as it were vnder the shape of a byrde, to shewe vs the passing fatherly care that he hath of vs: I pray you, ought not wee to be rauished with wonderment, when God stoopeth so vnto vs, to make vs perceiue the loue that hee beareth vs, and the fauour that hee meaneth towards vs? [yes surely.] For what a maiestie importeth this worde GOD? And what are the birdes and vnreasonable creatures? [Nothing.]

And yet notwithstanding, beholde, God Ioueth vs so greatly, that to expresse the loue which he beareth vs, and to witnesse his goodnesse towards vs, hee lykeneth himselfe to a byrd, and vs to his little ones. Sith wee see this, let vs learne to magnify the goodnesse and infinite grace of our God better than wee haue done heretofore, and let euery of vs awake and inforce himselfe to consider them thoroughly. For wherefore is it that our God transfigureth himselfe in such sorte, but to reprocure our vnthankfulness, because we be so ouer

grosse and dulheaded, as we let the benefices slip which he bestoweth vpon vs, and digest them not to conceiue the goodnesse of them, and to take heede of them? That is the cause why he fettereth them before vs after that fashion. And we fe also how our Lord Iesus speaketh of himselfe, in bewailing the destruction of the Citie of Ierusalem. Howe oft (saith he) would I haue gathered thy little ones vnder my winges, and thou wouldest not? There our Lord Iesus speaketh not as man: but sheweth y<sup>e</sup> inasmuch as he is the euerglasting God, he played the part of a henne towards the Iewes, and had his winges stretched out to haue brooded them: and that they on their side played the wyld beasts that would not be tamed. When wee shall once haue knowen the fauour of our God towards vs: let vs beware that it be not so defaced as we may iustly bee accused of vnwillingnesse to suffer our God to gouerne vs peaceably. What is to be done then? Seeing that our GOD sheweth himselfe so louing and kinde hearted, that he protesteth himselfe to be as a father towards his little babes, in bearing with our feblenesse and infirmities: and seeing that he saith by his Prophet Esay, that although all the mothers in the world should forget their children, yet would not he forget vs: and seeing he stoopeth so lowe as to liken himselfe to an Eagle and to a Henne, to shewe that he taketh vs for his chickens and birdes: let vs looke that wee yeelde vnto him, & lay our selues as it were in his lappe, praying him to beare vs and to releue our infirmities, that we may be comforted at his hand, as he is readie to doe, if wee flee to his mercie for succour. Thus ye see what wee haue to doe for the well putting of this doctrine in vre.

But Moses addeth yet one point more for the better confirming that God had as it were borne his people in his armes, saying That a night times he appeared to them as in a pillar of fyre, and a day times he appeared to them as in a Cloud. Wee knowe that Gods shewing of these two visible tokens, was to the end that y<sup>e</sup> people should bee assured of his presence: and those tokens were requisite for the leading of the people. For eie in the night they should haue bene sighted with the wildernesse which was verie dreadfull, as I haue declared already. God therefore did giue them light by night, whereby he shewed that he was continually with them. And because they were in a hotte and drye Countrie, he did spread a cloud ouer them in the day, which shadowed them from y<sup>e</sup> burning of the Sunne. Wee see then that these two tokes of Gods presence, serued fitly for the easing of the Iewes, and that in all these dooings they felt his fatherly goodnesse. Againe, the moe of such figures they had, the more were they conuicted that GOD had gouerned them, and that he had a continuall care of their welfare. And therefore doth Moses make expresse mention both of the fire and of the cloud, saying that neyther night nor day GOD had euer forsaken them: so as they could not but knowe that he was with them, and that his grace accompanied them, as he saue meete and expedient for them.

But by the way wee must note, that although wee in these dayes haue no such figures as the Iewes had vnder Moses: yet notwithstanding GOD giueth vs the thing that is of equall value, according also as Saint Paule sheweth, saying that the cloud and the fire were a kinde of Baptisme to the auncient fathers. And the chiefe thing that GOD meant to shewe vnto them thereby, was that although as in respect of their bodies they were guided with fire by night, and had a cloud spread ouer their heades by daye: yet Gods meaning was not to haue them stay vpon these temporall benefices, but to leade them further. Then were they baptized in the cloud. And what haue we now adayes? Doeth not Baptisme warrant vs Gods presence more certainly & with a greater vertue, than did that auncient figure? Yes surely, if all things bee well considered. For wee must not stay our eyes vpon the water: but forasmuch as y<sup>e</sup> bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ was shed, which is a spirituall washing vnto vs: therein God sheweth himselfe more familiarly vnto vs now adayes, than he did to such as liued vnder Moses. True it is that wee haue not the like myracles: but in the meane while, howe excellent was the Maiestie that appeared in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ? How excellent were the myracles that he wrought? To be short, howe highly ought wee to esteeme the death and passion that he suffered? Againe, haue wee not a passing excellent recorde of his Godhead in his rising againe from death? Seeing then that wee haue the whole fulnesse of Gods Maiestie in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that not in shadowe onely, but in very substance as Saint Paule declareth to the Colossians: I pray you were it not too shamefull a thanklesnesse in vs, if wee should not be throughly rescolued that our God hath vttered himselfe sufficiently vnto vs, to cause vs to rest wholly vpon him, and to trust in his power? Thus ye see wherein we resemble the Iewes as touching the cloud wherof Moses speaketh here, and as touching the pillar of fire.

Furthermore, if we consider well howe our Lorde guideth vs: wee shall finde that the Cloud and the pillar of fire serued not the Iewes more, than the gouernment that is stablished in the Church at this day, serueth vs. Whereas that people had the pillar of fire by night, and the Cloud by daye: wee must vnderstand that in so dooing GOD meant not to blefse them for that one time onely. For what had the Iewes bene the better for it, if it had not made them to knowe that God was their gouernour all their life long? Now then wee cannot goe one pace, vnlesse wee be led by our God and assured of his goodnesse. For our life is like the iourney that the people of Israel made thorough the wildernesse. God therefore suffereth vs not to wander in vncerteintie, knowing not whether wee were best to goe or to stand still. For wee haue such a declaration of his will, as wee can neuer straye, except it bee wilfully.

Whosoeuer seeketh Gods good pleasure, shall be taught by him. And therefore now adayes wee haue no need of the visible pillar of fire, nor of y cloud that was spred ouer the childre of Israel, forso much as our Lord sheweth himselfe to bee at hand with vs by another meane, and stretcheth out his hand continually ouer vs, and the way is wide and open ynough for vs. Now then wee haue good cause to be contented.

And so let vs vnderstand, that Moses did not onely speake to the Iewes after all fortes: but also that he hath written these thinges for vs, that wee also might be confirmed now adayes in the doctrine which we haue of God, and nor be disobedient vnto him. And seeing wee haue neede to be succoured at his hand, against Satan and all our aduersaries: let vs learne to distrust our owne strength which is none at all, and acknowledging our owne wretchednesse let vs resort to him for aide and helpe at our neede. And when wee haue once gotten hardinesse to marche vnder his banner: let vs assure our selues that he will neuer suffer vs to miscarie, though we be assailed with neuer so many temptations. Wee see what threatening there is now adayes, yea euen on all sides: wee see how our welfare (as to outward seeming) is as a pray to our enemies, which seeke nothing else but to swallowe vs vp: and therewithall wee see also how weak and feeble wee be to withstand them: and yet for all that, let vs not doubt but our Lord fighteth for vs, conditionally that wee walke on simply vnder the shadowe of his winges, and play not the loose colts, ne attempt any thing which he alloweth not. And so doing, let vs not doubt but he will deliuer vs, and stretch out his hand vpon our enemies to vanquishe them and destroy them, so as wee shall knowe that he hath a continuall care of vs, and that his only desire is to guide and gouerne vs, and to continue and increase his graces in vs, and to haue vs alwayes in his keeping and protection.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs so to feele them, that being ashamed of our selues, wee may craue pardon of him, and being desirous to be gouerned by his direction, seeke nothing but to submit our selues to his yoke more and more, till he haue ridde vs quite and cleane of all our fleshy corruptions and imperfections, and that we be come to the full measure of his righteousnesse, whereunto it behoueth vs now to tend. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heavenly father, &c.

The eight Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

34 Then the Lord heard the voyce of your wordes, and was angrie, & sware, saying:

35 None of the men of this wicked generation, shall see the good land that I haue sworne to giue to their fathers, 36 Sauing Caleb the sonne of Iephone, who shall see it: and I will giue him the ground wherevpon he hath troden, and vnto his children, because he hath followed the Lord througely.

37 Also the Lord was angrie with me for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not goe in thither:

38 But Iosua the sonne of Nun, which standeth with thee, shall goe in thither. Strengthen thou him: for he shall put Israel in possession thereof.

39 Your litle children which ye said should be a pray, and your sonnes which at this day knowe neither good nor euill, shall go in thither, and I will giue them the land, and they shall possesse it.

40 But as for you, turne ye backe againe, and get ye into the wildernesse by the way of the red sea.

After that Moses hath rehearsed the peoples sinne: now he putteth them in remembrance of the punishment that followed vpon it, that they might be better aduised thenceforth, & not prouoke God to wrath after that fashion. For whensoeuer God punisheth men for any offences, the same ought to serue them for a warning, and other men for an example, to beware that they doe no more so. True it is that they which had murmured after that sort against God, were alreadie dead: but yet was it expediently their children should haue it printed in their mindes, that God had not left such vnbeliefe and disobedience unpunished. And so wee see the intent of Moses. Wherefore let vs note, that if God haue shewed vs that he cannot away with some offence: his intent is that we should thinke vpon it, and that the chastisements which lie

I sayeth vpon vs should turne to our profite, and that they should serue vs for the time to come, so as wee should not looke to haue him to stretch out his hand against vs : for it is good for vs to bee taught at other mens cost as the prouerb saith. But wee must marke, that Moses rehearseth here briefly, the things that are declared more largely in the fourteenth Chapter of the Booke of Numbers, where God is so wroth with the people, that he would haue destroyed them vtterly. He saith there to Moses, passe not thou for it: I can giue thee a greater and excellent people than this : but as for these wicked folke, they must needs bee rooted out, I cannot suffer them any more. Hereupon Moses maketh intercession for them and saith: Not so Lord: for if it should be heard in Egypt, that it were so comie to passe, thy name should be blasphemed, & the wicked would make a scoffing at it, saying: because God could not performe his promise, therefore hath he slaine this people, and so hath he beguiled them and betrayed them. Lord, wilt thou suffer thy name to be flouted after that sort? Thereupon God telleth him that he will not execute his vengeance vpon any other than such as had murmured, & yet notwithstanding that he would therewithall referre a seede, on whom to performe the thing that he had promised to his seruant Abraham.

By the way, I threaten that is contained here, importeth not that God was not determined in his owne purpose what he would doe: for if wee should thinke that he altered his mind vpon the advertisement that Moses gaue him: it could by no meanes agree [with his nature.] Should a mortall man haue more discretion and foresight than the liuing God? No: and on the other side wee knowe that God doeth in no wise chaunge his purpose. Neuertheless, diuers times he vttereth somewhat rough threatnings, to driue vs to humble our selues before him, and to make vs feeble what wee haue deserued. God then in telling Moses that he would vtterly roote out that people, so as there should not one of them bee left aliuie, meant not that he was determined so to doe: but sheweth that the people was worthy to haue bene quite and cleane destroyed. And in deede there was iust cause why, to the intent that euery of them should be smitten downe and subdued on his owne behalfe, and that Moses should pray after that maner. And yet for all that, God found the meanes to make good his promise, notwithstanding the wilfull frowardnes that was in the people. And this is a point well worthy to be marked among others: that when God hath chosen any people, although his grace bee despised, so as all they whom he had called become vnworthie of such a benefite, and banish themselves out of his house by reiecting y promise that was offered them: yet will God finde the meanes to chastise them in such wise, as his Church shall not vtterly perish, yea and he will euen ouercome mens frowardnesse with his goodness. I say it is well worthy to be marked. For wee see that on the one side, the hypocrites, vnder colour that God hath manifested himselfe vnto them, and promised to bee their Saviour: doe surmise that they haue him bound, and thereupon take leaue to doe euill: and if a man shewe them their finnes, they harden themselves against it, there is nothing but pride in them, & they arme themselves with Gods name, to fight against his Prophets. And thus haue they done in all ages. When the Jewes were rebuked for their wicked life, & for their turning away from God: they were inflamed with such rage against the Prophets, as to say, How now? To whom speake ye? Are not wee the Church? Are not wee Gods inheritance? Hath he not set his couenant among vs? Haue not wee the signe of Circumcision? Haue not wee the temple where he is worshipped? Wee see then that the Jewes did falsely abuse Gods name, to aduance themselves against him and his word. And this is reported of the Jewes: but yet wee may see the like in our selues. For all they to whom God hath done so much honour as to giue them his word and to manifest himselfe vnto them, doe imagin that they haue him as it were in their secret: & yet for all that, in stead of profiting themselves by Gods good gentile alluring of them vnto him, they set themselves against all good doctrine, they cannot finde in their hearts to beare any yoke, they will needs bee as wilde beastes, and yet in the meane while they will needs haue God to auow them to be of his flocke. But here wee see, that although God had as then set vp his seat among the Jewes, and made a couenant with them to bee their Saviour vnto the ende: yet when he sawe they were not meete to haue him, but that they drew cleane backe, and ceased not to spite him: he found the meanes to punish them, yea and that in such sort, as all those things went to nought, and yet he himselfe abode soothfast, notwithstanding their destruction. And therefore let vs not deceiue our selues. When God hath once taken vs to him to be of his houthold, and adopted vs to be his children: let vs not sooth our selues in our vices, but consider how it standeth vs on hand to walke so much the more awefully, when God hath shewed himselfe so bountifull towards vs, and that forasmuch as he hath vttered his goodnes in such wise, it is good reason that wee on our part being so much beholden vnto him, should looke well about vs and in deuour to giue our selues wholly to his seruice, and be so loth to offend him, as we may also be afraid to be bereft of the grace that he hath once bestowed vpon vs. Marke that for one point.

And therewithall let vs marke also, that God in punishing the hypocrites and all such as abuse the goodnesse that he hath done towards them, ceaseth not for all that, to continue faithfull still. For if he should destroy the whole world and leaue no after spring to call vpon him, it might bee said, in deede God hath iust cause to punish men after that maner: but in the meane time where is his promise? He hath saide that his Church shall continue for euer, & that his name shall bee called vpon here beneath, as long as there is eyther Sunne or Moone in the skie: but nowe is all dispatched quite and cleane, the remembrance of saluation is vterly buried among men. Although then that God should doe iustly in punishing such as had done amisse: yet should his promise bee vaine and void, if he persourmed not the thing that he promised, and so would men blame him of vnfaithfulness. But (as I saide) he findeth meanes to punish them that deserue it, and yet notwithstanding referueth and keepeth still a people to himselfe, and suffereth not his trueth to fall to the ground, or to die without effect. And hereof we haue a notable example in this place. For we see that God had made a couenant with Abraham, and had promised him to giue the land of Chanaan for an heritage to his offspring. As soone as the time came, the promise was performed. Yea verily: but all the posteritie of Abraham refused and reiected the promise, whereby they disannulled it as much as lay in them. Thus you see they bee deprived of it through their owne vnthankfulness. But yet to the intent that God be not accused of leauing his promise vnperformed: it behoued him in punishing the fathers to preferue their race. They that come vp afterward are also the offspring of Abraham, and they possesse the land that was promised: by meanes whereof the couenant that God had made abode sure and fast settled to the end. And for the same cause it is said that God reserued the yong children to himselfe. Now then, as many as had murmured and were about the age of twentie yeeres, are cast off and banished from the good turne that was readie for them: but they that were vnder that age are preferred still, and God is glorified in them. And albeit that the accomplishment of his promise was delayed by the space of fortie yeeres: yet notwithstanding he shewed himselfe faithfull in the end. This is the matter which we haue to beare away.

So now likewise, when we see the world so farre out of order that alis mard, and it seemeth that all men will needes spite GOD, and shut themselves out of all hope of saluation, by driving away the light of the Gospell that is giuen them: let vs looke for some vengeance at hand. For though God bee patient: yet must he bee faine in the ende, to stretch out his arme to bee reuenged of such malice and contempt. On the one side, they to whom the Gospell is preached, doe growe altogether heathenish, and it is scene that a number waxe worse and worse, and wickednesse becomes more excessive than it was in the time of the abominations of the Popedome, so that (to speake properly) it should seeme that men become diuilles after their hearing of the Gospell. What is I pray you, that a man shall see, yea and that commonly? That there is now no more loue of God, no nor countenance of louing him, that Religion is let alone colde and dead, and that there is no more zeale in vs than in a timberlogge. It is apparant then that Gods word is now adayes staued and defyled with our iniquities, in so much that whereas we should bee as burning Lampes to giue light to the sicke ignorant soules, we giue them occasion of stumbling. Againe on the other side, we see how the faithlesse doe fight against God, seeking nothing else dayly but to ouerthrow his trueth, and to cause it to be quenched out, that it might neuer be spoken off more. Seeing then that the whole world is so malicious, and that as well the one sort as the other doe make open warre against God, continuing still in their stubbornnesse which increaseth from day to day: must not God (after he hath waited for some conuersion and amendment) execute his vengeance vppon vs as wee deserue? Yefee then after what manner it behoueth vs to prepare our selues, considering that wickednesse is so great nowe adayes, and so farre past hope of recouerie. But yet therewithall let vs comfort our selues, and looke also that in punishing the offenders God will not sayle to keepe still some seed to himselfe, so as he will alwaies haue some little flock to cal vpon him and to worship him. Let vs not doubt then but that our Lorde will alwayes maintaine his Church, to the intent to shewe himselfe soothfast. Although all things seeme forlorne and brought to confusion: yet will God worke after such a fashion, as we shall see in the ende, that he hath had a regard of his promise, and that he will shew himselfe faithfull and prouoe himselfe so in deede.

But let vs marke well, that the Church shall not alwayes be visible so as wee shall perceiue it. It shall seeme [nowe and then] that all is come to nought: Like as when God made the people to turne backe againe, he said vnto them, Get ye into the wilderness towards the red Sea, as though they should haue returned againe into Egypt. Here is such a great confusion, as it might well seeme that he minded not any more that the land of Chanaan should bee giuen for an heritage vnto those to whom it was promised. Yefee then that for a time it seemed that God had falsified his promise, and that there was not any more hope that the children of Abraham should haue entered into the place that was promised them. Euen so shall it fall out with vs, as in deede it is come to passe. For when God withdraweth his light out of the worlde: it will seeme that there is no more any Church at all. If a man looke round about him, he shall see that all is gone to hauocke. And in good faith, what desolation was there in the time of Poperie? Yea and euen still at this day, a man myght thinke that all should goe to ruine and decaye. But let vs marke, that it is all one as if God should cause those to goe backe againe which are not worthe to goe forward: and that yet notwithstanding, he ceaseth not to holde on in such wise, as his Church shall still bee maintained and preferred. Howbeit, not that the same can bee dispersed with the eye, or perceiued by man: but wee must shut our eyes, vntill our Lord doe worke after his owne maner, that is to say wonderfully beyond all our expectation, and beyond all that we bee able to conceiue. Thus you see how wee may comfort our selues in this, that although wee see it is not possible but y God must not cast some horrible punishment in these dayes vpon mens wickednesse; yet neuertheless hee will alwayes reserve some people to himselfe, so as the thing that he speaketh by his Prophet Icel shall beene continually. Though heauen and earth (saith he) doe goe together, though the sunne be darkened, though the moone drop bloude, though the starres lose their light, and though the earth remoue: yet for all that whosouer calleth vpon the name of the Lord, shall be faued: G O D will 10 preserue them whom he hath chosen to call vpon him: and albeit that their life bee hidde, yet will not God faile to heare them in the end, and to shewe them that hee neuer was vnmindefull of his promise, but that he had a regarde of him selfe, notwithstanding that men were not worthy to haue any one drop of goodnes and mercy offered vnto them. This is the matter in effect which we haue to remember in this first place.

Psal. 95. 7. &
Heb. 3. 7. &
4. 7.

But herewithall we must marke the othe that 20
God made against the Iewes, as it is set downe in the Psalm, and afterwarde applied vnto vs by the Apostle, saying: To day, if ye will heare his voyce, harden not your hearts as your fathers did in the wilderness, vnto whom I sware in my wrath, that they should not enter into y<sup>e</sup> land y<sup>e</sup> was my rest. We see how it was y<sup>e</sup> wil of the holy Ghost, that the Iewes should in all ages be mindful of this disobedience that had bin committed: and that therevpon they should remember that 30 for the same, their fathers were bereft of the benefit that had bene promised them, and thrust out from Gods rest. For (as I saide afore) this serued not for the Iewes only, but the Apostle applieth it also to our time. God then directeth his speech to vs at this day. Therefore wee must haue our eares open to hearken vnto him: wee must not drue of from morrowe to morrowe: wee must seeke no delay: as soone as God speaketh wee must be readie to learne, and not harden our heartes against him. Whereby wee bee 40 put in minde, that there is nothing which hindereth our obedience vnto God, but our own resisting of him through a certaine wilful frowardnes. For he for his part appheth himselfe in such wise vnto vs: as he beareth with our rudenesse and infirmitie. So then, all they that are taught by the Gospell, shall obey God without gain, saying, if they payson not themselves through a certaine wilful frowardnesse to withstande God, 50 and to drue backe his grace. That is the cause why we be expressly warned, not to harden our heartes. Yea verily: for wee must not think that God will suffer his grace to bee so scorned, and dalyed with, and set light by. If he were inflamed with anger against the Iewes for refusing to enter into the Land of Chanaan: if we nowadayes doe playe the restie iades and fall to kicking, let vs not thinke that such vnthankfulness shall scape vnpunished. And in good sooth, if the 60 Iewes were so punished at that time, that all the sorte of them came to nought, wandering in the wilderness by the space of fortie yeeres: God shewed yet more harde and rigorous vengeance vpon them afterwarde, in the thraldome of Babylon and other miseries that happned vnto them: for the thraldome of Babylon lasted thre score and ten yeeres. And at their returne, although he shewed great and wonderfull power: yet were they but a handfull which were saued, according to this saying of the Prophet Esay, though thy people were as the sands of the sea, yet shoulde but a small remnant of them be saued. And in another place hee saith, we had bene as Sodome and Gomorre, if God had not reserved a litle seede, yea euen a verie litle one. Wee see then that God increased his wrath against such as amended not at the example of their fathers. And why? Because they were the lesse to bee excused, for they ought to haue taken warning by the punishments that were prepared for them. Therefore did they double their offence. And what thinke we of the desolation that hath happened since the [first] preaching of the Gospell, [for the refusal] wherof] the wretched world hath wandred so altray, as all things haue bin corrupted in the Church, so that in steede of Gods seruice there hath bene nothing but abominations, instead of truth there hath bene nothing but diuinish lyes and errors, and all things haue bene put out of order there, and that the same confusion hath lasted nowe so long time? [All these things doe put vs in minde:] that Gods voyce ought to sounde thirck nowedayes in the Gospell, than it did in the Lawe. For as is saide by the Prophet Aggeus, God maketh heauen and earth to quake nowadayes, when the Gospell is preached. And besides that, wee haue all the things that befall to the people of olde time, which serue vs as a liuely picture. There must wee beholde Gods wrath, to restrayne our selues from doing euil, as Saint Paul sheweth vs in y<sup>e</sup> renth of the first to the Corinthians. But if wee make no reckening therof: is it not reason that God shoulde punish vs forer than hee did the Iewes?

Let vs learne then to hearken to Gods voyce while it soundeth in our eares, and let vs beware that wee harden not our heartes, least God sweare in his wrath. For it is saide expressly that God sweare. And whie? Because men thinke his threats to be vaine, if hee ntake them not to perceiue that hee speaketh in good earnest. And of a truth we see daily, that when Gods threatenings are vttered vnto vs, a great many of vs do but shake our eares at them, and the number of those that are touched with them, is verie small. Therefore the othe that G O D sweareth is no more than needeth, euen in respect of the blockishnesse that is in men, forasmuch as they bee so foolish as to make but a mocke of euerie thing that is tolde them. And like as God to helpe the weaknesse of our faith, vseth an othe when hee confirmeth his promises: so on the contrarie part, hee vseth to sweare when hee threatneth to punish vs. And why? To the ende that being afraide and abashed at it, wee shoulde come to repentance. For if wee bee not made to stoope that wee may take holde of Gods iustice: our faultes will neuer mislike vs.

Gods iustice then must become as a thunder or lightning, and we must bee abashed before him, that we may no more bee so drunken in our sins as wee were. And therefore whensoever Gods threatnings do not dismay vs sufficiently: let vs call to minde the oth that Moses speaks of here, and let vs assure our selues that it is we whom the same pointeth at, according to that which I haue alledged alreadye both out of the Psalme, and out of the record of the Apostle.

And therewithall let vs also marke well the words that are set downe here by Moses. None of this cursed and wicked generation (saith hee) shall see the good land that I haue promised. Heere GOD maketh a comparison betweene lande and the people. This lande then was a singular gift, in token whereof hee calleth it his rest: meaning thereby that he had chosen that lande to bee as a dwelling place and everlasting inheritance for the people to rest in vnder his protection. For there is no certaintie in this worlde, and if wee bee lodged in any place, wee may bee put out of our nest againe to day or to morrowe. But God tolde them that hee had assigned the lande of Chanaan for an euerlasting possessiō to the children of Abraham, to mainteine them and keepe them safe there, so as no man shoulde trouble them, nor cuer driue them out againe. Yee see then that the lande was not a common gift, but a gift that deserued to bee esteemed as most excellent aboue al others. But behold, the people on the other side, are malicious and froward. Therefore it is all one as if our Lorde shoulde say, I see wel ynough howe the worlde goes, I shall sooner make fire and water to agree, than caufe this people to like of my benefites. For in my benefites there is nothing but mere goodnesse, and in this people there is nothing but mere naughtinesse.

Let vs marke well then, that to inioy Gods benefites, wee must frame our selues to his will and righteousnesse: for our naughtinesse and Gods goodnesse can neuer match together, in so much that if wee will needes followe our owne nature, God must needes withdrawe his goodnesse away from vs. True it is that God looketh not for any worthinesse at our hands why hee shoulde doe vs good: nay rather, hee sighteth daily against our finnes, and vseth mercie where as hee might lawfully vse rigour against vs. But yet for all that, if hee see that we continue in our naughtinesse, hee can no longer continue in doing vs good. Yee see then that the doctrine which we haue to gather vpon this consideration: is that there must bee as it were an accorde and melodie betweene God and vs, and that when hee impareth his benefites vnto vs, we must make such estimation of them, as wee indeuer to serue and honour him for them, and consider that he calleth vs to him, to plucke vs backe from our finnes. If wee doe so, the good that he hath done vs shalbe confirmed more & more. Otherwise, it must needes bee that our naughtinesse shall cut off the course of his goodnesse. Why so? For (as I haue said alreadye) when God offereth men his benefites, & they refuse them of a wilfull frowardnesse: it is as if fire and water should meete together.

But besides this, wee must also marke Gods vbrayding of the people, with their saying that their yong children should be a pray to their enemies. They (saith he) shall possesse the lande, yea euen to the intent that you may be proued lyers. Heere it behoueth vs to marke well, that when men will needes doubt of Gods truth, they must in the ende be founde lyers, and Gods truth shine forth the brighter to their shame. Nowe hereby wee bee warned to receiue simple the promises that GOD offereth vs. And although it seeme at the first blith that they shold neuer be accomplished, & that there be a number of impediments to hinder them: yet must we doe him the honour to beleuee that he is faithfull, and to abide patiently for the conuenient time of his performance of the thing that hee hath said. For if we gainesay his truth, and murmur, and fall to questioning and disputing, with howe can this be? is it possible? God seemeth to mocke vs: I say, if we go that way to worke: Well may hee performe his promise for all that: but it shalbe to our shame, so as wee shall alwayes bee founde lyers. Wee may well triumph for a time, as we see the vnbeleueers doe, which m slapertly despise God, spewing out their blaphemies against him: but yet in the ende God shall continue faithfull, and his trewnesse: shalbe knowne spite of our teeth, and therewithall we shalbe put to shame. And therefore let vs beware of it, and that wee may beware of it, let vs marke well howe the Iewes are vbrayded with it here. Yee haue saide that your children shall bee made a pray: but they shall inioy the land, and you shalbe set beside it.

Moreouer the example of Caleb the sonne of Iephone is verie notable, and so is also the example of Iosua the sonne of Nun. These two are referred of a great multitude. And why? Because they had gone through stoutly. For this recorde is yelded to Caleb, that hee had persisted [for continued] in following the Lorde. Whenas God exempteth here but two men of an infinite multitude: therein wee see howe it is a folly to looke what other men doe. For had Caleb and Iosua done so: what had come of it? They had gone to destruction with the rest. But they suffered not themselves to bee caryed away by that horrible tempest. When they sawe so strange a turning backe in the whole people: yet did they confirme themselves in the power of God, and although the people woulde haue stoned them, (as is declared in the booke of numbers, and as shalbe touched againe anon): yet did they their dutie. So then, seeing that God alloweth the constance of Caleb and Iosua, for that they did shut their eyes when they sawe the people so exceedingly set vpon mischief, and exhorted them to obey God: let vs note well that although thinges be out of order in the worlde, and we see stumbling blockes to ouerthrowe vs, and vices rage like a waterfloud: yet is it no sufficient cause to suffer our selues to bee caryed away, or to make vs followe the common traine, for it shall not abate our condemnation before God. We may well say, all the worlde doth so: for all the worlde shall perish, and thou with it, which speakest so in contempt of thy God. What a thing is it, that men will needs abolish Gods iustice, and giue no more eare vnto him when they giue themselves to all naughtinesse, but shut him vp in heauen, and suffer him to haue no more authoritie heere beneath? Where to tendeth this? And yet for all that, wee see nowe adayes that when the ignorant intende to shrowde themselves, the greatest sheelde that they haue is to alledge, Howe so: I see that all the worlde behaue themselves contrariwise. And in the meane season what becomes of God? God must bee faine to bee thrust vnder foote, and men must tunne leaping and frisking at their pleasure. Yea and euen among our selues, if a man tell one or other of their faults: [their answers is,] I see others are as bad as my selfe. Wee beare our selues on hande, that our condemning of our neighbours will goe for good payment, and that we shall scape Gods hand by that meane. Therefore let vs thinke continually vpon the example of Caleb and Iosua. And forasmuch as GOD sheweth that hee made more account of them though they were but two in all, than of all the other howge multitude which were about seuen hundred thousande persons: forasmuch (say I) as we see that God giueth such sentence of them: let vs learne to submit our selues to him, and to regarde nothing but that which he commaundeth. And though the world runne gadding here and there in the meane while, let vs followe the way that God hath shewed vs by his pure word.

Morouer, let vs wey this speech where it is saide, that Caleb held out in following the Lorde. For it is not ynough for vs to beginne well, but wee must also sticke to God through stitche, yea euen without any fenning or starting, and without fainting or giuing ouer in the mids of our way. And in good sooth, it is not for nought that this recorde is giuen to Caleb. For (as I haue touched heretofore) the people were in such an vprere, as they would haue stoned him and Iosua too. In somuch that if God had not také them away, and his glorie appeared vpon the tabernacle: they had losse their liues for it. Yet for all this, they ceased not to doe their dutie still, but cryed out against the people and rent their clothes. And after that manner stroue they against those which would not inioy Gods blessing. Wee see then how there was a marueilous power in Caleb and in Iosua. And therefore wee be warned by their example, not onely to enter into the way, but also to goe forward and forward stil, assuring our selues that we cannot holde out to the ende in seruing God, but by bearing out of many harde brunts and temptations, [and therefore we haue neede] to strengthen our heartes in such wise, as nothing may be able to make vs to flecte. Thus yee see wheteto our Lord and his holy spirite exhort vs.

Where as he praeth here the constancie of Caleb and Iosua: it is to the end, (say I) that their example should serue to our instruction. For although the memoriall of the righteous be blessed before God: yet is it declared for our profite. Therefore let vs not haue such a zeale as shall waxe colde when it cometh to the following of God: but let vs determine fully with our selues to holde out with it, whatsoeuer the diuell practise, or howsoeuer the world set it selfe against vs: like as at this day wee see many resistances, and many occasions, that might make vs start away: but yet for all that, we must holde on our iourney, nor for two or three dayes onely, but all our life long. Let vs goe on therefore: and when there is any mention of following God: let vs marke that it is to confirme the matter better which I haue declared alredie: that is to wit, that if we followe men, we shall runne astray. For why? what els are the wais of the world but strairings, so as euey man gaddes in and out, when they once turne their backs vpon God? What is to bee done then? So long as wee looke vpon men, it will bee vnpossible for vs to goe right: but wee must followe God.

True it is that when God is so good vnto vs, as to giue vs men to accompanie vs, yea and to goe before vs and to reach vs their hande: it is a great helpe, and (as Paul telleth vs) we must looke wifly vpon them: and when we haue good seruantes of God which teache vs and leade vs with good conscience, we must marke that, and fashion our selues like to them: and in so doing we shall not followe men: for in fashioning our selues like to them that follow God, we haue his way for our way. We gronde not our selues one vpon another, to say, Thus will I doe, for I see most men doe it. No: but forasmuch as God calleth vs to him, it behooueth vs to goe, Yea though there were no mo but my selfe alone: yet ought I to follow my God. But if furthermore he beare with me so farte, as to giue me companie: then must I goe to him with so much the better courage: and whatsoeuer come of it, I must not swarue from his pure worde. Thus yee see why it is faide here, that Caleb the sonne of Iephone followed the way of the Lord, and therefore was exempted from the common condemnation. Yea and it is faide that he followed constantly, that is to say, he continued throughout to the vttermost. And so wee see nowe in effect that all the people were condemned, & that onely two were acquit, because they had giuen glorie vnto God.

But the circumstance that is added, namely, that God spared not Moses because of the people: increaseth yet more the thing that I haue saide. In dedde this cannot be dispatched all as nowe: but yet must I ad this point aforehande. For if God spared not Moses, (who notwithstanding had such recorde as wee knowe), but punished him because hee helde not out constantly to the vttermost in resisting the leawdnesse of the people: I pray you what shall become of vs? Is it likelic that wee shall goe scotfree nowadayes, when euey man suffereth himselfe to be caried away because hee seeth that naughtinesse hath the vpper hande? Then if wee happen to ouershoote our selues so, thinke wee that that God will let vs alone? No no: For if such punishment as we heare of, vs was extended vpon Moses: needes mult wee feele farre forer, when we intangle our selues in the common vices, and forsake God to followe the worlde. And let vs marke well, that in swearing that the people should not enter into the lande: he sayth, ye shall reckon the yeres according to the number of the dayes wherein ye spied out the land. They that were sent to spy out the lande taried forty daies: and so behoued it the people to wander vp and downe by the space of fortie yeres. And so we see that when God hath vsed long patience towards vs, he maketh vs to pay verie deere for our abusing of his goodnesse. Wherefore let vs not measure Gods punishments after our owne fancie: for they be forer than our wittes can conceaue. But whensoever he threatneth vs, let vs tremble at his only speech, and make hast to follow it. And forasmuch as his speech is directed to vs nowadaies, let vs not driue off til to morow, but let vs follow, and let euerie man be going on his way. Again forasmuch as we be fraile and haue a rough and thornie way to goe, yea and there be many stoppes to barre vs, so as it will seeme that there be great mountaines to make vs turne backe againe: let vs pray our God to giue vs strength to go on stil forward. For if he strengthened Caleb and Iosua: let vs assure our selues he will do the like to vs. And therewithall if we see that the world hinder vs, and that there is store of stumbling blockes on all sides: let vs pray God that he suffer vs not to be corrupted with others, but that we may beare him the honor to stick vnto him, & to yeld our selues wholly to his word, giuing them leaue to perishe that needes will perishe, and in the meane while staying out selues by the promise of saluation which he hath giuen vs, accordingly also as it is his will that wee should attaine thereto by any such knowledge.

Now let vs kneel: down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to touch vs better than we haue bin: & that aboute al things we may bethinke vs of the vnthankfulness whereof we be gilty, in that we haue not obeyed his word, nor bin so willing to followe the things that he hath declared vnto vs as was requisite. And therefore let vs beseech him, not only to forgiue vs our fautes past, but also to strengthen & gouerne vs in such wise by his holie spirite, as wee may ouercome al the temptations of Satan, and forsake al the lustes of our owne flesh, to the end we may obey the voyce of our God, and in such sort applie al our senses thereunto, as we may passe through all the distresses of this present world, vntill he haue gathered vs together into his cuerlasting kingdom. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not only to vs, but also to all people & nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsdai the xxij. of April. 1555.

The ninth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

37.38.39.40. Also the Lord &c.

41 Then answered you and saide vnto me: We haue sinned against the Lorde. We will goe vp and fight as the Lorde our God hath commaunded vs. And you armed your selues euery one with harnesse of warre, and were readie to goe vp into the hill.

42 And the Lord said vnto me, warne them that they goe not vp, ne fight not, for I am not among you: least you be vanquished of your enimies.

W E began yesterday to see howe hard it is to abstaine from sinning when a man is in euil company, specially if hee haue the charge of gouernment. For seeing it was Moses hap to be shaken downe: Howe shall they do which are farre weaker than he was? Wee knowe that God had made him to excell all men, we see also how he serued his turne by him, & what record hee hath giuen of him. And yet for all that, behold here a fal which God mislyketh of so greatly, that he disappointeth him of entering into the lande for it: and such dishonour and reproch was done vnto him, that hee might not possesse the inheritance that had bene promised, as well to him as to all the people. Therefore we had neede to call vpon God when we be mingled with such as are able to corrupt vs and to thrust vs out of the way, so as we be hemmed in rounde about with euill examples. But yet they which haue the charge of gouernment, ought to stande in greater feare and dreade, and to call vpon God to strengthen them, and to giue them such confidence as they may not swaue any whit at all.

But before we goe any further, we mult mark that where as Moses reporteth that God was angrie with him for the peoples fakes: hee doth it not to excuse himselfe that he had not done amisse: for then should hee replee againt God who had giuen sentence vpon him. In the twentieth Chapter of the booke of Numbers it is sayde expressly, thou shalt not enter into the lande, because that thou and Aaron haue not glorified the Lord before the people of Israel. So then we see that God chargeth not Moses with the sinne of the

the people, as who shoulde say that he himselfe had becne guiltlesse: but his meaning is that hee fell not to cull of his owne accorde and moung, but was druen to it as by a storme, when he saw such vpror and hurlyburly among the people, that he was at his wits ende and wist not what to doe, by meanes whereof he had not a present faith to giue glorie vnto God. The intent of Moses then is not to wash his hands, as though hee were not blame woorthy at all: but to doe the people to vnderstande that the verie mischief sprang of them. Neuertheles it may be thought straunge howe Moses shoulde offende, seeing it appeareth not in all the reherfall of the storie. It is saide that the people grudged against God, because they wanted drinke in the wilder nesse, saying: Had it not bene better for vs that God had killed vs in Egypt? Must hee needes bring vs into this drie and barren place, that we might die heere for thirst? It appeareth well that hee hatech vs, and that his intent is to make vs to linger heere in tormentes: and in the meane while wee bee past all hope of doing well. After this manner did the people murmure. On the contrarie part Moses weepeth and resorteth vnto God, saying: Alas Lorde, oughtest thou to haue fo slender a reward for thy deliuering of this people through thine owne goodnes, as to haue thy holy name blasphemed by them? What coulde Moses haue done better than this? For he is so farre off from consenting to the wickednesse of the people, to bee any companion with them: that hee weepeth to see the offence committed against God. And Dauid likewise sheweth an excellent and wonderfull welditposed munde, in saying that hee wore sackloth for their sakes that blasphemed God. Moses did as much. It shoulde not seeme then that there is any fault in all this. For God commaunded him to take his staffe, and to strike vpon a rocke, and to make water to come out of it before the people. Hee obeyed. Wee see not there any replying at almay we see not that Moses did so much as once doubt. Morcouer when hee speaketh to the people, hee saith: Come on yee rebelles, must God bee faine to make water to come out of this rocke, which you see nowe so harde and drie? Yee see hee rebuketh the people sharply, and a man woulde thinke hee coulde not glorifie God better. And yet for all this, it is saide vnto him, Thou hast not giuen vnto mee the honour that belonged to mee, and therefore thou shalt bee banished out of the lande that belonged by inheritance vnto thee. And did hee sinne then? As I saide afore, if we iudge after our owne fancie, it will seeme to vs that Moses discharged himselfe well in all pointes, so as hee offended not, ne had any spot or blemish in him. But what for that? Heereby wee see that it belongeth onely vnto God to iudge, and that wee may be deceiued at all turnes, in following our owne witte and reason. Wherefore let vs keepe this rule which is verie needefull: that is to wit, that wee bee farre vnable to discern good and euill alwayes by eye sight, for as is saide in the sixteenth of Saint Luke, the thing that is highly esteemed among men, shall be abominable before God. When we haue sifted a thing neuer so well, and setled all our wittes to vtr it well: yet shall it seeme to vs cleane contrarie to that it is in deede. Nowe then, let vs cast downe our eyes and acknowledge that none but onely God is the competent iudge.

True it is that wee haue the lawe, whereby wee may assuredly say, this is good and that is euill: and our yeelding vnto that which is shewed vs there, is not to make vs iudges: for wee take no authoritie to our selues, but onely yelde to y things that God fettereth forth, And besides this, wee must not onely iudge our neighbours doings by the lawe, but also examine our owne lues by it. And when wee finde our selues to haue swarued from Gods commaundementes, we must willingly condemne our selues, and allowe no further of our owne doings, than they agree with Gods will. Although they seeme good to our selues, yet let vs not stande vpon that. For our eyes are so troubled and weake, that oftentimes one sinne escapeth vs and a hundred followe out after it: and that is because we bee not sharpesighted ynough, to spie out the things that God perceiuech, and which are hid from vs. And that is the cause why saint Paul saith, that although he had walked purely in his office: yet was he not iustified for all that. For God requireth another manner of perfection than wee can see. So then, seeing wee haue so weake and dimme a sight, let vs learne to referre our selues vnto God: and let euerie of vs put that thing in vre in himselfe, which is shewed vs by Dauid when he saith, Who is he that knoweth his faults? Lord forgiue me the euill which I perceiue not. We must not onely ask God forgiuenesse of the finnes that siting vs, and whereof we haue prooffe in our selues: but we must also acknowledge that we haue manie finnes which wee knowe not of, Marke that for one point.

Furthermore, proceeding still herewith, let vs not be haste in iudging, to acquite one and to condemne another: but let vs reserue vnto God that which is his, for as I haue said afore, if God had not pronounced that sentence vpon Moses, euery man would canonize him, and say hee did the best that coulde be deuised. But what for that? Seeing hee is condemned by the heauenly iudge, we must bridle our selues, and not fall to incountring against God. For wee shall winne nothing by it. And for the same cause also S. Paul intending to exhort vs to modestie in the 14. to the Romanes, alledgeth that wee must all come before the iudgement seate of our Lorde Iesus Christ, where we shall not allowe what we thinke good, nor reiect what we mislike in our own fancie: for that authoritie belongeth to the onely son of God. Seeing it is so my brethren (saith he) wee must abstaine from foolisli ouerweening. Thus much concerning that which is reported of the sinne of Moses.

Nowe let vs come againe to the matter that wee were in hande with: Which is, that Moses meaneth not to excuse himselfe: hee seeketh no startinghole to lessen his fault: but the thing that he alledgeth is reasonable, he setteth fourth the heynoufnesse of the peoples offence, shewing y<sup>e</sup> their sedition was so forcible, that euen he him selfe also was ouerthrowen with it. The meaning then of Moses was as if he should haue said thus: Beholde yee wretches, God hath chosen me to supply his place among you, and he hath gouerned me in such wise by his holy spirit, that I haue had as it were his image printed in me: & yet notwithstanding I haue done amisse, I haue offended. And what is the cause of it? I excuse not my selfe: but yet are you guiltie before God, of corrupting me, your murmuring hath ouerthrowen me, for by reason thereof I haue forgotten my duetic, and not yeelded God such glorie as was due vnto him. Seeing it is so: [I may well say] it is not long of you, that you bereft mee not of all the grace that I had receiued at Gods hande: for where as he made me your heade to guide you: you haue done ynough to carie mee away to Satan through your naughtinesse and rebellion.

Nowe then acknowledge the sinne that you haue committed, for God hath brought me low, and it is his will to shewe you in my person, that you bee well worthe to perish eueriechone of you. Therefore besides the thing that I haue touched already, (which is, that we must not like y<sup>e</sup> better of our selues wh<sup>e</sup> our faults are vnknown [to our selues,] or when we can couer them, for Gods eies are not blindfolded for al<sup>y</sup>, and the things that scape men are inrolled before him): wee must marke moreover, that if wee giue anie man an occasion [of stumbling or offending], although hee on his parte is not thereby discharged, yet must our offence needs be the more grieuous and heauie, according as it is in very deede. Wherefore let euery man so behaue himselfe, as hee giue not his neighbours any occasion of stumbling. For if any man sinne vnder pretence of mee, if hee be misledd by my lewde conuersation, if he take ill example by my vices: all the whole mischiefe shalbe laide in my necke before God, I shalbe discharged, wo shalbe vnto mee as saith our Lord Iesus Christ, and it were better for mee that I were cast into the middes of the sea with a millstone about my necke, than to haue giuen my neighbour any cause of misbehaviour. And therefore let vs lue in such sorte, as it may not bee cast in our teeth before GOD, that wee haue bene the cause of other mens ruine and destruction. For it will cost vs very deare, if the sillie soules whom God hath created after his owne image, and whom Iesus Christ hath so deerey redeemed, be lost through our fault and wickednesse. Thus wee see in effect what we haue to note vpon this sentence, where Moses saith, that GOD was angrie with him by meanes of the people.

And furthermore we haue to mark here, that Gods laying of his temporall chastisements vpon his faithfull ones, is not to driue them to despayre, but to humble them for a time: for in the ende all turneth to their benefite, and therefore they must not bee out of heart for it.

It was a verie harde and bitter punishment vnto Moses, to bee banished out of the lande that had bene promised him.

The time is come that the people shoulde bee deliuered out of the thralldome of Egypte, to bee conueyed into the Lande of promise: Moses is chosen to bee their guide, so as hee supplyeth Gods office in deliuering them: and yet notwithstanding this shame is done vnto him, that GOD shutteth the gappe against him and saith, thou shalt not come there. Yee see then howe Moses is (as yee would say) brondded with a marke of reproch before God. Nowe had hee taken it in despyte: it had bene ynough to haue plunged him into some blasphemie. But hee bare this correction patiently, knowing that it shoulde bee to his benefite, because it was but temporall. And therefore let vs marke this saying of Saint Paul, that Gods punishing of vs is to the intent we shoulde not perish with the worlde. Seeing then that GOD procureth our welfare thereby, and his mortifying of vs for a time as in respect of the flesh: and his condemning of vs in such wise as we be ashamed afore men, is to the intent that our soules should be saued at the latter day, and wee lue in his presence: seeing that that is the end & butte that he shooteth at: let not vs on our part be so headstrong, as to chafe or fume at his corrections, but rather follow the example of Moses, who (as wee see) did make no wordes against God. It might seeme hee had some occasion to say, howe falles this out, that I am driuen out of the lande of promise? What shall a man say to it? For thou hast ordeyned mee to be as a redeemer in thy steede: and nowe must I carie heere still. It was thy will that I should serue in this office, to put the people in possession of the promised lande: and why shall I not be partaker of the benefite that thou hast purchased them by my hande? What though there haue bene some litle distrust in mee, which continued the turning of a hande? Is the offence so heynous, that I must bee so grieuously punished for that? Moses then might haue helde such plea with God: but hee holseth his peace, and yeeldeth to the sentence of condemnation willingly. Therefore let vs followe that which is shewed vs here by example: and (as I said afore) when GOD is so gracious to vs, that in steede of casting of vs away (as he might iustly doe) he doth no more but chastise vs as in respect of the flesh, and shame vs before men, to the ende to bring vs to repentance, and to humble vs: let vs bee quiet, and let it not calt vs into sorrowe, but let vs plucke vp a good heart to follow our vocation. This is the thing wee haue to remember. For if hee spared not Moses, what will hee doe to vs? Ought wee to chalenge greater priuledge than hee?

But heere with all let vs marke, that Moses ceased not to bee an heire still of the heauenly kingdome, though hee were bereft of the outward signe of it. And thereby wee be warned, that if God make vs not to feele his fauour and loue in this worlde so fully as wee would wish, it must not make vs to bee out of patience. For it may happe that we shall take our selues to bee miserable, yea and that when wee looke vpon our owne state, we shall deeme it had bin much better for vs to haue gone alway with the world: But what for that? O! al y<sup>e</sup> time we haue a life that lyeth hid in God, Therefore it is no hurt at all to vs, though God cut off the blessings of this present life from vs. For he knoweth to what end he doeth it: and it is good for vs to be so exercised. Thus yee see that the thing which wee haue to beare in minde, is that God doeth diuers times hide the signes of his loue from vs, as in respect of the worlde: but hee Ioueth vs neuer a whit the lesse, as we see how it happened vnto Moses.

As touching that which is saide of Iosua: it is one notable point more. For beholde, hee is appointed to succede in Moses roome, yea, and yet was he but his seruaur. And afterward Moses is commaunded to encourage him. Heere we see that God will take the things that are not greatly esteemed among men, yea and exalt them aboute our opinion, as we see he hath vsed to doe at all times: and not without cause: for thereby he iatendeth to pull downe all pride according to this saying of Saint Paul, that hee chooseth the weake things, yea euen to the end that men should not glorie in their owne strength: and hee chooseth the foolish things, to the end that men should not glorie in their wisdom: and when he taketh y<sup>e</sup> things that are despised, it is to the end that men should not trust in their owne credit, nor bee puffed vp with their owne worthinesse. And it is verie requisite that it should be so: for we see howe euery man seekes to aduaunce himselfe, and wee leaue nothing to God as nere as we can. Nay rather if wee doe but yeelde him the tytes that belong vnto him, it is but in way of dalance: and in the meane while we would that all should be in our own persons. Now forasmuch as men haue this pride rooted in them: God must be faine to shew them by experience, that all of it is but vanitie: and so doth hee, by choosing the things that are not regarded, and by seruing his turne with such as are not esteemed to be of any great renowne. If we looke howe God chooseth men sometimes, to set them in preheminance: wee will say, who woulde haue looked for this? And God worketh after that manner, to the intent that those by whom he serueth his turne, should learne to acknowledge themselves beholde to him for their dignitie wherein he hath set them, and vnderstande that they obtained it not by their own power and policie, but that it is God which hath placed them in that degree. For if they thinke they haue ought of their owne purchasing: God will shewe them the contrarie. That then is the thing which we haue to marke, when it is heere declared that God preferred Iosua before Moses in somuch that although Moses had now of long time benee cladde with the grace of the holy Ghost: although hee had benee chosen to bee the Redeemer [or Ransommer] of the people: although God had set his marks vpon him: although that in executing his office, it was well seene that hee was a newe creature, and there appeared in him a maiestic surmounting the nature of man: and there withall although hee had done so many deedes worthy of memorie, as might astonishe all them that heerde speaking of them: yet notwithstanding, in the ende God ordeyned his seruaut in steede, to leade the people into the lande of Chanaan, and to put them in possession of their promised heritage, and Moses himselfe is not worthy to come there. So far off is hee from coming there euen as a common member shuffled in among the rest of the body: that God driueth him from it: and behold, God reacheth his hand to Iosua, who had neuer looked for it.

But now besides that which I haue said, (that is to wit, that we be warned to forbear all presumption, and to lay downe all pride): let vs be well assured, that it belongeth to God to aduaunce vs & to make vs of estimation, through his mere grace: and that when we shal haue heaped vp all that euer we can together, all is nothing. Then, besides that we haue a good warning to humble our selues: it is shewed vs therewithall, that wee must not eniue those by whom God serueth his turne. And that is another good lesson. For wee see howe euery of vs reyneth, when God hath aduauced any man, specially beyonde all worldly hope. Where as we should consider thus, beholde God serueth his turne by such a one, curie man commendeth him, and there appeare manifest gifts of grace in him: when we see those things, we be so malicious, that we grudge & repine at it. But contrariwise wee ought to marke, that when we be so pricked with spite and eniue, it is an aduaucing of our selues against God and not against mortall creatures. Therefore let vs learne to honour God wherefoeuee hee sheweth himselfe, & to be glad when hee vouchsafeth to extend his grace to our neighbours: for if we do so, all shall fall out to our welfare. If another man haue mo gracious gifts than I: am rich in his person. For wh<sup>e</sup> we confesse y<sup>e</sup> communion of saints: it is to shew, that whatsoever God giueth to one man or to another, the same redoundeth to the benefite of all. True it is that we perceiue it not at the first push: but yet doth such diuersitie serue for the whole bodie of the Church. The members of a bodie haue not all one operation: the eyes execute not the office of the legges, nor the hands the office of the feete: and yet notwithstanding the body is so knit together in one, that whatsoever is giuen to any one member, doeth benefite al the rest. Now then let vs vnderstand, that when God bestoweth the gifts of his holie spirit more largely vpon some one man than vpon others, hee cealeth not therefore to haue pittie vpon vs: For we also must be edified therby. Yea surely so we be not vnthankfull, and that we take no pritch at it when hee listeth to holde vs lowe and to exalt our neighbours. To bee short, wee make warre against God when we cannot abide that he should keepe the order which hee hath determined: y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, to pul down y<sup>e</sup> things that are great to the worldward, and to aduaunce and exalt the things that are base and despised.

Moreouer we see that Moses is commaunded to strengthen Iosua. So litle ought Moses to be greeted at the preferring of his seruauant before himselfe, that hee must instruct him and harden him. As if hee should say, I see nowe it is Gods will to honour thee by dishonoring mee. I am worthy of it, and I must be faine to beare it, and therewithall also to prepare thee to thine office. Although thou take my place; yet will I not set my selfe against thee, but (which more is) I will help thee to the vttermost of my power. Nowe am I become thy seruauant. Whereas God had erst aduanced mee: I must nowe giue vp this preheminence, and thou must take my roome: and I must indeuer as much as I can, that the benefite which Gods will is to bestow vpon thee, may auayle in thee. So then, if it please God to take any man to serue him, let vs streyne our selues to helpe him, and let vs not be ashamed to put our shoulders vnder him to heaue him vp. Let vs not haue any of these wicked respects, to say, O ho, truly as for mee, if God were so gracious to mee as to aduance mee as well as such a one, I woulde bestirre mee. But forasmuch as hee holdeth mee downe to the grounde, I will not meddle with other men. Let vs beware of such churlishnesse. Nay rather when we see that God hath chosen a man: let vs reason thus with our selues. I see that God hath chosen such a man, in deede hee is not the ablest that could be desired, but yet is it Gods will to bee serued by him, and wee see hee hath a good will: therefore let vs helpe him, let euerie of vs reach him his hande, and let euerie of vs consider wherein hee may succour him to his furtherance. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke heere, is that although our working beare no great outward shewe, and that the thinges which we doe haue no great glosse to commend them to the world: yet we must not therefore cease to serue God according to our power, and to linke in with those by whom it is Gods will to bee serued, and not to imagine any thing that may foreflowe vs, or make vs say, At whose whose hande shall I bee recompensed? That which I haue done is as good as lost, men make none account of it. It shall well ynough come in account before God. And therefore let vs suffice vs to be allowed at his hand. These are y things that we haue to note vpon this, that Moses was commaunded to strengthen Iosua.

Nowe finally it is saide, that the people perceiving their sinne, answered: Wee haue offended the Lorde, and therefore wee bee nowe readie to goe vp. And they not onely vsed those wordes: but also euerie man prepared and armed himselfe, and so they went vp to encounter with their enemies. Heere we see the nature of men. When GOD biddeth them be stul, they be too too forward, & they be as hot as fire to doe the thing that is forbidden them. But when they were bidden goe, then their legges were broken. And yet notwithstanding it is saide, that the people acknowledged their sinne, when they had bene so disobedient against GOD. Whereby it appeareth that there is such a corruptnelle in our nature, that euen in minding to doe good we doe euill, and offende God, & ouerthoote our selues without reason or measure. Heere is then a faire looking glasse for vs to discerne our owne vices by: yea verily, so we consider in the person of y Iewes, that not only they themselues are condemned, but also that God purpouseth to giue a generall lesion, whereby all men may fare the better. Nowe I tolde you first of all, that when God foundeth his trumpet and commaundeth vs to march, we stirre not a whit; and that although wee haue some good liking of the matter, yet we be so colde and slowe, as is pitie to see. And on the contrary part, that if hee say, Tary still, wee be lustie, and moreouer so hot and hastie, that wee desire nothing but to occupie both our armes & our legs too. When it was saide to the people, Go, for your God is among you, bee not afraide so long as yee haue such a power to defende you: The people replied againe on the other side, nay marie, howe shall wee goe vp? They be Gyants, they wil deuour vs with their looks, we shall be vndone at the first chop, it were better yet to returne into Egypt. When the people had replied so, and it was tolde them againe, What meane you thus to distrust your God? He hath giuen vs this lande, wee haue his promise of it: and besides that, you haue had proofe of his helpe already many wayes, and he offereth it you still: howe thinke you of it, you faithlesse and rebellious people? When the people were thus laide at: did they yet returne to their right wits? Yea, for yee see they repented. What for that? It is but a false repentance. Goe to (say they) sith it is so, we will goe and march against our enemies, seeing it is Gods pleasure. Nay, yee see heere, that God ment to trie their faith and obedience another way, that is to wir, by their forbearing to doe any thing at all. Because hee sawe they had not obeyed him at the first: nowe he will haue them ashamed of it, and to tarie his leisure till hee haue pitie of them. And forasmuch as hee had sworne that they should not come there: his will was that they should (after the example of Moses) haue suffered themselues to bee bereft of that honour as they were worthy. Wee see then that men haue but too greate frowardnesse when GOD commaundeth them to sit at rest; and contrariwise that they be too colde, when he would haue them to goe forward: nay they will rather creepe into cranies, than goe forth when God biddeth them.

Howbeit, for the better vnderstanding of this matter, let vs marke that this people offended in preacing forward without promise. For as I haue saide afore, we must not be hardie any further than God biddeth vs. Therefore when wee haue but a worde of his mouth, we must take courage, and put all lettes vnder foote that may turne vs away. For the thing wherein GOD will bee glorified, is that hee commaunde vs nothing in vaine. And speciallie when hee promisseth vs good successe to our matters, and to prosper our doings: then must we rest therevpon, assuring our selues that hee will giue vs good dispatch. Neuertheless when God had sworne, that the people should not come there: then woulde they needes goe vp against their enemies, not considering that in so doing they resisted GOD, and aduanced themselves against him. True it is that if a man had asked them, whether they minded to resist God or no, and to doe cleane contrarie to his will, or whether they minded to haue him to bee their aduersarie: they woulde haue answered, No: Wee beleue that God will helpe vs. For why? Hee hath deliuered vs out of Egypt, he hath promised our father Abraham to giue this lande in possession to his linage, and the time is nowe come. Yea but there is no promise [to you,] and therefore it is but sonde presumption or rather starke madnesse, when men take a toy in their heades, and aduentione to doe this or that, when in the meane while God hath not promised any such thing. So then let vs marke well, that wee must not be bolde vpon our owne heade, but hearken till God speake: and when wee haue his promise, wee must rule our selues thereby, and not passe the boundes thereof. For elsic may happen vnto vs, as Moses reporteth here that it happened to this people: that is to witte that wee shall doe all things asuersarie, and so offend God. In so much that when wee weene to doe well, wee shall dubble our faulres: when GOD commaundeth vs to go, wee shall bee as though our legges were broken: and when he commaundeth vs to tarye, we shall run too swift: and so, all our whole life shall be out of order.

Furthermore let vs beare in minde, that (as I haue sayde already) if GOD list to chastise vs as in respect of the fleshe, we must not bee too much grieved thereat: for it is for our benefite and welfare. If this people had bene well aduised, they woulde haue thought thus: bicause wee haue offended God by our disobedience, hee will not haue vs to enter into the land: but yet for all that he bereaueth vs not of the hope of saluation, let vs content our selues with that, and wander forth in this world till he take vs hence. So likewise let vs learne to wander on, if wee minde to come to the heauenly life. And if God doe nowe and then cast vs downe, let vs consider that y casting downe, will make vs to go much more swiflye towards the marke of the heauenly kingdome that is set before vs, than if wee had runned neuer so fast, and had neuer left galloping all the way. Thus ye see what we had to marke more, vpon this saying, that the people would needes goe vp to discomfit their enemies.

Nowe Moses addeth, that They made themselves readie with their armour and weapons. Yea forsooth, but it is all one as if ye shoulde put an armour vpon a scarecrowes backe, and take him a sward in his fist: surely hee were substantially well armed: but in deede all were to no purpose. Euen so is it with vs: If wee were furnished with all the helpes of man and with all interior meanes, and in the meane while were not strengthened in our heartes, but were full of foolish selfeweening, and as it were drunkennesse, by presuming vpon our owne power: all the brauerie that wee can make, is but winde and smoke, bicause wee haue not an eye vnto God, but are rebellious against him. Wherefore let vs learne to leaue the arming of our selues, and to seeke strength and courage at Gods hand, and then let vs take armour & weapon as at his appointment. If we go that way to worke, God will prosper the helpes that he hath giuen vs: for he will blesse the bicause wee fought them at his hand. Besides this, he himselfe will stand by vs though all other meanes faile vs. For diuers times he will perchance suffer vs to bee made naked, and let y world mock vs, as though we were vndone aforeshand: but yet will he provide wel ynough for all, at leastwise so that afore all things wee be furnished with his inward vertue. This is the thing that we had to marke, yet further vpon this text.

And here Moses sheweth that God ment not to destroy the people, when he commaunded them to turne backe. Turne ye backe againe saith he. Here wee see Gods wonderfull goodnesse, & that the threate which he spake off yester day, was not to the end that God woulde pursue the iniquitie of the people without hauing any pitie vpon them: but to make them feele their owne euill. For notwithstanding all that, yet doeth he vsc compassion and kindnesse towards them, in forbidding them to incounter with their enemies. For although that at the first sight a man would say that God reiecteth them, and cursed them: yet notwithstanding, in so doing he sheweth them a signe of his mercie. For had he said neuer a worde, what a thing had y bin: In deede the people increased their offence yet more, by being disobedient to the warning that he gauethem. But whatsoever they did, wee must consider what God intended when he saide, Go not up: for I will not bee with you, neither will I helpe you. Wee see that when the people had once bin brought lowe, they perceiued and acknowledged a wonderfull goodnesse in God, and therewithall became y better disposed to profit themselves by the correction that was sent them. Let vs marke well therefore, that when our Lord vttereth any token of his grace and goodnesse towards vs: therein he sheweth more appariantly howe much he loueth vs, than if he made no countenance of any thing, but helde his mouth shut, and suffered vs to do what we listed. Why? For alas, we should but throwe our selues headlong into destruction, if we followed euery man his owne fanisie. Seeing it is so then, whensoever God setteth himselfe against vs, whensoever he rebuketh vs, and whensoever he sheweth vs our follie, yea though it be with such roughnesse as it amafeth vs: yet is it to our benefite, & therefore let vs learne to beare his yoke.

Moreover let this bee our rule to discern good and euill by: namely to depend wholly vpon Gods mouth, and not to bee wise in our owne conceits, but to suffer him to be our guide, and not to fall to gambolding at our owne pleasure and fanisie, but to followe the way quietly which he sheweth vs. And then will he giue vs armes and legs, and guide all our steppes in such fort, as he will make vs to goe still forewarde, and cause vs to arriue at the good haue. But on the contrarie part, if wee will needes bee fantasticall, and doe things vpon our owne head and vpon our owne liking, and therevpon fall also to foolish practises: God must needes bee against vs: And then albeit that all things goe well forewarde with vs to our seeming, and fall out according to our minde: yet will God turne all vpside downe, and ouerthrowe vs when we be at the height. Those are the things which wee haue to note. And therefore let vs fet all our whole mindes to obey God: And for the bringing thereof to passe, let vs beseech him to giue vs the true vnderstanding of his worde, and to keepe vs from being stoward and stub-borne against him, as wee see by the example that is shewed vs here, which I pray God wee may eschew.

And now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him so to touche vs with them, as wee may profite more and more in faith and repentance, euen vntill he haue vterly chaunged vs: and not suffer vs to stand aganst his holy commaundements, nor to dabble our misdoings when wee haue offended him: but to reforme vs in such fort, that being rid of all fleshy glory, wee may seeke nothing but to bee mortified by him, to the end y he may so frame vs to his righteousnesse, as our whole inducure may be to rule all our thoughtes wordes and deedes thereby. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also, &c.

The tenth Sermon vpon the first Chapter.

42 And the Lord, &c.

43 I tolde you of it: but you woulde not heare mee, but rebelled against the commaundement of the Lord, and were presumptuous, and went vp into the hill.

44 Then the Amorrhite which dwelt in that hill, came out against you and chafed you, as bees doe, and smote you in Seir euen vnto Horma.

45 And when ye were come backe againe, ye wept before the Lorde: but the Lord heard not your voyce, ne inclined his eares vnto you.

46 So you abode a long time at Cades barne, as the dayes doe shewe which you haue taryed there.

E sawe yesterday howe it is not lawfull for vs to put fourth our felues, except GOD call vs and shewe vs the way: and that although the thing which wee take in hande, bee neuer so allowable in respect of men, yet is it nothing woorth vnlesse God bee our guide, and that wee bee sure that wee adventure vpon nothing but by his will. Therewithall we sawe also that we haue too ticklish a nature, insomuch that when any thing is to be done [that lyketh our felues,] wee bee but too forewarde, and wee cannot tarrye till GOD shewe vs his will. And that on the contrarie part, wee see what vnlustinesse is in vs when God commaundeth vs any thing: for then wee bee so lasie as is pitie to see, it seemeth that our legges are broken: and to bee short, wee bee sturke lame. Nay (which worse is) when wee weene to doe well, wee marre all by our rashnesse. And this is confirmed yet better by that which Moses addeth. For he rehearseth what GOD had iniointed him. Thou shalt say vnto them, Goe not vp, ne fight not, for I am not with you (sayeth the Lorde,) and therefore ye shall bee overcome. In this sentence wee see how it belongeth to God to say, Goe: and likewise to bidde vs tarrye, when he thinketh good. And if wee haue not that voyce to guide vs: we may well seeke all manner of furniture, and wee may be well ynough armed to the fight of the world: but yet shall there bee nothing but confusion in our case. Then like as wee must simply obey the thing that GOD commaundeth, and hast forward with all speede when wee see it is his pleasure that wee should goe: so on the contrarie part, when he will haue vs to sit still, let his forbidding suffice vs, assuring our felues that he will turne all things vpside downe if wee thinke to further y matter by thrusting our felues forward. To be short, we must yeeld God no lesse honour & reuerence, in forbearing to do things when he forbiddeth them: than in dooing and executing the things that he liketh.

And he sheweth expressly, that it shall not boote vs to do any thing vnlesse God commaund it, according as it hath bene declared heretofore how it belongeth to him to fight. True it is that he will haue the faithfull to enforce themselves, but yet in so dooing wee must attribute all vnto him. Therefore if he be on our side we shall bee sure of the victorie: but if he shrinke from vs, we shall haue the foyle though all the world helped vs. Then is there but this one onely respect that may may giue vs courage: which is, that God bee at hand with vs to succour vs, so as wee bee sure of his assistance, and rest wholly thereupon. Neuertheless it is not for men to beare themselves in hand that God will aide them, further than he hath assured vs by his promise. But it is certaine that God makes no promise to any, but to such as walke in obedience. Whosoever then slingeth ouer the fields, that is to say, whosoever gaddeth here and there, & resteth not simply vpon Gods word, doeth vtterly refuse the benefite that God had promised him, & bereauech himselfe thereof wilfully. For the receiuing of Gods word to the end we may know what to do, and be ruled by his mouth: and to trust in him, so as we be grounded vpon his grace, and resort to him for succour at our neede, are things inseparable. He therefore that will needes dally vpon his owne head, and trust to his owne foolish imaginations without submitting himselfe to God: may well say, I hope God will helpe me; but his hope hath no resemblance to the hope of y<sup>e</sup> faithful. So then, seeing we perceiue what our owne imaginations are: let vs looke what things God giueth vs leaue to do, and what is lawfull for vs to do by his word. And therewithall, let vs be forward in doing y<sup>e</sup> which he biddeth vs, waiting for his blessing wherby he will make all to prosper. For although we see the contrarie to our vnderstanding: yet shall we overcome all impediments by his helpe.

But howsoeuer the case stande, let vs beare this lesson in minde, that G O D, if wee desire to bee his, doeth binde vs by his infinite goodness to be guided by him: and that as we would bee shielded by his mightie power, so likewise wee must quickly suffer him to rule vs as his lames and sheepe, and not followe euery man his owne fanisie. And if this ought to be obserued in the things that concerne this present life: how much more ought it to be so in going to the kingdome of heauen? I say that euen in all our worldly affayres, we ought to doe God so much honour, as not to take too much vpon vs, nor to raunge here and there, without hauing first asked counsell at his mouth, (as he saith by his Prophet Esay,) and vntill he haue ordered all our deuises by his holy spirite. When we haue any businesse to doe, although it bee not of any great importance: yet ought wee to call vpon God with all lowliness, and not to do any thing vntill our conscience bee thoroughly sculed and resolved that he alloweth our doings. Now if God looke to be obeyed in small things, & which are as good as nothing: what will he doe when the matter concerneth his seruice? and when y<sup>e</sup> case concerneth so excellent a thing as is the saluation of our soules? Therefore we see herein, howe fore the wretched world is blinded, seeing they giue themselves to their owne follies & to mens traditions, and thinke not at all vpon the things that God hath ordained: No: that shall be the last thing y<sup>e</sup> they will doe. And therefore it standeth vs to so much the more on hand to studie well this lesson of Moses, That God will not bee with vs, except we come nere vnto him, and be diligent to hearken what he will say vnto vs, & follow it when we haue done, without adding any thing to it, or diminishing any thing from it. And thus ye see in effect, what we haue to gather vpon this streine.

Now herewithall Moses threateneth them, That they shall be overcome of their enemies, and fall before them. Wherby we be done to vnderstand, that if God bee once gone away from vs, wee must needes perish, yea and our enemies must needes haue the vpper hand of vs, according as wee see in another place, that God lea-
 deeth vs [into aduersitie,] and holdeth vs as it were fettered in it. And when our foes haue such power ouer vs, it is because wee bee Gods prisoners. True it is that men aduance themselves ynough in their presumption, but yet for all that, God daunteth their courage when it cometh to the punche, and holdeth their hands fast tyed, so as they cannot stirre one finger. It is vs marke well therefore, that wee must needes fall before our enemies, if wee bee not vphelde by Gods hand. For there lyeth all our strength. Nay moreouer, though no man followe vs, yet must wee fall before our owne shadowes, and be overcome without any man pursuing vs. For Gods wrath of it selfe without any other helpe or meane, is able ynough to confound vs. Neuertheless the diuill ceaseth not to practise to destroy vs, and we be assailed on all sides: therefore what would become of vs, if God were not our wall and bulwarke? Then if we consider well the state of our life, there is none other way for vs, but to walke in feare and to be watchfull, that we happen not to play the loose coltes. As I saide euen now, ye see that the diuill ceaseth not, and he hath innumerable wyles to oppress vs withall: we knowe what force he is of, and he is not without cause termed the Prince of the world. He commeth with so great crueltie, as passeth al the force of our fleshy enemies. On the other side, this worlde is full of Ambushes against vs, To bee short, when we haue bethought vs neuer so well of the enemies whom wee see: there are an infinite multitude of enemies [whom wee see not,] which seeke nothing but to ouerthwart vs when we should do good. Therefore let vs sit still in humilitie, to the end y<sup>e</sup> being shrowded vnder the shadow of God, wee may be vpheld and maintained by him. Let vs looke well to it then, that wee followe not what euery of vs thinketh good in himselfe: but submit our selues to Gods good will, as I haue shewed afores.

Nowe it followeth, That Moses spake vnto the people, & that the people would not followe his aduise, but were disobedient to the mouth of God. This manner of speach hath bin expounded already heretofore. But here wee see yet more clearly, the proofe of y<sup>e</sup> which hath bin said afores: is to wit, that God is despised not only when he speaketh from heauen, but also when folke make none account of his word y<sup>e</sup> is preached by men. It is said expressly That the people were disobedient to the mouth of God. And how? It is not said y<sup>e</sup> God appeared in visible shape, or y<sup>e</sup> there was any voyce heard from heauen: but it was Moses y<sup>e</sup> spake: it is a man y<sup>e</sup> saith that y<sup>e</sup> people resisted the mouth

 14. 30. & 17.
 11. & Eph. 6.

of God. Now then we see that God will haue his word receiued wth like humilitie when he sendeth men to declare his commandemēt, as if he him selfe were among them. The doctrine that is set forth in y<sup>e</sup> name of God, ought to be of as much authoritie [in the mouth of a man,] as if all the Angels of heauen came downe to vs, or as if God shewed his Maiestie presently before our eyes: yea & it is the thing wherein he will trie the obedience of our faith. True it is that wee ought to vse good discretion when men speake. For if wee should receiue all that is put to vs: there should be no difference betweene y<sup>e</sup> lyers and falsc prophets y<sup>e</sup> seduce our soules, & the true ministers of God. But if we haue fure warrant that the thing which is brought vs, proceedeth of God: (as if it should be shewed vs by the holy scripture, y<sup>e</sup> men should not inuent any thing of their own heads, but hold themselues to the pure simplicitie of y<sup>e</sup> Law & the Gospell:) it is certaine that whoeuer maketh any resistance in y<sup>e</sup> case, doeth not make warre against a creature, but manifestly wth and God, who will be heard when he speaketh so by men, and serueth his turne by them as by his instruments. Therefore let vs beare well in minde this order of Moses saying, which is, y<sup>e</sup> he himselfe is the speaker, & yet notwithstanding, y<sup>e</sup> the people in disobeying him disobeyed God. For why? Moses had not forged any thing of his owne braine, but shewed vnto them how it was God y<sup>e</sup> had sent him. And therefore it is no straunge case that God should finde himselfe grieued, & that his Maiestie should be offended, & take y<sup>e</sup> outrage to be done as to himselfe, when the message that he had sent by Moses was not receiued. In likewise it is at this day. And for the same cause doeth our Lorde Iesus Christ auow, that if men refuse to heare the Ministers of the Gospell, he will take that wrong to be done to himselfe. Therefore let not men make a iest of it, when G O D causeth his worde to be preached now adays, and stirreth vp men to publishe it a-broade: If any man thinke to escape by saying, they be but men with whom wee haue to doe, and therewithall despise the doctrine: they shall knowe in the end, that it came from heauen, and that they set themselues against God and not against mortall creatures: for he will haue his Maiestie to be knowne there. Then if men take him for their soueraine Lorde, let them stoope vnto him, and doe him homage in his doctrine. For he hath Printed his marke in such wise there, that if any nian incounter the things that are conteyned in it, it is all one as if hee would put his truth vnder foot, wherein he hath shewed himselfe openly as in his liuely image. Looke that we beare that poynt well in minde. For if earthly Princes reuenge the despite that is done to their countermours, and thinke themselues to be misused therein: I pray you it is not much more rightfull reason that God should doe so, when men make no reckning of his worde? [Yes verily.] For this case concerneth not some painted picture or blasing of armes: but it is the image of God which appeared to vs in substance, yea euen with such power as we ought to be transfigured into it, as saith S. Paul. That is the thing which we haue to marke.

1. Cor. 3. 12,

And therefore let such as haue the office of preaching Gods worde looke well to themselues that they goe soberly to worke, & that they may alwayes be able to protest, that the things which they teache are put into their mouthes by God. When they bee once sure that it is so: let them labour to make all their hearers to feele Gods power which is after a sort inclosed in his worde, that it may be receiued as it deserueth, and euerie man submit himselfe to it, and God by that meanes bee worshipped of all men, and serued with one accord. And therewithall let them dese al rebels & despisers. Whē they see y<sup>e</sup> heathenish fort fall to scoffing at the doctrine which they beare abroad: let them assure themselues that the things which they haue vttered, shall suffice to send all these to the bottome of Hell, which do so set themselues against them, according to this saying of Saint Paul, that the Preachers of Gods word are armed with such a sword, as is able to confound all such as will not obey the doctrine. And herewithall likewise let euerie man haue an eye to himselfe, and when he commeth hither to be taught in the name of God, let him be prepared with such lowlines and modestie, as he may perceite that it is God which speaketh, and be moued to bow downe his necke, to receiue his yoke patiently. And as for those that will needs play the wild beastes: let them vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> here is sentence giuen vpon them, so as they may well plead against it, but they shall win nothing by their shifts, because it is said that all such as obeyed not Moses, were disobedient to Gods owne mouth.

1. Cor. 10. 4,

And nowe Moses addeth expressly, That the people were presumptuous, in that they would not bee at rest. And this importeth very much. For it doeth vs to vnderstand, that there was neuer yet any vnbeliefe or stubbornnesse in men, but it was matched with losnesse, and pride, which pushed them vp in such wise, and made them so farr out of patience with themselues, as they fell to checking against G O D, and to giue themselues to all euill. And that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why vnbeliefe is so behated afore God. Sometimes it will seeme to vs to be ouer great rigour, when G O D punisheth them so fore which cannot [finde in their hearts to] hearken to his word. For we excuse them by ignorance, forasmuch as they were not well assured that it was God that spake: and in the meane time wee looke not to the euill that lurketh in couert, which God perceiueeth and iudgeth: y<sup>e</sup> is to wit, that men are inwardly as full of poison as toads, and that they be stuffed with pride, which maketh the to moue vp in such wise, as in effect they refuse to obey God, forasmuch as they vouchsafe not to yeelde all superiority to him. That is the cause why pride or presumption, is matched in this place with vnbeliefe. And it is y<sup>e</sup> same thing which I haue declared afore, namely that the true hardnesse must be grounded in God, so as men must not attempt any thing vpon opinion of their owne power, nor perswade themselues that that they hate this or that: but only stand vnto that which God prometh vs. If it be not to with vs: then will our hardinesse be turned into presumptuousnesse. And in this respect ought wee to condemne mens rashnesse when they aduise themselves too much: and to commend their muuicible continuance, when they submit themselves out of hand to Gods woorde, so that hauing once his promise, they rest vpon it as vpon a rocke despising all stumbling blockes, & keepe on their pace still, notwithstanding any trouble or storme: that can be stirred vp against them, or any threatening or menacing of them. It will be sayd diuers times, that Gods seruantes are willfull: because they will not swaue for any thing, nor for any worldly reasons that can be alledged. This and that shall be brought in, and wee knowe that nothing is easier than to strike fayle at euery blast of winde as they say. But wee see that such as purpose to serue God, doe shut their eyes against all daungers, in such that although all should goe to hauocke, yet will they not cease to doe the thing that is commaunded the. Lo here a willfulness: yea verily, according to the opinion of the flesh: but yet in very deede it is the true hardinesse. Why so? Because it hath the good foundation. Heauen and earth are of great weight: and yet is all that houghe building grounded vpon the onely worde of God. In what good plight then shall a particular thing be, when it is founded vpon the same? Thus yee see what wee haue to gather vpon this text, that the people was presumptuous in that they yielded not to God, when hee commaunded them to sit still.

Now, to the ende wee may know, that when God hath once spoken, they be no threatnings to feare babes withall as they say: he addeth for a conclusion, You went vp, and behold, the Amorrhite that dwelt on the hill came out before you, and chased you as walpes or Bees doe, in such that they smote you in mount Seir, euen vnto Horma. Hereby Moses sheweth that the people were taught after the maner of fooles, that is to say, by their owne hume. And good reason it is that when we will not beleue Gods single word, we should pay very deere for our experience, and be made to knowe in spite of our teeth, that he will be stedfast in his purpose, and bring the thing to passe that he hath spoken. And hereby wee be warned not to prouoke Gods wrath, nor to tempt him. So soone then as he speaketh, let vs stand in awe: for it is a part of sayth as is shewed by the example of Noe in the eleuenth chapter to the Hebrewes. It is sayd there, that Noe beheld the flud at such time as men made great chere in the world. How so? for God had told him that the world should perish, and hee contented himselfe therewith. And therefore let vs not tary till God arme himselfe and vtter his power against vs: but as soone as he hath spoken, let vs be afrayde, that we may prevent his wrath: and then shall we be taught as we ought to be, to our welfare. But if we be hard headed, and thinke that all that euer is sayde is but a mockerie: wee shall finde to our confusion, that God hath an effectuall worde, and that his hand and his tongue goe together, so as all that euer cometh from him shall be found to bee certaine and infallible.

Also wee haue to marke this similitude that Moses setteth downe here: namely that the Amorrhites came out lyke Bees. For wee knowe that when Bees are angrie, they sting men: and they regard not whether men be too strong for them, but they fly vpon them with such cholere and fure, as they cannot but be alighted. They seke to sting their eyes: so as there is not the hardest of them, but he is put to his shuffes, and is faine to runne away from those little pretie fowles. Moses then hath vsed this similitude, to shew that the enemies had Lyons hearts, because God had incouraged them. For it belongeth to him onely to strengthen men. When it pleaseth him to defend vs, though our enemies were as mad as might be, yet should they shrinke away, and be dismayed at a thing of nothing. But else, if there were but little children against vs, GOD would so stręthen them, as we should not know where to become, but bee discomfited before them. Therefore let vs not haue an eye to the strength of men, nor to their furniture. For our Lord will stirre vp folke against vs, that coulde doe nothing atone, and in whom there was no lykelyhoode at all: and wee shall be so conbruted to withstand them, that to our seeming, all the world is against vs: and moreouer wee shall be so dismayed, and GOD shall so beate vs of all sense and reason, that euen a visor shall be enough to scarce vs out of our wittes. Thus yee see what wee haue to consider in this similitude which Moses hath set downe here in the text.

Finlly he sayth that the people being so discomfited, fell to weeping, but God heard not their cry, and so they layed in Cades Barne according to the time that they abode there. Some supply it here wth these wordes, according to the time that you abode in other places, and they say that they abode there nyneteene yeeres. But that cannot be proued by the holy scripture, & the makers of that glose auere the Iewes, who haue turned all the holy scripture to p<sup>er</sup>stitucie, with their dreames and dotages. The meaning of Moses is farre otherwise. For his intent is to put the people in minde of their long abiding at Cades Barne, because God helde them there as it were at a baye: and to make them cal to remembrance and consider the better that his pulling down of their pride after that maner, and his causing of them to feele that they ought not to raunge abroad at randen when God shutteth the gate against the by forbidding them, was a iust punishment fro heauen. Moses then intendeth here to stablish the people the better in y<sup>e</sup> knowledge which they ought to haue had long agoe concerning Gods iustice, to the ende that the same may humble them, & touche them the better with repentance. That is the playne meaning of the text.

Now wee see here first of all, that men re-coyle a hundred paces backe, when they weene to goe forwarde but one, at leastwise beyonde the will of God. This people was neere their enemies, they did but put themselves in a readinesse, and as soone as they were armed, they gaue charge vpon them. They needed not to retyre for the matter, thar is to say, they needed not to remoue: for wee see how they be chafed, and not onely beaten downe there in the same place: but that God also dryueth them before the winde, as chaffe or dust is driuen. Ye see then here is a fayre looking glasse to shewe vs that when men presume to make themselves redoubted, they doe no sooner fet one foote forward, but God plucketh them an hundred leagues backe, and that to their great confusion. What is to be done then? Obedience must alwayes be as a cresset vnto vs to shew vs the way, so as we may first and foremost know what God hath appointed, and thereupon take courage to goe, when we be sure that he guideth our footestepes. For thereupon wee may boldly conclude, that the ende thereof shall bee good, and that there shall followe nothing of it but prosperitie. But contrariwise, if we will needes beleaping out, when God will haue vs sit still at home: it will coste vs very deare. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember vpon this text of Moses, where hee sayth exprelly that the people were chafed euen vnto Horma, and that they came vnto Cades.

As touching the weeping that is spoken of here, it should seeme that there was some repentance in them before, and that now the same was doubled: and yet notwithstanding it is said that it was but lost time, and that the peoples weeping booted them not at all. This at the first blithe might seeme contrary to other texts of the holy scripture. For it is sayd that as soone as sinners acknowledge their faulces and doe but sigh for them, God receiuet them to mercie, yea and euen preuenteth them. It is sayd that hee cryeth not till wee cry, but that he preuenteth our crying: or at leastwise that whensoever we pray, he is ready to heare vs. But here it seemeth that the people repented, and yet that God letteth them alone, so as they languish: still without faring any whittle the better for their repentance. As touching the thing that wee haue scene, it was set downe to shewe vs that the people had a false repentance, as men comonly haue, soothing themselves through hypocrysie, and bearing themselves on hand that they bee well sorie for their sinnes, when there is still some backe nooke behinde, so as they consider not the mischiefe so deeply as it were meete to be searched. True it is, that God will not suffer vs to be plunged in [sorrow for] our sinnes, so wee bethinke vs of them earnestly: but all our seeking is to couer them, and to forget them quite by our good will. Now then, wee haue so much the more neede to pray God to worke lo vs, as we may not bee double hearted to flatter our selues. And for the same cause the holy scripture telleth vs, that he which knoweth not how hard it is to come to repentance, deceiueth himselfe.

The Papistes imagine, that they can helpe themselves and further themselves to repentance by their owne freewill. Loe what their ouerweening is. But let vs vnderstand that it is a singular working of the holy ghost, when it pleaseth him to leade vs to repentance. For what else is it than a renewing of the man? Is it in any mans power to create himselfe? No: but God fashioneth vs newe againe, and therefore that praye is to be giuen vnto him. Againe, our wittes are vtterly dilled or rather starke blinde. God must bee faine to inlighten them. And is that in our power? Whereas there is nothing but corruption in our hartes: whereas there is nothing but secrete rebelliousnesse and mallice: God must be faine to rid and cleanse away euery whit of it.

And therefore let vs marke well that there was no repentance in this people, althoughe they were touched before. It might well be a signe that God had compassion of them: but true repentance requireth not onely an acknowledgement of our faulces, but also that wee shoulde be forye for them, and that vpon the feeling of our owne cull, wee shoulde goe vnto GOD, referring our selues wholly vnto him, and seeking nothing but to bee governed therewith by him, forasmuch as we haue nothing but forwardnesse in our selues. But the people were not yet come to this poynt: and so wee see they were not ripe to repentance. And as touching their weeping, true it is that they had some feeling and vnderstanding: but that was not enough yet.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that Gods refusing to heare the cry of the childre of Israell, was not to shake them off vtterly. And there is not a text better worthe to be noted than this. For it importeth great instruction for all our whole lyfe. I say then that God harkned not to the peoples weeping, and yet notwithstanding that he did not vtterly shake them off, nor was altogether deafe to their request. And how may that be? For sometimes God heareth vs not to outward appearance, and yet howsoever the case stande our prayers are not vnauaileable, but doe vs good.

As for example: When a man hath played the vnthrift, GOD plucketh him backe, (there are examples enow to be scene thereof commonly) and when another hath bin giuen to gluttonic and exceffe: another hath bin a whor-monger or a drunkard, and another hath bin a blasphemer: very wel, God seeing men become such beastes, subdueth them by force, hee sendeth them afflictions which laste nor for a day or a moneth only, but linger vpon them a long time: whereupon the one sorte take the bridle in their teeth, and chawe vpon it with fretting and chafing against God, continue still sturdy and stubborne in their sinnes: the other sorte graunt that they haue offended, and are sorie for it before God, beseeching him to vouchsafe to moderate his rigor, & to asswage y pains which they indure. And yet in the meane while, their miserie abateth nor, but they continew at the same stay that they were at before. It should seeme then y their prayers are lost, & that God

gaue deafe care vnto them. Now although fuch folke pray hartly: yet let vs marke that Gods hearing of them is not to outward appearance. And why? Becaufe he knoweth that it is good for them to be fo vnder his rod ftill. Euen fo was it with this people: it was to their benefite for them to be put in minde of their lewde dealings euery minute of an houre. But yet for all that, he fayleth not to haue compaffion on them: for he giueth them patience, and afterwarde maketh their afflictions to doe them good: in fomuch that although they were irkfome to them, yet did they ftand them in ftcad of medicines. Ye fee then that God doth fometimes heare vs, and yet notwithstanding it appeareth not fo to any mans thinking, yea and euen wee our felues may fuppofe that wee haue loft our time. True it is that God will furely reiect the yellings of the wicked when they cry out vnto him, and that he will laugh at their weepings: and it is not to be maruiled at. And yet in fo doing he fayleth not to accomplifh his promife, which is, that he will heare all them that cry vnto him. And why? For this promife belongeth to none but fuch as cry vnto God rightly, and come not to him with windlafles and feining, according to this exprefle fying of the pfalme, that God is nere to all fuch as call vpon him, yea, as call vpon him in truth. Then if wee will be heard at Gods hand, wee muft firft and formoft haue our affections clenfed. And therefore his reiecting of the hypocrites when they cry vnto him, is no counterworking againft his promife: For they bee vnclene. In dedee they houle, and they will not ftick to fay, alas my God, they will make lamentation enough: but forafmuch as they feeke not God of a defire to come vnto him, but in ftcad of coming to him, would recoyle backe from him if it were poffible: their crying out, my God, is as though they were vpon the racke. Now then, this howling of theirs is brutifh, and hath no affinitie with faith to doe them good withall. But the thing that I tolde you of euen now, hath another maner of thing in it: that is to wit, that [diuers times] God will not heare vs to deliuer vs from the bodily punishments that he fendeth vs: and yet in the meane while he ceafeth not to be mercifull and well minded to wardes vs. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that when our Lord fendeth vs anie difeafes, fo as one is ftroken with pouerrie, another is fmitten after another fafhion, and euery man hath his griefe: if we pray vnto him, and the mercie is as though it were tyed to our foulders, and he maketh no countenance to heare vs: it is not to be fayd therefore that God letteth vs alone therein, to driue vs to defpaire. But if wee beare the aduerfite patiently which hee fendeth, let vs looke to be deliuered of it in the ende: and in the meane while let it fuffice vs to be comforted by his holy fpirit, and let vs hope that he will not fuffer vs to be tempted aboue that which we be able to beare. Thus ye fee how God heard not the peoples cry, and yet that they which haue fought him with a true and rightmeaning heart, haue not loft their labor.

God fhewed not by outward deed, that he heard them, and yet in the meane while he made their bodily punishment to ferue to the welfare of their foules: in fomuch that albeit they lingered there by the fpace of forti: yeeres: yet were they not difinheritred of y<sup>e</sup> kingdom of heauen. Whereas they were difappointed of the land that was promifed them: therein they felt Gods wrath: but yet did they ouercome that temptation through fayth: I meane them that came againe into the right way, and grew not hard hearted as the moft part did, which did nothing elfe but chafe vpon the bit, as we haue feene afore. And herein wee fee, that if we haue true repentance of our finnes, we fhall finde that God is not vnmindefull of our requestes, though he heare vs not fo foone as we would: and that yet notwithstanding our repentance muft keepe vs ftill vnder, fo as although that (to our feeming) the gate vnto Gods goodnelle is shut againft vs, and he will not admit vs in: yet neuertheleffe, our prayers fhall not be in vaine. For God will fhewe in the ende, that he was not deaf to our requestes, but that he heard them to giue vs fuch aflwagement of our afflictions, as he knew to be meete and expedient for our welfare.

And finally let vs marke wel that if God haue punished vs, yea, & that the affliction hath induced a long time: y<sup>e</sup> remembrance thereof muft bee well printed in our mindes, that we become not lyke thofe which forget Gods chaftifementes win a day or twaine. And y<sup>e</sup> is y<sup>e</sup> caufe why Moles fayth to y<sup>e</sup> people, According to the dayes which you haue tarried there. As if he fhould fay, ye ought to beare it well in remembrance. For it feemed to you that ye fhould neuer haue come foone enough into the lande of bleffing: but God made you to retire from it, & it ought to haue bin yet longer time ere ye had come there. Thinke vpon it, & confider how it was Gods hand y<sup>e</sup> held ye there as it were shut vp in clofe prifon. Now then, although God haue deliuered you from it: yet muft you beare it in mind ftill, according as we fee how king Ezechias fpake theroof in his fong, faying y<sup>e</sup> he will bethinke him of the yeeres paff with heauineffe and griefe of heart, and call to minde y<sup>e</sup> chaftifementes that he had receiued at Gods hand, thereby to holde himfelfe in awe, y<sup>e</sup> hee fall not backe againe into the fame faultes for which hee had bin punished. Thus ye fee how wee ought to thinke vpon the corrections that God fhall haue lent vs, that we may profite our felues by them. And therefore let vs not refemble this people that are fpoken of here: but wh<sup>e</sup>foeuer we be chaftifed at Gods hand, let our forrowing be in fuch forte, as we may haue wherewith to comfort our felues in his grace. And therewithall let vs holde our felues thenceforth in his obedience, neuer to prouoke him as wee had done before.

Now let vs kneele downe in the prefence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to vouchfafe to touch vs with them more and more, in fuch wife as wee may not only afke him forgiueneffe for our trefgrefling of his commaundementes fo many wayes:

ways: but also desire to be reformed by his holy spirit, that by his power wee may fight against al our owne lusts, and against al the temptations of the world, and quietly goe through with our calling, vntill such time as being deliuered from all fighting, wee be receiued into the heavenly rest that is promised vs. And so let vs al say, Almighty God heavenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xxv. of Aprill. 1555.

The eleuenth Sermon which is the first vpon the second Chapter.

Then turned wee and drewe to the wildernesse by the way of the red Sea, as the Lorde had sayd to mee: and wee compassed about mount Seir many a day.

2 And the Lorde spake vnto me, saying:

3 Yee haue gone long enough about this mountaine: turne yee towardes the North.

4 And warne thou the people, saying: yee shall shortly passe through the borders of your brethren the children of Esau which dwell in Seir, and they shall be afrayd of you: but take yee good heede to your selues,

5 That yee prouoke them not: for I will not giue you so much as one foote of their land.

6 Yee shall buy vittels of them for mony, and eate: and lykewise yee shall buy water of them for mony, and drinke.

7 For the Lorde thy God hath blessed thee in all the workes of thy handes. He knewe that thou shouldest iourney through this great wildernesse. The Lord thy God hath bin with thee now these fortie yeeres, and thou hast wanted nothing.

Ere wee see more fully the prooffe of the matter that I treated of yesterday: y<sup>e</sup> God in chastising men, doth teache them to obeye him, & by that meanes holdeth them in awe by force, because they would not submitte themselves to him willingly: And secondly that he tryeth their obedience, by reyning them backe, whereas wee of our owne nature are desirous to praece forward, and to purchase our selues estimation. Moses then sayth, that the people turned backe after they had bin so beaten by their enemies: For before they could not bee tamed by no meanes. God had commaunded them what they should doe: but wee sawe they rebelled for all that. When he sayd, be ye still: they were in a heate and would needes be running vpon their enemies: And when he sayde, goe not: they would needes runne faster than before. But were they once taught to their coste, and had God once performed his threatning, by making them to be oerthrowen by their enemies: then were they plynable enough: But it was all too late, as we commonly say in the prouerb, a foole is neuer wise till he be well beaten. Now hereby we be taught how greatly it is for our behoofe to bee so dealt with. For except God bring vs home to him by correction: it would be vnp. sibile for vs to bee such as we ought to be, so as we would harken to his voyce and followe him whither soeuer hee commaundeth vs. Therefore wee must be faine to be prepared with stripes of the rod.

Furthermore, let vs learne well the thing that hath bin declared heretofore, according also as Moses sheweth it to the eye: that is to wit, that God will suffer vs to languish: and that although he bee mercifull to vs, and haue forgiven the finnes that we haue committed: yet must wee be faine to suffer for a time. We shall sigh vnto him, and yet will he let vs alone in our miserable state and plight: but in the ende, all shall fall out to our benefite. For had God set open the gap to the children of Israell, and giuen them entrance into the promised land: within a day or two they would haue forgotten that horrible cryme of theirs in murmuring against him, yea (& as much as in the lay) euen in forsaking their heritage: they would neuer haue thought vpon their vnthankfulnesse and disobedience. Therefore it behooued them to be chastised a long season, so as they might neuer forget the offence that they had committed. Now then, when soeuer wee haue prouoked God to anger by our disobedience: let vs not thinke it strange though he doe not at the first d<sup>e</sup> the deliuer vs from the aduerſitie that he ſendeth vs for a chaſtiſement. For our ſinne would not be printed ſo thoroughly in our remembrance at the firſt day as is requiſite. God therefore muſt be ſaine to worke after ſuch forte, and to make vs to languish, as I haue touched before. And in good faith, what elſe is all this preſent lyfe but ſuch an exerciſe? Wherefore hath God made vs ſubiect to ſo many miſeries? wee be no longer ſcaped out of one miſchiefe, but anon there cometh another in the necke of it, ſo as there is neuer an ende. And all is to teach vs this leſſon, which wee cannot remember if wee be not enforced to it. Beſides that, we would forget it by and by, if our Lord did nor (as ye would ſay) incorporate it into vs, ſo as wee may be prepared and led of nature to ſay, ſee how our God exerciſeth vs with many miſeries, and hee doth it becauſe wee be wretched ſinners. And yet for all this, can wee frame our ſelues to his lure, and not rather drawe cleane contrarie to his will? Therefore is he ſaine to teach vs, that ſpyce of our reeth wee be in his hand, and he hath all ſouereine dominion and Lordſhip ouer vs.

Againe to come to particularities, whenſoever God ſendeth a man any affliction, let him beſidke himſelfe, that beſides the common miſeries of this flightful lyfe, god intendeth to giue him a particular inſtruction. And let vs not ſay, why doth not this man or that man deſerue to be chaſtiſed as well as I: according to the common maner, which is that euery man would be priuiledged about others? nay let euery of vs yeelde to receiue the rod patiently at Gods had, aſſuring our ſelues that hee chaſtiſeth vs meaſurably, & as he knoweth to be for our profit. Thus much concerning ſy retryng ſy is treated of here.

Furthermore if our Lord plucke vs backe, and whereas things were in good forwardneſſe, and there was good lykelyhoode that all ſhould haue flouriſhed and bin in great proſperitie: if we ſee a ſuddaine conuulſion, and that the ſame continueth afterward, and things goe on from worſe to worſe: let vs vnderſtand that it is for our ſins ſakes, & becauſe wee haue peruerted the courſe of Gods goodneſſe. For he [for his part] neuer ſayleth to goe forward with the good that hee hath begunne to doe for vs: but wee cannot abide that hee ſhould continue it, wee hinder him as much as in vs lyeth. And therefore is he ſaine to handle vs as we deſerue.

Beſides this, let vs aſſure our ſelues that when we obey God, then hath he made his corrections available in vs. True it is that a great number doe harden when God goeth about to ſubdue them: yee ſhall ſee them growe wiſſall and full of venom againſt him. But God worketh after ſuch a forte in his choſen, that when hee ſmiteth them with his hand, he doth alſo touch the inwardly with his holy ſpirit, ſo as their hearts become ſoft that they may obey, by reaſon whereof the corrections doe them good. Although then that the miſeries which we indure are hard and contrary to our nature: yet muſt wee thinke them good, becauſe God maketh them to ſerue for our welfare after that faſhion.

Now Moſes ſayth expreſſely, that after the people had ſet a windaſſe and trayled about the mountaine Seir, they came to the north ſide, euen as God had commaunded him. Wherein wee ſee the thing more clearly which I haue touched: that is to ſay, that there is a pliableneſſe in the people which was not in them beſore: they bee now become tractable. And although they wandered a long tyme, ſo as they might haue bin out of patience euery day, and haue taken occaſion to murmure, and to haue made ſedition: yet notwithstanding they went ſtill forward. And why? for the corrections which they had receiued, had wrought a change in them. Wee ſee then that Gods reforming of men by puniſhing them for their ſinnes, is as a furnace to melt them and caſt them newe againe in. And therefore if God haue let vs alone here at our eaſe, and wee fall to kicking againſt him: let vs aſſure our ſelues it is more for our behoofe to be corrected by ſome chaſtiſement. And therewithall let vs beware that we profite our ſelues by it, and that wee become not worſe than they were which are ſet forth to vs as an example of diſobedience and ſtubborneſſe. Harden not your hartes as your fathers did, ſayth the Lord. And yet notwithstanding wee ſee that this people (how ſtubborne and ſroward foucer they were) miſſed not to goe about the mountaine a long tyme, after God had ſo chaſtiſed them: that is to ſay, they were driuen to knowe that it was in vaine for them to reſiſt the hand of God. Howbeit we ſee yet ſome obedience, in that it is ſaid, that they waied to haue a new commaundement, ſo as they durſt not remoue one ſtep, [till they had it.] It might ſeeme that God mocked them to goe round about after that faſhion. They might haue ſayd, what ſhall become of this in the end? If God will haue vs to tary, why lets he vs not alone? Or if he will haue vs to goe, why theweth hee vs not the way, to ſay, goe forward? He holdes vs here lyke little children, ſo as wee doe nothing but fetch a circuit without departing out of one place, and when wee haue tyred our legges neuer ſo much, wee are neuer the further onward on our way. The people might haue deſcanted after that faſhion. But what? They tary till God ſay to them, Turne yee that way. Wee ſee then yet ſtill howe this chaſtiſement had done them good in thar behalfe. And hereupon let vs marke what true repentance bringeth with it. Where as wee were deſt when God ſpake to vs, and gaue no care to his voyce: wee muſt holde our ſelues in awe vnder him, and looke what hee ſayth, that muſt wee doe, and no more. That is the chiefe fruite of repentance. And if it appeared vnto vs in this people which was ſo ſtubborne and vntamable: what excuſe will there be for vs, if wee will not receiue the things that are ſpoken to vs in the name of God: but rather will be ſtill replying, and haue not the witte and diſcretion to ſuffer our ſelues to be guided by him who onely can leade vs aright? So much the more then ought wee to reſtraime our ſelues from attempting any thing, vnleſſe God commaund it.

1. Pet. 1. 7.

Pſal. 95. 8. &amp; Heb. 4. 7.

Moreouer it is sayd that the people shall passe through the countrey of Edome, without prouoking of the inhabitants. First of allis sayd, They be your brethren, the children of Esau. Wee knowe that Esau was the brother of Iacob, who was the Patriarke, and (as yee would say) the wellspring from whence this people descended. And for asmuch as Esau came of the line of Abraham: a part of the land of promise had belonged vnto him, but that hee was cut off from the inheriting thereof, howbeit not by the pleasure of man, but by the heauenly ordinance vttered by God yea euen while their mother Rebbecca was with childe of them, inasmuch as hee sayd that the elder should serue the younger. But yet for all this, Esau ceased not to be Iacobs brother still. And their children ought to haue continued the same brotherhoode & kindred betwixt them afterwarde. Marke that for one poynt.

Gen. 25. 23,
& Rom. 9. 13

Another poynt is, That God gaue mount Seir in possession to Esau: it was his lot. When he had excluded him out of the land of Chanaan, hee gaue him the other countrey for himselfe and his successors. Forasmuch then as it was assigned him of God: it was not for men to attempt to deprivie or bereaue him thereof. Now as touching this brotherhoode, God will haue it to moue vs, and to be as a certain bond to knit vs together, so as nature may perswade vs to be kindehearted one to another, and restrayne vs from doing wrong or harme to any man. True it is that there is not fleshly kindred betwene all men, to make them so neere of blood as they might call one another cousins, and name themselves by any lineage whereof either other were descended: but yet is there a certain cōmon kindred in generall, which is, that all men ought to think how they be fashioned after Gods image, and that there is one nature common among them all. Euen the heathen men knew that very wel. So then whereas we haue some discretion to maintaine peace and concord, and to yelde euery man his right without taking away of any mans goods, & without committing of any extortion or outrage: and wee peruert the order of nature, and are worse than the wilde beastes which make countenance one to another when they be of one kind. For the woolues are not at such variance among themselves as men are. And therefore let vs learne, that although there be not any neere kindred among vs, yet notwithstanding in asmuch as we be men, there ought to be some cōmon bond betwene vs, and a certain brotherly loue. But there is yet another consideration among Christians: for God hath adopted them to be of his household: and that ought to make more than all the kindred on the earth. For seeing that God hath tolde vs that he intendeth to take vs to himselfe, because that being of his Church wee be as it were his owne children, and call vpon him as with one mouth, saying our father: if wee neuertheless agree as cattes and dogges among our selves: may it in any wise be borne withal, specially considering that wee cannot clayme him for our father, vnlesse we be governed by his holy spirit: [No surely:] For either his spirit must cry in our hartes: or else we shall haue our mouthes shut. Againe on the other side, by what title can wee clayme so great a benefite and honor as to be the children of God: if we be not members of Iesus Christ? But wee be not of his body, but vpon condition aforesayd. Whofoeuer then hurteth his neighbor, whofoeuer is voyde of louing-kindnesse and pittie, whofoeuer layeth to catching and snatching on all sides: the same (as much as in him is) rendeth Iesus Christ in peeces. And therefore let vs marke well, that when God alledgeth kindred: wee be warned to consider in what degree God hath put vs, and what vni-on hee hath set among vs, & euery of vs to discharge himselfe faithfully thereof, to y intent y whereas God hath set vs together to maintaine vs in good agreement and loue: wee make not a confused disorder. Let that serue for one poynt.

15. 16.

But if wee consider the common trade of the worlde, how it should seeme that men haue conspyred to doe cleane contrary to Gods commaundement: it is so farre off from neighbors to thinke that Gods placing of them neere together, is to the end that euery man should serue his neighbors turne, and all imploy themselves to the common profite, without harting or greeting one another: that euen brothers thinke it lawfull to shufft euery one for himselfe, and there is none other lyfe with them, but to drawe still to themselves without any pittie or compassion. How then shall the neighbors be brethren, which haue but some acquaintance a farre off: seeing y they which were borne all in one belly, and are all one mans children, beare no more friendship one to another than wilde beastes, but rather much lesse? Truly it should seeme that some will needes be brethren, euen in spite of God. For if it be to doe some mischief, or to playe some diuellsish pranke to the ouerthrowe of all goodnesse: then they can skill to alledge, wee haue this, and wee haue that, wee be countrymen, wee be neighbors children borne all in one towne. Loec how the wicked can finde themselves to be cousins and brothers. And what to doe? To rise vp against God, to put all things out of order, to make quarrels and frays, to maintaine themselves in all loosenesse, and to procure all manner of stumblingblockes, that Gods name may be blasphemed and all honestie peruerted. These are the brotherhoods and cousinships of the worlde, as is to be seene too much. But when it cometh to the poynt that euery man should helpe his neighbor, and abstaine from doing him harme or annoyance: men be so farre off from abstaining, or from thinking that God vnited them together, or that God hath created the after his own image, or agayne, that they be bound yet w a stricter bond, inasmuch as he hath adopted them by his Gospel to be members of his sonne Iesus Christ, and hirers of the kingdome of heauen: men (I say) are so farre off from thinking any such thing, that they peruert the whole order of nature,

with worse than beastly furie. But yet is this text sufficient to condemne men if they walk not in all mildenesse, and be not more kindehearted one to another than they be.

Now let vs come to that which is added here in the second place; which is, That God had giuen Mount Seir in possession to Esau. True it is that when he comparerth Esau and Iacob together, he sayth by his prophet, Is not Esau Iacobs brother? And yet haue I placed him in a hillie countrie, in a stonie and barren countrey: and I haue giuen you a fruitefull and fatte lande. Hereby the people of Israell are put in minde, that God had bestowed many mo benefites vpon them, than vpon those that went afore the. For Esau was the elder sonne, and yet did God dither hit him of the land that he had promised to his graundiather Abraham, and to his father Isaac. And why did God so? wee see none other reason, but for that hee list to vtter his free goodnesse towards Iacob and his linage. The people of Israell coule not say, wee were the more noble and excellent: for the byrthright belonged to Esau. They coule not say, wee were better. Nor: for we see they were a people set altogether vpon malice and vnthankfulnesse. Now then, their inheriting of the promised land besel them not for any worthines of their owne, but through Gods meere mercy. And besides this, God had also prouided for Ismael who was halfe a bastard. For the matching of Abraham with Agar was not a lawfull marriage. And although it was no aduoutrie: yet was not that marriage altogether allowed of God. But yet did God prouide for Ismael, in as much as hee sayd, I haue heard him. If the case stooode so with Ismael, much more reason was it that Esau shoulde haue some place, and that God should extend his blessing euen to those that were of his linage. And for that cause did hee giue him mount Seir. Now therefore, in this consideration the people of Israell ought not to trouble him, but to la him alone with the portion that was assigned him from heauen.

Here wee haue a good lesson to gather, which belongeth to vs all. Although mention be made here precisely of the linage of Esau, which were called Edomites and Idumians: yet notwithstanding, as we shall see hereafter in the song, God declareth that according as he made the partitions and stretched out his meeteline, so were the realmes and countries deuided. Let vs not thinke that the world is ruled by fortune, and that things are so intangled, but that God guideth all by his prouidence and power. Hee then hath stretched out his meeteline to appoint euery people their countrey to dwell in. But yet for all that, wee see how men haue transposed those boundes. They will not sticke to confesse that boundes are a very holy thing. And truly [the transgressing in that behalfe] shall be more punishable, than if a man had offended in any other deede. Lykewise mony because it is y thing whereby men intercomon among themselves, is a priuiledge and (as yee would say) a sacred thing. In lyke case is it with the boundes [meeres, and buttels] of fieldes: for without them, all woulde goe to haucke, so as men would eate vp one another. Wee will well graunt this as in respect of a field or a medowe: but wee see that the pride, Ambition, and vnfatuable couetousnesse of men haue so caied away their mindes, as they haue not bin ashamed since to transpoe the boundes that God had set. For as touching such as haue enterprised warres against their neighbors, to increate themselves: haue they not all broken the order which ought to haue bin inuioable: yes: So then wee see how men are made to spyte God through their ambition and couetousnesse. And yet this mischiefe continueth still at this day, and is inflamed more than euer it was.

But yet for all that, this rule shall holde for euer: that is to wit, that looke what landes, what kingdome, what Lordship, what principalltie, what state, or what free citie souer there bee: wee may assure ourselues, that the distributing of them after that sorte, is done by God: and that whoeuer wageth battell against them, doth as much as in him lyeth to breake the boundes which God hath set. I meane here such warres as are taken in hand through ambition, or couetousnesse, or pride. Otherwise, wee see here, that the children of Israell ought to make warre: for God auoweth their doinge, because he had ordeyned the to be owners of the land, and will haue the former inhabitants driuen out as they deserued.

But are warres made nowadays by the authoritie of God? Haue men an eye to the thing that is lawfull? Yea, or doe they tary till they haue commandement from God? Nay, they go to it in despite of him, the diuill driues them forewarde. True it is that if a man reason of Realmes and Principallities as they bee nowadays: it may be alledged, how hath this realme bin invaded, and how hath that countrey bin conquered? Yea, but yet for all that, it is not for men to remoude boundes. Although they haue bin confounded: yet is it not for vs to enterprise any thing. For our Lorde hath not giuen vs commission so to doe: hee hath referued that to himselfe.

But let vs marke lykewise, that when men haue once altered the order that God hath set, hee must needs overthrowe them. And that is the cause why there happen so many changes, and it is maruell that there are not scene yet a hundred times mo. Surely if God had not a speciall regard to the preferuation of mankind: no doubt but wee should see alterations of kingdomes euery day, so that within two or three dayes, hee that is now a king should bee but as one that were drest in a playets apparell, to play an enterlude vpon a stage. But yet for all that wee must marke well, that the alterations of kingdomes which happen, doe serue to punish the chaunges that were made afore, when men remoued their boundes at the beginning, and would needs peruert the order that God had set. Neuerthelesse, how fouer the case stands, let vs beare this lesson in minde, that that God hath limited realmes and countries: and that whereas it is his wil that there should be principalties stablished euery where, forasmuch as the same commeth of his prouidence: it behooueth vs to holde our selues contented and not to alter any thing, vnlesse we haue good warrant that he openeth vs the gate and armeth vs. As for example, if violence be offered vnto vs, then is it certain that if God giue victorie to him that was wrongfully assailed, so as he ouercometh his enemy and put him to flight: that is a chaunge that commeth of God. But as for to assault [vnprouoked:] that (as I sayd afore) is not to fight against creatures, but against the liuing God.

And let vs wey well the wordes that are for downe here: Thou shalt not prouoke them (sayth he) and they shall be afraid of thee. And hee addeth afterwarde, Thou shalt buy the bread that thou must eat, yea and euen the water that thou shalt drinke, so as thou must alwayes haue thy purse open to pay and content them. Here wee see that when God intendeth to maintaine a people in their possession, he prouoketh them not to make the misbehaue themselves, for euen therefore did he cast that feare vpon the Edomites, to the end that the children of Israell shoulde not haue any occasion of warre. Wee shall see hereafter how God hardened the hart of Sehon, and inflamed the other inhabitants of the cuntry, so as they armed themselves against the people of Israell, because he was minded to driue them out. And so did he shewe the children of Israell by effect, that they had iust cause of warre. But whereas he held the Edomites in awe, and inclined their hearts in such wise as they gaue passage to the children of Israell, and bought and soule quietly with them: therein wee see (as I touched before) that when our Lorde purposeth to maintaine a people in their possession, hee will giue the such a minde as they shall not prouoke their neighbors, nor open them any gap by stryking vp the drumme, or by sounding the trumpette first themselves. To be shorte, the warre shall not spring on their owne side. Therefore wee must conclude, that when a people doe put forth themselves, or when a prince will needes attempt foolish enterprises, and be meddling here and there: wee may perceiue it is Gods doing, of purpose to ouerthrow him and to bereue him of the cuntry that he had giuen him. So much the more then ought wee to pray God to maintaine vs and to make vs milde and peaceable, that we may not followe those whome we see to haue their heads full of vnquietnesse, so as they must needes be meddling with one thing or other. Let vs abstaine from such things, that our Lord may maintaine vs in peace: for that is the true meane, as I saide afore.

Herewithall also wee be taught, how men should behaue themselves in their warres (prouided alwayes that the warre be rightfull and holy, and such as God alloweth of:) that is to witte, in such fort as no man be vexed, and that there be no pillage, no faggage, nor no extortion committed. For it is sayd, ye shall buy the bread that ye eate, yea and ye shall pay ready mony for the water that ye drinke. If God commaund the people of Israell to buy water to drinke: howe much rather should they that make warre, pay for wine and victuals, & such other things as coit ready mony, to those that are not their enemies? For the thing that is sayd here, is spoken of the Edomites. But how is this obserued nowadayes, I pray? In deede there are Edictes and proclamations inow made: but the world sees how they be kept.

Yea and who bee most troubled with the warres, but such as beare the burthen of it? And that is euē the cuntry. When a king or a prince is about to make war, it seemeth to be for the common weal: & so are men made to beleue. But in the meane while, when the poore subiectes haue payed a sorte of tallages, taxes, and imposites for the maintenance thereof: yet must they be still bitten to the bone, so as the enemies shall not be more vexed, than they vnder whose name and title the warre is made. They can well enough make markets for men to sel their wares in, and beare them in hand they shall haue ready mony. But what? the thing that is worth three shillings, shall be esteemed at one. And most commonly they take vp vittels and pay for them as they list. And so wee in effect, that all the warres which are made nowadayes, are but robberies: and that the crueltie and vnnaturalnesse is so excessiue, as tendeth to vtter confusion: so as it should seeme that men are bent to banishe all equitie, and that warre cannot be made without the forgetting of all vprightnesse, that there may be no more lawe, but that men may become wood beastes. Loe to what poynnt the world is come.

But yet for all that, lyke as this doctrine cannot be wiped out of the holy scripture, so can it nor also be blotted out of gods booke of records, that he should not iudge the worlde according as he hath pronounced thereof already: that is to wit, that the men of warre which will needes enrich themselves with other mens goodes, are condēd at his hand, whatsoever they alledge for themselves, notwithstanding that they haue taken it vp of custome to spoyle and rob, because they haue not sufficient wages, or whatsoever color else they can pretend. They may well appeale to kings and princes for to be their warrant: for they shall leade the daunce, and be driuen to answere as captaynes of thecues: and all their souldiers shall followe after them, as partners of their wickednesse. Now forasmuch as wee see such disorders in the worlde, wee be warned thereby to pray vnto God, that hee suffer vs not to be wrapped in the same. And when we aske him our dayly bread, let vs haue consideration to thinke thus: Ah good Lord, graunt vs the grace that euery of vs may liue of his owne labor, and be in peace: and that when the drum is striken vp, wee may not play the madde bed-lemes, nor gae our selues to spoyling & robbing, but holde our selues in quiet, so as we may take paynes and yelde the thanks for thy susteyning of vs, & suffer euery man to inioy his owne, without without offering of violence to any man.

Besides this, if they that make warre be expressly commaunded to pay for their bread and water: I pray you what ought wee to doe in peace? For many misorders may seeme halfe excusable when there is open warre, and it may so fall out, that they which would faine bee gentle, sometimes cannot, but are inforced to doe things which they be loath to doe, yea euen to their enemies. And yet for all that, it is apparant, that if a man take any thing without paying for it, fo as the owner or partie bee grieued, GOD condemneth it vicerly, and giueth sentence here against it, yea euen though things bee neuer so farre out of order, whereby some colour might bee giuen to iustifie their dooings. Nowe then I pray you what will he doe in peace, when wee haue no cause to grieue one another, but that they which can skill of husbandrie may finde themselves thereby, the shoppes are open for marchauntes and handicraftes men, and there is common policie [for men to be ordered by:] Seeing that God induceth vs [by such meanes] to withhold our selues from all outrage and extortion: if we then goe about to robbe other men of their goods, if euery man seeke to spoile his neighbour to enrich himselfe with his goods, if we be so spitefull as to eate vpon one another without any cause: must we not bee condemned dubble? Yes certainly. Now then, seeing that men of warre are commaunded to passe without making spoile, & without offering any trouble or extortion: let vs learne that we are much more commaunded to walke vprightly & iustly, without doing any outrage or any pulling and polling, seeing that God giueth vs greater meanes to auoide it. Thus ye see the effect of that which wee haue to beare in remembrance.

And nowe for a conclusion here is made a rehearfall what GOD had done for this people. The Lorde thy God (saith Moses) hath led thee in the wilderness: he hath fedde thee with Manna: thou hadst not any natural water to drinke, but God gaue it thee out of the drie rock: thou neededst not any money to buy thee clothes withall, or to paye for thy charges as thou wentest: and is it not reason now that this goodnesse and iust dealing should cause thee to deale reasonably with those by whom thou passest? For the people might haue replied, Yes marrie, but wee haue not where with, wee haue bene a long time in the wilderness, there were no mines of golde or silver there, we earned not a penny there, neither haue we had any trade of niarehandise whereby to get any thing. But Moses answereth hereunto, Consider howe the Lorde thy God hath gouerned thee. As if he should say, ye haue none excuse at all: for ye haue wherewith to pay and content euery man. And why? For in the wilderness ye spent not any whit of the spoile that ye brought with you out of Egypt: ye were not driuen to buye bread, vittelles, apparell, or any other thing. So then, nowe that you are at the point to possesse the land that God hath promised you, ye should bee too vnthankfull towards God, and too chulish towards men, if ye should refuse to content those by whom ye passe. And of a truth, although ye had not wherewith, yet should it not bee lawfull for you to robb them. For our Lord chaungech not the order that he hath set, for any pouertie that is in men. But if a man that hath no neede, doe rob or fleece his neighbour of his goods: there-in appeareth so much the lewde: and outrage-oufer naughtinesse. And therefore let vs make well that Gods alledging of this reason to the people, was to the end they should bee the better perswaded and disposed to doe the thing that was commaunded them.

And herein wee see first of all howe God beareth with vs: for as a father flattereth his child, and vseth great gentlenesse towards him; & although he might commaund him to the word, laying, doe this or that, without alledging any reason at all yet he dealeth so gently with him as to say, my child, marke this: the reason why I would haue thee to doe such a thing, in'ouchneth at he fall eth euen to flattering of him: euen after y same maner doth God of his infinite goodnesse beare with vs. So much y more then are wee to blame on our part, if wee suffer not our selues to be ouerruled by him, seeing he sheweth himselfe so gentle and amiable towards vs.

And for the second point let vs marke, that although no necessitie can excuse our sinnes: yet notwithstanding these are the more to bee condemned, which offend vnconstrained by any extremitie. As howe? If a poore man deale vnconscionably when he hath not wherewith to liue, he knoweth where to become: yet shall he bee condemned: (and if a theefe be punishable before men, much more reason is y he should be so before God.) And what shall the man bee to whom God hath giuen wherewith to maintaine himselfe, if he fall to pilling & poisoning, and be neuer satisfied, but is catching and snatching on all sides, and hath no regard of Gods blessing: but is alwayes theeuing, filching, & deceeuing? Such a mā is the more to be abhorred, & wee must conclude y a horrible vengeance is prepared for such as haue offended so wilfully. Nowe then let vs marke, y when God giueth vs wherewith to sustaine & maintaine our selues, his will is to lead vs thereby to be the lounger to our neighbours, & to do no man any harme or wrong. And so ye see that Gods blessings ought to be instructions to vs, to make vs lue vprightly, without attempting any thing against our dutie, or without troubling of any bodie. This is it that we haue to remember in the second place. The rest cannot bee dispatched as now, and therefore it shall be referred till to morrowe.

Now let vs kneele downe in presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as wee may returne to him with true repentance. And againe forasmuch as he vouchsafeth to maintaine vs nowe in peace, let vs praye him to continue the same fauour towards vs, and not suffer vs to bee assayled, least wee doe wrong or harme to any bodie, and so open a gap to such as seeke to swallowe vs vp, by prouoking them against vs: but rather that our mildnesse may make them to sit still though they were willing to bee dooing with vs. And therewithall, our good God graunt vs also the grace to fight in such wise against our spirituall enemies, as wee may get the vpper hand of them by his power. Let vs then bee giuen wholly that way, and ther-withal let vs seeke to serue men to the vttermost of our power, seeking peace & friendship with all men, till our good God haue rid vs from all battels of this world, to take vs into y endlesse rest which he hath promised vs. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also, &c.

On Fryday the xxvj. of Aprill. 1555.

8 Then passed we by our brethren the children of Esau, that dwell in Seir, by the way of the wilderness of Elath, and of Aſion-gaber: then turned we, and went in the way of the wilderness of Moab.

9 Then saide the Lord vnto me, trouble not Moab, neither prouoke him to battell: for I will not giue thee any peece of his land to possess, because I haue giuen Ar in possession to the children of Lot.

10 The Emians dwelt there before, which were a great people and many in number, and tall as the Enakims.

11 And likewise they were counted Gigantes as the Enakims, and the Moabites called them Emins.

12 Likewise in Seir dwelt the Horians aforesometimes. But the children of Esau draue them out, and destroyed them before them, and dwelt there in their stead, like as Israel hath done in the land of their possession, which the Lord hath giuen them.

13 Then said I, now then, get ye vp, and goe ye ouer the riuer Zared. And wee went ouer the riuer of Zared.

14 And the time wherein wee trauided from Cades barne vntill wee passed the riuer of Zared, lasted eight and thirtie yeeres, euen vntill the whole generation of the men of warre was consumed from among the hoste, as the Lorde God had sworne vnto them.

15 For the hand of the Lord was against them, to destroy them from among the hoste, vntill he had consumed them.

16 And it came to passe, that when all the men of warre were consumed from among the people,

17 Then the Lord spake vnto Moses, saying:

18 This day shalt thou passe the borders of Moab by Ar,

19 And come to the children of Ammon, whom thou shalt not besiege, nor prouoke them: for I will not giue thee any possession in the land of the children of Ammon, because I haue giuen it in possession to the children of Loth.

20 This land also was counted a land of Gigantes: for Gigantes dwelt in it aforesometimes: and the Ammonites called them Zomzomins:

21 A great people and many in number, and tall as the Enakims. But the Lord destroyed them before them. And so they possessed it and dwelt there in their stead:

22 Like as he had done for the children of Esau that dwell in Seir, when he destroyed the Horims before them: by reason whereof they possessed their land, and dwelt there in their stead euen vnto this day.

23 Also the Caphthorims that came out of Caphthor, destroyed the Euims that dwelt in Hazerin euen vnto Gaza, and dwelled there in their stead,

Like

Like as yesterday wee sawe that the children of Israel were commanded to passe by the Countrey of Edom without doing any wrong to the inhabitantes, because there was kintred betwix them, inasmuch as they descended of Esau Iacobs brother: so nowe they be willed to passe by the borders of Moab and Ammon, without dooing them any hurt or harme, because that they also were of kinne to them. For the Moabites & Ammonites came of Lothand God would haue the children of Israel to acknowledge it still. And herein wee haue to note, that here againe God tried the obedientnesse of his people. For the children of Israel had languished nowe a great while already: and although they had bene fed by Gods free goodnesse, inasmuch as Manna was giuen them dayly from heauen: yet notwithstanding if wee looke vpon their trauell, the time thereof might seeme verie long to them, & they might haue bene exceedingly wearie of it. Nowe againe God commaundeth them to passe on their way, paying for their meate and drinke, and not to take any bootie nor to seeke any profite or aduantage, but to goe by intreatance notwithstanding that they could haue vsed force. This might haue bred a newe harburning among them. Howbeit forasmuch as they had bene wiled with afflictions: they yeldd themselves the more playable as was declared yesterday. And therein wee see what the fruite of chastisement is. When God hath once pulled downe our pride, and taught vs to beare his yoke: wee can stoope to obey him, and wee will make no greata doe of it. But vntill that time, our necke is so stiff as wee can no skill to yelde to any right or reason. Ye see then that one point which wee haue to marke, is that God tried here the obedience of his people, by forbidding them to make warre vpon the Ammonites or Moabites. And here Moses alledgeth the selfe same reaso again, which I expounded yesterday intreating of Mount Scir and of the Countrey of Edom. You shall not prouoke the Moabites, saith he. And why? For God will not giue you their land to possesse. As if he should say, it is not lawfull for you to attempt any thing, which God doeth not a-uow, and giue you leaue to doe. Nowe it is certaine that he will not suffer you to prosper, if you assaile the Moabites, and therefore forbear them.

And so let vs marke well, that such as make warres wrongfully and frowardly, consider not that their ambition and couetousnesse shall be cursed of God in the ende, and that all their preparation must come to ruine & confusion. True it is that such as take warres in hand vpon a brauerie, shall diuers times haue great victories and winne many Countreies: howbeit that is not because God beareth them any fauour, but because he me: neth to punish men, sometime the one and sometime the other, so as euery one of them shall haue his turne. And in good sooth wee see that the warres which are made now adayes, are like the game of the Barriers, wherein he that winneth to day looserth to morrow. And this is not done by haphazard, but our Lord giueth Satan the bridle, who prouoketh and inforceeth the wicked to kill one another, and to knocke one another vpon the heades. For God vseth them as Smithes, as he saith by his Prophet Zacharie. But yet herein wee haue a good lesson, which is, that when a Prince moueth warre, he must consider wel against whom he doeth it, and whether God do giue him entrance or no, or else the end of it must needs be cursed of God.

And herunto Moses addeh the cause why the people of Israel might not take any thing of the Moabites. For it is the Lords (saith he) that hath giuen them the land to possesse. Yesterday it was declared, that God did cast out his Iynes ouer all the world, and that the partitions were made by him: in somuch that Princialities, Kingdomes, & Common weales haue not any thing of them selues, but for that he will haue the world to be gouerned. Therefore when any man goes about to change the borders that God hath set: he doeth as much as he can to violate the order of nature, and the end thereof must needs be cursed. Were this marked thoroughly, wee should not see so many garboyles as are in the worlde. For men thinke not that they ought to yelde any account vnto God. And in very deede they thinke not that God medlerh with the gouerning of men. When they haue gotten any victorie, they make bonfires for ioy, & they thanke God with solemne procession: but it is not for that they thinke so, or for that they be fully perswaded of it: it is but for vaine glorie that they do it. For if they meant to shewe that God was on their side: they should lay downe their pride in fathering all things vpon their owne power, or vpon their good fortune. Yet notwithstanding it would bee thought a very strange thing nowe adayes, if a man should say to them that take warres in hand, Be well aduiled: for if your cause be not iust, lawfull, and allowed of God, so as you haue sure and infallible witness that you are enforced to make warre, and that God hath reached out his hand vnto you and shewed you the way: all your furniture must needs turne to your owne ouerthrowing. If a man should say so to them, they would thinke he did them great wrong: but yet were it for their behoofe to mark that lesson well.

Further let vs marke, that this must serue vs for a comfort. For if wee be sure that God hath called vs into the place where wee be, and that wee lute there in his seruice: we haue here a promise, that if any man come to assaile vs, howe great force so euer our enemies be of, although they come as a tempest that were like to destroy and marre all: yet notwithstanding wee shall be maintained by the hand of God. Nowe then if our Lord rake vs to into his protection, and letteth vs that wee dwell in any countrey at his appointment: ye see we may well assure our selues, and desie all our enemies. Contrariwise, if God list to forsake vs: wee bee vndone, there shall neede no great force to ouerthrowe vs. Therefore let vs learne to submit our selues continually to the tuition of our God; and to pray him to be our defence. And when we see great forces prepared against vs, let vs flee to his promise, and waite to see succoured of him at our neede. Thus ye see that the applying of this doctrine to our vse, consisteth not in thinking that only princes are taught thereby what they should doe: for the meane people also are to be comforted thereby, forasmuch as they may see thereby that God defendeth them as his flocke.

Allo let vs call to minde what was rehearsed here, concerning kinred. In deede it was treated of at length yesterday: howbeit forasmuch as Moses speaker of it againe, in making mention of the children of Moab and of their brethren the Ammonites: and seeing that God setteth before his peoples eyes the kinred which they had with these nations: Let vs marke y<sup>e</sup> wee must liue peaceably and brotherly one with another, because God hath knit vs together. In deede we shall not all be kinfolke in respect of the flesh: but yet is there such a [general] vnion among mankinde, as we ought not at any time to be such strangers one to another, y<sup>e</sup> there should not be some communicating together: & specially forasmuch as we be all created after one likeness, & we see as it were our own flesh & bones in other folkes persons, in respect whereof it becometh vs to practise this saying of the Prophet Esay, that we must not hate our own flesh. But besides this, there is an image of God which shineth in all men: and is it not reason that we should doo it so much honour, as to reuerence it wherefoeuer it sheweth it selfe? Againe seeing God hath called vs to the knowing of him, and will haue vs to call vpon him as our father, and hath vouchsafed that we should be marked with Baptisme, and be graffed into the bodie of our Lord Iesus Christ, and that he openeth vs his kingdom, to take vs in thither as into our common inheritance: must it not needes be that we be worse than beastes, if yet for all this, we will not be kinde hearted one to another, to be as brethren, and to abstaine from all annoyance and extortion? And herewithall let vs marke also, that the neerer God bringeth men together, and maketh any neighbourhood between them: the more readie ought they to be to doe seruice one to another: and that if they doe it not, it is as a defying of God and nature.

But now let vs see what kinred there was betwene the children of Israel, and the Moabites and Ammonites. Truly the original of these two peoples was of incest, so as they could not boast of their Pedegree. And in deede the very names of them were euertlasting marks of their shame. For what is Moab to say? Of my father. What? that the daughter had conceived childe by her owne father? Yea: and that (ye see) was a beaulty and cursed deede. And againe, what is meant by Ammon? [It is as much to say] as Of myne owne people, that is to saye, of mine owne blood: for he also was borne of the other daughter, who had made her father drunken as her sister had done, and so conceived by him likewise: and all thus was against nature. Ye see then that these nations are no better worthie than to be counted Harlots birds borne in a brothelhouse: but that they were yet in more horrible plight, because their begetting was against all order and humane honestie. And yet notwithstanding, God will haue the children of Israel to acknowledge their kinred with them, not for any honor or worthinesse sake, but onely because of Lot. For although he were so beastly drunken, as to be bereft of discretio: yet did God continue his goodnes towards him, and therefore vouchsafed he to fauour his linage & the childe that came of his race. And therein we see y<sup>e</sup> God had not an eye to the excellencie of those nations to whom he shewed himselfe so beneficiall, but y<sup>e</sup> he did all of his owne free mercie. Likewise also as touching the children of Israel, if God had looked for noblenesse to moue him to shew himselfe so gracious towards them, and to deale so friendly with them: what would haue come of it? For y<sup>e</sup> chiefe stocke among them was y<sup>e</sup> tribe of Iuda. And whence came Phares and his brother Zare? Euen of incest too. For Iuda thinking to haue meddled with a harlot as common as a Colmanhedge, had to do with his owne daughter in law, & played the beast as dogs and buls doe. Ye see then it was so great a villanie, y<sup>e</sup> euen the Heathen men would haue bene ashamed of it. They that neuer knewe of God nor of Religion, could not haue done worse. To be short, it was ynough to haue made all his offspring to haue bin quite roored out. And yet notwithstanding we see that Dauid came of the same race, and that it was Gods will to stablish the seate of a kingdom in his tribe: yea & that not of an earthly & transitorie kingdom onely, but of such a one as should be a figure of the euertlasting kingdom that bringeth vs to heauen, inasmuch that euen our Lord Iesus Christ came of the same stocke. And so wee see (as I said afore) that God sought not any worthines in this behalte, as who should say that this people was of more dignitie and noblenesse than all the rest of the worlde, and therefore he would make much of them. No: but he powred out the infinite treasures of his goodnesse vpon them. Yea and the baseness of the children of Israel, caused Gods inestimable goodnesse to be perceived the better, and gaue the greater glosse vnto it. Then let vs consider, that whereas here is mention made of the Moabites and Ammonites: G O D alledgeth them not as in waye of exalting the thing that is in man, or to put in ballaunce, their deserts, their qualities, or any renewe of theirs which they haue gotten by their owne trauell. He meaneth no such thing. But forasmuch as it pleased him to loue Lot, and to continue his mercie towards him & his linage, notwithstanding the foule and outrageous fault that he had committed: Therefore is it his wil that y<sup>e</sup> Moabites and Ammonites shall still enjoy the landes that he had giuen them.

And let vs note further, that although God bestowed his blessings so largely vpon those two Nations: yet they were neuer the better for it, but became so much y<sup>e</sup> more vncircum-

in the ende. For surely their vnthankfulnesse shewed it selfe in that they knewe not that God spared them. Let vs marke well then, that Gods preferring of vs in this worlde, and his defending of vs with his hande, and his making of vs to scape our enemies handes, and his sustenting of vs through his fauour, is not all [that wee ought to desire]. For the hauing of all this will boote vs nothing at all, if we want the principall: which is, that God be mercifull to vs, that wee call vpon him, that wee referre our selues wholly vnto him, and that we knowe him to be our father, not to maintaine vs heere for a two or three dayes onely: (for this lite is but a litle: shadowe that ghedeth away out of hand): but to be our euerlasting Sauour, and that we walke in such wise vnder his awe, as we not only look to be guided by him for a litle while: but also that hee should gather vs to him in the ende, so as when hee hath made vs to passe through this worlde, at the last wee shall haue a much better inheritance which is prepared for vs in heauen. When wee once knowe this, wee haue all. And that will make vs to inioy these earthly blessings to our welfare. Otherwise they shall bee turned into a curse: Insumch that they to whome GOD hath done noist good, shalbe founde most blameworthy before him. And why? Because they haue abused them. For wee doe wickedly corrupt all Gods benefites, when wee bee not ledde and prouoked by them to honour him for them, and to put our selues wholly into his handes, to flee to him for refuge. Let vs then put this doctrine in vre: and while wee passe through this worlde, let vs not deuour the benefites that God fendeth vs, to become brute bestes here, pooring with our muzzels vpon the grounde: but rather let vs lift vp our heades to heauenwarde, and consider that God calleth vs to him, and that it is to no purpose to haue had some earthly prosperitie, except wee goe further, that is to witte vnto our GOD, to bee knitte vnto him for cuer. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in minde.

Yea and let vs marke also that the two nations which are spoken of heere, shewed themselves too too vnkinde, in yielding sarte other rewarde to the children of Israel than was to be looked for. Wee see that the children of Israel passed by them [quietly,] paying readie monie for all things, yea euen for the water that they dranke. The Moabites therefore and the Ammonytes not onely had no cause to complain, seeing they were not greeued nor troubled by the children of Israel, nor receiued any harme or losse by them: but also ought to haue considered thus, Beholde, Gods will is to stablish the brotherhood that is betwixt them and vs, and that ought wee to print well in our mindes. In so much that although they had had neither stories nor Chronicles: yet ought that to haue bene a thing of renoune among them, and the report of it ought to haue bene common from father to sonne, to the ende they might haue applied and indeoured themselves to maintaine one another. Though there had bee none other alyance nor promise: yet ought that to haue sufficed to maintaine peace and agreement betwixt them. But contrariwise they became Scorpions to sting the children of Israel: and when they could not make worre against them themselves, they linked in with their enemies, and procured them manie quarrels. And whensoever any aduersitie befell them, they playde the barking curres and made hew and Erie after them, as wee see is spoken of them by the Prophetes and the Psalmes: For it is saide, Lorde remember the children of Edom, which were the nextest of kinne vnto them: for they came of Esau and were circumcised as well as the children of Israel, they bore the badge of Gods couenaunt, as householde folkes of his Church: and yet for all that, in the day of Ierusalem they cryed out, vpon them vpon them, roote them out so as one stone may not abide vpon another. Thus see yee so greate a crueltie, that euen the enemies woulde haue bene more courteous, than these which had cause to haue bene so, and ought to haue bene as brothers. As much is to see saide of Moab. For when the poore Iewes were put to any afterdeele and fledde vnto Moab, in hope to haue some refuge there: they were betrayed by these to whome they had contended themselves. And therefore doth God complaine of such crueltie saying: Moab, thou wart the couert of my people, but when they came to thee, thou drauest them away, yea and didst more cruelly with them than their enemies. That was the recompence which those nations yielded whom God had so greatly borne withall, and to whom hee had shewed so great kinnesse: but yet ought not that vnkindnesse of theirs, to make the children of Israel to shewe themselves vn courteous towards them. For their sparing of them after that sort, increased their condemnation the more, I meane them that had so ill acknowledged the benefite. And therefore GOD failed not to punish such trecherie.

Nowe then wee bee taught, first not to passe whether men acknowledge good that we haue done them or no. For albeit that wee may seeme to lose the thing that we shall haue done: yet let it suffice vs that GOD alloweth our obedience, in that hee saith, hee kindeharted towards all men. And when we shall haue indeoured to doe good to all men, without hurting of any man: if men acknowledge it not, but doe the contrarie vnto vs: verie well, let vs not passe for it, but let vs beare their vnthankfulnesse patiently. For why? Wee haue serued GOD, who will not forget what we haue done. Therefore if the worlde bee set vpon such frowardnesse, as wee may be occasioned to feele some grieue and impatientie: yet must wee still keepe on our course, which God hath commaunded vs. Marke that for one point.

And it is a verie needful lesson in these dayes. For if we should fal to reckning of our cards, before we would shew any kindnes one to another; what what a thing were that? When should a man begin to doe good? [never:] for we see how all the world is so corrupted, as is pitifull to thinke. It seemeth that wee cast our good turnes into the chrotes of woolues or made dogges, and that it is nothing else but a prouoking of their malice more and more, which seeke to abuse our simplicitie. But yet for all that, it behoueth vs to haue an eye to that which God commandeth.

Nowe whereas men on their side are fo malicious and froward: let vs marke, that as God took vengeance of the Moabites, Edomites and Ammonites, for mistusing the children of Israel after that sort: so will he doe the like nowadayes. I tolde you euen now that the Prophets doe oftentimes make mention of the slender recompence, that these nations yeelded to the children of Israel: but did God let them alone from heauen? No. For although the children of Israel complained nor: yet did God take their case in hand, and set himselfe as counterpartie against those nations. He taried not till the crie of the afflicted did come vp vnto him, and vanish away in the aire: but he fendeth them his Prophets, and telleth them that forasmuch as he had taken the people of Israel into his protection, he wilbe reuenged of the outrage that is done vnto them. For although that they on their side did suffer it iustly, for sinking from their subiection to God: yet notwithstanding, the Edomites, Moabites & Ammonites ought to haue pitied their brethre. And therefore did God set himselfe against them and saide, You also must flee when your turne comes about, and no man shall receiue you: yee shalbe scattered throughout the worlde, and not finde any place to rest in. Againe, when hee speaketh of the Edomites: wee see hee curseth them, and in the meane season comforteth his owne people. There shalbe a horrible spoile (saith he) through the whole countrie of Iewrie: but yet will I bring home my people againe in time. But as for Edom, cursed shall hee be that buildeth it againe, or that goeth about to builde it and set it vp againe. Hee shall lay the foundation of it in his first borne, that is to say, all the preparation that shall be made to set vp this people againe, shall fall downe in the ende, and they that helpe him shall perish: for there shalbe no helpe, but it shall fall out against him. Nowe then, sith wee see this, let it suffice vs that we haue induoured to doe our duetie. For our God will take the case in hande for vs, and bee on our side. If men bee malicious towards vs, and render cull for good: GOD will make himselfe the counterpartie against them, and although wee sit still and make no countenance to reuenge our selues: yet will GOD put to his hande. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in remembrance concerning these nations.

But there is yet this point to bee noted where it is saide, That there had bene Gvants in all the Countries of the nations afore mentioned, and that God had drinen them out. For Moses intended to doe vs to wit, that the successours of Ammon, Moab, and Esau, had bene brought into those countries by the hande of God. As if he should say, there was no force in themselves to conquer the countries that they possessed: for they were too farre ouer matched. And therefore as touching their bringing of their matters to passe: it must be concluded that it was god which wrought that change. Mark that for one point.

And hee addeth, that it was to be considered that the children of Israel had gotten the possession of their land after the like maner. He speaketh here as of a matter already come to passe. As if hee should say, Goe to, looke about yee my friends; see how God bringeth you into the lande that he promised to your fathers for an inheritance. When yee be come thither, and that hee hath selded you there: thinke yee that hee woulde maintaine you there, if he had not compassion vpon you, according as you shall haue good neede thereof? For yee shalbe hated of all the worlde: and therefore your God must bee faine to maintaine you. Nowe if you be desirous to bee preferred by him, attempt not any thing against his hande, and you shall perceiue that hee will set himselfe against all such as shall goe about to hurt you. Therefore must you bee gentle towards them that are in the same case that you are. Nowe wee see what Moses meanings. Wherefore let vs learn to come home to our selues when wee consider not Gods benefites towards other men, as in deede oftentimes wee haue our eyes blindfolded. If a man tell vs that wee ought to consider the good that God hath done to our neighbour: wee passe not for it. But when wee enter into our selues, then are wee conuited, and wee learne what it is to forsake others. That is the common lesson which is giuen vs heere. As howe? for it would be darke still, if it were not set out plainly by example. If it bee saide vnto vs generally, God hath giuen euerie man that which his pleasure is that hee shall haue and possesse: thercupon such as pille and polle their neighbours, & vse violence and extortion, notwithstanding that they make their quarel against creatures, do in deed match themselves against God, who wil haue order kept in the world. Whe any man tels vs heereof, wee are not persuaded of it that it shoulde bee so. For wee haue euer some sonde toy or other to beare our owne eyes with all. What, say wee? Is such a man rich by the will of God? And howe knowe wee that? Nay rather, I see hee is enriched by euill meanes. We make no bones in construing the thing the cleane contrarie way. And why? Because wee consider not Gods grace in our neighbours. But if a man say vnto vs: See what God hath done for thee: thou must doe him homage for it: if thou acknowledge it hee will make thee to inioy it, yea and thy inioying of it shall bee for euer.

Againe, looke that thou succour thy neighbours according to the abilitie that hee hath giuen thee: and if thou goe that way to worke, all shall turne to thy benefite. Now then wee see to what purpose Moses hath allegeded this admonition: and after what manner wee ought to practise practise it.

And besides this, let vs marke in general, that the changes which happen, come not but by Gods hand and providence. When wee see a mightie people, when wee see strong and well manned Cities, when wee see all other meanes that may serue to the maintenance of a Countre, and yet the same is conquered by enemies: it must needs bee thought that God wrought therein. And therefore let vs learne to behold Gods iudgements in al the alterations, that are seene in the worlde. And although all things bee on a broyle: yet let vs vnderstande that God holdeth the sterne aboue. True it is that men will make vprores, and runne into disorder, and when they keepe a greate stirre, to their seeming God is shut out of doores. But when they haue practised what they can, yet shall it not stoppe God from turning all things to such ende as hee hath purposed in his minde. And therefore as Isaie afore, let vs not imagine that fortune beareth any sway in the worlde: but let vs assure our selues that God hath referred the fourcintie to himselfe, to bring euen all the tymoules that men rayse vp, to such ende as hee hath ordeined, of purpose to punish the sinnes of such as offende him, to pull downe the pride of such as are too lootic, and to cut off his blessings when he seeth them misused. That is the thing which we haue to note.

And euen these manner of speeches, That God drave out the Gyantes before the face of the Edomites and before the face of the Moabites, doe yet better confirme the things that are saide already, according as wee haue seene heeretofore, that it is hee which putteth men in feare. For if it please him, although men haue no courage at all, but bee fearfull and enharted: yet will hee make them strong and stout, so as they shall bee as vnmoveable as rockes when other come to encounter against them. And on the other side although they bee Gyantes and carie the countenaunces of Lyons: yet can God weaken them in one moment, so as they shall runne away from their owne shadowes, though no bodie else pursue them. Forasmuch then as Moses vseth such manner of speeches: let vs assure our selues that men haue not their heartes in their owne handes, to strengthen them at their neede. And therefore let vs take warning thereby, to trust that GOD will discomfit our enemies without the power of man: and that if they rise vp against vs with neuer so violent rage: yet shall they bee beaten downe, and not bee able to doe any thing against vs. And why? For GOD which when hee listeth doeth put to flight not only men of small courage, but also euen Gyants which are so howge that they astonish men euen with their looke: can well ynough skil how to put them backe with al their boldnesse.

And therefore let vs learne to call vpon GOD, that hee may vouchsafe to giue vs courage at neede, and that wee may bee strengthened by him: for else what will becomee of vs? Wee shall bee as weake as water, though no man preace much vpon vs. And this must teach vs to walke the more warly, considering the weakenesse or rather brittlenesse that is in vs: to the intent wee bee not so foolish, as to ground our selues vpon our owne strength and courage, but pray vnto GOD to holde vs with his mightie hande, and to giue vs vnconquerable constancie. Nowe if wee bee so vnable to encounter with mortall men: howe much more vnable are wee to encounter our ghostly enemies? Are wee able to withstand Satan and all his assaults? Alas, wee come farre short. And therefore let vs followe the counsell that is giuen vs heere: let vs pray GOD to driue away Satan, and to cut a sunder all the cordes which holde vs heere fast tyed, and therewithall to giue vs such power to resist him, as wee may haue victorie euen vnto the ende. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this text of Moses.

Furthermore where as hee saith, that God led his people about by the space of eight and thirtie yeeres, vntill such time as all those that were able to beare armour at the time that the people murmured, were consumed: it serueth still to bring to remembrance the thing that hath bene spoken: namely that God executed the vengeance which he had threatened to his people. And (as wee see) it is a very profitable lesion, to teach vs to tremble at Gods threatenings, as well as to bee moued at his promises. Such is our nature, that when GOD promiseth vs any thing, wee fall to canning and disputing of it, so as wee cannot rest vpon it, to say it shall bee so: wee cannot conclude that it is Gods will. True it is that wee will confesse it with our mouth: but as for to bee fully resolued of it, wee will none of that, vnlesse his truth bee well sealed and warranted in our heartes by his holie spirite. And yet euen then too, we be so inclined to distrust, that we draw still backe from the thing that God promiseth vs: so brutish and dulheaded are wee.

And this appeareth yet more when he threateneth vs, So much the more then ought wee to thinke vpon his iudgements, and to consider that if hee bee prouoked, the threatenings that hee hath vttered with his mouth shall not fall to the grounde, but haue their effect and performance.

Thus yee see to what purpose Moses reheareth again, that all they which were aboute twentie yeere olde at the time that the people murmured, were consumed, and that not by casualtie, but according to the Lordes owne saying. And this was to assure the people yet more, to the ende they might perceiue that Gods threatening of them was in good earnest.

And herewithall let vs also call to remembrance, that God cannot abide that men shoulde despise and refuse the benefite that hee offereth, and let occasion slippe: for if hee open the gate, and men will not enter, hee cannot beare with that negligence of theirs matched with disobedience. For what was the cause that God was so prouoked to anger, that hee sware that all the carkeifes of the people shoulde rotte in the wildernesse, and that hee vsed so sharpe wordes vnto them? It was for that they had refused to enter into the lande that hee had promised them. Wee see then, that vnthankfulness prouoketh Gods vengeance against vs to the vttermost, specially when wee refuse the benefite that hee offereth vs, and that such refusal proceedeth of wilfulness and malice, which happeneth in manner continually. For what maketh vs so loath to receiue the good turnes that GOD would doe vs; but our owne vnbeleefe, forasmuch as wee thinke not that he will keepe touch with vs, but rather fall to reasoning what will become of it? And therefore let vs marke well that men shall neuer bereaue themselues of Gods benefites, but through their owne distrust. Wherefore it standeth vs so much the more on hande to indeuour to beleeue al the promises of our God, and to receiue his sayings purely and simply, and to yeeld vnto them without any gaine saying. Lo wherupon it behoueth vs to rest.

Nowe as concerning the time, true it is that God coulde haue destroyed them all at the first day which prouoked him so to anger; he coulde haue sent an Angell to haue made cleane riddance of them, and yet haue preferred the young folke by myracle, so as they shoulde haue come into the lande the first day: but hee ledde them vp and downe by the space of fortie years. And why did hee so? To the ende that others shoulde take example by them. For God seeth, that wee profite better by his corrections and iudgements in proesse of time, than if hee shoulde punish vs out of hande and away. Indeede, in our owne imagination wee had leuer that God shoulde thunder downe at the first dash, and wee thinke wee shoulde perceiue his power much better, if hee wiped them quite out of the world which haue offended him, and that wee might see the wicked consumed at once. And what would become of it, if hee shoulde out of hande destroy and take away all those out of the worlde, which are not worthe to liue in it? If it were so, wee woulde within a day or twaine forget the things that he had shewed vs before our eyes. Wee may well weene the contrarie, but God knoweth that it is so. For hee leaueth the wicked heere in this worlde, where they haue their delights, sports, and triumphes at their pleasure: and that is to trie our patience. Neuertheless sometimes God setteth them languish as well as other folkes, so as a man may see them dragge their legges after them, and they bee as it were vpon the racke, and God setteth them before vs as looking glasses, so as we may well perceiue, that it is more for our profite to see his iustice so prolonged, by making the wicked to languish after that manner: than if hee shoulde sende them their punishments out of hande. This (saye I) stickes faster in our remembrance. Yee see then howe wee be better taught by the delay of Gods iustice, than if it were executed at once and out of hande. And that was the cause why it behoued God to bee fortie yeeres space in consuming the people, to shewe them that they were not worthe to enter into the promised lande. For thereby the younger sort were occasioned to thinke, why did not God giue vs the fruition of the lande at the first day? It is becau'e our fathers murmured against him. And so are we deprived of the inheriting thereof from our childhoode, and that not for a day or two, but it was Gods will that we shoulde wander in this wildernesse a long time, to the end that the sinne of our fathers might be the better printed in our minds, to beware that wee followed them not in that behalfe. Yee see then that by this meanes the yonger folke were taught to liue in the feare of God, and to be better aduised than their fathers were. And therefore whensoever God executeth not his iustice vpon the wicked, to make cleane riddance out of hande, but consumeth them by litle and litle: let vs learne to hold our wittes alwayes tied vp and as it were in suspence. And in the meane time let vs take the instruction that God giueth vs thereby, & learne to beare them wel in mind, and neuer to forget them: for his intents is to put vs in minde of them vntill we haue thoroughly digested them. After this manner must wee practise this doctrine, concerning the time that is set downe heere by Moses, wherein God led his people vp and downe by the space of eight and thirtie years, wherunto two yeeres more were added afterwarde, to make vp the full number of fortie.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to vouchsafe to bring vs more and more to such repentance, that wee mourning for them before him, may acknowledge that there is nothing but cursednesse and destruction in vs, wherein wee should dwell still, if hee pitied vs not, and that in the meane while we may not be so frowarde and malicious, as to turne heade against him, though hee handle vs rougher than we would bee, but that acknowledging it to be rightfull that hee should touch vs with his hande, wee may bee so reformed, as our whole seeking may bee to mortifie all our affections and lustes, and to please him and to obey his righteousnesse: and that therewithall he strengthen vs in such wise, as wee may fight stoutly vnder his antigne, & by that meanes be maintained vnder his protection, vntill we haue finished our race in this worlde, and bee taken vp into his euerlasting rest, after wee haue outstoode the battelles that wee haue to indure here. That it may please him to grant this grace not onely &c.

On Wednesday the j. of May. 1555.

The xiiij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the second Chapter.

24 Afterward the Lorde said, Vp, get ye hence, and go ouer the riuer of Arnon. Behold, I haue deliuered Sehon King of Hesebon the Amorrhite and his land into thy hand. Begin to take possession, and prouoke him to battell.

25 This day will I begin to fend the feare and dreade of thee vpon all people that are vnder the whole heauen: so that when they heare the fame of thee, they shall tremble and bee in anguish for thy presence.

26 Then sent I messengers from the wildernesse of the east, to Sehon King of Hesebon, with wordes of peace, saying:

27 Let mee passe through thy land, keeping on the high way, without turning to the right hand or to the left.

28 Thou shalt sell me meate for monie, to eate, and thou shalt also giue mee water for monie, to drinke: let me but onely passe through on foote, 29 (As the children of Esau haue done which dwel in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar) vntill I be come ouer Iordan, and bee entered into the lande which the Lord our God giueth vs.

Ere Moses confirmeth yet better the thing that I treated of before: that is to wit, that men must not giue themselves to foolish enterprises, as euerie mans fancie leads him: but wee must haue an eye what is lawfull. And thereof there is none other trial, than to hearken what God commaundeth and promiseth vs. For his will must be our sure rule. Whosoever thrusteth himselfe forth to doe what he liketh best, although he be able to iustifie his doings before men, and can set neuer so many faire colours vpon them: yet shall he alwayes be condemned before God. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that to liue as it becommeth vs, we must haue this sobernesse and modesty with vs, that we aduenture not any further than his worde will beare vs out. True it is that the talke heere is onely of warres: but we must apply the doctrine thereof to our generall vse. For like as God chose his people of Israell to make them as a looking glasse for his Church: so must wee apply all the thinges to our selues which are written of them. For the perfection of the thinges that are containted here, belongeth to vs as sheweth saint Paul. Nowe were this well obserued wee should not haue such disorder in our life, as wee see. For euerie man hath his liking by himselfe, and according to his liking, so flingeth he forth to attempt thinges, and we neuer stande to inquire what God commaundeth, but our owne affections carrie vs away, and inflame vs in such wise, that euerie one runnes after the thing that he lighteth vpon: and so wee doe but gadde vp and downe all our life long. But heere it is tolde vs, that men must not reach out their handes to aduenture vpon any thing at all, further forth than GOD hath giuen them leaue. When hee saith, goe: our going is not at all aduenture, but it is matched with a promise, Behelde (with hee) the Lord hath deliuered Sehon king of Hesebon into thy handes. As if hee should say, men must not haue an eye to any thing that may drawe their desire to it afore hande, as wee see that our nature doeth driue vs thereunto: for scarcely can wee tell howe to open our eyes, but some lewde liking will tickle vs. And what is the cause thereof? It is for that wee be not fully perswaded of this principle, that wee must let all thinges alone which are not graunted vs of God. If wee followed this doctrine, such as are poore would be contented with their slendernesse, and craue no more of God but to be susteyned: and the rich sort would not be blinded with vnstable couetousnesse, as to increase themselves full by adding peece to peece. And therefore it standeth vs so much the more on hande to beare this doctrine in minde, for we see howe for our life is disordered, and we cannot rule our lustes according to Gods will, which onely can and ought to master them.

Againe on the other side, wee see howe wee picke our enemies: whereas it belongeth to GOD to appoint vs them. In good faith what is the cause that men heaue one at another, that they seeke to eate vp one another, and that there is so much strife, trouble, and quarrelling? It is for that as soone as any man is grieved, by and by hee will needes be reuenged: and we cannot abide that any man should touch vs in our goods or our persons, but incontinently wee will be at open warre with him. As for patience, there is none at all in vs. But our Lorde will haue vs to ouercome euill with good, that in so doing wee may be as his sheepe. But no man will be brought to so much reason. Men then arme themselves where God commaundeth them to be quiet and peaceable: and they will needes haue them enemies, whom God would haue them to labour to winne by loue and gentlesse.

Contrariwise, if there bee a iust quarell that ought to bee mainteyned, euery man shrinkes away. The name of God is blasphemed, and wicked deedes are committed: there ought such as haue courage and manhood, to shewe that they feare not the hatred or anger of men. For GOD will haue vs to vnder take warre in his name: and euery man doeth thunne it. And therein wee see howe frowarde and vntowarde wee bee. Again, it is saide that our warring must bee, not against mortall men, but rather against Sathan and all his wyles. Loe howe GOD foundeth the trumpet and striketh vp the drumme, and telleth vs that wee must enter into battell against our ghostly enemies. But that will not sinke in our stomackes: wee be wedded to our owne lustes: if any man anger vs, if any man doe vs wrong, wee must bee reuenged: and wee consider not that in so doing Satan winneth greatly at our handes.

Eph. 6.12.

Nowe then (as I haide afore) wee see that this doctrine was written for our vse and instruction, so as wee must alwayes beare in minde the libenesse that is betweene vs and the people of olde time.

Wherefore, first of all let no man couet to possesse any thing which hee hath not receiued at Gods hande, according to our dayly asking of him our ordinarie breade. Then let vs not goe about to enrich our selues by vnlawfull meanes, craft, and violence, neither let vs practise one thing or other by fittletie: but let euerie man followe his trade simple, and meddle with nothing but that which GOD giueth vs leaue to doe, and let vs learne to rule our liues according to his worde, waiting for such blessing as it shall please him to giue vs. And let such as haue goods, be alwayes readie to forgoe them, whensoever it shall please him: and let such as haue not the worlde at will, beare their pouertie patiently. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in the first place.

Secondly, when the case standeth vpon aduenturing, let our hardinesse bee, that wee dare bee bolde to doe whatsoever GOD commaundeth vs, specially when wee haue his promise, as is saide afore. That is the thing (as I haue declared already heretofore) which putteth difference betweene the true wisdom of the faithfull, and the rashnesse of such as playe the loose coltes and runne galloping astray. For the faithfull doe waite for warrant from GOD, and that the ende of the thing which they take in hande shall bee good: and when they once haue his promise, then goe they forward without attempting any thing to the contrarie. But the vnfaithfull take a toy in their heade, and when they haue laide their platte, they conclude to doe whatsoever seemes best to themselves, without inquiring of Gods will, and thereupon they sicke at nothing. In so doing there is nothing but presumptuousnesse to ouerthrowe themselves. But the true foundation is to haue God promise, and to rest vpon the same, doing the things that hee commaundeth vs. And if wee haue that regarde with vs: then shall wee take the contrarie way to that which I haue spoken of. For where as now wee be fearefull in the good quarells that God alloweth, and wherein wee ought to hazarde our selues: wee shall haue an inuincible constancie, and euerie of vs shall haue an eye to his duetie, to say, beholde, my God commaundeth mee to doe it: in deede I shall haue many assaults and manie incomberances, and I may perchance bee greatly hindered by men: but it is ynough to mee that God is my warrant: seeing he hath appointed mee to doe it, it is not for mee to sicke at it.

Besides this, wee haue also a promise: God neuer faith to vs, Doethis, but he telleth vs also that hee will be with vs. Nowe then seeing we know that hee is able to mainteine vs euen in spite of all the wicked and of all them that are in a chafe against vs: what neede wee be afraide to do well? And if wee bee afraide, doe wee not wrong vnto God as though hee were not of power to defende vs? So then wee see nowe howe bolde and hardie wee ought to bee in mainteining of good quarells, forasmuch as wee bee sure that GOD will not faile vs, specially when wee be to incounter against Satan, and against all the things that hee practiseth, as well against our selues, as against the whole Church. Therefore if wee play the dastardes and shrinke away when wee shoulde enter into such incounters, as wee see most men doe, who seeke startingholes, and cannot finde in their heartes to beare any burthen for the honour of God: is it not too shamefull trocherie? yes: for wee cannot ree out of the way, but our vnbeleefe bewrayes it selfe. What causeth vs to bee so colde in performing our duties? It is for that wee beleue not God. For were wee thoroughly perswaded that hee will keepe touch with vs, and that wee shall not be disappointed in waiting for the thing that hee hath promised: it woulde make vs to forget all feare, and all the goodlie flutes that wee deuse to turne the catte in the panne. And therefore let vs learne to glorie our GOD in yielding to him the title of goodfastnesse: and then shall wee be hardie ynough, not to followe our owne fancies, but to obey his commaundementes. Wee shall haue a holy presumptuousnesse, if wee holde vs to this line and rule of trusting in God, and of hoping that hee will performe whatsoever he hath saide or vttered with his mouth. Thus yee see howe this lesion is to be put in practise.

Furthermore let vs marke herewithall, how God addeth heere, that hee will strike such a feare and terrour into these peoples hearts, as they shall be dismayed when they doe but heare of the name of the Jewes. Heere wee see that God holdeth mens heartes in his hande, to weaken them or strengthen them at his pleasure.

True it is that men imagine themselves to haue this vertue of manlinesse in themselves. And the verie cause why they despise God, is that euerie of them makes his account to compasse his matters by his owne power. But so farre off are the common people from hauing any stoutnesse or manhood in them, without that God giue it them: that God holdeth euen the heartes of kings and princes in his hande, and although they seeme to themselves to haue much more strength and courage than others: yet doeth God make them to slip away like water, when hee thinkes good. So then let vs marke well, that it is not in any mans power to be valiant, vnlesse GOD strengthen him. And therefore wee may apply this doctrine to double vse. The one is that although a man see himselfe to be weak, he must not be out of heart for it: for there is a remedie ready for it, if we list to seeke it. I say we must gather strength of mind by seeking it in God, yea euen whensoever we be hindered to do our duetie for want of courage. As for example: God perchance calleth vs to glorifie his name, hee tholeth vs out from this worlde, accordingly as it is his will that euery man shoulde renounce himselfe, and that wee shoulde forsake our owne lustes. Nowe wee see howe possible it is to obey, yea and wee knowe howe farre all our abilitie stretcheth. Againe, we see also a great number of hazards, and the diuell will face vs with this inconuenience and that danger, where at we shalbe as good as dismayed, so as we shall not dare to sturre one finger to obey God and to execute his commaundement. And what is the reason? It is for that we be too fainthearted. Now it is not for vs to stickie still in this myre: but wee must seeke for strength where we can finde it. Let vs consider (say I) that God is able ynough to amende the faintnesse of heart that holdeth vs backe, yea & which maketh vs to shrinke back from his word, and to turne heade from it. Yee see then how wee ought to take warning to flee vnto GOD and to seeke succour there, forso much as hee hath mens heartes in his hande, and doth both fashion and bowe them as hee thinketh good. Likewise again, whē we feele a good disposition in our selues, so as wee would faine giue the onset (as they say), and wee haue no feare at all to holde vs backe: yet must wee not stande vpon that, for we heare howe saint Paul warneth vs to worke out our saluation with feare and trembling, that is to say, to slowe and drawe that way which God sheweth vs. And after what manner? Fearefully, and as it were with trembling. Why so? For it is God (saith he) which giueth vs both the will and the performance, and all through his owne freebestowed goodnesse.

Seeing it is so then, albeit that wee haue the spirite of coutage and stoutnesse: yet let vs not cease to resort vnto GOD, and to humble our selues continually, and to pray him that hee forsake vs not, but rather continue the grace that hee hath put into vs, and confirme the same vntill wee haue finished our course. And thus yee see that wee bee warned to seeke continually for newe strength, notwithstanding that we feele that our Lorde hath strengthened vs alreadye.

Nowe the seconde vse is, that when wee see our enemies fearefull and dismayed, wee must consider howe it is GOD that hath discouraged them, and not impute any whit to our owne prowesse, or to aught else that in vs: but yeelde the whole prayfe thereof to him that ought to haue it. And on the contrary parte, when wee perceiue our enemies to bee like fiendes, so as there is none other likelyhood but that wee shalbe swallowed vp: when we see a desperate boldnesse in them: so as they goe forward still whatsoeuer come of it: [finally] when wee see them, all on flaming fire after that sort: yet let vs not bee dismayed thereat. For why? God will make them to foake away like water when it commeth to the pinch.

Nowe then, as for this dauidish geerifnesse which the wicked hate to cumber Gods children withall, and to cumber and trouble them euerie where: let it not put vs out of heare, though they pursue vs neuer so deadly. For why? GOD will prouide for vs in such wise, as hee will make those astraide of our shadowes, which seeme as nowe to haue their throates open to swallow vs vp, and to bee as gulfes of hell. God will worke after such a fashion in that behalfe, as they shall not bee worthie to be compared with litle babes.

Let vs marke then, that seeing it is tolde vs that God holdeth mens hearts in his hande: we must alwayes rather looke to him, than rest vpon any thing heere belowe, whensoever wee see any stoppes that may put vs in feare. And in so doing wee shall neuer bee confounded.

Moses addeth moreouer, That hee sent to Sehon with wordes of peace, saying: Let vs passe through thy countrie, we will pay for our breade and water, we will doe thee no harme, we will passe as thy friends, as wee haue done to our brethren the Edomytes. It shoulde seeme heere at the first sight, that Moses did against that which was commaunded him. For these are two diuers things, [namely y<sup>e</sup> God saith] goe giue battell to Sehon king of the Amorrhites: and that Moses in steede of giuing him battell, and in steede of encountering him in the fielde, sendeth an Ambassade vnto him, and prayeth him to giue him leaue but onely to passe through his Countrie, promising to doe no harme, and to paye for all things that hee tooke. It might seeme then that heere is some contrarie: and if it were so, then was Moses disobedient vnto God.

Let vs marke, that where as God commaunded him to offer battell to Sehon king of the Amorrhites: his meaning was, that the warre shoulde in all respectes bee lawfull, and that Sehon shoulde well perceiue, that hee was iustly assailed by the people of Israell. This therefore is no impediment, but rather a meane whereby God ordeyned his people to haue lawfull warre with Sehon and all his subiectes. Where as God had said: I will giue you the lande in possession: it was requisite that the malice of Sehon shoulde bee discouered and beyrayed, that it might appeare to the wolde, that the people of Israel had iustly tytle to discomfite him. For where as GOD promised the lande of Chanaan to his people: this was no parte of that Countre: hee gaue them this as an income or ouerplus, and extended his liberalitie further than the promise made to Abraham did contene. And therefore Schon was not as yet declared to be an enemy to the people of Israell. And if they shoulde haue defied him as an enemy at the first dath, without giuing him knowledge of the warre: it had bene a disorderly kinde of dealing. These things then, agree verie well: that is to wit, that Schon was condemned aforehande by God: and that the children of Israel hauing chased out all the inhabitants of his countre, shoulde possesse the same themselues: and also that these things shoulde not bee done, vntill the wilful stubbornesse of Schon were disclosed that hee might dispossesse himselfe, and bee the cause of the warre, so as the fault might iustly bee imputed to himselfe. Wherefore let vs marke well, that Moses hath not swarued hertein from Gods commandement, to play the wise man after the manner of the world, which is to haue some politike deuise by themselues, so as they muste needes inuent some toy or other of their owne heade, as though they were better aduised than GOD. And surlic that is the common fashion of all. But such forecast is cursed, when we thinke to amende the things that God commaundeth vs, by our owne policies and inuentions. Moses went not that way to worke, he followed simple Gods will.

But by the way it may seeme verie strange, that GOD doeth sende a message of peace vnto Schon, and yet notwithstanding had determined aforehande that it shoulde not auayle him. In this case all worldly pride must stoope, and consider Gods manner of dealing towards vs with such humilitie, that where our wittes cannot reach vnto it, wee may honour his incomprehensible secretes. And certes it is a text worthie of remembrance when it is saide, that GOD (or Moses by Gods authoritie) sendeth vnto Schon to desire him to suffer the people to passe, gently intreating him and shewing him the thing that was for his welfare: and yet notwithstanding that GOD had fully determined aforehande, that Schon shoulde make none account of it, but that hee shoulde bee discomfited and destroyed. This may seeme strange geere to our imagination. When men will needes scanne of Gods workes and providence according to their owne reason: they shall finde things to giudge at, euerie turning of a hande. And that is the cause why venomous tongues rush out nowe adayes, and are not ashamed to blaspheme God. When there is any talke of Gods secreete ordinance, and of his disposing of things in this world, after a manner vnknownen to vs, so as we shall not comprehend it vntill wee bee ridde of this flesh of ours: they storme at it, and repyne against GOD. And why? Because the same surmounteth their capacitie. But if Gods iustice be too high for vs: ought it to bee abated therefore? If his ordinance bee about our vnderstanding: shoulde it therefore bee hidden from himselfe, and shoulde it haue no authoritie ouer vs? Yes: And this text is ynough to stoppe the mouthes of all such rascals. For one of the common obiections that such beastes doe make, is this: Howe so? If men had not free-will to take or refuse the thing that GOD sayeth to them, and that the thing it selfe were not vndetermined: it were in vaine to preach, or to make exhortations, or to profer the choyce of good and euill: for the matter were dispatched aforehande.

Thus doeth it seeme in deede to these feeble sooles, which attribute more to their owne braine, than to Gods doctrine, and which by reason of their slender exercise in the holy scripture, are the more presumptuous to iudge at all aduerture of the things that they knowe not. But let vs looke vpon that which Moses rehearseth here. The message thither sent to Schon king of the Amorhytes, came, of GOD, and must not bee taken as the message of a mortall man, as I haue declared before. But yet is Schon disposed to receiue the message? Or is there any casuall vncertaintie in this behalfe, so as a man might thinke it might as well not happen as happen? [Nay.] Moses was well assured that Schon woulde not obey it: and I enter not yet so farre as to discusse whereof that proceeded. It shall bee declared in the nexte Lecture, that God had hardened Schons hart, and that it was his will that it shoulde be so. Ly<sup>v</sup>.ewise also it is sayd in the psalme, that God turned away the hartes of such as other wise had bin the peoples friends, and that hee hardened them in such sort, as they could not abide to spare them. But I will not enter yet so farre. I treat as now but vpon this poynt, that GOD sendeth messages to men in his owne name and authoritie: which notwithstanding shall not preuaile to reclaim them. And why? Because that those to whom hee speaketh, are set vpon euill aforehande: and there is none other thing to bee looked for, but that they shall bee the more inflamed and waxe woofe, at the hearing of Gods commandement. And therefore (as I haue saide already) although it bee not seemely to our humane reason: yet must wee humble our selues and honour Gods secretes. When wee finde things contrarie to our naturall reason, is it meete that wee shoulde giue libertie to our owne witte, to say, Oho, I take it to bee otherwise, and therefore it must needes be so? Noe: Let GOD rather haue the maisterie, and let vs become sooles that wee may bee wise in him. For at that ende muste wee beginne if wee will profite well in GODS schoole.

Wee muste followe that which Saint Paul telleth vs, which is, that wee must bee sooles in our selues, that is to say, wee must not conuict the cursed wisdome where with men are puffed vp, when they thinke themselues to bee sharpe witted and wise ynough to iudge of [ diuine ] matters. Let vs beware of such i-maginations, and ridding our felues quite and cleane of all selfweening, let vs profite our felues by Gods shewing of the thinges vnto vs which he liketh, and which are good in his sight. Let vs then learne to frame our felues wholly to his good will, for if wee be counted to be fooles and witleffe before men: it shalbe but of such as iudge after their owne mortall wit.

Furthermore let vs marke, that when wee haue searched things thoroughly, wee shall finde that Gods sending of his worde dayly vnto such as receiue it not, and are alreadye condemned afore him: is not without cause. Then is it vncertaine to vs, that when Gods worde is preached, it is to the ende to blinde the reprobates and such as are vncorrigible: and yet for all that, that it is Gods will to make them vncorrigible. For commonly God serueth that knowledge to himselfe, and when wee be sent of him and doe preach in his name: wee cannot tell whether our labour shall doe good or no. Hee then which is appointed to preach Gods word, knoweth nor (when he hath done as hee was commanded) whether his preaching shall turne to the saluation or damnation of his hearers. But yet for all that let vs labour still, and pray G O D to vouchsafe to giue effect to his word, that it may so profite, as the wretched worlde may be plucked backe from the destruction whereunto it goeth. That is the marke which wee must shoote at, and the thing which wee haue to doe. Neuerthelesse somtyme G O D will shewe vs before our faces, that his worde serueth to condemne the hearers, and to beare away them of all excuse. Wee see it was once saide vnto Esay, Goe to this people. And what to doe? It was in deede to carie them the word of saluation. But yet therewithal is saide vnto him, Goe to harden this peoples heertes, goe to stoppe their eares, goe to shut their eyes, and to thicken their heates, to make them vterly past recouerie: for I will not haue them conuert. Seeing then that the Prophet is sent with such commission, as he knoweth well that those to whom he speaketh, shall but waxe the worse for it: in what case is he? But what for that? Yet must he execute his commission with all obedience. It is not for men to enter into counsell, and to take aduice in this behalfe according to their abilitie: no, but they must submit themselves to G O D as I saide afore. Looke what was saide to the Prophet, doeth shewe it selfe dayly in effect. It might put vs oftentimes out of patience, to see that the more that Gods worde is preached, the more doeth the worlde rush forth into all licentiousnesse. For they that conspire among vs against G O D and his Gospell: are in comparison farre worse than the Papistes. The Papistes haue some deuotion with them: and although they bee growen brutish, yet neuerthelesse their chiefe intent is to serue G O D. But as for the other sort, they bee starke Diuels: and although they knowe and see it sufficiently proued, that they warre against

God and not against mortall creatures: yet doeth their iurie carrie them away to proceede still. Wee see it. Wee see that whereas in the time of blindness there was some ciuill order, and men were more bridled: nowe it seemeth that all thinges are set at libertie. This were able to make Gods seruantes quite out of patience. But what for that? Wee must take courage as Saint Paule comforteth vs. Hee saith that whether Gods worde bringe lite or death to men, yet is it alwayes a good and sweete fauour before G O D. True it is that Gods worde of it selfe (as shall be declared more fully hereafter) is alwayes the fauour of life. For what is it that God smeth at, if wee consider his worde in it owne nature? The ending of men backe to the ende they might be saued. And yet for all that, wee see by experience that it is an odour and fauour of Death, in so much as the wicked are strangled and choked with it, as for one as they doe but take the sent or smell of it. They neede not to taste of it nor to eate of it: if they doe but take the sent of it a great way off, it is poison to them, so that the diuell carries them away, and they fall to fretting and chafing against G O D: and all to their owne destruction. And do wee see that Gods word turneth into occasion of death, to a great number of men? Yet must wee be of good cheere, saith S. Paul. And why? Bicause it is a good and sweete fauour vnto God, when men are made vncorrigible.

But nowe let vs come to declare how Gods worde tendeth vnto life, and howe it hath that proprietie: notwithstanding that men through their owne wickednesse, doe turne it to their deadly condemnation. This is sufficiently expressed in that it is saide, That Moses sent a message of peace to Sehon King of the Amorites. His desire then is to abstaine from all annoyance, if Sehon coulde abide it. Nowe let vs see to what ende the Gospell is preached, and after what manner. What els is contained in it, but that God intendeth to be reconciled to the world, as saith Saint Paule in the fifth of the seconde to the Corinthians? In as much then as G O D sendeth vs tidings of peace, so as his desire is to shewe himselfe a father to all such as yett lie themselves teachable vnto him, and our Lorde Iesus Christ is offered vs as the meane to bring vs againe into the loue and fauour of our God: it is surely a message of peace. And in deede the Gospell is so intruded, and nor without cause. True it is that the lawe also was a message of peace, as in respect of the promises: If wee looke vpon the lawe strictly, as Saint Paule speakes diuers times of it: it will be a very message of wrath. But if wee looke vpon the promises that were made to the fathers of olde time: [wee shall finde that] euen from the beginning of the world, Gods will was that sinners should knowe his mercie, and come vnto him. And for that cause is it saide that Iesus Christ bingeth peace, both to them that are a fatte off, and to them that are neere hande, as sayeth Saint Paule to the Ephesians: and he will haue it to be preached through the whole worlde, that Gods onely desire is to holde vs in his loue. Thus ye see howe wee may finde saluation in the Gospell. Nowe then wee see, that Gods worde considered in it selfe, is a commission of peace, furthering vs to be ioyned and made one with him, so as wee may call vpon him and rest in his goodnesse. And the meane to haue this worde to redounde to our saluation, is this, if wee can receiue it as wee ought to doe, according as Saint Paul treateth thereof in the first to the Romanes. And therefore the Ministers thereof must haue this consideration with them: Beholde, GOD fendeth inee: and what putteth he in my mouth? Peace, to offer it vnto all men, and to the ende that euen the wickedst should bee partakers of the same message and vnderstand that GOD seeketh them. But yet for all that, wee knowe that this message cannot profite all men. What must it doe then? It must make men vnexcusable. For what can bee saide to it, if God handle men out of hand as they deserue? Wee bee all damned by nature, we bring such an inheritance of cursednesse from our mothers wombe, as God might sinke vs at the first day, and wee could lay nothing at all for our selues. And forasmuch as there are a great number of people, which seeme to perishe but through simplicitie: therefore it is Gods will to conuict the whole worlde, to the end to take away all escapes. Wee see that when the Gospell is preached, those whome a man would haue thought to haue bene well disposed, doe burst forth, and their malice is discouered and laide open, which was hidden before. The worlde seeth howe fewe are willing to stoope to take the yoke vpon their neckes: Nay, which worke is, the worlde sees that they become enemies to it, so as they can not bee ouercome by any warnings: or else they become so wilde headed, as a man can not tell on which side to catch holde of them. Seeing then that when GOD hath sent men the message of peace after that sort, they on their side desire warre and seeke it, and can not finde in their heartes to yelde and submit them selues vnto God, but will needes bee enemies vnto him: wee see that the preaching of the Gospell to such as are vtterly past recourcie, is not vnavailable. And why? For else their malice had bene vnknowne, and Gods Iustice should not bee so apparant, nor haue so great brightnesse, as when the wicked abide still vnconuerted and could not bee subdued for ought that could be done.

Nowe hereupon what haue wee to doe? This doctrine belongeth not onely to such as are ministers of Gods worde, to make them to goe through with their calling, so as they may shut their eyes when God is to bee obeyed, and proceede still in preaching his worde though it be misused, and turned cleane contrarie to Gods intent: but also wee bee all warned generally, in what wise we ought to receiue the message that God fendeth vs: namely that for as much as he sheweth himselfe so gracious towardes vs, that in stead of being our enemy, as he might most rightfully and iustly bee, he is contented to bee at one with vs, and taryeth not till wee seeke peace at his hande, but seeketh atonement with vs, notwithstanding that he perceiue vs to bee mad to make warre against him: wee should not bee so wretched and inalcious as to dragge backe from him, and to forsake that passing loue and fatherly kindnesse of his. Marke that for one point.

Yet notwithstanding, when we see that God hath drawn vs to him, and that wee can finde in our heartes to let him vse his mercie and goodnesse towardes vs: then must wee knowe that the cause why his worde hath had such entrance into our hartes, and why wee haue bin subdued to his obedience: was for that he hath reformed vs by his holy spirite. Let vs knowe that. And on the contrarie parte, when wee see the rebelliousnesse of the worlde, and howe men doe rancle against the Gospell, and are puffed vp with pride to aduance themselves against God: let vs consider that they bee looking glasses which God setteth before vs for our instruction, and that we also should be in the same taking, if God had not pitied our forwardnesse to correct it. Neuerthelessse, let vs vnderstand, that God dalyeth not with vs in sending vs his worde nowe adayes. And why? For it holdeth men so much the more conuicted, inasmuch as they become worse than wilde beastes, in that they would not by any meanes bee tainted for all his calling of them to him so familiarly, by meanes whereof their shame is so much the more discouered, so as the worlde knoweth what was hidden within them, which could not haue bene perceiued otherwise. Seeing then that wee see thus: let vs learn to saye, that Gods worde is good and holy, and that it should bee the very foodde of life, if men turned it not to venim and poison through their owne naughtinesse their owne naughtinesse: by reason whereof their fault is such, as the blame thereof can in no wise be fathered vpon God.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better, yea euen so farre as to bring vs to true repentance, that being subdued by his corrections, wee may learne to be sorie for our sinnes, and for the imperfections y<sup>e</sup> are in vs, vntill he haue thoroughly clenfed vs of them, and deliuered vs quite from all the temptations of the flesh and the world. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heavenly father, &c.

On Munday the vj. of May. 1555.

The xiiij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the second Chapter.

26. 27. 28. 29. Then sent I messengers, &c.

30 But Schon King of Hefebon would not let vs passe, for the Lorde thy God had hardened his spirit, and made his heart stubborne, to the ende to deliuer him into thy hand, as it appeareth at this day.

31 And the Lorde saide vnto mee, beholde, I haue begunne to giue Schon and his land before thee; goe to, take possession, that thou mayest possesse his land.

32 And Schon came ouer against vs, he and all his people to fight in Isafa:

33 And the Lorde our God deliuered him before vs, and wee smote him, and his sonnes, and all his people,

34 And at the same time wee tooke all his Cities, and destroyed the men, women, and children in them, and we left him nothing remaining,

35 Sauing the Cattell which we tooke to our selues, and the spoyle of the Cities, which we tooke, 36 From Aroer which is vppon the banke of the Riuer Arnon, and the Citie which is vppon the Riuer, and vnto Galaad, there was not any Citie that could defende it selfe from vs. For the Lord our God had giuen them all into our hands.

37 Onely thou shalt not come neere the land of the children of Ammon, nor vnto any place of the Riuer Iabok, nor vnto the Cities on the hill, nor vnto any of all those places which the Lord our God forbad vs,

Ye haue scene heretofore howe God being determined to harden Schon, letted not for all that to cause him to be summoned, to the end he should haue let the children of Israel passe without doeing them harme, and without shewing himselfe to be their enemy. And therewithall it hath bene shewed, that GOD will sende message of peace vnto men: & yet notwithstanding knoweth that the same shall stand them in no stead, but to make them vnexcusable. After the same maner, the Gospell is preached to a great number, who notwithstanding doe but become the worke for it, and God knoweth right well that no profite shall come thereof, but that they shall bee rebellious still. Why then doeth hee call them to him? To bereaue them of all excuse, and to lay open their malice and vngodlinesse. For so long as men abide vndiscovered, GOD seemeth after a sorte to doe them wrong. But when he sendeth them his worde, then bewray they themselves what they bee, and their vnbelief is manifestly proued. And so let vs vnderstand that our Lorde knoweth well what the end of the preaching of his word shall be: y is to

1. Cor. 2. 16. wit, that it shall become the fauour of death to a great fort: but yet will he not cease to appoint his worde to bee preached still: and that doeth he for good and iust cause, namely to the ende that men should bee the more condemned. But yet for all this, it is the preachers ducie to offer peace vnto all men, according also as our Lorde Iesus Christ saith to his Disciples, wherefoour yee come, offer peace: and if they that heare you bee vnwoorthie thereof, your peace shall returne to you againe. As if he should say, There shall be no losse at al, you shall trie what is in men, and the friendlye greeting which you shall beare vnto them, shall be as a touchstone, to the ende they may not be able to say, that God hath not visited them nor had no care of them: and so shall they be proued to haue rejected his grace.

And herewithall wee bee warned, to seeke peace with all men as much as in vs lyeth, accordingly as it is saide in the Psalm that wee must euen followe after it: so as it is not ynough for vs to bee friendly, and to indoeur to liue without anying of any bodie, and without vexing or troubling any of our neighbours: but wee must labour yet further to seeke peace. If wee see there bee any vnulye folke, wee must pacifye them as much as is possible. If wee see that Satan procureth vs strife and contention, wee must labour to remedie them as much as wee can: accordingly as our Lorde Iesus Christ requireth of the faithfull, not onely that they should bee peaceable themselves, but also that they should indoeur to serue peace euerywhere. That then is one thing which wee ought to doe. And therewithall wee must berinke our selues how S. Paul saith, that wee must seeke peace, as much as in vs is. And by that saying he comforteth vs. If it so happen that wee can not make men our friendes, but y although they haue no cause to complaine of vs, nor can say that wee haue done them any harme or wrong, yet they cease not to be malicious & bitter towards vs: we haue wherewith to comfort our selues, in y we haue done the best wee can to seeke peace. And therefore although wee bee faine to liue among such as seeke all the means they can to trouble and vex vs : yet must not wee followe their malice to be like vnto them, but wee must alwayes doe our dutie to maintain peace and friendship. And if men will not bee wonne by vs : then shall our mildnesse and gentleness turne to burning coales against them, wherewith they shall bee consumed. Besides this, the Lorde will maintaine our innocencie , and when he seeth that wee haue not assailed those at whose handes we demaund not any thing, but rather haue laboured to ouercome euill with dooing good : let vs not doubt but he will assist vs with his succour.

1. Pet. 3. 11.

Rom. 12. 18.

There is this further, that Moses termeth it The word of peace, when men abstaine from all euill dooing, and offer all right and reason : which wee ought to marke well : for many will say that they desire nothing but peace : howbeit , that is but to their owne profite, and to their neighbors losse : and that is no meane [of peace in deede.] Desire wee then to bee at peace ? Desire wee to haue agreement with them that dwell with vs ? Let vs on our side deale vprightly : let vs abstaine from all wrong dooing : let vs greue no man, let vs drawe no mans goods to our selues, let vs yeeld euerie man that which is his due. Lo what peace is. And herein wee see that all the faire pretensions which they make that are giuen to rauine and extortion : are but lyes. For the holy Ghost hath tolde vs here, that there is no word of peace , but where vprightnesse and iust dealing is obserued, so as no man is vexed in any wise. And like as wee must inducours to bee reasonable towards our neighbours, to maintaine friendship with them : so if they offer vs reason, wee must looke that we refuse it not. For if wee bee vnmeasurably hard to bee contented: the thing must needs be performed in vs which is written in the Psalme: that is to wit, he refused blessingnesse, and it is farre off from him : therefore shall cursednesse couer him as a cleaue, and it shall sticke fast to his flesh and to his skinne. Would wee then that God should blesse vs, and cause men also to beare vs fauour and friendship ? Let vs on our behalfe seeke blessingnesse to the vttermost of our power : and when wordes of peace are offered vs, let vs not goe seeke occasions of controuersie, to stirre vp strife and debate. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon that text.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. He saith That Sehon King of Hesebon would not giue the children of Israel leave to passe. And why ? For the Lorde (saith he) had hardened his spirit, and made his heare stubborn. I haue tolde you alreadye, that although God foresee that the message of peace shall not preuaile : yet he ceaseth not to send it. But here Moses exprethly yet a further matter : that God hardeneth mens hartes. And in the ende he addeth moreover, that he doeth it of purpose : to ouerthrowe them and destroy them, which is much more. Nowe this is verie strange geete at the first sight. And that is the cause why men haue gone about to alter these textes : but in so doing they haue marred them, for it is all one when they would fet such a glose as this vpon it, that Gods hardening of Sehons heart, was no more but his promising that hee should become hard hearted, and that he letted not the hardnesse and stubbornnesse of his hart, that is to say , he did let Sehon alone when he shewed himselfe stubborn. These are too feeble shifts. For when as the scripture saith exprethly that GOD hardened : it fathereth the verie worke it selfe vpon him. Again, wee see how it saith, Thou Lord hast done it : and that in no places than onely in this. Thinke wee that the holy Ghost wanted wordes wherewith to vtter his meaning, when he saide, I will harden Pharaos heart, and beholde, God hath hardened him ? And againe when he saith in the Psalme that the Lord turned & conuerted their hartes vnto stubbornnesse, when they rose vp so against Israel ? If men should flee alwayes to this glose, God saith that he will harden, that is to say, he will not hinder or impeache the hardening : to what purpose were that ? Wee see it is a fond kinde of dealing, and the word Time sheweth it well. Behold, God turneth the heart. Whereas mens hartes were playable and disposed to courtesie, God turneth them and maketh them to be inflamed with hatred, so as they be the first that begin the warre. And what meaneth that ? So then vnlesse wee meane to dally and mocke with the holy scripture, we must not seeke such shifts, but rather consider after what sort it is that God hardeneth mens hartes : and yet notwithstanding is not guiltie of the hardnesse that is in me, nor can or ought to bee charged with the euill. Wee must come to that point. For let vs marke, that although God harden mens hartes, yet men faile not also to harden themselves. And these two things may agree very well : that is to wit that a man shoulde harden himselfe in his owne naughtinesse, and yet not without Gods working in such wise as the euill proceedeth not of him, ne ought to bee imputed to him, as I said afore. And to proue that men themselves ought to beare the blame and condemnation of their hard heartednesse, there needeth no long discourse to bee made : for euery man carieth his owne inditement readie framed in himselfe. As howe ? Euen the wickedest sort doe giue euidence against themselves : and although all the world would excuse them, and that both great & small did acquit them : yet haue they a hartbiring within them, which maketh them to perceiue, that whensoever they offend or sinne, they doe it willingly of their owne accorde, of a certaine lewdnesse, and with their owne wil. There is not that man which knoweth not this. Euen the greatest despisers of God that are (say I), euen they that are become as brutish as is possible to bee, haue the said brondingyron fearing within them, so as they knowe that their sinnes come of nothing else than their owne selfe mouing, and of their owne cursed and wicked affection. Seeing then that men doe feele themselves guiltie: there needeth no more disputing vpon that point.

But now let vs come to the second point: that is to wit , how it is that God hardeneth men , without being partaker of their finnes . Let vs marke , that sometimes the causes shall be apparent . And whensoever God punisheth men , wee must needs confesse that hee doeth it iustly : marke that for one poynt . Now one of the meanes which he hath to punish men with all , is that hee blindeth them , that hee hardeneth their hartes , that hee fendeth them the spirit of giddinesse , that hee deluereh them vp to Satan . These then are signes of Gods wrath and vengeance .

And therefore if there were any cause going before : wee must glorify him . And why ? for hee doeth the office of a iudge : and for so doing there is no cause to carp and snip at him . It is sayd that God will send the spirit of drowinesse vpon men . And why ? Because they haue misused his goodnesse , and the instruction that he gaue them . When wee see that this cause went afore : that is to wit , that men did wilfully shut their eyes , that they would not heare , and that they would not receiue any instruction , but rather labored to abolish Gods truth vtterly : is it not reason that they should bee giuen vp to the spirit of giddinesse ? Nay moreover , they will needes be wittic to mocke God : and wee see a number of these scoffers , which are alwayes frumping , and to their seeming , God is but a babe . By reason hereof hee shaketh them vtterly of , in such wise as they become brute beastes . Now then , when that cause goeth afore : wee see that God executeth his Iustice and punisheth men in such sort , as wee can not but glorify him . Marke that for one poynt .

True it is that sometime there shall be speciall causes : but the saying of Saint Paul in the first chapter to the Romans extendeth yet further . For there wee see that God hath iust reason to blinde all the world , and that if hee should doe so he should doe but the office of a iudge . For why ? although the heathen had no doctrine preached vnto them : yet doe the heauens and the earth speake sufficiently vnto them , inasmuch as God doth shewe himselfe there . But who are they that honor and serue God , for all their ioyning of the benefites which he bestoweth vpon them in this world ? All are vnthankfull , all are malicious , wee cobbler vp Gods riches here , and in the meane while regard not how much wee be beholden to him , at leastwise to doe him homage for them . And therefore it is reason that he should giue vp men into a leude minde , ( as sayth Sainte Paule ) and that hee should deluere them into wicked lustes , so as they should forget themselves , and ouershoote themselves , and giue ouer themselves to all vngratiousnesse , and to all manner of shamefull and horrible dealings . And why ? For they honoured not their creator that made them , & had shewed himselfe so bountifull and mercifull to them . And therefore whensoever God hardeneth men , wee must thinke he hath iust reason to doe so , because our leawdnesse and vnthankfulnesse are to be found euery where .

But yet neuerthelesse , if there appeare no apparant cause , and that when we haue sought neuer so much why God hardeneth men , wee finde no cause at all : yet let vs not therefore cease to glorifie him , though wee see not the reason of his doings . As for example , a man might aske why Schon was hardened rather than the Moabites , Edomites , and Ammonites ? Ye see here foure nations betwene whom there was no odde , I meane as in respect of naughtinesse . For if wee thinke that the Ammonites and Edomites , were better than the Amorrhites : it is but folly and a deceiuing of our selues . Then were they all as infidelles , and coulde haue found in their hartes that Gods people had bin vtterly sunk . But God boweth the hartes of the Ammonites and such others , to the end that they should not enter into warre . Hee meeketh and suppleth them , as if a wilde beaste were tamed : and in the meane while he hardeneth Schons hart , pricking him and inflaming him forward , to the ende he should come to giue battell . Whence commeth such diuersitie ? Wee cannot alludge any reason , our wit is too rawe and weake thereto . And againe , God concealeth his purpose from vs in that behalfe . What shall wee doe then ? although wee be at our wits end in this case : let vs learne to doe God so much honor , as to acknowledge that hee is iust and vpriight in all his doings . And although the thing be straunge to our vnderstanding , and it seeme to vs that wee might speake against it : yet notwithstanding let vs forbear to reply , and let vs humble our selues vnder the maiestie of our God . For truly the thing wherein hee wil try mens humilitie , is that wee should glorifie him in all his works , yea euen though they agree not ne match not with our natural reaso. There is not a truer obedience of faith than that . And if they which babble so much nowadayes against Gods providence , had learned but this one principle of honoring GOD by confessing that hee is righteous , and measured not his Iustice or righteoufnesse by their owne brayne : there would be no more difficultie , but what ? There are a sorte of proud beggers , which set themselues against GOD , and swelle at him lyke Toades . Insomuch that if they haue once taken a toy in their head , although GOD haue spoken the flat contrary : they passe not for that , neither wil they suace their rage for it . But as for our part , to the intent wee may be Gods true disciples , let vs bridle our wittes and hold them as prisoners and captiues vnder the doctrine of the holy scripture : which is , that God holdeth mens hartes in his hand , and turneth them to gentleness when hee listeth , as wee see hee did in Egypt . Behold , the Egyptians were full of spite and crueltye , so as they ment nothing else but to haue vtterly destroyed the people of Israel . But yet in one minute of an houre , and euen in the turning of a hand , God wrought in such wise that they were changed . They yielded vp all their vessell of golde and silver at the comaundemēt of  $\text{f}$  people . To be short they did more for the children of Israel, than the fathers would haue done for their owne children. And whereof came this: Euen of Gods changing of their hartes when hee thought good. Also on the contrary part, God holdeth mens hartes in his hand, to harden them as he listeth. And if this seeme straunge vnto vs: let vs acknowledge the weakenesse of our vnderstanding, and let vs alwayes first and foremost confesse God to bee righteous, and therewithall reuerence his high and deepe secretes, sith wee cannot attaine vnto them. Thus yee see what we haue to remember in the first place.

Also wee haue to note the ende for which this was done. God (sayth Moses) was determined to destroy Schon: GOD had already assigned him his iudgement: that was the cause why hee hardened him. It is not in this text onely, that the holy Ghost speaketh so. But when God sendeth his Prophet Esay, and telleth him that the people shall be hardened and blinded, yea euen the more after their hearing of all the matters and warnings that should be giuen them: he addeth I will haue this people blinded, to the ende they conuert not and I should heale them. As if he should say, this people is not worthe to be pitied at my hand, or to haue any mercy shewed them: and therefore they must dwell still in their destruction. And that they may doe so, I will harden their hartes, stop their eares, and blinde their eyes, so as they shall be past all amendment. Let vs vnderstand, that in so doing God hath alwayes iust reason: but yet is it not to be said, that therefore it is lawfull for vs alwayes to know it. If the reason be apparant to vs: it is well, and let vs wey it thoroughly, acknowledging (as I tolde you before) that God executeth his iust vengeance vpon the sinners that haue offended him too much, and abused his patience and goodnesse. But howsoeuer the case stand, if wee see no reason at all, let his onely will and ordinance suffice vs, and let it content vs that he knoweth why hee dealeth so, though it be not his will to reuile it vnto vs, at leastwise till the day wherein the things that are now hidden from vs, shall be discovered vnto vs. For (as sayth Saint Paul) as now wee see but in part and darkely. And if wee knewe that: namely that wee be here as in a darke prison, so long as we be closed in with our mortall fleshe: and againe that wee be earthly and must be faine to be renewed ere wee can comprehend Gods secretes perfectly: it were enough to allaye the cackeling of such as nowadayes blasphem the doctrine of election, so as they should humble themselves before God, to imbrace with all reuerence whatsoever is contained in the holy scripture. But doe what we can, yet must wee passe that way. And therefore when wee heare that Gods will was to destroy Schon, and therefore he hardened him: let vs assure our selues, that when it pleaseth God to drawe men to saluation, he turneth their hartes to make them repent them of their sinnes, that they may be sory for them and seeke to obey him. After that manner doth God alter the hartes of such as were malicious and froward, and reformeth them to his obedience, yea euen when he intendeth to saue them. Lykewise on the contrary part, when he hath vtterly appoynted them to destruction: he hardeneth them, so as there is no meane for them to admit any amendment, or to come neere it, but they repine against him and his doctrine, whereof they make as it were a deadly poyson. Lo after what sorte God worketh. True it is that mans natural reason can neuer well brooke his doctrine: but wee must submit our selues with such humilitie in this behalfe, as wee gainesay not the things which the holy scripture teacheth. Againe, whereas it is sayd, that the children of Hely hauing him warned, receiued not correction at their fathers hand: it followeth immediately, because the Lord was purposed to flea them. By the setting downe hereof, wee see that God gaue them not the grace to conuert, because he left them in the destruction, wherein they were by nature: And that he so purposed, it was through his rightfull iustice. Here is no talke of I wote not what permission or suffurance, so as God should play the blinkard, or shut his eyes as these fantastical fellows imagine, which haue as much experience in the holy scripture as dogges: but it is sayd, that Gods will was to haue it so. Wherefore let vs learne, that when God hardeneth men, it is a signe that hee hath deliuered them to Satan, as past recovery. True it is that on the one part God serueth his turne by Satan and by wicked men, to deceiue the vnbeleeuers, according as wee see that when it was sayd, who will be my messenger to deceiue Achab? the diuill offereth himselfe, and God sendeth him, Go (sayth God) and ouerrule thou all his false prophets, and let them bee all there to blinde this wretch that hath bin so rebellious against me. We see how God serueth his turne by Satan, & that all false prophets are sent by him. But yet should not this preuaile: for if men were well disposed, Satan should win nothing by his illusions, and all his wiles should be withoutood: But it is sayd that God giueth effectuall or workefull error: it is euen Saint Pauls owne maner of speech.

Now whereas he termeth it effectuall error, it is as much to say as men shall be so sorted, that they shall not be able to discern any more, nor to perceiue the deceites, but shall become so brutish, as they shall sting and cast themselves headlong into destruction, and not iudge of any thing. It is God that blindeth them so, sayth Saint Paul. And why? Because he is minded to ouerthrowe them. Now I haue tolde you already, that sometimes the cause shall not be apparant as it is in that place of Saint Paul, who auoucheth it concerning such as hauing heard the Gospell, receiued it not, ne became the better for it, but reiected it, as wee see these wretches doe nowadayes, which trample the doctrine of saluation vnder their feete, through their vngodlynesse. And Saint Paul sayth it is good reason that God should so blinde them, as darkenesse might reigne ouer them, forasmuch as they lifted not to receiue the light. But sometimes the cause shall be incomprehensible: wee shall not perceiue why God worketh so; [ wee shall not discern ] why hee will haue one to perish rather than another. [ In that case ] let vs content our selues with his only goodnes, and confesse that he is righteous howsoeuer the world goe. Besides this, let vs learne to call vpon God, that it may please him to turne our hartes to good, so as when hee sendeth vs the message of peace, and offereth vs his fatherly goodnesse, wee may not onely heare it as the voyce of a man: but also be touched with it by him in our hartes. And in so dooing, let vs not doubt of his mercie, for hee witnesseth thereby that he hath pitie vpon vs, and prepareth vs, and chaungeth our hartes, to bowe them to his obedience. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember as in respect of this sentence.

Now Moses sayth, that Sehon came fourth to battell, & was overcome, both he and all his people, because God had deliuered him to the children of Israel. Here Moses sheweth that the victorie which the people had of Sehon and the Amorrhites, was of Gods meere grace. And it was meete also that the people should bee put in mind thereof, that they might perceiue how God had gouerned the. And this rehearfall is made, to keepe the people in awe, and to make them vnderstand, that if they did not serue and honor him all their lyfe long, and teach their children to doe the lyke: it wcre too wicked an vnthankfulnessse. And here wee haue two poyntes to marke. The one is generall, that wee must learne to yelde God the honor of all the victories that hee giueth vs against our enemies. I meane not onely of Princes when they haue made warres, or woonne a battell in the field: but [ euen of our selues also ] when wee haue bin assailed by some peculiar person, and be escaped from his handes. When a man hath done vs any wrong, or put vs to some trouble, and wee be deliuered from it: Let vs assure our selues it is God that hath giuen vs that vpper hand, to the end we should alwayes haue our mouthes open to yelde him thanks for it: and that we should not onely doe it with the mouth: but also and specially shewe forth by our whole lyfe, how much wee be bound vnto him. Yee see then that the thing which wee haue to marke, is that whensoever and how oft fouer wee escape from the malice of our enemies, God hath reached out his hand to succour vs, and by that meanes hath bound vs to him, to the intent wee shoulde haue the more courage to serue him and honor him.

The second poynt is, that looke what Moses spake to the people of Israel, the same doth hee say at this day vnto vs. For wee haue neede to be put in minde of Gods grace and benefites, that wee may bee the more moued to magnify his name and to giue our selues wholly vnto him, so as wee may neuer forget his benefites, to runne into any disorder. For wee see how men doe easily sette themselves, specially when G O D dealeth fauourably with them. Because our God dealeth gently with vs: wee thinke we may conspire to forsake him and forget him. And truly this proverb which is common among men, namely that wee cannot away with our owne ease, is put too much in practise. And therefore it is for our welfare to be put in minde of Gods benefites, and to haue the remembrance of them refreshed. And why? To the intent wee may be helde in awe of him, and serue him, & take courage to keepe our selues altogether vnder his subiectio, assuring our selues that that is our soueraigne blisse, and that forasmuch as hee neuer forsaketh his faithful ones, and those that leane vnto him, wee suffer him to be our protector, and play not the loose colts, so as wee should be forsaken of him at our neede. Yee see then that this declaration is directed to vs nowadayes.

As touching that it is sayd, That GOD had deliuered Sehon before them: it serueth to shewe the better, that inasmuch as they had an easie victorie, GOD gaue the greater brightnesse to his grace, as wee haue seene alreadye heretofore. I note this briefly, to the intent that this straine may be layd to the other, which wee haue seene and expounded alreadye.

Had the people of Israel had much a doe to ouercome their enemies: they might haue imputed it to their owne force. O wee haue fought well, [ might they haue sayd. ] O there was great prowes in vs: for our enemies were very valiant.

But when as their enemies were driuen lyke chaffe with the winde, when they that we carst both strong and stout were dismayed, so as they had no more hart than women, but scattered away at the first shocke, and became so cowardly, as they might smite vpon them at their pleasure, so as the people were euen weary of sleaing them that were lyke enough to haue eaten them vp: What is to be sayd of it, but that God deliuered the enemies of his people, that is to say, that hee brought them thither as it were of purpose to take vengeance on them: Yee see then that the thing which is imported by this maner of Moseses speech, is the amplifying of Gods grace, to the ende that it might bee the better known of the children of Israel.

And whereas it is sayd, that all were put to the sworde, euen little children and all: It might at the first bluisse seeme a poynt of great crueltye, that the children of Israel spared not euen the little babes. And what an outrage was that? For what though the king and the men had bin so froward as to deny them passage? Ought the women therefore to haue borne the smart of it, and their little babes too? We see and are warned hereby, that wee must not deeme of Gods iudgements after our owne fancie. For if wee will needes runne a head when God telleth vs that hee hath disposed a matter, and that wee will needes shoote fourth our bolte at euery turne: wee take vpon vs the office of G O D. For it is his right to iudge of vs, and not ours to iudge of him. And what will will come of it, but that wee shall be confounded in our rashnesse and malapertnesse: What a trayterousnesse is it, that mortall creatures shoulde climb to high, as to giue iudgement vpon their maker? Therefore when there is any speaking of Gods iudgements, let vs learne to reſtreine our wittes from ſuch rashnesse as to ſay what we thinke good; and let vs conſider that all that euer commeth from God, is good and rightfull, though it ſeeme contrariwiſe to vs. And in verry deede, ſith wee ſee not a whit into the bottomleſſe deepes of Gods iudgements: let vs aſſure our ſelues that wee doe but bewray the informitie that is in vs, and that in the meane ſeaſon God hath wherewith to maintaine his iuſtice, although he ſhewe it not to vs. And were the thing wel weighed y<sup>e</sup> is written in Geneſis: we ſhould know that it was not without cauſe y<sup>e</sup> our Lord commanded the children of the Amorrhites to be rooted out of the world. For euen in the time of Abraham, the Chananites were come to the full meaſure of all iniquitie, as it ſeemed: and we ſee examples enow thereof, in that they troubled Abraham ſo much. And yet for al that, God ſayd that their iniquitie was not yet full ripe. Albeit that men had condemned them: yet is God patient, and taryeth, and beareth with them, yea euen foure hundred yeeres after. Yee ſee then that God did beare with the wickedneſſe of that people foure hundred yeeres: and ſhall wee ſay now at the foure hundred yeeres ende, how happeneth it that God dealeth ſo roughly with them? Wee would faine be pleading againſt God. If he vſe patience, wee ſay he is too ſlowe; and if he vſe extreme vengeance, wee blame him of crueltie. But contrarywiſe, if God execute not his iudgements out of hand: let vs aſſure our ſelues y<sup>e</sup> therein he ſheweth his goodneſſe. And on the other ſide it he extend ſuch rigor as maketh vs aſhamed and a fraide: let vs aſſure our ſelues that he doth it iuſtly and vpon good cauſe, although the ſame cauſe be not euer apparant vnto vs. So then, firſt of al, whereas here is mention made of ſuch a ſlaughter of the Amorrhites as extended euen to the infantes: let vs aſſure our ſelues that ſeeing G O D telleth vs that hee hadde commaunded the people of Iſraell to doe it: we muſt embrace it without gainſaying, & it is not for vs to checke againſt it, vnleſſe we will be condemned for our diueliſh pride, in preſuming to pleade againſt our iudge, yea euen againſt our ſoueraine iudge.

Gen. 5. 16.

Finally wee muſt not iuſtifie men when they aduventure any thing vpon their owne heades and for their owne pleaſure: but wee muſt put a difference betweene the things that concerne God, and the things that concerne men. For in the end of the chapter, Moſes ſaith expreſſely, According as the Lord our God had commaunded. The if any thing come in our way, let vs inquire whether it concerne God or no. If wee perceiue that it concerne God: then muſt wee ſubmit our ſelues thereto, ſaying, Lord thou art righteous, let thine onely will iuſtifie vs, without looking to haue any other reaſon: let it not be lawfull for vs to goe beyond that rule, forſo much as it is the rule of all right. Now then if we haue the diſcretion and ſkill, to diſcerne betweene God and men: then ſhall we not ſayle to honor and glorify God, and to yeeld him the prayſe of Iuſtice and vprightneſſe: [and ſo ſhall wee lykewiſe] if wee in deuoar to trye mens doings by Gods word as we be taught it. For good reaſon it is that the ſame ſhould ouerrule vs, yea and that all our deedes and thoughtes ſhoulde be ſo meaſured, & compaſſed, and directed thereby, as wee may conſider thus with our ſelues: Hath God forbidden it: then is it a wicked thing, and therefore I muſt forbear it: but doth God allow it or permit it? then let vs confeſſe that it is well done, without inquiring any further.

Thus yee ſee what wee haue to remember for the concluſion of this text.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and to teach vs to condemne our ſelues vnto him, (as in verry deede there is nothing in vs but curſedneſſe, and none but onely God deſerueeth to haue al praife of righteouſnes & vprightnes yeelded vnto him) and y<sup>e</sup> euery of vs may not only confeſſe it with our mouths, but alſo ſigh for our finnes through true repentance, ſo as wee may returne againe vnto him, praying him to chaunge our wicked hartes in ſuch wiſe, that whereas now they be plunged in al naughtines, and ſtonehard: hee will vouchſafe to bring them to his obedience, and to write and ingroſſe his lawes and commaundementes in them, ſo as we may ſeeke nothing but to pleaſe him, and to franke our ſelues wholly to his good will. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people, &c.

On Tewſday the vij. of May. 1555.

The fifteenth Sermon which is the firſt vpon the third Chapter.

THEN turned wee and went vp by the way of Baſan. And Og the king of Baſan came out againſt vs, he and all his people, to fight in Edray.

2 And the Lord ſayd vnto me, feare him not, for I haue deliuered him into thy hand, with all his people and land, and thou ſhalt doe to him as thou diddeſt to Schon king of the Amorrhites, that dwelt in Heſebon.

3 So the Lord our God deliuered Og King of Basan with all his people into our handes, and we smote him, so as nothing remained of him.

4 The same season we tooke all his Cities, and there was not anie Citie which we tooke not: that is to wit, threescore Cities, all the Countrie of Argob, which is of the kingdome of Og in Basan.

5 All his Cities were fenced with high walles, Gates, and Barres, besides the vn-walled townes which were manie in number.

6 And wee destroyed them as wee had done to Sehon King of Hesebon, in rooting out all his Cities, men, women, and children.

7 But all the cattle and the spoile of the Cities, wee made a pray for our seluer.

8 So at that time we tooke the land out of the hand of the two kinges of the Amorrhites, which were beyond Iordan, from the riuer Arnon vnto Mount Hermon:

9 (Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sarion, and the Amorrhites name it Samir:)

10 [Euen] al the cities of the plaine, and all Galaad, and all Basan, vnto Selcha and Edray: which are cities of the kingdome of Og in the countrie of Basan.

11 For onely Og king of Basan remained of the remnant of the Giants, behold, his bed which is a bed of yron, is it not at Rabbath among the children of Ammon? The length thereof is nine cubites, and the bredth foure cubites after the cubites of a man, we should take y things that I haue read, but as a simple reporte of a storie: there would be no profite at all in the reading. But if we be able to apply it to such vse, as God meant by his holy spirit: it is a very profitable lesson for vs. It is declared here, that the people of Israel smote Og king of Basan, as they had done Sehon king of the Amorrhites. That (as ye see) is the story. But wee must consider to what purpose GOD meant to haue it registred in his lawe, and published by Moses, and brought againe to the peoples remembrance. It was to the ende that the people should knowe, that they had bin guided by the hand of God, and that when they were deliuered out of the land of Egypt, they with not where to haue become, ylesse GOD had continued his fauour towards them, to put them in possession of the land which he had promised them for their inheritance. But now wee must marke also, that the people were not yet entered into the land of Chanaan: there was yet great hardnesse in the matter. And if they had not trusted in God, they might haue bin so feared, as would haue caused them to turne head, and to murmur against God, and to forsake the land that had bin promised them. Therefore it was for them to be confirmed, And Moses hath respect thereunto, in that he setteth before their eyes, the power where through they withstoode their enemies: which was Gods assisting of them, and his ouer throwing of their enemies. And now that I haue noted that it was Gods wil to haue this story published and confirmed, to the end aforesayd: it behoueth vs lykewise to come to our selues, and to apply it also to our owne vse. For all was written for our learning.

1. Cor. 10. 11.

Then let vs marke, that whereas Moses hath sayd here, that Og king of Basan was overthrowen: the people should haue thought thus: Behold, God hath deliuered vs from a second and a third death. For it had bin to no purpose to haue scaped out of Egypt, to haue bin set free from the bondage of Pharao, and to haue passed through the red Sea: all this had bin nothing, if our God had not strengthened vs, seeing wee haue bin assayled by so mightie and strong enemies, whome we had not bin able to resist. And in good sooth, we ought to call to minde what hath bin declared before, that is to wit, that the people ran away as soone as their enemies came against them. And why was that? For it was not for them to looke for any succour at Gods hand, because they ran forth at aduerture with such foolish rashnesse. God had sayd vnto them, yee shall not goe to battell: and yet would they needes hazarde the encounter.

Therefore it was meete that they should bee made to knowe their follie to their cost. Yet notwithstanding, the people of Israel knewe well enough by experience, that they were not of sufficient power to withstand their enemies. But now, for asmuch as nothing was able to stand before them: therby it appeared that their obtaining of the victorie was not by their owne strength, neither coulde they boast thereof; but it was God that had wrought in that behalfe. And it behoueth vs alwayes to make the same comparison, if wee will well perceiue Gods grace and fauor towards vs. For what is the cause that wee take our felues to be strong and stout, and yeede not Gods due prayse? It is for that wee bee bleared: when hee hath reached vs his hand, and when hee hath succoured vs at some pinch, wee consider not from whence that comerth. What remedie then? Let vs bethinke our felues thus: Go to, haue I not found my selfe fore conbided in very small things? Haue not I bin daunted and striken out of hart? And what was the cause thereof, but that God made mee to feele mine owne frailtie? Surely I shoulde bee neuer a whit valeanter now, than I was then: were it not that God gaue me his helpe. So then it is some where else than of my selfe, that I haue my strength: and therefore it is not for mee to aduaunce my selfe through ouerweening: for God hath giuen mee a sure knowledge of my feeblenesse. Now then, I must thinke continually how to humble my selfe: and when hee hath vpheld me by his strong hand, I must acknowledge that that benefite came of him, and that hee will be glorified for the same. Yee see then that the intent why Moses spake so to the people of Israel, was that they should acknowledge that their ouercomming of their enemies, was not by the power and strength of man, but by Gods fighting for them.

Neuer thelesse, this ought to haue moued them, not onely to honor God, but also to trust in him, as I haue touched before. For it was not enough for the people of Israel to haue conquered the land of Basan: for they had not yet passed the riuier of Iordan where their inheritance lay. Therefore it stood them on had to be armed with newe trust, and to proceede with full purpose to incounter their enemies againe. And whence might they haue such hardinesse? If they had taken it in themselves, it had bin but a rage that God woulde haue condemned: but they must haue imboldened themselves with trust that God would not faile them. And how might they be sure of that? By their owne experience which they had had therof. Why was it that God our-ther we as well Schon, as Og king of Basan? Because he was the leader of his people, and had taken them into his charge and protection. And that was not to leade them onely to the banke of Iordan: but to performe the promise that he had made to Abraham, And therefore the people might conclude, that the victories which they had obtained already, were but an entrance to a further passage, whereby they might fully perswade and assure themselves, that God would continue with them euen vnto the ende. Euen so must we doe, if we perceiue any change in our felues, wee must acknowledge it to be the hand of God.

For sometimes, yea oftentimes the faithfull shall finde themselves astonished and abashed vpon the sudden, yea euen though there be no great cause why. But thereby God warneth them of their infirmities, to the ende they shoulde walke in awe and feare of him, calling vpon him, and vtterly distrusting their owne strength. Agayne, when they see themselves strengthened they knowe that that cometh not of themselves, neither are they so foolish as to be proud of it: but they magnify Gods goodnesse and grace towards them, and take courage vpon the same.

True it is [say they] that wee be wretched and sille creatures: but yet hath our God helped vs, to the end that wee shoulde trust in him. Therefore let vs on forward as he commaundeth, and let vs not doubt but hee will be the same man to morrowe that he is to day. The remembrance of his promise lasteth longer with him than for a day: and seeing he hath auowed himselfe to be our father, it is not to shake vs off as the bastes doe that forget their young ones, or as the fowles doe which forsake their byrdes whom they bred: but our God is a father to vs both in lyfe and death. Now then, let vs alwayes flee vnder the shadowe of his protection, and assure our felues that his power shall neuer bee diminished towards vs.

But wee haue also to marke how Moses saith, That Og king of Basan came foorth to giue battell. wherein hee sheweth that the people [of Israels] warre was iust and lawfull. For although they had expresse commaundement from God, to arme themselves and to put Og king of Basan to the sword, not at their owne pleasure, but vpon the authoritie of him that hath all power: yet was it Gods wille to minister a iust cause thereof vnto them, that they might be the more assured in their conscience. And thereby wee bee warned (as I haue sayd heretofore) not to attempt any thing against right and reason. If we will haue GOD to blesse our doings, and to make them prosper, and bring them to good ende: let vs beware that wee stirre not so much as one finger vnaduisedly, or contrarily to that which is shewed vs by Gods worde. For what is it that can make vs rightly hardye in all things? The hauing of a good warrant in our owne consciences, that wee haue walked according to Gods commaundement, and gone no further than equite and right will beare. If wee be sure of that: then may wee looke for helpe from aboue, and wee shall not bee disappointed. But if wee neglect the difference betwene good and bad, and runne to things vpon a head: it is good reason that God shoulde beguile vs, and that wee should be confounded in our doings. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke here, when Og king of Basan came foorth as an enemy to prouoke the children of Israell, in such wise as their warre became iust. For no doubt but this enemy was offered him of Gods hand, as wee sawe that Schon was yesterday, whome God hardened because hee was minded to ouerthrowe him. After the same maner happened it to Og the king of Basan.

Now then, let vs learne to beware that wee pro-

prouke not one man nor other, by giuing them cause to vexe and molest vs: but if wee haue any enemies, let them beginne the warre, and let vs on our side keepe the peace. Let that be a point for vs to beare away. For if wee begin the fray, by doing them wrong or violence: can wee looke for helpe at Gods hand? Can wee hope that he will fauor vs, when we be fo out of order? No: and therefore let vs not goe about to purchase vs enemies: (the diuill will raise vs vp but too many of thē: and God also on his side may chance to exercise vs, and worke in such wise as wee shall haue enemies enow, that will seeke all the means they can to persecute vs:) but let vs for our part seeke to haue peace, to the vttermost of our power.

Rom. 12. 18.

And besides this, let vs alwayes hope that GOD will assist vs, if the quarell that wee maintaine bee good and rightfull, and such as hee alloweth. These are the things which wee haue to remember in that it is said that Og aduanced himselfe, and came forth to assaile the people of Israel, without denouncing any thing at their hand, euen to stop them of the passage that God had giuen them.

Eph. 6. 12.

Furthermore let vs beare in mind that which hath bin sayd afore, namely, that the chiefe warre which wee haue, is against our spirituall enemies. Therefore whensoever Satan assaileth vs, and practiseth all the mischief that hee can against vs: let vs vnderstand that GOD is minded to exercise vs; but yet shall wee haue wherewith to beare out the brunt, forasmuch as wee shall be strengthened by the power of the holy Ghost. And for the bringing thereof to passe, let vs marke howe it is added here, that God sayth vnto Moses, Be not afraid: for I haue deliuered Og king of Basan into thy hand: therefore shalt thou doe to him as thou diddest vnto Sehon the king of the Amorrites. Yee see then that here is a promise giuen, to the ende that the people should rest vpon it, and not doubt any more of the victorie, inasmuch as God telleth them that hee will fight for them. And it behoueth vs to marke well this text, because that if wee be destitute of Gods promises: though wee protest neuer so much that wee trust in him: it is but a vaine and fond imagination. And it is not in men to promise themselues any thing. For by what right or title may wee holde God bounde vnto vs, so as wee may say, God shall help vs, we shall not faile to be succoured at his hand? It would be to sodan oueratelyncs, if men should forge hopes of their owne head after that sort. Nay wee must waite quietly that God thewe vs his wil, and when we once haue the word of his mouth, then may wee stand vpon it. Let vs marke then that there is an inseparable bond, betwene Gods promises and the trust that wee haue in him. The world doth in deede vse the wordes Faith, and Trust: Howbeit vnrightly. For men knowe the contrarie to that which they protest, because euery man conceiue what hee listeth in his fancie, and considereth not what is the will of God. Therefore it behoueth vs to come backe to the order that Moses sheweth vs

Rom. 10. 17.

here: which is, that wee attempt not any thing before God haue first spoken it. For esse, our meaning is but to transfigure him after our own pleasure, and looke as euery man inuenteth follies in his owne head: so woulde hee by and by haue God at his commaundment, to make him performe the things that hee himselfe hath conceiued. And what a dealing were that? What maiestie more woulde there bee in our God? Againe wee see our lustes are so outrageous, as is horrible: and yet shoulde God bee faine to auaunce attendance at all houres, to doe the things that our imagination hath dreamed or doted vpon? Therefore let vs haue the modestie to looke vnto that which God promiseth. And when wee once haue that promise, wee must no more reply against it, but bee contented with his speaking of the worde, and goe on to oldly. Be not afraid (sayth the Lord) I will deliuer him into thy hand. And when our Lorde had sayd, I will deliuer him into thy hand: he added for a conclusion, therefore be not afraid. But how must wee apply this doctrine to our institution?

First and foremost let vs looke that God promise. If wee were combred with any perplexitie or anguise, and knewe not whether God would leaue vs in the mire or no: wee might well bee afraide: and if wee would not be afraide, wee should be too blockish. But when God sayth vnto vs, my children, it is true that you be weake, you can doe nothing of your selues, and you haue too strong an enemy, by means wherof yee could be no meanes withstand him if yee were not helped and vpheld by me: but I tell you, your temptations shall not be greater than you shall be able to beare, I knowe what your power is, I will giue you strength and courage at your need, I will mitigate y<sup>e</sup> temptations y<sup>e</sup> might ouerthrow you, and although the world and the deuill be starke mad against you, yet will I bridle them, so that although you be roughly assayed, yet shall you overcome them: trust thereunto. Hath God spoken as this man telleth vs: let vs neuer doubt of it. Not that wee can be vtterly exempted from all feare, so long as we liue in this world: Inasmuch that although wee haue Gods promises, wherby we be assured that hee will neuer leaue vs, but that wee shall euer feele his helpe at our neede: yet must wee not thinke that wee shall be vtterly voyde of care and doubt, or that wee should not beware of the daungers that inuiron vs round about. No, but yet must not this feare so ouerawght vs, as wee should not take hart to call vpon God, and to rest vpon him, and to goe on still forward. Therefore when as it is sayd, I will helpe thee, be not afraid: our Lord will haue vs to fight in such wise against all feare, as it may not so ouermaister vs, as to make vs giue ouer, and turne head, and start away, so as we should be vtterly dismayd: but rather y<sup>e</sup> in standing in aw, we should also hope & take courage to go forward, forasmuch as we haue God on our side. Thus yee see what is to bee remembered here.

And let vs chiefly apply this doctrine to our H 1 spiritual

1. Co. 10. 13

Spirituall batels which wee haue against Satan. For if the children of Israell could not vanquish their enemies which were but men: how shall wee overcome the prince of the worlde, and the infinite number of diuils, which are as ramping Lyons readye to swallowe vs vpper out of hand?

What is our force to beate backe such enemies? Againe on the other side, wee neede neuer to seeke out of our felues wherewith to be overcome. For euery of vs doth nothing else but labor to ouerthrowe our felues. All the affections and all the thoughts that wee haue, are enemies to God and to our own saluation. Therefore although wee had no enemies to assaile vs without vs: yet are wee ouerthrowen already by our felues within. Yea verely, but when as our Lord telleth vs that his strength shall dwell in vs: that is the thing wherewith wee must take courage. And it shall be no presumption to proceede after that sorte, as the Papistes [beare men in hand: which] say it is a folle for men to assure themselves, and that wee must alwayes hang in doubt. By meanes whereof they set vp their owne freewill, and all the other dotages inuented by themselves, which are no better thā illusions of Satan wherewith he hath bewitched them. And hereupon they say yet still, O, God will helpe vs. Yea but they haue not his promises: or at leastwise they regard them not. And in good faith they be forepossest with this diuillike imagination, that they are able to doe much, and that they haue such strength in the, as they may well bee Gods fellows. And yet for all that, their hoping is but off and on at aduventure. But in the meane while they accuse vs of presumption, when wee rest alonely vpon Gods promises, assuring our felues that we can doe nothing at all, and that there is not one whit of strength in vs. Whereas wee wayte for the things which our good God hath promised vs of his owne free goodnesse, euen without presuming any whit at all of our felues, but onely hoping for the performance of that which hee hath spoken, accordingly as he hath vouchsafed to bundle himselfe by his promises: must it not needes be that the diuill hath put out the Papistes eyes quite and cleane, when they terme such beliefe presumptuousnesse, whereas it is grounded vpon nothing but Gods promises? [Eyes verely.] But as I sayd afore, let vs goe on boldly, and not doubt that God can deliuer our enemies into our handes. Although it seeme that they should catch vs in their pawes, and vterly destroy vs: yet hath God deliuered them into our handes before the battell: and with such certaintie doth it become vs to fight alwayes against Satan. Truly if wee looke vpon the state of the faithfull: it may well seeme that they be left as a pray, and that there is no way for them to stand against their enemies. But what for that? God hath already determined what he will doe. As for the execution thereof, it doth not appeare at the first: but when as the faithfull haue this promise giuen vnto them, I will deliuer shine enemies into thy hand: they must haue an eye to the thing that is yet hidden. And for the same purpose doth Saint Paul say, GOD will shortly put Satan vnder your feete. And for the same purpose also doth he say in another place: that Satan hath his power and dominion in the aire. It should seeme by this, that Satan is ouer our heads, and that he should ouerwhelme vs. But behold here on the other side, how God auoweth that hee hath put him vnder our feete; and that for all the skirmishes which he can make against vs, and for all the alarms that he can giue vs, yet shall hee not get the vpper hand of vs, no nor once prick vs in the heele, but we shall tread vpon his head. Lo, howe God hath assured vs of victorie. What is to be done then? Let vs looke at Satan and all our ghostly enemies, as already vanquished, and assure our felues aforehand that God will make vs to triumph in the midst of our batels, so as wee may glory in our God as though our enemies were already dispatched, and wee rid quite and cleane of them. And why? For the insight of our faith must rest vpon his promise where it is sayd, I haue deliuered shine enemies into thy hand.

Moreouer, whereas Moses reporteth, that the people did to Og king of Basan, as they had done to Sehon king of the Amorhites: it is to shewe that the people were not cruel in putting the young infants to the sworde, and in leauing neither man nor woman aliu: though a man might imagine them to haue bin cruell at the first fight. And why? Because it was done by Gods commaundement. Now then, let vs come backe againe to that which hath bin touched already: that is to wit, that when we passe not the bounds which God hath set vs, we doe any thing vpon our owne heads, but onely obey his will: then although all the world accuse and condemne vs, yet shall wee be quite in heauen. And that ought to suffice vs. Why? For God can well skil to maintain his authoritie against the pryde of all men: Though all the world were so fonde as to goe to lawe with God, and to finde faulte with his sayings and doings: Let vs let them all alone. For as I sayd, it ought to suffice vs, that God doth iustify vs, and if he acquit vs, we may laugh all the foolishne verities of the worlde to skorne. But herewithall let vs beare away this lesson, that is to wit, that God doe auow all our doings. And how shall wee be sure that he will auowe them? [verely] If wee haue not followed our owne fleshly reason, nor taken leaue to doe thinges vpon our owne head: but haue waited for Gods commaundement. Now then, if God haue giuen vs his warrant, and wee haue walked in his obedience: then are wee sure that all shall goe well with vs, though the world finde neuer so much fault with vs.

But wee on our side also must take warning that wee rise not against God, as wee see these fantastical fellows doe, who will needes bee scanning whether a thing be good or no, without inquiring whether it be of God or no: and so should God be faine to resigne his maiestie. For hee cannot be GOD, if hee bee not righteous. And if men might put his righteousnesse to trial of inquest, so as it might bee lawfull for them to giue their verdit vpon it: then if they condemne any of Gods workes, his glorie wee like to goe to wrecche, and he shoulde bee quite bereft of it. Wee see then what a treacherie it is, when men will take such libertie to discourse of good and cull at their owne pleasure, without asking counsell at Gods mouth. And on the contrarie part, although things seeme straunge to our naturall vnderstanding: yet must we so dispose our selues, that if our Lorde doe once say, this is good, it is my pleasure so to haue it: as soone as we haue that determinatio from Gods mouth: we on our part must hold our peace, nor onely to forbear all replying or grudging against him: but also to submit all our owne reason thereunto, and to glorifie him with a good will in this wise. True it is Lord, that if I should iudge after mine owne fantasie, I might speake fro wardly and vtwardly: but I must haue mine eye vpon thee: and forasmuch as I knowe thy will to be so, I must submit my selfe to it, and acknowledge it to bee good and rightfull, yielding thee thus praise therewithall, that thou canst not doe amisse. Surely this present example ought well to suffice vs. For who is he which would not at the first sight condemne the children of Israel, for killing the litde babes after that sort? Did they any thing without Gods appointment? No: for Moses saith the contrarie. Therefore in condemning them, a man should set himselfe against God: And so saereth it commonly with vs. Wherefore if wee iudge of our neighbours, let vs not doe it vpon our owne braine, but let vs giue that authoritie vnto God, without replying against his word, so as if he allow of any thing, wee receive it immediately: for wee must haue this modestie of iudging our selues in all cases according to his good will. And therewithall, if God now and then doe things which seeme o-40 uer rigorous, yea and euen doe touch our selues very neere: let vs stoope to them. As for example, if wee be afflicted out of measure to our own seeming: yet must we not murmur nor fret at it, For in good sooth what shall wee gaine by it? It will turne to our dubble confusion. Nay, let vs pray God to frame vs to such obedience, as we may patiently receive his afflictions that be sendeth vs, in such wise as the things which seeme straunge to our owne appetites, affections, and thoughts, may be deemed of vs to bee good, iust, and rightfull, because he willeth them. That is the point which wee must come vnto. To bee short, let vs learne, not to bee wise in our owne conceite, nor to giue head to our afflictions: for those two things are requisite, if we inted to glorifie God in all his doings.

Nowe here is also that which Moses addeth, concerning the Cities and the greatnesse of them, and concerning the Countie, and the 60 great strength of Og King of Basan. Wee tooke (saith he) therefore Cities, which were very well fortified, and furnished in such wise, as there was no likelyhood that they should haue bene easily taken. Moses addeth these circumstances, of purpose to magnifie Gods grace the more, that the people might perceiue by their strength came not flying in the aire, but that it was GOD that gaue it them. And that is a point well worthie to bee noted. For if it bee to vaunt of our owne prowesse, we can skill well ynough to gather the things that may serue for the purpose. O (say wee,) I had such a thing and such a thing: I haue compassed my matters trimly: such a crink was practised against mee a great way off, and I remedied it with such a shaft. See my cunning, see my policie: there were such matches and such against me, but I shifted well ynough with them all, so as I dispatched them euery chone, and mine enemies wonne nothing at my hand. To bee short, wee can skill to alledge all things that may giue a faire glosse and showe to our owne vertues. But if it bee to glorifie God, for the reliefe that wee haue had at his hand: we runne ouer it as it were vpon hotte coales (as they say) we remember not the distresse that wee were in, the daunger that wee bee scaped out of seemeth to bee a thing of nothing. See what our lewdnesse is. So much the more therefore doeth it stand vs on hand, to mark what is told vs here, that is to wit, that in all the benefites which wee haue receiued of God, we must consider in what raking wee had bene, if wee had gone without them: and wee shall haue matter good store wherewith to doe that, if we be not wilfully blind 50 as wee are wont to bee. For was not the least daunger that cur we fell into, ynough to abash vs? But when a thing toucheth vs any thing neere: ye shall see vs as fore dimaied as may be. In deede if wee be once out of it, it is nothing with vs: but that is for want of minding it. Yet notwithstanding if wee fee but a mote or a flie whilking by our eyes: by and by wee bee dazled. But yet for all this, out of howe great things doeth God deliuer vs? He will suffer vs to goe 40 downe as it were into our graue, and to be there as it were in a gulfe of death, so as which way soeuer we looke, we shall finde no way to scape out at, so deeply shall wee bee sunk therein. And to what ende? Euen to the ende that God may make vs perceiue his power the better, when it pleaseth him to succour vs. So then, wee haue matter ynough and ynough to giue glosse vnto Gods grace, if wee bee not minded to shut our eyes maliciously of set purpose, or to thrust the things vnder soote, which are too too manifest and apparant. Therefore let vs put this doctrine in vre which is shewed vs here by Moses: that is to wit, that God will giue vs incredible victories, as he doeth alreadie, and that when wee haue them, wee must bethinke vs thus: Goe to, came this of our owne policie? came this of our owne strength? No: it is God that hath done it. For when wee haue well examined all that is in vs: wee shall finde our selues to come shorte in all 60 pointes, and that euen from the one ende to the other, our Lorde must bee faine to doe all in man.

And looke what Moses reporteth here concerning the bodily enemies of the children of Israel, as in respect of the power of this world: that must wee apply to the power of Satan, and to all the shiftes that he hath against vs. If wee haue that discretion with vs, then shall we haue wherefore to magnifie Gods grace towards vs, if wee consider well whence wee bee deliuered, that is to wit, out of the pit of hell. For which of vs was able to breake the barres and bondes of Satan? which of vs was able to abolifh the foueraigntie of death? It ftoode vs on hand that God should worke there. Nowe it is fo, that we were all shut vp in the bondage of finne, and confequently that death reigned ouer vs. Satan had poffeffion of vs, fo as none of vs could fcape fro him. Wee could ftirre neither arme nor legge, but it was to thruft our felues ftill further, and to finke our felues ftill deeper. Seeing it is fo: let vs vnderftand, that when God brought vs out of the curfe, wherein all of vs are by nature: it muft needes be that his meere grace wrought in that behalfe. And that is moe times than once, as Mofes fpeaketh here of the threefore Cities. 20 Wherefore let vs vnderftande, that as foone as we be come to the end of one battell, ftroit ways wee muft enter into another: God helpeth vs to day: and if he hold not on dayly, yea if he make vs not to feele his ayde cuarye minute of an houre: what will become of vs? If wee had had a thoufand victories, yet were one affault ynough to ouerthrowe vs. Therefore let vs learne to magnifie Gods grace towards vs.

And herewithall let vs marke alfo, that Mofes 30 fpeaking here of the ftrength of Og King of Bafan, faiech: Behold, he had a bed like a Giant: and againe he faiech that he came of the race of the Rephaim. Which ferueth to fhew more and more, that the people were as a sheepe in a Wolues mouth. And if it were fo with them at that time: what is it nowe with vs? For wee haue enemies which are much ftonger and ftouter in comparifon of vs, than had the Iſraeltes when they were to enter into the land of Chanaan. It ſhould 40 feeme that they might eate vs vp at one bit (as they fay.) Wee fee what treafons and confpiracies they make: wee fee that the more gracious and fauourable God fheweth himfelfe to vs, the more doe wee feeme to take pleaſure in grieuing him, and in reiecting of his grace. And therefore let vs looke to it, that wee minde well this doctrine, if wee will haue God rogiue vs victorie againft Satan and all his affaultes. And befides this, when wee haue concluded that God will ftrengthen vs againft all temptations: let vs not doubt but that he hath a care of vs alfo for this tranſitorie life. And if men goe about to roote vs out, let vs put our felues to his protection, and let vs looke to bee preferued and defended by him: and no doubt but that if hee reached our Ius mightie arme in olde time, to ſcourge the people of Iſrael: his power is not abated, nor his goodneſſe diminished, to doe the like for vs at this day. Thus ye fee howe wee ſhall bee fafe both in life and death, and as well in body as in foule, if our Lorde bee readie to ſuccour vs. But without that, wee muft needes bee worſe than forlorne. Wherefore let vs looke that wee profite our felues by this doctrine, by putting away all pride and fooliſh preſumption, fo as wee reſt wholly vpon God, and learne to exerciſe our felues in his promiſes earlely and late, and to renew the remembrance of them, to the end that by that meane wee may bee armed againft all temptations. Let not the diuell finde vs vnprovided when he commeth to aſſaile vs: but let vs haue wherewith to reſiſt him. And that we may fo, let vs take to vs Gods worde, for when we bee armed with that, wee bee well ynough fenced to beate backe Satan, and al y euer he can praſtiſe againſt vs. And therefore it behoueth vs to be fo much the more watchfull, that we may giue care to this doctrine.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as wee may bee vtterly caſt downe by them, at leaſt wiſe to miſlike of them and to forſake them, fo as our whole ſeeking maye bee to frame our felues altogether to the righteouſneſſe of our God, and to proceede more & more in his feare and obedience, vntill he haue ioyned vs fully and perfectly to himſelfe, beſeeching him to beare with vs in the meane while, and that for as much as it is his will that wee ſhould bee in continuall warre in this worlde, he vouchſafe to ſtrengthen vs with his power, vntill he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly reſt, to make vs enioye the glorious immortalitie that hee hath promiſed vs. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but alſo to all people, &c.

16 And vnto the Rubenites and Gadites I gaue from Galaad vnto the riuier Arnon, the middes of the riuier and the end, and vnto the riuier Iabocke, which is the border of the children of Ammon.

17 And the plaine, and the Iordan, and the borders thereof from Kenereth to the sea of the wildernesse, that is to wit, the salt Sea vnder Afdodphasga towards the East.

18 And the same time I commaunded you, saying : the Lorde your God hath giuen you this land to possesse. All you that are strong men, goe armed before your brethren the children of Israel :

19 But your wiues, your children, and your cattell, (I know ye haue much cattell) shall tarie in your Cities which I haue giuen you,

20 Vntill the Lord haue giuen rest to your brethren as well as to you, and that they likewise possesse the land which the Lorde your God giueth them beyonde Iordan. Then shall yee returne euery man to his possession which I haue giuen you.

21 And the same time I commaunded Iosua, saying : Thine eyes haue seene all that the Lord your God hath done to these two Kings. So will the Lord doe to all the kingdomes through which thou shalt passe.

22 Feare them not : for the Lord is your God : it is he that fighteth for you.

Ere Moses continueth still his matter, to shewe the people of Israel the great good that God had done them, beyond their hope. For as I haue declared heretofore, the kingdomes of Basan and Hesebon were as an ouerplus, besides that which had bene pronounced to the fathers of olde time. God then shewed himselfe more liberall than he had promised to bee, in that behalfe. Therefore it became the people to haue signified Gods grace, according as Moseses intent also was. Furthermore, to the intent the people should not thinke that they had gotten and conquered that Countrey by their owne power and strength : it is tolde them howe it was of necessitie that God guided them, considering that their enemies were much stronger than they, in respect whereof here is mention made of their stature, and the land is named y land of Giants, to put the people in remembrance and to make them consider, y they could nohaue compassed those things, vnlesse God had gouerned them. And so the whole matter is to be referred to this ende, that the people should knowe Gods goodnesse in deliuering them from the thraldome of Egypt, not onely in that he had giuen them the land which he had promised them for their inheritance, but also had added more than they looked for : that is to wit, y two kingdomes that were beyond Iordan.

And nowe herewithall Moses saith, That hee gaue that Countrey to the Children of Ruben, and to the children of Gad, that is to say, to their Tribes, and to the halfe Tribe of Manasse. Not that Moses offered them that Countrey in partition : but they did sue for it, as is written more plainly in the two and thirthe Chapter of Numeri. In so much as it is saide there, that Moses was angry when he sawe them so hastie to bee aforehand, for it was reaso that the whole land should first haue bene conquered, ere any partition had bin made. But therewithall it is saide, that the two Tribes of Gad and Ruben, excused themselves for y they had much Cattell, & it was a Countrey fit for grasing : & their desiring to be fetled, was not to separate theselues fro their brethren, or to bein better taking thā they. For they protested that they would goe with the rest of the people, to fight with them against all their enemies, and that they would neuer rest in the land that was assigned them, vntill all the residue were fetled as well as they. Vpon the making of this promise, Moses agreed vnto them. For before, he said vnto them, behold, ye increase the heape for your sinne. For heretofore when ye spied out the land, ye wouldnot enter into it at such time as the way was opened for you. And nowe ye bring new lets : it should seme ye seeke nothing but to resist God, and to shut his grace out of the doore. Moses then spake sharply after this sort against the children of Ruben and Gad, vntill they had shewed that their meaning was not to forsake their brethren, but to holde themselves still in the vnitie of the bodie, and in the meane while to leaue their Cattell at a stay, to the ende they might not bee too much combered with their wiues and children. And euen in this wee haue to marke the goodnesse of God. For had not he bene the defender of them that were to dwell in that Countrey, what had come of it : Behold, a sort of women and yong children are left behinde with their Cattell. Nowe we know that al the neighbours therabouts were desirous to destroy the people of Israel, and a generall hatred or rather burning fire was kindled euery where where against them. Therefore if the women and children had not bene preferred vnder the hand of God, and vnder his protection: had they not perished a hundred times? And yet being so forsaken, they were not troubled by any man. Nowe then the people ought by all meanes to haue acknowledged Gods grace herein, to strengthen themselves thereby against the time to come, and therewithal to vnderstand that there was nothing of their owne to boast themselves of, but that it was good reason that God should be praised, and they acknowledge that all that good came of God. Thus ye see what the intent of Moses was in this text.

And wee also in these dayes may well apply this lesson to our instructiō. For seeing that God did so preferre the women and little children, which were destitute of defence and succour, & inuironed with enemies that were their nexte neighbours, and which were able to haue swallowed them vp at one chop, as I haue tolde you before: let vs assure our selues that our safetie consisteth not in the multitude of worldly defences. Though we haue neither wall nor bank, nor any thing else to defend vs: yet if God haue the leading of vs, and take the charge of our safetie, wee haue ynough, so as wee may desie all our enemies. Contrariwise, if wee be destitute of Gods tuition: we may well prouide all the defences in the world: and yet wee shall bee neuer the neerer, all of it must needs tumble downe vpon our owne heades. Therefore let vs learne to call vpon our God, and to put our selues into his handes. And so far as he saith that he will receiue the poore that are in aduersitie: so as he promiseth to support those that are destitute of all helpe and succour of the world: let vs goe to him, assuring our selues that wee shall not haue the gate shut against vs. Be we once come thither: wee may boldly trust that he will maintaine vs. And although wee be hemmed in with enemies on all sides, and it may well seeme that we cannot escape their handes: yet will God be our defence, though there be nothing but vter weaknesse in vs. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember vpon this example.

Yet notwithstanding it is not to be doubted, but that herewithall Moses doeth couertly vpbraide the children of Ruben & Gad, with their ouer great hast. And although he accept their protestation, and thereupon doe graunt their request: yet were they not to bee commended in that they sought to haue their possessiō so soone in that Countrie. In deede their pretence was honest: but yet should they haue helde themselves still vnder Gods prouidence, and not haue attempted any thing. So then, as wee haue seene here before, if wee will haue God to blesse vs, we must hold our selues simply to his word, without attempting any thing at all, so as wee steppe not one pace forward to do any thing that he liketh not, ne vsuaue to the right hand or to the left. But the Rubenites would needes bee shifting a-forehand, and sought to settle themselves before it was meete for them. They asked not whither it were lawfull for them or no: they came not to

Moses with submission, saying, let it bee considered by generall aduise whether it be good or no: but they would needes determine the case: them selues at the first dash. Wee haue great store of Cattell say they: this Countrie is fit for vs: therefore it is meete that it should be giuen vs in partition. Herein they are not in any wise to bee excused. True it is that they were made owners of that fat and fruitfull soyle: but yet did not God blesse them in all points. It had bin better for the, specially for the halfe tribe of Manasses, to haue bene ioyned with their brethren, than to haue had a possessiō so by themselves. For by y meane they were cutt off from the tribe of Iuda: & they were bereft of y preheminēce of being matched w their brethren y children of Ioseph. And therefore if they had taried with the rest, and waited Gods leisure as they ought to haue done: it is certaine that they had bene blessed much more abundantly than they were, & consequently the others to. Wee see how the Prophets speake of the: The fat Bulls of Basan (say they) haue their eyes stopped w greace. Because they liued at their ease in a fruitfull & abundant Countrey, there was nothing but pryde and stubbornesse in them. Let vs learne therefore to forebare the seeking of our owne commodities, and not be self-willed in seasing vpon one thing or other: but let vs tarie for the blessing of God. Wee see howe it fell out with Lot: for he had the like respect in choosing to dwell in Sodom. That plaine was as an earthly Paradise: there was nothing but pleasure, there was nothing but fruitfulness in it. Lot gate him thither: but our Lorde made him to pay verie deare for his shotte. Although he was one of his chosen, although G O D piried him euen to the ende, and although hee made his children to feele his grace notwithstanding that they were begotten of inuice: yet was hee chastised as he deserved, for his tendering of his owne ease and commoditie too much. Herby wee bee taught to brydle our desires, and not to be ouergreddie vpon any fleshly commoditie when wee see we may haue it at aduantage. If God giue it vs, let vs accept it: but let vs beware that our affections be not too inordinate, as they cōmonly be. Thus much concerning the wordes wherewith Moses vpbraided the children of Gad & Ruben and the halfe tribe of Manasses.

Now herewithall we haue to note this saying of his, That he gaue them the Countrey in partition. for it should seeme that he taketh vpō him here to doe that which belonged to God. What was Moses? Was the land his to giue? By what title could he be named Lord of it? He is in that respect but as a member of y body. True it is that God honoured him so much, as to make him the head of his people: But in the meane while how is the Land named? Gods rest, that is to say, the land that God had assigned his people to rest in. It is not sayde to bee the rest of Moses, but the rest of G O D. Seeing then that this land was in the hande of G O D: shoulde Moses boast himselfe of the giuing thereof? Wee must not thinke this straunge: for when Gods seruaunts speake so, they chalendge not aught to themselves, but shewe in what trust they be put, and what charge is committed vnto them, by meanes whereof they separate not themselves from God. For a man be sent from a prince with authoritie to doe the things that hee hath in commission: hee taketh vpon him the name of the Prince as in way of borrowing, and saith, I ordeine this, I appoint this, I commaunde this, I will haue this executed. And he that speakeeth after that manner, meaneth not to derogate his masters authoritie. Euen so doe Gods seruauents: for they knowe that hee hath ordeined them as his instruments, and employeth them in his seruice, so as they doe nothing of themselves, their master is hee that ouer ruleth them. That is the cause why Moses saith, that hee hath giuen them their portion: yea verily, not taking himselfe as another mortal man, but as one whom God had set in his own place, and which did all things in the name of God. And so yee see what wee haue to beare in minde.

It is a verie profitable doctrine for vs: for it extendeth further than so. And for prooffe thereof, if wee had not the same rule: what would become of the gouernement of the Church? Wherefore are wee baptised, but to be washed from all our spottes, that wee may be pure and cleane before God, that wee may be members of Iesus Christ, & we may be clothed wth his righteousness, & (to be short) that we may be renewed by the holy ghost: Nowe, I yeth it in y<sup>e</sup> mortall man that baptiseth vs, to giue vs all these things? No, if we consider him but as a man in his owne peculiar person. But sith it is Gods will that the ministers of his word should baptise in his name: baptisme must needs haue that vertue notwithstanding that it be deliucted vs by the hande of a man. And againe, as touching the Lords supper, wee see howe our Lorde Iesus Christ doeth shew himselfe there to be the foode of our soules. Nowe is there any creature that can make vs partakers of so great a benefite? No surely. But it is certaine that the supper is not a vaine thing: therefore when we come to receiue it, wee must consider that the [minister though he be a] man is not separated from Iesus Christ. And in the preaching of Gods worde wee see the like. It is saide that the ministers are sent to enlighten the blinde, to deliuer prisoners, to forgiue sinnes, and to turne mens heartes. Howe so? for those are things that belong all onely vnto God. And in verie deede if a man should goe about to beare him of the least part of those things, it were an vtter defacing of his maiestie. For nothing is more peculiar to him than the forgiuing of sinnes. Likewise doeth he referue to himselfe the turning of mens heartes. Yet notwithstanding hee communicateth all those rules to such as he hath ordeined to beare abroad his worde: telling them that he separateth not himselfe from them, but rather that hee vseth them as his handes and instruments. And in this case men must not muse vpon the thing that they see, but they must lift vp their eyes aloft by faith. We see then what rule wee ought to drawe out of this text, where Moses saith that hee gaue the lande in possession. Namely that hee teareth not of his owne person to vaunt himselfe: but onely sheweth, that hee had put the tribes of Gad and Ruben, and the halfe tribe of Manasse, in possession of those two kingdomes by Gods authoritie, according to the commission that he had giuen him.

Howbeit to the ende that the profitableness of this doctrine may be the better knowne: let vs marke in one worde, that it expresseth vnto vs the power that is in Gods worde: namely that it is not a fleeting sounde, but that it hath speedy execution, accordingly as we see that when the Prophets threaten the citie Ierusalem, they say they haue besieged it and bearen it downe alreadie. And howe is that? By dreames and visions. This should seeme to be a plaine mockerie. Yea, but in the ende it appeared, that it was not a rolling of their tongues onely, but that they should not haue had a greater meane or power to raise the Citie of Ierusalem, though they had had a great hoste of men. For by what meanes did the enemies bring it to passe? By vertue of the Prophecies. So on the contrarie parte, when they speake of making the people to prosper: their manner of speeche is, that all impedimentes are remoued, and their enemies ouercome. And howe is that? Because Gods worde is vaine. So then, let vs vnderstande that it is greatlie to our profite, to be tolde that when Gods ministers speake, they cast not forth a fading sounde, but such a one as is matched with effecte: and therefore let vs be edified thereby to our saluation. Sith wee knowe that the remission of sinnes is not preached vnto vs in vaine: it ought to assure vs. Come wee to a Sermon? Is Gods grace offered vs? Is it tolde vs that Iesus Christ hath made amendes for vs, to ridde vs out of the cursednesse whercan wee were? When wee be certified of these things, it is all one as if they were put into our handes. Why so? For when GOD sendeth messengers to tell vs his will: hee matcheth such force therewithall, as that the effect is ioyned to the worde.

Likewise when hee threatmeth vs, let vs assure our selues that vengeance is in a readinesse, as saith Saule Paul. Let vs not thinke it a sport and daliance when wee be tolde of Gods curse and wrath against the despisers of the Gospell, and against the disobeyers of the same. Heereby wee see with what reuerence wee ought to resort to Sermons. Also wee see in what taking all these heathenish sort are, which come to Sermons as it were in scorn of God, with such brutishnesse as euen little children are ashamed of them, insonmuch that there is neither feare of God nor honestie in them. Let vs be well aduised to shunne such mens companies, and to abhorre them: assuring our selues that if wee learne not to mislike of them, wee shall be intangled with them by becomming like them. These (saye I) are the things which wee haue to remember, in that Moses went not to exalt himselfe to deface Gods glorie: but shewed that God wrought by him and by his means.

Furthermore, whereas he saith that the children of Manasses, that is to say the halfe tribe, together with the whole tribes of Ruben and Gad bounde themselves by the promise that is rehearsed in the booke of Numeri, to goe before the Loyde that is to say in his presence: it is well worth the marking: for it serueth to expresse the better, with what loyaltie they went to it. For if wee set not our eye vpon God: there will alwayes be some feynednesse in our promises, and in all our dealings, so as wee shall neuer goe to worke soundly and substantially. Wee knowe that naturally men are double harted, and that they paint and disguise their doings, insomuch that if it were possible for them, they would keepe no touch in any thing that they promise, longer than it were for their owne profite, or at leastwise vnlesse they were driuen to it for verie shame. To bee short, there will bee no faithfulness in vs, except GOD ouerlooke vs, and wee looke vp to him in all our doings. And that is the cause why the men that were assigned their possession, did sweare to their brethren, euen in Gods presence, that GOD might bee a witness to punish their leaudnesse, if there were any guile, feyning, or treacherie at all in their case.

Hereby wee bee warned, that whensoever wee make any bargaine or couenant: wee muste not onely haue ayme to the partie with whom wee haue to doe: but wee must also as it were set GOD among vs, and keepe our faith and promise to him that wee haue bounde our selues, as though GOD watched vs at euery stepp, and that wee coulde not so soone worke deceite towards any man, but that by and by GOD would stepp before vs to withstande it. That is the thing which wee haue to doe: but there are verie fewe of vs that thinke vpon it. For although the name of God bee called vpon, and solemne orthes taken, and promises made autentically ynough, yea and that there bee order of Lawe to make vs feeble his maiestie: yet doe most men shut their eyes, and in all the promises and orthes that are made, [commonly] there is nothing sought but to deceiue one another. He that is subtlest and fullest of shiftes, is the handfommiest man: and such kinde of dealing is esteemed as a vertue. And why? For euery man runnes gadding after his owne lustes and likings, yea & that in such wise, that they bee as blindfoldings to keepe vs from seeing God. Though wee thinke not vpon it now: yet will not God forget any of our deceites, spytes, trecheries, and fallhoodes which wee commit against men. For hee hath tolde vs, that when an othe is taken betweene man and man: his glorie is defaced and himselfe openly mocked, if the promise be broken. Therefore let vs bee wel assured that he will not put vp such wrong, & that although wee bee neuer so blinde, yet will not hee play the blinkarde on his side, but will note and marke euery whit of it to bring it to account. And so ye see what wee haue to marke heere for one point.

By way wee see, that none but such as make lawfull covenants can make the as in Gods sight. For as many as doe lewdly linke themselves together to helpe one another in naughtinesse, (as to confounde all right, to make wicked shiftes, to worke outrages, to oppresse men, or to maintaine themselves in their vnchristianesse): as manie (I say) as conspyre after that fashion, are all faine to seeke lurkingholes: they are loth to shewe themselves to God or to come in his presence: nay they must rather shrinke away from him, but they cannot. Yet notwithstanding, the wicked sort doe fall asleepe, when they make those shameful and detestable confederacies of theirs: they bee faine to holde themselves there as it were in the darke, and to shunne Gods presence as much as they can. So much the more then doth it stande vs on hande to remember this text, that in all our promises and in all our doings, wee may deale as in Gods sight, assuring our selues that hee is euer at hande to take notice of our couenants, and to beare witness of them, yea and to gouerne and direct all things aright, if wee proceede vprightly and soundly. And so ye see what wee haue to marke.

Nowe heere is yet moreouer a certaine vprightnesse to be kept, when Moses speaketh when he commaundeth the Rubenytes and Gadaytes to goe conquer the rest of the lande with their brethren, notwithstanding that they had their portion already beyonde Iordan. Heereby wee be warned, first that if God haue vnyted vs in one bodie or corporation: one part of vs must not withdrawe our selues from the charges [of the common weale,] as if wee would say, let vs exempt our selues, and let the rest shifte for themselves: but it behoueth euery man to imploy himselfe to the benefite of the whole state, and that hee which coulde shifte for himselfe alone, should not forbear to take part with his brethren, and to put vnder his shoulder (as they say) to beare a peece of the burthen. This might bee declared more fully: but a glance will serue our turne well ynough, and the cheefest matter is, that wee must put it well in practise. Then let vs marke well, that if GOD haue knitte vs into one bodie, wee must all doe the office of members, as wee see howe the foote serueth the hande, the hande the eye, and euery other part imployeth it selfe according to his seuerall proprietie and power, so as all redoundeth to the benefite of the whole.

Likewise muste wee obserue the same rightfull and reasonable order of dealing, when GOD hath set vs in one common weale. It was well knowne of the wretched Paynims, that there coulde bee no good ciuill order in the worlde, if euery man were giuen to his owne profite. If the hande should separate it selfe and refuse to serue the rest of the bodie, and the rest of the members also: Ye see there would bee a good sort of peeces: but in the meane while they should all die and of necessity perish.

perish. In like case is it with men when they will needes draw backe from the communion of life; which they ought to obserue, and no man think vpon the common profite, but take it to be sufficient that hee can profite himselfe: for in the ende all muſt needes goe to hauooke. But this is chiefly to be obserued in the spirituall gouernement of the Church, as Saint Paul sheweth it vs. For in the Church there is not onely a resemblance of mans bodie, but the sonne of God is our heade in verie deede. It is of him that wee bee, and of him haue wee grace and power, in such portion and measure as it pleaseth him to bestowe vpon vs. Seeing it is so: let vs learne to maintaine peace and brotherli-nesse among vs. And that wee may so doe: let euerie of vs yeelde himselfe to his neighbours, and let vs not be so wedded to our own peculiar aduantage, that we shoulde not take paine to pleasure all those with whom wee bee vni- ted. Neither let vs alledge, what haue I to doe with the bearing of such a burthen as shoulde bee too heaue for mee, and which I cannot well away with? Let vs beware that wee holde not backe after that sort, to maintaine our selues in yd- lenesse. For according to the abilitie that God giueth vs, so doth hee binde vs to serue our neighbours therewith. And why? For wee be al members of one bodie: there needeth none other reason to moue vs than that. So then, to be short wee cannot be of our Lord Iesus Christs flocke, vnlesse wee consider what he hath giuen vs, that wee may make the same profitable, and put it to the common edifying of the Church, as saith Saint Paul.

As touching worldly conuersation, let vs liue in such wise with men, that as wee receiue good by them, so wee also on our side may looke to do good to them: so as there may be a mutuall answerablenesse on both sides. Nowe it is certain that none of vs can forbeare his neighbours. Let a man bee of as good abilitie as he can wish, and yet neuertheless he must stande in neede of other mens seruice in many things. Nowe, when hee knoweth that hee hath such neede and necessary of other mens helpe: shoulde hee drawe backe from his neighbours, or bee so nyce that hee will beare no burthen, but be loth to take any paine for the common weale? [It is no reason.] For if they that serue him shoulde bee at the same point, and bee as peeuish and proud as hee: must it not needes bee that all shoulde goe to wrecke? Yes: and therefore let vs learne, that in as much as euen in the Church wee haue this bonde of seruing our neighbours: it behooueth likewise in respect of this present life and of all worldly affaires, to consider with our selues y<sup>n</sup> in as much as God maketh others to do vs good, and to profite vs diuers wayes, so as wee be succored by them: we also ought to render the like againe on our side.

Now as concerning the people of Israels case, there was a speciall consideration in their con- quering of the land of Chanaan. Why so? For it was not promised feuerally to the tribe of Iu- da, or to the tribe of Benjamin, or to any of the other tribes alone: but generally to the whole offspring of Abraham. Therefore it behoued this lande to bee conquered by them in com- mon, and that afterwarde Iottes shoulde bee cast for it, as was done in the ende by Iosua. But nowe that God commaundeth vs to follow one common trace, wee must applye this example to our selues, and consider that the same rule which is set downe heere, is giuen to vs also. As howe? Doeth God commaunde, that wee shoulde but euerie man feuerally for himselfe resist Sa- than, and proceede more and more in the Gos- pelt? Is it not a common lesson? [Yes.] Seeing then that God calleth vs so one with another, and will haue all to agree in one accord, like good melodie: it is not for vs to separate our selues any more a sinder. Wherefore let vs con- sider, that to aduance the kingdome of our Lorde Iesus Christ and the saluation of all his: to builde vp his Church, and to make his Gos- pelt to prosper and flourish euerie man must not onely worke alone by himselfe: but wee must also agree all in one, and drawe all by one lynne, and euery of vs streine himselfe to serue such as haue neede of his helpe. And so wee see, that all such as will needes bulde so alone by them- selues, doe but worke confusion. Of which sort there are that thinke themselves very able men, and that they coulde worke wonders to their owne seeming, in so much that they despise their neighbours, and woulde euen beare downe all other men before them to shew themselves va- liant fellows, and that they doe a hundred fold more than all the rest. And what cometh of such pride, but overthrow and confusion? Let vs marke well therefore, that wee shall neuer serue God by furthering of the gladtings of our saluation: vnlesse we haue the said concord, that we be readie and wel disposed to helpe eu- erie man his neighbour, and that there bee one common easing one of another. Thus yee see what we haue to remember further vpon this streine.

Now in conclusion it is saide heere, that Moses incorageth Iosua to be of good cheere, and to go through with the thing which he himselfe might not do, that is to wit, to conuey the people ouer Iordan, and to conquer all the lande of Chanaan. But first of all hee setteth before him the victories that the people had had against Og king of Basan, and Schon king of Helebon. Thou hast seene (saith he) how the Lord hath dealt with these two kings. He saith not, As you haue done to these two kings, [but as the Lorde hath done]. For as hath bin de- clared, here is no flattering of men, nor no tick- ling of their eares: for they bee but too forwarde already in taking more vpon them than be- longeth to them. Seeing then that men are so naturally giuen to selfeweening let vs vnder- stand that it is expedient for them to be meeke- ned, and to be bereft of all their pride and ios- tineſse, to the intent they may knowe that they haue nothing of their owne. But this cannot bee done, without making them to vnder- stande, that whatsoeuer they haue, they are beholden to Gods meeke grace for it. That is the cause why Moses saith expressely, Thou hast seene with thine eyes, what God hath done vnto these two kinges. As if he should say, If yee knowe not the power that God hath shewed you: of whom it is long? The matter is not darksome of it selfe, it is altogether visible and apparant. Therefore it must needs bee that your owne vnthankfulness hindereth you, and that your malice blindeth you. Seeing then that God hath made you to perceiue his goodnesse, euen as it were by eyesight: bee you mindfull of it continually.

But let vs marke, that Moses in incouraging Iosua, doth not onely exhort the whole people to giue thanks vnto God, and to praise him for the benefites that they had receiued of him alreddie; but also hartenthem for the time to come, to the ende they should not doubt but that God woulde goe through with the thing hee had begonne. And the manner of his speech sheweth it sufficiently. Thou hast seene (saith he) howe thy God hath succored & helped thee against those two kinges. As much shalt thou doe to all the kingdomes through which thou shalt passe. As if he should say, Yee haue seene trials enow alreddie of Gods goodnesse; and therefore yee cannot distrust him, but you must be too too vnthankfull. For he hath shewed you what his power is; it is not for a pang and away, hee hath shewed you that he is faithfull in all his promises. Nowe yee knowe what he hath promised to your fathers: therefore looke you for the performance of the things towardes you, which your fathers hoped for, and bee yee constant in it. Think not that your God is weary of doing you good, or that in proceesse & length of time hee waxeth vnable to bring the things to passe which he hath begun: no: but reach out your trust to the vitermost, & assure your selues that hee will likewise continue his goodnesse and power towards you. Thus see wee what Moses meant.

Howbeit forasmuch as the incombrances were great: see hath expressely to the people, Be ye not afraid: and vnto Iosua, Feare not. Wherein hee sheweth that wee must not measure Gods grace by our owne vnderstanding. For when things shall seeme to vs vnpossible: God will finde meanes to ouercome all things that are against him to the worldward, so as they shal not hinder him to bring all his matters to perfection, and to execute his determination.

But to the intent to gather the summe of the doctrine that is contained in this texte: let vs marke howe it is not without cause, that Moses directeth his speech to Iosua. For albeit that the doctrine belong to the whole bodie of the people: yet was it meete that Iosua should be incouraged, as heade and Captaine of the people: For it may happen that a people shall be well disposed: and yet marre all for want of good guiding, accordingly as wee see howe all things goe to nauocke and to wracke, when the heades and gouernours are not such as they ought to be, yea euen although there appeare good disposition in the people: insomuch that when things goe amisse, a man shall heare sighings and groanings, and euerie bodie seekes to goe the right way, so that if it lay in priuate mens powers to remedie disorders and vices, they woulde surely doe what they could. Two or three vnthrifts are ynough to trouble a whole common weale when they once set vpon it and the diuel drues them forward, if the gouernours set not stay in the matter. And therefore it is not for naught that Moses directeth his speech precisely to Iosua. For (as I saide) it importeth so much the more, y<sup>e</sup> such as are in publike authoritie should bee well disposed, that they may the better guide the whole bodie. But for asmuch as it shalbee spoken of yet more at large hereafter: I doe but touch the thing briefly, to haue a short conclusion of this text.

Furthermore whereas it is saide, That God which smote Sehon king of the Amorrites and Og king of Basan, will doe the like to all the kingdomes of the lande that he promised to Abraham: let vs marke (as I saide afore), that when God hath made vs to feele his gracious goodnesse: he will still giue vs courage for the time coming, to the ende wee may not doubt but hee will holde on continually: And that as we haue founde the force of his power by experience heretofore: so we may assure our selues of it to the ende: not doubting but that if wee doe as hee commaundeth vs, he will bring all our enterprises to good and happie issue, so long as they bee according to his will. For without that, wee should become too vnthankfull and churlith, burying his goodnesse towardes vs, and shutting our eyes, that wee might not see it. And if wee see such changes as may abath vs: let vs returne to that which I haue saide: that is to wit, that we must not measure Gods power by the worldly meanes that trouble vs, neither must we stande scanning after this sort, and saye, howe can that come to passe, how may that be possible? Let vs not put forth any such allegations: for wee must yeelde this praise vnto God, that although things be vnpossible to vs, although wee haue neuer so great daungers to passe, although things bee farre out of order as wee wote not where to become: yet will God prouide for them. Then let vs resort vnto God in that behalfe, acknowledging such power in him, that although all our wits faile vs, yet wee put the matter into his hande, assuring our selues that hee can bring it to passe. That is the thing which we haue to marke here. And without that, what woulde become of our saluation? Truc it is that God hath shewed himselfe heretofore to bee our guide and king, and therein wee haue the more cause to magnifie his grace. Neuertheless, when wee come to the point that we shoulde hope for Gods helpe, and that his succour shall not faile vs at our neede: wee must shut our eyes at all stoppes, and refer all things into his hande, waiting for the accomplishment of his promises. Seeing he hath bound himselfe to vs of his owne free goodnesse: let vs put him in trust with the euentes of the things that seeme vnpossible vnto vs. And if wee doe so, then may wee certainly thinke our selues safe against all the assaules of Sathan and all his champions. And though they practise all that that euer they can to ouerthrow vs: yet shal we not be as men discomfited and forlorne, but God will worke in such sort for vs, as wee shall not neede to feare but that he will bring our saluation to perfectnesse: and albeit that to our seeming it bee vnpollible to bee done, and that we cannot finde any way out by reason of the hindrances that let vs: yet will he alwayes make vs to ouercome them. Thus yee see how we ought to put this lesſon in vre.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to doe them away, and to correct them immediatly that we may obtaine forgiuenesse of them: and that for asmuch as wee cannot yeelde our selues so wholly to him, as hee might guide and gouerne vs according to his holy will: it may please him to ridde vs of all our wicked affections, and of all the lustes of our flesh, that wee may frame our selues vnto his righteouſnesse, and in the meane while be borne withall in our infirmities, vntill he haue taken vs hence to himselfe. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The xvij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the third Chapter.

23 And at the same time I prayed vnto the Lord, saying :

24 O Lord God, thou hast begun to shew thy seruant thy greatnesse and thy mightie hand. For what God is there in heauen or earth, that can doe according to thy workes, and according to thy mightinesse ?

25 I beseech thee let me goe and see the good lande that is beyond Iordan, and this goodly mountaine, and Libanus.

Deut. 1. 37.

To lde you heretofore that Moſes made mention how God had bereft him of the benefite and honour of entering into the land of promise, for the sinne of the people. Nowe he reherſeth the ſame matter againe, howbeit to another ende. For it was conuenient that the people ſhould be done to vnderſtande, that they ſhoulde not alwayes haue ſuch a leader. To the intent therefore that the exhortations which Moſes maketh, might be the better receiued, and the people take the better heede to them: hee telleth them that he muſt leaue them, and that he ſhall not haue leaue to paſſe ouer Iordan. That is his meaning, wherof I ſhal ſpeake more fully hereafter. In the meane ſeaſon, let vs ſee what he ſaith here. Firſt of all he reherſeth that he beſought god, that he might enter into the promiſed lande. But hee had alredie had the ſentence of condemnation, that hee might not goe. It ſhoulde ſeeme then that hee reſiſteth God as much as in him lyeth, and that hee cannot finde in his heart to admit his ſaying. And in deede wee cannot vterly excuſe him that hee did not amiſſe. For we cannot bee tickled with ſo ſmall a deſire contrarie to Gods will: but wee bee by and by blame worthe. But when wee be ſo bolde as to come vnto God, to make a requeſt cleane contrarie to his will: then is the offence double. And why? For the foundation of all our prayers is faith. But there can bee no faith without Gods promiſe. Who ſo then commeth to caſt out his pangs, & deſireth of God the thing that hee knoweth ſhall miſlike him: doth he not paſſe his bounds? Doth he not goe cleane contrarie to that which the rule of praying will beare? Yes. Now, this was ſeene in Moſes, and therefore it followeth that hee did amiſſe. And indeede the anſwere ſheweth it. For like as God was angry with him before, becauſe he had not glorified him in the ſtrife that the people moued for want of drinke: ſo is hee angry with him nowe againe. Though we had none other witneſſe, euen this ought to ſuffice vs, that God doeth expreſſly ſhutte the gate againſt him for the time to come, that he ſhoulde no more returne vnto him. Hereby wee bee done to vnderſtande, that wee muſt bee earneſt in repreſſing our deſires, and in bridling them. For hardly is there any man to bee founde, that euer yeelded himſelfe ſo pliable to obey God, as Moſes was, Let vs ſeeke on all ſides, [and yet ſhall we not finde one.] It is certaine that Moſes was an excellent mirrour of meekeneſſe, and ſuch a one as had his minde vterly brought downe, ſo as he ſought not to followe any thing which was not commaunded him from aboue. And yet for all that, it appeareth that hee coulde not ſo reſtraine and ouermaſter himſelfe; but that there was ſome exceſſe in his affections. If this befall to Moſes who had beene accuſtomed to obey God in all pointes: howe ſhall we do which haue profited ſo euill in that behalfe? So then, we ſee here a deede which ſheweth vs what the cheefe exerciſe and ſtudie of Gods children is: namely to ſubdue their affections, that it may not befall them to deſire any thing, but ſuch as they knowe doeth pleaſe GOD. For that is the onely rule whereby to diſcerne good from bad. Marke that for one point.

Moreouer wee muſt not ſtaie vpon the outwarde apparence. If wee haue a deſire to a thing, although the ſame ſeeme good and iuſt, yet muſt wee not thinke that it is therefore lawfull. For if wee looke vpon Moſes deſire, & euerie of vs will ſay it was holy. Yea and we maruell howe it was so refused, considering that hee spake not so much for himselfe, as for the comon profite of all the people. For his desire tended to none other ende, but that the people might haue beene the better stablished and confirmed in Gods grace. Hee sawe the vocation wherevnto hee had bene ordained, to bee most excellent; hee had executed it already by the space of fortie yeeres: hee sawe the hardest was yett behind: hee was acquainted with the peoples vices: hee knewe the power of mind that was giuen vnto himselfe: hee was sure hee had purchased greate credite nowe long agoe: Loe heere the causes why hee wished to haue entred into the land. For being a man of sixe-score yeeres olde, hee was not wedded to this present life. And besides all this, wee knowe that inasmuch as hee had bene taken vp heeretofore into the mountaine, and had tasted there of Gods glorie: he was not intangled with transitorie delightes, nor with any worldly thing. Yee see then that Moses had no respect to himselfe, but woulde faine haue accomplish'd his office, in setting the people in possession of the heritage that had bene promised them, and by that meane haue established the seruice of God in the holy lande. Who woulde not say that this was a good desire, considering howe it tended to the glorifying of GOD, and to the procuring of the welfare of the whole people? Loe heere the two principall endes where vnto the whole life of man shoulde tende. And yet notwithstanding, Moses did amisse. Why so? for hee resisted God. It ought to haue sufficed him, when hee had once hearde that GOD woulde not bee serued by him in that case. Albeit then that the desire that hee purpofeth bee excellent in it selfe, and ame at a good and rightfull ende: yet doeth it not faile to bee worthe of blame. The reason is, because hee submitted not himselfe to God.

Nowe then, wee see the thing that I saide afore: that is to wit, that wee may nowe and then haue faire colours to desire this or that: but in so doing wee may goe too farre, yea and indeede wee shall not obtaine our requestes. Why so? For obedience must goe before: and without that wee cannot builde, but to our ruine and confusion. And it is a thing verie requisite. For men cannot bridle themselues from being wise in their owne conceites: inasmuch that if wee take a thing to bee good: we cannot bee perswaded to the contrary, GOD cannot winne so much at our handes as to gette the masterie of vs. So much the more then behoueth it vs to take paine to holde our selues wholly in awe, to the end we build not any thing which God alloweth not, but that wee alwayes haue that marke before our eyes, and rest wholly vpon it.

Nowe if it bee so that the desires which of their owne nature are good, holie, and commendable, doe neuertheless becomee sinfull and blameworthy, when they aduance themselves against God: what are they when wee conuert euill things, and giue heade to a fleshly lustes? Wee see that the thing which GOD hath forbidden vs is euill, and yet notwithstanding wee take leaue to desire it: is this to bee excused? Nowe then, to the intent wee may take profite by this doctrine, let vs marke that although our desires to see to, are as good as cart bee: yet must wee abstaine from them vnto the God doe like of them. For at that ende muste wee beginne. And furthermore, that if wee ought to correct our desires, though there bee no likelihoode of euill in them: we ought much more to bee well aduised that wee cast not forth our bubbles when wee be tempted to euill, and when wee be caried away to fleshly lustes. All that geere must be killed starke deade, seeing it is not lawfull for vs euen to wish the thing that is good, except wee haue leaue of God. But we must then specially obserue this lesson, when wee goe about to pray: for as I haue saide already, the foundation of all our prayers is faith: and what importeth that? Euen that we should heare God speake. If wee pray at all aduenture, doubting whether wee shall obtaine the thing that wee require or no: it is but hypocricie and it shall not boote vs at all, saith the holy scripture. It standeth vs then in hande, to bee well assured when wee come before God, so as wee beleeue certainly that our praying is not in vaine, and that wee shall not bee disappointed of the thing that wee require. And that is the point where in the prayers of the Christians doe differre from the prayers of the infidelles. For the infidelles and vnbeleueers may well flee vnto God, and craue this and that at his hande: but what for that? they bee euer wauering, and wote not whether they shall obtaine or no. For they depende not vpon the promises. But as for vs, wee must assure our selues of the loue of our God, & that he is much redier to graunt than wee be to require, yea and that hee is so pitifull and hath such a respect of our miseries and necessitie to relieue them, that hee euen preuenteth vs. Wee must bee thoroughly perswaded of this when wee pray. But how shall we knowe it? Wee must not beare our selues on hande that wee holde God bounde vnto vs, and that wee shall make him to graunt all our desires: for what a malapertnesse were that? And what an honouring of God were it, if euerie man shoulde say, I throwe God will do whatsoever I list to communde him? But we must rest vpon his promises. Yee see then that faith is requisite in our prayers: that is to wit, that no man thrust forth himselfe vpon his owne heade, but that hauing the promise whereby God alureth vs vnto him, wee goe vnto him boldly, nor doubting but that hee will keepe touch with vs. Seeing it is so: wee must note nowe that all our praers are faultie, if they be not ruled by the wil of God. For when wee presume to aske of him whatsoever comes in our heade, there is no promise for vs to trust vnto in going to it so without aduise. And therefore for asmuch as we passe our bounds, wee be neuer a whit furthered by it. Thus ye see that in praying we must alwayes consider what god permittech vs, & what his will is y

we shoulde aske of him : and that wee must euer haue this modestie and sobertnesse with vs to aske counsaile of him, as though his spirit spake in vs, and indyted vnto vs the verie forme of our prayer. And for that cause hath our Lorde Iesus Christ made as it were a summe of all the requestes which wee ought to make vnto God.
 For although wee bee not tyed to those words, to say hollowed bee the name of God, his kingdome come, his will bee done, &c. yet must we referre all our desires, wishes and requestes to those fixe articles, which are conteyned in the praier that our Lord Iesus Christ hath giuen vnto vs. And although the Fathers of olde time had not the same rule; yet were they alwayes gouerned by Gods spirite, to keepe them from wandering from the things that are taught vs at this day, so as all their prayers were conformable to the rule that our Lorde Iesus Christ hath giuen vs. Nowe then we see, that all such as take leaue to pray what they list, doe not direct themselves to God as they ought to doe, and therefore are they likewise disappointed of their desires. And for the same cause is it, that I haue tolde you, that in all our prayers we must be well aduised, that the things bee lawfull according to Gods worde. But nowe there are some things which God hath promised without exception, and those wee may demaunde without condition. Whensoever we haue offended him, (which thing we neuer cease to doe) wee must resort to the remedie, praying God to forgive vs our finnes and to shewe vs mercie. God hath assured vs that hee is redie to doe it. And seeing he hath promised it, our com-ming to him to seeke fauour must not bee as though we wilit not what would be the ende of our request: but wee must be fully resolu'd that hee will shewe vs fauour indeede. Yet notwithstanding, if therewithall wee desire him to releaue his chastisements: that is nowe another thing. For hee may well pardon our fautes, but yet in the meane while hee wil not cease to subdue vs, vntill he perceiue that our vices are corrected. I meane not as the Papists doe, namely that God pardoneth the fault, and reteineth the punishment still, as they haue surmised, saying that when God forgiueth men their finnes, hee ceaseth not in the meane while to execute his rigor vpon them as a iudge. It is nothing so. But God chastiseth vs for our finnes after hee hath forgiuen them, howbeit, not in way of pur-ishment, but to make vs looke better to our selues & to be warer hereafter, so as we become not so vnconstant as to returne to the selfe same fault againe. Then if God perceiuing vs to haue neede to be tamed, doe list to chastise vs: if we require of him simply & without condition, that he should by and by withdraw his hand: that request were out of square. For why? He perchance sendeth vs some sicknes or some other crosse, & hee knoweth that it is not ynough for vs to bee sicke a two or three dayes; and therefore the disease must continue and increase, vntill wee bee thoroughly clenfed of it. Therefore when we make any requestes vnto God, he must haue the moderating of them. Why? For we know not his will knowe not what is meete for mee, neither hath God giuen me any promise of it: nowe must I in this case stay my selfe, and referre my selfe to God in praying to him, I must patiently waite for such issue as he shall thinke good, and I must yeelde my selfe as a prisoner wholly to his will, vtterly forsaking all mine owne affections. Now then we see that where wee be not sure of Gods will: wee must not warrant our selues any thing vpon our owne heades, but wee must goe to it with condition, that God shall doe to vs as hee listeth. And therewithall wee must pray him to make vs thinke wel of al his doings, and to deale so with vs as we may agree there vnto: howbeit, not as insouled, but of our owne accorde.

 Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this example of Moses. Sith it is so: let vs beware that we pray not for any thing, which we knowe doth displease God and is condemned of him.
 As howe? If we should desire him that we might lue euer in this world: we knowe we were created to another ende, yea and we cannot be his children, but we must be as pilgrims in this world, as saith the Apostle. Seeing it is so: he that should desire to lue alwayes here, should renounce the kingdom of heauen, separate himself from god, and barre himselfe from all access vnto him.
 So then yee see heere a thing that were cleane contrarie to the manner of praying aright: as much is to be saide of all our sinfull lustes. We knowe what God hath forbidden vs: if we deale to the contrarie, is it not as if wee should play the chased bulles or wilde beastes? And suppose wee that such manner of praying prouoketh not Gods vengeance against vs? Is it not a heynous treason to him, seeing we cannot deniue to abuse his name more falsly? Therefore wee must alwayes looke wel about vs. Seeing the case standeth vpon the finding out of the will of our God: wee must (I say) be well aduised what he promisseth vs, & then shall we haue our requests graunted vs.

Yet notwithstanding wee haue to marke, that when Moses desired God that hee might goe ouer Iordan: hee did it not wilfully of purpose to disobey God. For hee had humbly receiued the condemnation that wee saue, whereby G O D had banished him from entering into the lande of promise: but as nowe he forgetteth himselfe, and this escapeth from him. When as wee see this, let vs marke that wee had neede to bee so much the more diligent in examining our owne wishes, to wite whether they bee conformable to Gods wil, and squared throughout by the rule of his worde or no. For wee may well proteste that our intent is to bee subiect to God, and wee may well say it without dissimulation: but yet in the meane time wee shall not cease to bee intangled in wandering imaginations, and our wittes shall vanish away. If Moses being a man wholly bent to obey G O D, were so farre ouerseen, as to confounde himselfe in his owne request: what shall wee doe? For wee haue a great sort of thicke and darke cloudes, which dimme our fight that wee cannot fee cleare. And therefore let vs sharpen our wittes, that we may consider what is lawfull for vs to demaunde with godlinesse, and what liketh God according as hee shall haue declared it vnto vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to beare in minde. And if wee haue chaunce at any time to ouerthoote our selues through heate, and to require the thing which wee cannot tell whether wee shoulde obtaine or no: let vs by and by correct it with this addition, My God, thy will bee done. As for example, A man hath his childre or his wife sicke, or he is in some other perplexitie: Alas my God (saith hee), and hee casteth forth some vehement affection, ah my God, wilt not thou pittie mee? must I bee thus afflicted with extreme? Well, when hee hath made this request, he must acknowledge that there is a fault in it. And let vs not excuse our selues by saying, As for mee, I neuer meant to withstand God or his will: but when wee once knowe the fault, let vs goe and adde this correction, Alas my God, indeede: such is my desire, that thou knowest to what end it is: but yet for all that, it becommeth me to yeelde thee thy principall seruice which thou preferrest before all others: that is to wit, obedience, so as I humble myself wholly in this case vnder thy hande. Euen so Lorde, dispose thou of mee and of all mine at thine owne pleasure. Ye see then that in examining our requests, when we doubt whether God like of them or no: we must enter into this consideration, that God ought to ouerrule vs, that we may yeeld him his deserued honour, and all our affections bee so bridled, as he may haue the masterie of vs. That is the true manner of praying, if we intend to be hearde.

But by the way we must also marke the thing that is set downe here. Moses to the intent to obtaine his request, saith, Lorde thou hast begun to shewe thy seruants the highnesse of thy mightie hande. When Moses speaketh after that fashion, it is a kinde of protesting that his putting of himselfe forth to pray, is not for any seruice that he hath done to God: hee alledgeth not any such thing. No: but he protesteth that God had shewed him fauour alreadie, and therefore he desireth him to continue it still. And it is a point that wee ought to marke well, namely that when we come vnto God, the best reason that wee can alledge vnto him, to winne our requests at his hande, is to say, alas Lorde, wee be exceedingly bound vnto thee alreadie. If a mortall man haue done vs a good turne, we may well be ashamed to be alwayes hanging vpon him: but it is not so towards God: For he neuer ceaseth to do vs good: neither can hee be dreemed drie in doing good, as creatures should. And yet notwithstanding, if wee should returne three or foure times to a man that hath done vs good or pleased vs, we might say: Sir, the goodness that you haue shewed mee heretofore, for the which I think myselfe greatly bound vnto you, maketh me bold to repaire vnto you againe, quen to increase my dette to you the more. If wee might say so to mortall men: much more ought wee to say it vnto God, for vnto him wee can alledge no defects, nor any thing else of our owne. Therefore wee must followe that which is shewed vs heere, saying: Lorde, seeing thou hast begunne to do vs good, goethrough with it. For God bindeth himselfe to vs in doing vs good: not that he is tyed to it of necessitie, we must not step to him with such iustinesse as though hee owed vs any thing: but after as we haue felt the experience of his goodness and grace towards vs: wee may bee so much the more familiar with him. And that is the thing whereon wee must cast our eye: and it is also the thing wherein GOD is rightly glorified by vs. When I come vnto him and say, Ah Lorde, true it is that nothing I am, nor nothing I can: I haue nothing in mee but vnto naughtinesse: neuertheless, forasmuch as I haue found thee bountifull to me heretofore, & thou hast shewed thy selfe good to me so many wayes: therefore doe I resort vnto thee still. Beholde, by my so doing, GOD (say I) is glorified, both for the time present and for the time to come. And it is not onely Moses that hath vsed this manner of praying: Wee see it was common among all the auncient fathers. Howe often see wee it vsed in the Psalmes: and wee see also that Iacob did the like. Lorde (saith hee) I am stuffed full of thy benefites: when I consider the good that thou hast done mee, I cannot but acknowledge that thou hast vsed wonderfull mercie towards mee: and yet for all that, I am faine nowe to repayre to thee still. Wherefore let vs learne, that if Moses being a man of GOD, yea and such a one as had so excellent recorde of the holy Ghost, alledged not any defectes of his, ne vaunted of any worthinesse of his owne parte, in his praying vnto GOD: much more ought wee to confesse that wee be not worthe to open our lippes vnto him: and to stoope and to discharge our selues of all selfestimation when wee come vnto him, so as wee presume not vpon any thing that is in our selues. Marke that for one point.

But though wee be vnworthe to pray: wee haue will wherewith to imbolden vs, by reason of the greate number of benefites that wee haue receiued at Gods hande. For his reaching out of his hande vnto vs, is not to doe vs good for one day, but to continue, and to giue vs access to resort to him againe to morrowe. In so much that when GOD hath once bene gracious to vs, thereby hee sheweth that hee woulde haue vs to come still to him, seeing hee hath shewed vs the way and opened vs the gate.

Sothen, let vs learne to call to minde the great number of benefites, whereby GOD hath vttered his loue towards vs, to strengthen our selues withall, that wee may take heart to warrant our selues by true faith, that hee will heere vs at our neede. And surely, as for them that minde not Gods benefites: they bee at their wittes end when they come to the pinche. And the same is the verie cause why wee be so colde in praying, and why we

goe to it so vnlustily, not knowing whether wee shall obtaine aught or no, or whether our prayers shall bee in vaine and vnprofitable or no. Why so? For wee berthinke vs not of the promises that G O D hath made vs, and (as yee would say) of the haunces which he hath giuen vs. He hath assured vs oftentimes that wee shall neuer come vnto him amisse: and we thinke not vpon it at all. Our owne vnthankfulnesse therefore, is the let that wee haue not a true and right trust in him, and that wee cannot repaire vnto him to say, Lord, I doubt not but thou art mercifull to mee, and admittest mee alwaies vnto thee, but not for any worthinesse of mine. Neuertheless: I beseeche thee remember the benefites that I haue receiued at thy hand: for it is vpon that trust that I come vnto thee: hoping that as thou hast shewed thy selfe gracious and bountifull to mee heretofore, so thou wilt continue still vnto the ende. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember in that Moses saith, Lord thou hast begun to shewe thy seruants the highnesse of thy mightie arme.

Now Moses speaketh here expressly of Gods highnesse and greatnesse, and of the mightie power of his hand. As if he should say, that God had made him to seele an extraordinarie working, and that the grace whereby hee was induced to pray vnto G O D, was a speciall one about that which euerie man feeleth. For God had vttered an vnaccustomed manner of power, so as they were no common things which he shewed vnto Moses. That then was y cause why he desired to bee brought into the lande of promise. As if he had saide, My God, thou knowest that thou hast chosen mee, not as some other person among vs, but as an elect vessel: & therefore so farre as thou hast vsed mee in thy seruice, nowe vouchsafe to bring me into the land. And herein wee see, that Moses desired this, not so much for his owne sake, as for the whole peoples sakes, that all of them might haue sared the better by it. For it was a thing that might haue troubled y weaklings, to see the leader of y people die. Ye see they were a people that were ouerbold, at leastwise in rashnesse: but yet when they should obey God, they were seene to be cowardly ynough: and when Moses died, it was ynough to haue made them vtterly vnweeldie, inso much as it might haue caused great offence among them. What meant this [might they haue saide?] The Lorde was determined to put vs in possession of the lande: and why doeth he nowe bereaue vs of him whom he had ordeined to bee our guide? Moses hath bene his lieutenent vnto this houre, and nowe he goeth away to die. It should seme then that God had altered his minde, and intended not to goe through with the thing he had begun. Moses had an eye to all this. And therefore, if we looke no further, we see so much y more, that his desire was good and holy: but his fault was, that being condemned of God, whereas he ought to haue held him to it and not to haue gone any further to reply against it: he did it not.

is hee in heauen or earth, that hath done according to thy workes, and according to thy mightie power? This manner of speache to say, What God is he in heauen or earth, seemeth perchance to be fond. For is there any other G O D, than hee that had published his lawe by the hand of Moses? If hee alone be God, then is this comparifon superfluous, yea and euen fonde; and to no purpose. But wee haue to note that in speaking so, Moses meant not that there is a multitude of Gods, so as euerie of them wrought according to his owne abilitie and power, and that the G O D of Israel surmounted all the rest, and was mightier than they all: Moses had no such diuclish superstitiō in his head. For he knew well ynough y there is but only one God, euen he that had reuealed himselfe to their father Abraham, the vrie same which had shewed by his deedes, that he is y euerlasting & vnchangeable God: but he spake so as in respect of men. Although men do generally confesse that all good commeth of God: yet cease they not to forge idols after their owne fancie: inso much y in sted of resorting to the true God that made heauen & earth, which reuealed himselfe to the fathers: they wander away after their own imaginations (as saith S. Paul,) and fall to deuising of they were not what. As soone as we conceiue any whit of the diuine Maiestie: by and by wee bee gadding after idols, and turne away from the liuing God. And thereupon came it that euerie nation had his God. If man had asked them, what intende ye to doe, yee wretched foules? [they would haue answered,] wee intende to serue God. But yer for all that, they worshipped idols. And why? For they turned away from the simple essence of God; and worshipped the things which they had set vp in their owne dotages and foolish conceits. According wherunto, when any of the had any welfare or prosperitie, they would say, God be praised, God hath done vs this good turne: but in the meane while they fathered all vpon their idols. If a mā had saide to the Egyptians in the time of Moses, now sirs ye haue had a fruitfull yeere, ye haue gotten in good store of Corne and Wine, and whence comes all this? [They would haue answered,] it is G O D that hath helped vs. And yet notwithstanding they worshipped an Oxe, they worshipped brute bestes, yea and euen Serpentes and the herbes of the earth. It was as brutish a kinde of dealing as might be. Although this people was sharpe witted and subtle about all others: yet were they become so brutish, that they gaue ouer themselves to all the abominations of the worlde. To bee shorte, when they had either peace, or health, or abundance of wealth: they would say God, God: the worde God ran trotting euerywhere: But in the meane while euerie man had a God by himselfe. Such a one was Baal Peor (of whom we shall speake hereafter) which was the G O D of the Ammonites. Thus did Idolatrie rigne euery where, and euerie man had his Patrons and gods by himselfe. In consideration wherof Moses saith, Of a truth Lorde, men abuse thy benefites,

Rom. 1. 21.

and when thou doest them good, (as in deede all proceedeth from thy hand:) they do vterly forget it, or marre it, or belieue it. For they beare themselves on hande that they receive those things of their Gods, that is to say of their idols, which are but leasings and dotages. And so are men vterly ouerfeene. But Lord, how fouer the world fareth, thou hast vttered such a power-wardes vs, as all the Heathen must needes haue their mouthes stopped, so as they cannot saye, These are Gods that haue wrought as great miracles as the God of Israel. If thy deliuering of thy people bee compared with all the benefites which thou hast bestowed vpon men: it will appere that thou art the fouer eigne God, & that thou hast shewed forth thy mightie arme in such wise, as all other Gods must needes be cast down. Thus ye see what Moses meaning was. And the Scripture speaketh often after that maner, as though it graunted men their error. As if we should say, put the case, or admit: not that it is so in deede, but to come by degrees, to the thing that is to be proued. As for example: if we haue to doe with some Papist: to the intent wee may reache him according to his rawnesse, wee will say: Go to, in praying vnto God, let the one side haue Iesus Christ for their aduocate, and let the other side haue the Virgin Marie with the rest of their Heefaints and Sheefaints: and let vs see which is the better. For when a man comes vnto God, and seeth Iesus Christ before him: he is assured by the holy scripture, that it is Christs office to bee the meane betweene God and him, and to make intercession for him. And so, hee that prayeth in the name of Iesus Christ, is thoroughly sure that he goeth not to worke at all aduenture. But as for him that takes the Virgin Marie or any other patronne, he shall bee beguiled when he thinks himselfe most sure to be heard: for why, he hath no warrant. Now then, which is best? Wee speake after that maner to the Papistes, not that wee meane it is lawfull to haue patrones: for then should we abuse Gods name. It is said, that in praying wee must bring nothing of our owne head, but faith must be our foreleader, and it is as the key to open vs y gate. Neurtherlesse wee vse such maner of speache to the vnbeleeting and ignorant sort, to draw them by litle and litle. So then, Moses maketh not comparison of the God of Israel, as though hee had conceiued in his imagination that there was a swarme of Gods, and that euerie of them wrought according to his abilitie: No: he knew well ynough that there is but onely one God: but forasmuch as he sawe men ouershoot them felues in that behalfe: he saith that although all other Nations imagine themselves to receiue benefites at the handes of their Gods: yet notwithstanding, the God of Israel had vttered himselfe with such power, as he onely ought to bee worshipped, and men might well vnderstande that none reigneth but onely he, and that the government of heauen and earth belongeth to none but onely to him, and all men might see by the myracles which he had wrought, that all creatures are in his hande. That then was the meaning of Moses.

Let vs marke further, that when the fathers of olde time, did by reason hereof despise idols and all those that worshipped them: God did shewe himselfe to them also, after a mightie fashion. Their saying is, where are the Gods that can doe like the God of Israel, which hath vttered such a mightie power? And in deede wee see no visible substance of God: but his will is to haue vs knowe him by his shewing of himselfe in his workes: that is the way that he will haue vs to conceiue him. Seeing then that God hath vttered his mightie power: it is our ductie to magnifie him and to worship him in such sorte, as wee desie all the idols that men haue forged to themselves, and laugh all the things to scorn that haue bene brought in by the world. For why, there is nothing but vanitie and leasning in them. But forasmuch as wee be not of sufficient capacitie to iudge of Gods workes, though they be present afore vs, ne can come right vnto him, except he giue vs thither by his worde: let vs learne to hold vs felues to this doctrine. Therefore whensoever God maketh vs to perceiue his mightie power: let vs bethinke vs of our owne rudenesse and infirmitie, and by and by take his worde to vs, to exercise vs therein. And let vs not play the Paynims and wretched Infidels, who are harping vpon y word God with their mouth, and in the meane runne trotting vp and downe knowing not what God is in deede. Let vs then followe the infallible trueth. And seeing that God hath reuealed himselfe vnto vs, yea euen in such sort as wee can not be deceiued nor beguiled: let vs learne to stay ther vpon, and to holde vs to it throughout. Let vs not bee so fond headed, as not to profite our felues by the benefites that God bestoweth dayly vpon vs, and by the which he will be glorified: let all superstition and Idolatrie bee beaten downe, and let Gods trueth haue full scope: let all inuentions of men cease, and let the world know which is the liuing God. Thus ye see after what maner wee must proceede: that is to wit, when wee once know God, wee must worship him, wee must goe to the perfection, which is onely he, and whatsoever is set vp on the contrarye side against him, it must bee brought to naught. For it is not possible for vs to worship God as wee should doe: except wee put all things vnder foote, which men haue forged and imagined in their owne braine. Wherefore let vs learne to exalt him in such wise, as nothing may impeach or darken his prehemience. And forasmuch as wee knowe not of our felues howe wee should glorifie God to yeeld him his deserued honour: let vs take his worde for our guide, and fetch light at his trueth which is in the holy scripture, to the ende wee may knowe that there is none but onely God to whom we ought to resort, and that it is onely he to whom wee must yeeld all praise and thanksgiving.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done heretofore, that we may returne vnto him with true repentance: and that

forasmuch as our nature is so corrupted, we may fight without ceasing against our owne desires, and holde them in such awe, as we may seeke nothing at his hand but that which wee knowe that he alloweth and liketh off: not doubting but that in the meane while he will shewe himselfe bountifull towards vs in providing of all things for vs which are meete for vs and neces-sarie to our saluation, so as we may learne to submit our selues to him, glorifying him, and giuing him thanks for all his benefices, in such wise as his bounteousnesse be not buried, but euery of vs acknowledge more and more howe much he is bound vnto him, and yeelde him praise for the same. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also, &c.

On Fryday the x. day of May. 1555.

The xxiiij. Sermon which is the fourth vpon the third Chapter.

26 And the Lord God was angrie with mee for your sakes, and heard mee not, but said vnto mee, be contented, speake no more to mee of this matter.

27 Get thee vp to the top of Phasga, and lift vp thine eyes towardes the West, the North, the South and the East: and beholde with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go ouer this fordan, 28 But charge Iosua, and strengthen him, and imbolden him: for hee shall goe ouer before the people, & put them in possession of the land which thou shalt see.

29 And so we abode in the valley againt Beth-phogor.

Told you yesterday, how it was not any fleshly lust that moued Moses to desire to goe into the promised land, but a holy zeale, to the ende that y people might haue bene the better confirmed in the grace of God. And that it is so, a man may gather by this speache, where he desireth expressly to see the good Mountaine and the Libanus. For it is verie certaine, that Ierusalem & the Countrie about it, were neither the best, nor the fairest, nor the fruitifullest of all Iurie. There were other soyles, which were both richer and pleasanter also. And yet doeth Moses preferre Libanus and the good Mountaine before all the rest. And no doubt but he meaneth the Mountaine Morea. Wee see then that he rested wholly vpon the things that were spirituall, because God had reuealed vnto him that the Temple should bee buildd there, & that it was the place which God had chosen to bee worshipped and called vpon there. That was the cause why he set all his minde vpon it. And therefore let vs marke, that Moses desired not to enter into that land, to fill his belly there, or to liue in delight and pleasure there: but onely to stirre vp himselfe the more to knowe Gods grace, which he had tasted alreadie in spirit, and likewise to help the people by his example. Yet for all this, he is refused, howbeit not in such wise as if God had vterly reiected him: but as in respect that hee intended to chastise him by depriving him of a temporall benefice. And thereby we be yet more confirmed in the thing that was treated of yesterday: that is to wit, that albeit our affections be not alwaies wicked, yet they shall not alwaies be graunted vs, when God intendeth to humble vs. For sometimes we may haue offended him:

and he must be faine to cut vs off from his benefices. True it is that our saluation abydeth alwaies certaine: but as for our present state, it appeareth so farre as wee can see, in such that whereas God made vs to feele his fauour most abundantly and in verie large measure: we haue but a small peece of it. If this befall to Moses. let not vs thinke it straunge if God deale after the same maner with vs.

10 Nowe whereas Moses saith That he was not heard: it is to be referred to this speciall sute of his. For God doeth neuer quite shake off his faithfull ones when they call vpon him, at leastwise generally: for he is alwayes mercifull to them, and their praying to him is not in vaine. But yet for all that, he graunteth them not euery particular thing that they aske of him. It may so happe that a faithfull man, shall make some request in his prayer vnto God, (yea, for as was said yesterday, there is not a harder thing than to bridle our selues in such sort, as wee passe not our boundes: ) there may some such request (I say) slip from a faithfull man, as shall bee good in it selfe, and yet notwithstanding, God shall not vouchsafe to graunt it. Then is he not heard in that behalfe: but yet shall not his prayer bee vaine and vnprofitable. For though he obtaine not in that point: yet ceaseth he not to bee in Gods fauour, neither doeth God faile to regarde his necessities. So then let vs note, that all the prayer of Moses was not reiected at Gods hand, as though he had obtained nothing at all of him: but onely as touching that point, wherein it be-houed him to haue deniall at Gods hand. That is the thing which he meant here.

But it is said expressly, That the Lord was angrie with him for the peoples sake, as we haue seene Deut. 1. 37 alreadie heretofore. Wherein he meaneth not altogether to iustifie himselfe : but he doeth it to the end that the people should finde their owne fault, and humble themselues vnto God. If Moses had meant to vphold that he was not in any fault, nor blame worthy : he had couertly accused God. For is it written, that he that sinneth shall beare his owne punishment. Then must it needes bee, that Moses was not cleare : or else that God did him wrong in punishing him for the peoples sake. But I haue declared heretofore, that he glorified not God as hee ought to haue done. In deede this appeareth not by the storie: for it should seeme there, that he did his ducie as well as could be wished: but only God is the competent iudge thereof. Although Moses could not be condemned by his wordes, nor by any outward signe: it is ynough that God findeth fault with him, and auoweth that he yeelded him not his due honour. Ye see then that Moses was faultie : and that Gods banishing of him out of the lande of promise, was for his offences sake, so as he coulde not say that he had not deserued such punishment.

Why then doeth he lay the blame vpon the people? As I haide afore, it is not to cleare himselfe, but to make the people to knowe their owne euill dealing: yea and also to consider, that seeing Moses being so excellent a man, and a man chosen of God, did suffer such reproch and dishonour: they themselues ought to be the more cast downe. Thereby then the people is warned to thinke the better vpon their owne faulte. And in verie deede this offence of theirs was verie grievous and exceeding great. For we knowe that Moses had an earnest zeale to serue God, and that it was his whole seeking. Neuerthelesse the murmuring that rose among the people for want of water, was as a tempest to carie Moses away. Beholde, Moses is as a rocke, he is wholly fetled in Gods seruice : and therefore it must needes be that the peoples rising in vpror was with horrible violence, euen as if a rocke were shaken with some tempest. And so wee see that the people were vtterly destitute of all patience and as good as starke mad, and that it could not be but that the diuell possessed them, seeing that the fire of it did euen iudge Moses. Also this punishment of his sheweth how great the peoples offence was. What had Moses done? For his owne part he desireth nothing but to liue & die in glorifying God. And yet notwithstanding, God setteth a marke of infamie vpon him for all ages to see, in restraining him out of the promised land. Sith it is so : what punishment doe the people deserue, which were the cause of the mischiefe and the chiefe authors thereof?

Nowe to apply this doctrine to our vse, let vs take good heede that we driue not others to doe amisse, least the whole blame light vpon our owne neckes. Not that our thrusting of any man out of the way can quit him: for God will neuerthelesse correct him for it : but howsoeuer the world goe, we shall be gualue of al the sinnes that we haue occasioned. This ought well to bridle vs, to the end that no cause of stumbling proceede from vs. And besides this, let vs consider that if God haue giuen vs gouernours that labour to discharge their duties: if we vexe them in such sorte as they swaue or start aside from the right way: wee shall yeeld account of it before God, and at the last his curse will light vpon our heades. Hereby all folkes are warned to liue simply & peaceably in obedience to their superiors, specially when they see them disposed to serue God: to the end that they may take courage, and continue & increase in goodnesse. And if we fall to raising of trouble and disorder: surely if they that haue committed but halfe a fault be corrected, wee shall bee double punished, and answer for all the inconuenience, as of a tructh wee deserue well to bee charged with it before God. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke vpon that speach, where Moses telleth the people againe, how it was for their sakes that y Lord was angrie with him.

Nowe let vs returne to the matter which wee beganne withall: that is to wit, that although GOD chastised Moses by bereauing him of a temporall benefite: yet was that no impeachment to his saluation. And so meaneth he by these wordes, Be contented, and speake no more to mee of this matter. In saying be contented: he doeth him to vnderstande that he hath wherewith to content him, forasmuch as God is still mercifull to him, & acknowledgeth him for one of his, and taketh him still as of his householde, & casteth him not out of his kingdome. Seeing that all these things abide vnto him still: hee sheweth him that he ought to rest without greening of himselfe ouermuch. And it is a very notable and profitable point: namely, that we ought not to be too sorrowful and grieued out of measure, so long as GOD bereaue vs not of the substance of our saluation. Wee heare what answer Saint Paule had, when he was afflicted, yea and euen buffetted by Satan, and God had cast him downe in such sorte, that he was as one at the point to bee troden vnder foot. Now he besought God to be deliuered from such temptations: but answeris made him at Gods hand, Let my grace suffice thee. GOD telleth him hee will assist him, but as for the comberance, he must beare it still. Therefore let vs learne to put a difference betweene the things that are of the substance of our saluation, and the appurtenances which are in deede the tokens of Gods loue and goodnesse, but yet may bee forborne of vs whesoeuer God thinketh good, whether it be to chastise vs, or to trie our patience, or to any other purpose, that he deale so with vs. As for example: the things y are of the substance of our saluation are these: that God forgie vs our sinnes, that he keepe vs vnder his protection, y he dwell in vs by his holy spirit, y the light which he hath giuen vs by his Gospel be not queched, & that we may take him for our father, to cal vpon him and to flee to him for refuge. So then, the substance of our saluation, is y the seede of faith abide continually in vs, that God guide & governe vs by his holy spirit, and that he make vs feele his goodnesse, so as wee rest there vpon. But yet for all this, many temptations may befall vs yea euen such as may pluck vs back from calling vpon God. Not that they can shut vs quite out from him: but yet they may so comber vs, as wee shal not be able to resort to God so freely as wee woulde. Againe, wee shall be tossed with many sorrowes and many hartbytings. On the one side wee shall haue sickenesse, and on the other side pouertie: besides these, men shall doe vs wrong, and diuers other inconueniences, and to be thorte, wee shall in effecte doe nothing but pyne and languishe. In deede if God delt so mildly with vs, as wee might alwayes haue our mouthes open to prayse him, so as there were nothing but myrth and ease in our lyfe: wee should perceiue his loue the more playnely. But yet in the meane while, although wee be afflicted, although wee haue much anguise and griefe: yet doth the substance of our saluation continue still. What is to be done in this case? Let it content vs that G O D is our father. Although he handle vs not as wee woulde wishe, but rather cleane contrariwise: so as in steade of sweetenesse, wee finde bitternesse, and hee graunteth not our requestes at the first choppe, but hideth himselfe from vs in our afflictions, as if hee had forsaken vs, and getteth vs not meate and drinke at our pleasure: [finally] when all things faile vs: yet let it suffice vs that wee haue stil the warrant of our adoptiō, & that God ceaseth not to take vs and auoie vs for his children. These (say I) are the things wherewith we must content our selues, in such wise as all things else must be borne patiently by vs. And that is it which wee haue to marke vpon these wordes where G O D sayth to Moses, bee contented.

But the vnbelieuers haue not this prerogative: God shaketh them off quite, if they cry he getteth deafe eare to them, neither saith hee to them for their comfort, bee contented: but hee letteth them chawe vpon the bridle, so as they bee in horrible vniquitnesse and vexation, and haue not wherewith to aswage their sorrowe. For they beleeue not that God beareth them a fatherly good will, nor that hee receiueth them into his saour. So, now wee see more clearly the thing that I touched briefly before: that is to wit, that Gods refusing of the faithfull, is not an vtter reiecting of their prayers, as though their calling vpon him had not booted them at all: but hee graunteth them generally that which is good for their saluation. And as for in the rest, hee cutteth them out their morsels, so as hee graunteth them not whatsoeuer they wishe, neither were it for their wellfare that hee shoulde so doe.

Therefore must wee beare this lesson in minde, as wee may bee able to put it in vre: that is to wit, that if wee obtaine not all that euer wee faue: would at Gods hand: but that when we resort vnto him, he suffreth vs to linger still in our miseries & caletch vs not of our troubles at the first, so as we dragge our winges after vs as they say: we must be thinke vs of this, that wee must be contented. And why? for it is good reason that wee should yeelde to the good pleasure of our God, seeing hee referueth this inestimable benefite and priuledge to vs, that wee be still mustered in the aray of his children.

And besides this, let vs assure our selues that God furthereth our soules health, in refusing to graunt vs the things that he knoweth to be vnmeete for vs. Wee see that diuers times hee granted y<sup>e</sup> disobedient their desires: but that was not to their benefite. It had bin much better for them to haue gone without them, and that God had sayd them flat nay of them. Contrariwise, when hee denyeth our requestes, and maketh vs to perceiue that it is not reason that our lustes shoulde raunge vnbridled, and wee haue all that our fancie runnes vpon: his making of vs to perceiue all this, is to our benefite. As for example, if a childe haue a sickle head, (as commonly all children lacke discretion) and desire his father some fond or euill thing: if his father let him haue his swindge lyke a goose: hee putteth the halter about his neck, by cockering of him too much. But if hee shewe him a grim looke, and make him perceiue that he is a light-headed boy, without wit or discretion: his child will be the better for it afterward, and this correction whereby his foolish appetite is repressed, wil do him good. Euen so doth God towards vs: for hee knoweth it is much better for vs to haue our lustes subdewed, than to giue them too much libertie. And that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why hee did so precisely deny Moses request.

Wee knowe that if euer man obtained fauor in Gods sight, it was Moses in especially aboute all other. For God did him the honor to shewe himselfe familiarly vnto him face to face, as a friend doth to his companion: for so doth the scripture it selfe report: and yet yee see his request was refused: [for it was sayd vnto him,] Speake no more to mee of this matter. Hee doth [as it were] threaten him. Now if Moses were thus dealt with: let vs vnderstand that wee ought not to take it too much to hart, if God deale roughly with vs nowadayes, and make no haste to succour vs, but rather that to our seeming the miserie increaseth dubble, after wee haue prayed vnto him. Let vs not thinke the matter str<sup>ange</sup>: for it shall turne to our benefite. To be short, let vs learne to beare all temporall corrections patiently which God sendeth vnto vs. Although our condition waxe woofe and woofe to the worldward, although wee haue a heauy burthen to beare, although wee haue many harde and grieuous things to indure: yet notwithstanding wee must come to this point, that so far as they bee but temporall chastisements, wee may well holde our selues quiet, for our saluatiō abideth stil vnappayred. And although wee obtaine not some thing which wee aske: yet must wee not thinke our selues vtterly barred from it, vntil our Lord shewe vs by some euident signe. As how? When a man is in trouble, hee repayreth vnto God, and criueth mercie, and yet hee findeth no reliefe, but in sted of easement hee findeth himselfe tormeted dubble. All y<sup>e</sup> hee gaineth by his calling vpon God, is that his mercie is increased. But yet for all this hee must not be discouraged, but continue still in praying vnto God. And therewithall wee must consider thus: God knoweth to what end hee doth it. And his delaying to grant vs our request, is to shewe vs that although hee suffer vs to languish in our aduerfities: yet doth he not forget vs nor disdayne to be our father still, but onely teacheth vs to obey him and to be subiect to him. After that manner then must wee behaue our selues in praying. When it shall seeme that wee haue lost our time in calling vpon God: yet must wee still come backe to this comforte, saying: No, God sheweth mee that it is not meete for mee to aske whatsoever I thinke good, but that I must come and put my selfe into his hands with all humblenesse, to receiue what hee thinks good, and to holde all my desires in obedience vnto him. Seeing that hee sheweth mee this, it behoueth me to frame my selfe thereunto, and to take that to be best for mee which hee shall vouchsafe to send mee. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember in the text where God telleth Moses that hee wil not haue him to speake any more of his going into the lande of Chanaan.

Num. 11. 18.

Exod. 33. 11

Deut. 34. 7.

But yet for all that, he shewed him the land a farre off. And no doubt but that the sight of Moses reached beyond the ordinarie sight of nature, and beyond all that hee coule conceiue within kenning. True it is that in the end of this booke it is said, that euen in his old age, although hee was then sixscore yeeres olde, yet his senses were not appaired, but continued stil in their full strength. Neuertheless, when as it is sayd, that hee extended his sight so far, as that hee could view al the countreyes of the lande of Chanaan: [it is euident] that God gaue him sight about the power of nature. And all this tended to this ende, that Moses might bee assured, that Gods deliuering of the people was not to the ende to leaue them in the midway, or to leaue his promise vnperformed which hee had made to his seruauant Abraham. And his assuring of Moses thereof, was not onely for Moses owne sake, but also for all the peoples sake, to encourage the weaker sorte, that they might take hart to enter the more boldly into the possession of their inheritance after his decease, not doubting but that God would still reache them his mighty hand. That was the cause why this great sight was giuen to Moses. And wee must not maruell that God shewed him the land of Chanaan after that sort: seeing he had alreadie reueiled mount Sion & Morea vnto him in spirite. Moses then was confirmed by all meanes, not for himselfe onely, but chiefly for the edifying of the people. Here by the way wee bee taught, to receiue such taste of his grace as hee giueth vs, though wee haue but some little feeling of it, and inioy it not yet to the full. Moses standing vpon the toppe of the mountaine, saw the land a far off: it behoueth him to stay there, and to thanke God for that sight. Lykewise sometime God will make vs to feele his grace very slenderly, at leastwise in respect of our desire:

for we would sayne haue our fill of it, wee would haue him to giue it vs more plainly: but that would not bee good for vs. Why? Sometimes wee might not call vpon him: but all things ought to be submitted to his will, Yet notwithstanding, we may chauce to see some little sparke of Gods grace a farre off, or else perhaps hee will make vs to feele it: but that shall bee so slenderly, as it shall seeme that his intent was but to prouoke our appetite, and to whette our wit, and not to content vs.

But yet must wee bee contented to receiue whatsoeuer hee giueth vs. Although our fleshe would eary vs further: yet must wee reframe our selues as prisoners, and in so doing followe the example of Moses. For if Moses had bin lyke to such as are impatient and fall to stryuing against God: hee would haue held skorne to go vp into the mountaine. It is to much purpose (would hee haue sayde) for mee to goe breake my shinnes in climbing vp this hill, to goe see the mooneshine in the water. I can forbear such a sight. After that fashion would they deale, which are not yet come to such meekenesse, as to bee as lames and sheepe. But Moses shewed well, that notwithstanding that he was the shepheard of the people, yet was hee also a very sheepe in deede, so as GOD might guide and gouerne him as hee listed. When hee sayd to him, get thee vp into the hill: hee knewe hee should haue no more but a sight of the land, and that the same sight should be a renewing of his griefe, so as hee should sigh at it and might say, Alas I am banished from the possession of this good land, which I see before my face: my desire is but to make a steppe ouer this Iordan, and I am forbidden it. He knewe this. Yet notwithstanding forasmuch as God had commaunded him, hee receiued his grace, yea and hee receiued it with such affection, as hee replied not to the contrary. Not that hee coule not haue founde in his hart to haue had it otherwise: but for that hee did thrust his owne will vnder foote, to the ende that GOD might haue the whole maisterie of him. Therefore let vs learne to bee meeke. When our Lord is so minded to bring vs vnder awe, and graunth not the things that wee coule lyke of: let not vs on our side refuse or disdeine the small taste of his grace which hee giueth vs, waiting till hee giue vs a larger discouerie and fruition thereof. For in this worlde wee must bee exercised after that maner: and we must apply al our indeuer therevnto. In somuch that if GOD giue vs no such knowledge of his grace as wee may holde it (as yee would say) in our hands: or as wee may haue our fill of it: or as wee may triumph in it: yet must wee call vpon him still, And if he giue it vs droppe by droppe, and therewithall wee haue store of griefe and sorrowes, [so as we might say,] what will become of this? why doth not GOD admitte me more familiarly vnto him? Why doth hee not enrich mee with his goods? why doth hee not bestowe his benefites vpon mee in greater measure? when wee bee in such case, wee must come to this point, [that [that wee may say,] hee dealeth no worke with mee than he delt with Moses. So then let vs patiently accept this maner of Gods dealing, which he vseth to humble vs: and in the meane season let vs not forbear to hope further. For if wee perceiue not out of hand whither wee tend: let it suffice vs that God sheweth vs a farre off, the good which hee hath prepared for vs. And if wee haue not the fruition of it in this world: let vs be contented that he hath layd it vp for vs in heauen, and that it can not faile vs there: as in very deepe the land of Chanaan was vnto Moses as a signe and sacrament of the kingdome of heauen: and yet hee did but see it a farre off. Neuerthelesse, howsoever the case stode with him, hee had still a warrant that God would not bereaue him of his inheritance in heauen. That was the poynt that hee rested on: and so must wee doe too.

Hee addeth that he must instruct, strengthen, and incourage Iosua, for it is hee that must leade the people of Isracc. Hereby the obedientnesse of Moses is yet better warrant: d vnto vs. For how many are there to bee seene, which would be loth to imploy themselves in dooing the thinges that God commaundeth them, vnlesse G O D gaue them the honor as well as the charge? But Moses resigneth the honor and dignitie that hee had receiued: God putteth him out of office. Hee should haue bin the leader of the people, to bring them into the land of Chanaan, and ye see hee is depofed from his office with dishonor and shame. Now had hee bin as one of these worldlings which know not what it is to giue ouer themselves playnely vnto God: or had hee bin as a number are, who being carryed away with ambition and vainglory, will alwayes needs be had in estimation: hee would neuer haue yielded to doe any thing to Iosua. But behold, God telleth him here, thou must resigne thy state to Iosua, and thou must instruct him, to the end hee may be set in thy place: and knowe thou that hee is worthe to bee my lieutenant, to leade my people into the possession of their inheritance. Sith wee see that Moses was ready hereupon to giue ouer his authoritie, so as God should bereaue him thereof, and yet hee himselfe not onely bare no grudge to Iosua his seruant when hee saue him exalted in his roome: but also instructed him, and sought to surrender his owne gracious giftes vnto him, as if hee should haue plucked all the good out of his owne hart, to haue sayd vnto Iosua, take here that which belongeth vnto thee, to the intent that all may redound to the welfare of the people, and I henceforth become as a poore naked man: sith wee see (say I) that Moses was at that poynt: haue wee not an euident prooffe that hee regarded not himselfe: and that hee sought not any thing else but that God might be glorified? and that when hee had finished his course, the people might still haue a faithful man to guide and gouerne them? Specially seeing that euen in his lyfetime, when hee saue Gods grace flourish and increase in a meane person which was fet inpreheminence ouer him, hee not onely en-ued him not, but also was willing to helpe & further him, that hee might be able to execute his charge when hee were succeeded in his place? This verily is written in commendation of Moses: but it serueth also for our instruction, to the end wee may learne to submit our selues to our God: that whensoever he listeth to exalt others in our place, wee may be glad of it, wishing that the same may redound to the benefite of y people, and induoring to helpe those whom God hath chosen and elected, so as hee may alwayes reigne & gouerne, and that whensoever it pleaseth him to exalt men, it may suffice vs that hee be glorified in them, and none of vs be selfewilled in that behalfe, but all in generall seeke the maintenance of the whole body of the Church in her state, and the benefite, welfare and prosperitie of the same. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this text.

Furthermore let vs mark also, that whereas Moses is commaunded to strengthen Iosua: therein God sheweth vs the effectuall working and force of his worde. The incouraging of a man, specially to so excellent a worke, is no small matter. And by what meane is that done? By good teaching, and by holy exhortations. Thus are there two thinges to be noted in effect. The one is y such as are set in authoritie haue neede to be instructed and strengthened, that they may be able to doe their duetie. The second is, that Gods word hath this vse and propertie to frame those which els should be vnmete, and to strengthen them when they be weake: and to be short, to make them fit in all poyntes to execute their office, and whatsoever is appoynted them by God.

Therefore let them that are called to any charge or authoritie looke wel to themselves. For they be not abler men than Iosua was, who had done a notable act already now forty yeeres agoe, in outstanding the rebellion of the whole people, notwithstanding y they would haue stoned him, and that he saue so great, and (as ye would say) so infinite a multitude against him, which was not of an hundred men, neither of rascalles, or of no estimation, but there were more than sixe hundred thousand men that did set themselves against him: and yet for all y hee bare out the brunt, with inuincible constancie, and maintained Gods quarell. Iosua had done this deepe fortie yeeres afore: and yet notwithstanding he is faine to be encouraged stil, he is faine to receiue newe instruction, hee is faine to be confirmed yet better and better. Now the, what shall those do which are as fillie beasts, & can doe nothing? If a man examine them thorowly, although there be some good feede of vertue in them, alas, they come farre shorte of the perfection that was in Iosua. Then if they cannot finde in their hartes to be taught, and to be strengthened that they may the better serue God: are they not worthe to be put to reproof, so as they may not discerne what vprightnesse and iustice meane, but commit so greiffe crymes as euen litle children may laugh them to skorne, and all the worlde bee ashamed ashamed of them? Thus much concerning the first point.

Wherefore let them  $\bar{y}$  are called to any charge, whether it be to  $\bar{y}$  ministring of Gods word, or to the executing of Justice as touching earthly gouernment, or to be maisters or fathers: let them all (euery one in his owne vocation) vnderstand, that they haue neede to bee instructed, or else that they cannot furnishe out the place to performe their dutie. Let that serue for one point. Now were this well obserued: wee should not see so many skornefull persons as there are. For vnder color that a man is aduanced to some authoritie, he may no more be spoken to: for hee cannot bee but wise ynough, seeing he is in authoritie. But it is cleane contrary, as we see here, and as God hath also well shewed, in that hee hath giuen Kings a speciall commaundement to haue the bookes of his lawe about them, as wee shall see in due place hereafter.

And now must we also note the second point, which hath bin touched already: that is to wit, that if we purpose to be wel taught, if we purpose to bee confirmed, if we purpose to be wholly disposed to doe the things that our dutie requireth: we must repaire to Gods schoole. For hee hath giuen the power and efficacie to his worde, not onely to teach vs to knowe what is good, and to giue vs wisdom and skill: but also to make vs strong to goe through with our affaires as wee ought to doe, so as we be able to withstand alleuill, and to ouercome all the stoppes and lettes which the diuill shall thrust in our way. To bee short, to the end wee may be able to compasse all things well, and to goe through with the things that God commaundeth vs: let vs bee ready to harken vnto God, and be willing to receiue instruction by his worde. And it is certain, that if wee haue that, it will neuer faile vs, for it is a good scholemaister. But (as I said) it is good reason that men should continue in their beastlynesse, and that GOD should discouer their shame, when they will not submit themselves to him, but are so stately that they thinke it a needelesse thing to be taught, because they be no young children any more. Alas, that is euen the very cause why god withdraweth his blessing from them. But contrarywise, let vs doe as Iosua did. If God bee so gracious vnto vs as to teach vs: let vs bee ready to receiue instruction, and then shall we be inuincible. Albeit that Satan doe practise all that euer he can against vs: and albeit that the wicked bee as barres to stop vs, so as by all lykelyhoode wee can not set forward one step, no nor stirre one finger: yet shall wee bee strengthened by the power of God, so wee followe the order that is the wed vs here.

Now for a conclusion, it is sayd of Moses and the people, that they abode in the valley ouer against the Temple of Pheor. For Bethpheor is as much to say, as the house of  $\bar{y}$  Idole Pheor: and the word Houise is put for a Temple. This is not set downe for nought: for it was Gods will to ad this as the vpsith of condemnation vnto Moses, that hee was faine to haue the Temple of an Idol continually before his eyes, He was chosen to leade the people of Israell into the land of Chanaan. And it is certaine that hee himselfe murmured not against God, ne letted the people from comming there: but yet for all that, when it came to the point that hee should haue made the water to come out of the rocke, he went not to it cherefully, but was (as yee would say) ouergreued in his minde, so as he gaue not glory vnto God, By meanes wherof whereas Gods seruice should haue bin set vp in the lande, and whereas there should haue bin such a melodie in calling vpon his name, as al superstitions should haue bin rooted out, and as all the things that had bin shewed him in the mountaine should haue bin put in practise, that Gods maiceste might haue bin seene shining in the midst of the people: in stead of hauing so goodly and (as ye would say) angelicall order: he is faine to tary hard by a temple of Idols, he is faine to see himselfe as it were defiled with it, he is driuen to beholde the abominations that were dayly committed by the heathen as it were in despite of God, he is driuen to see the true religion ouerthrowen: and this could not bee but a great heartbreaking to him, and worke a terrible vexation in his minde. Now vpon this example wee haue to gather, how it is not for naught that our Lorde causeth vs to see things that ought to offend vs and to cast vs into great heauinesse. And why? For we be not worthy to see his seruice thoroughly in good order, and to see his religion purely and soundly obserued, so as he might bee worshipped with one common consent throughout all the world. We bee not worthy to inioy such a benefite. For the full perfection of all felicitie that wee can haue in this world, is that GOD be serued and honored, and that in such wise, as all superstitions, abuses, and all other things that may corrupt his seruice, bee layde downe. But for examples sake, we see at this day how God mingletly many of his faithful ones among the Papistes, where they be faine to behold abominations dayly with their eyes, and are held in so strait bondage, as they dare not open their mouths to speake against them. They see Gods temples turned into no better than brothhouses, and fraughted with so fowle and filthy baggage, that it were much better that Temples or Churches were neuer spoken of, than to haue such as are in the popedom. But yet this are  $\bar{y}$  poore faithful ones driuen to behold. And why? For they be not worthy to see such reformation as they desire, God intendeth to humble them, and hee knoweth to what ende. And least wee should perke vp above other men to say, heere is no corruption: alas, what are we? Though there be not open Idolatrie among vs, is there not a horrible cōtempt of God by swearing, and a rebelling against his worde: is there not such a beastlynesse to be seene in a great number, as it were much better for them to become Turkes and Heathen men, than to pretend the name of Christianitie which they abuse so shamefully? Are they not seene to bee manifest despisers of God, and to bewray themselves in such sorte, as euen little children may discern erme it? Now then sith wee see such corruptions among vs: let vs vnderstand that they bee the rewards of our sins. And therefore let vs bewaile our case, assuring our selues that Gods suffering of such minglemangle among vs, is to make vs perceiue that wee deserue well to be so intangled. Yea, which woofe is, wee see this come to passe, euen where the Gospel was purely preached. Is not the hellish corruption of the Inuents returned againe? Doth not the worlde see how idolatrie is set vp againe by it? And think wee that this is happened without Gods iust punishment? Now therefore let vs looke well to it, that lyke as it was Gods wil to humble his seruant Moses and al the people, by facing them with the temple of a cursed idoll: so lykewise nowadays, sith wee see so great corruptions, sith wee see religion disguised, sith wee see on the one side idolatrie, and on the other side lossenesse and occasion of stumbling: let vs vnder-stand that all this cometh through Gods iust vengeance, by reason of our sinnes. Wherefore let vs humble our selues and mourne, vntill it please God to set al things againe in such order and plight, as wee may all call vpon him with one common accord, forasmuch as the same is the ende wherunto hee hath set vs together, and for the which hee hath redeemed vs so deerely with the blood of his sonne.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to mortify them more and more, that wee may learne to be so subdued, as our whole seeking may be to obey him, and to glorify him in all things that hee listeth to doe, and that in the meane while we may not be wedded to our owne affections and fleshly lustes, but that although wee haue neuer so many incommerances in this worlde, & neuer so many meanes to turne vs from the right way: yet notwithstanding wee may goe through with the course of his calling, vntill hee haue deliuered vs from all Satans trappes, and from all things that hee ferthet afore vs to make vs turne head, and to hinder vs from going forwarde to our saluation, euen till wee bee come thither. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also &c.

The nineteenth Sermon which is the first vpon the fourth Chapter.

NOW then O Israel, hearken to the ordinances and Lawes which I teache you to doe, that yee may haue and goe in and possesse the lande, which the Lord God of your fathers giueth you.

2 Ye shall not adde anie thing to the word which I command you, neither shall yee take anie thing from it, to intent yee may keepe the commaunde-mentes of the Lord your God which I commaund you.

He conclusion y<sup>e</sup> Moses maketh
here, is wel worthie to be marked:
for it maketh
for the matter which hath bin expounded heretofore:
that is too

wit, that wee haue neede to bee prepared to the obeying of our God, because wee bee disobedient of our own nature, and our affections drawe contarie to his wil, insonuch that whereas hee will haue vs to walke vprightly, there is nothing but vtter lewdnesse in vs. Againe, if wee happen to haue any good disposition & desire to walke after Gods commaundementes: wee start away incontinently in the turning of a hand, and there is no constancie in vs towards any good.
On the other part, wee haue a sorte of foolish dotages, which cary vs away, so as wee will needes bee euer disputing with God, yea and be wiser than hee. Therefore haue wee neede to be subdued and humbled by al means, or else God shall neuer be able to welde vs. For this cause it is sayd, that the people heard not the lawe published vnto them one day onely, but that they were often times purin minde of it. And that forasmuch as they were stubborne, GOD had subdued them by many chastisements, as by leading them about in the wilderness the space of fortie yeeres, to inure them to obedience:

and by trying them diuers wayes, to reach them that it was no resisting of such a maister.

After that Moses hath treated of all those things: hee sayth, Harken now O Israell, what I tell thee in the name of God. As if hee should say, it is time now or neuer for you to begin to walke in obedience, that yee bee no more lyke wilde folke as yee haue bin, that yee giue not head to your wicked lustes, that yee bee not so fierce as to shake off Gods yoke, and that ye stick not to your owne fond inuentiones which make you to runne astray: but that yee beare well in minde whar yee haue indured. For if yee cannot yet bowe your neckes to submit your selues to your GOD: in this ende hee must be faine to breake you, if ye will not beare. Now heere yee his voyce, sayth hee. and wee must apply this to our vse. That is to say, Seeing it is now a great while agoe since wee began to heare the worde of God: wee must not be still as young nouices, we must not be like the young bullockes or Steeres which cannot yet skill what it is to beare the yoke: but wee must bee thoroughly acquainted with obeying. If they that neuer were taught Gods truth be wilde-headed and cannot finde in their heartes to fooke at the first, but runne gadding heere and there after a number of worldly vanities: it is not to be wondered at. True it is that that shall not serue to excuse them: no surely: for seeing that God hath created vs to the ende to serue and honor him: wee ought to giue our selues wholly vnto him, euen from our mothers wombs.

Neuertheless if wee be somewhat straunge for want of teaching: it may be borne withall among men. But if at the end of twentie yeeres, when wee haue had our eares continually beate[n] with the Gospell, so as GOD hath spoken vnto vs early and late, and [cryed out vnto vs] to waken vs: wee abide still at our Abse, and wot not what rule or doctrine meaneth: must it not needes be sayd that wee be of too vntowarde a nature? Yes: and that is it which the Apostle meaneth in saying, yee ought by this time to haue bin great doctors in respect of the time that yee haue gone to school: and beholde yee be still rawe and vnlearned, so as it shoulde seeme that GOD neuer spake to you. According then to the time that God of his grace shall haue bestowed in teaching of vs by his worde: let vs learne to yeelde our selues the more teachable, and to shewe that he hath not lost his labor, but that we haue profited well in his schools. And this poyntech at vs in especially. For howe long time hath the Gospell bene preached among vs? so as wee heard nothing else every day, but what Gods will is. Nowe then, it is good reason that wee on our side should not be so straunge, but that wee shoulde consider, that wee ought not to be still newe to beginne, in the things that haue bene tolde vs so often already. And againe wee must profite also as well by chafuementes as by teaching. If GOD haue humbled vs in any wise, because hee seeth that wee cannot otherwise bee subdued vnto him, so as hee hath tamed one with sickness, and another with pouertie, after what fashion fouer GOD hath made vs to feele his hande: let vs looke well to it that wee profite our selues thereby, and that this word Nō which Moses vseth there, be wel printed in our hearte and minde. So that if wee haue bin ouerfeene, if wee haue not at the first bin so well disposed to liue as it becometh vs, if wee haue not bin so forward as wee ought to haue bin in running to our God when hee hath called vs: at leastwise let vs not continue so hardhearted and stubborn to the vttermost.

But nowe let vs see in effect what Moses requireth here. Hearken O Israel (sayth he) to the ordinances and statutes which I teach thee to doe, that thou mayst liue and enter into the land which the Lorde thy God giueth thee, and possesse it. Here Moses declareth that our lyfe shall alwayes be full of disorder and confusion, vntill wee haue yeelded so much authoritie vnto God ouer vs, as to haue the [whol]e guyding of vs, and that wee haue made our account to rest simply vpon his worde. To be shorte, wee be taught heere, to rid our selues of all selfe-weening, and that when the case concerneth how to liue well, wee must not step to it vpon our owne head, and after our owne fancie, to say, this seemeth good to mee. Whereat must wee then begin? At learning, as Moses declareth. And therefore hee that giueth eare vnto God, to receiue whatsoever is tolde him from him, shall be well learned. But on the contrary part, vntill such time as wee haue heard our GOD speake, and that hee haue performed the office of a teacher towards vs: it is certeine that our life shall be quite out of order. Wee may well flatter our selues as ignorant wretches doe, who beare themselves in hand that the worlde goes as well with them as is possible, when in the meane while they be no better than bewitched, so as ther is neither wit nor discretion in them. Ye see then that the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this text, is that if wee meane not to leade a disordered lyfe, and such a one as God vtterly mislyketh: wee must hearken vnto him. And heere it appeareth of what value good intents (as they terme them) are: whereof I will treat more at length anon. For if it behoue vs to heare God speake, before we lift vp one foote to goe forward: what will become of vs when euery of vs is wedded to his owne fancie, and when our lustes are so wilde? Doth it not appeare that God refuseth all such things in one worde? Againe, Moses telleth vs that God on his side, will teach vs faithfully, soundly, and perfectly: conditionally that wee refuse not to be ruled by him and to obey him. And hee vseth mo wordes than one. For he could haue sayd, hearken to the Lawe, or hearken to his commaundementes: but hee sayth, hearken to his statutes and ordinances. And in other places he fettereth downe Statutes, ordinances, commaundementes, and rules. This is not a superfluous speach, but it serueth to expresse the better, that it is long of none but our selues that wee be not well and faithfully taught. But what for that? Men are so lustic, as they cannot temper themselves to the simplicitie of Gods worde, to say that it shall suffice them to be gouerned by God, and to receiue whatsoever is set before them in his name. Men cannot abide such modestie: but are alwayes itching after their owne inuentions, and yet in the meane while doe still arme themselves wth startingholes: according as wee seee nowadayes a number doe grane the holy scripture to be good, but they say also the it is expedient to supply what they want: & y<sup>e</sup> is a cursed curfed blasphemie, inasmuch as it accuseth God of ouersight, or else of eniue, for not setting downe all that is requisite to our saluation. But yet shall this saying holde, spyte of all the world, that the lawe of God is a full and perfect doctrine wherein there wanteth not any thing; and that if our lyfe bee ruled thereafter, it is certeme that there shall no fault bee able to be found in it: and that wee cannot walke after that manner, but that if the world condemne vs, God will not faile to allowe of vs: and that ought to be enough for vs.

But herewithall Moses sheweth the ende also why hee taught the people: not to the end that every man should knowe what was good, and then make no further account of it: but to the end that their lues should be answerable thereunto. God then setteth vs downe a doctrine of practise as they say. And therefore it is not enough for a man only to knowe Gods word, but hee must also be transformed into it by beholding it as Gods image, as Saint Paule speaketh thereof. To what ende then doth God speake vnto vs; not to the end we should but nod at it or listen with our care to it, to ratify his sayings by speech or by signes; but to y end we should giue prooffe by our whole lyfe that hee is our father and maister, and that hee hath all preeminence ouer vs; and that whereas wee bee his creatures, wee bee his children too. Let vs marke well then, that our conning hither to heare Gods worde, must not bee to goe away as wee came: but if our life bee changed, and that wee haue learned to frame our selues according to that which God hath tolde vs: that is the very right vse of it. Otherwise wee doe but vnhalowe Gods worde, and wee shall be found guiltye of high treason towards him, for disappointing of the operation thereof. But what? So little is this obserued nowadays of such as name themselves Christians: that in stead of performing the things that are commaunded them, they vouchsafe not to come where they may be taught one worde, but which woofe is, doe shunne all learning.

There are to be seene which can brag well enough that they be saythfull; and yet there nedeth none other tryall to knowe what they bee, than their manifest despising of Gods woorde more than the Turkes or Iewes doe. For these haue yet some reuerence of religion, but the diuels that are among vs, come to sermons lyke dogges and Oxen, without any honestie or modestie.

Other some come thither to sleepe, so as it should seme that their meaning is to spite God openly and to spit in his face: it should seem that they be desirous to shew some signe of their leawdnesse and beastlynesse, how detestable they be. To be short although they speake it not, yet doe they beare a marke in their foreheades for all men to beholde with their eyes, that they seeke to deface Gods glory to the vtermost of their power. Another sorte doe make countenance to hearken, and yet make but a flammie of it (as they say). For what shall a man finde in all their life? Nothing but desperate disobedience. But yet for all that, Gods worde hath not changed his nature. Wherefore if wee looke not about vs to frame our selues accordingly thereunto, wee must needs come to account, for desyling so holy a thing, which GOD hath ordeyned to so worthe and noble an vse.

And herewithall Moses addeth, that God requireth not any thing at our handes in respect of himselfe, or for any profite that he shall haue by it, but for our owne welfare. To the ende (sayth hee) that thou mayst enter into the land that is giuen thee for thine inheritance, and possesse it. Herein Moses protesteth, that God looketh not for any reward at our handes, for hee hath no neede of any thing; but it is for our profite, that hee would haue vs to serue him. Hee could we ynough forbear vs: but yet is hee desirous to haue vs, and hee would that wee should suffer him to gouerne vs. Seeing then that God in all respects sheweth such loue and regarde of our welfare: are we not woofe than wilde beastes if wee bee still hard to yeelde, and cannot finde in our hearts to come to him but against our wiles? If God should but onely commaund vs after a precise fashion, yet were we bound to do wht' ouer he biddeth vs; yea and although hee should vse the greatest rigour that could bee, yet might not wee refuse to doe our dutie towards him. But hee forbearth that authoritie of his, as though hee yeilded vp some part of his right, and vseth another maner of speech, [as if hee should say,] you owe mee all things, for yee be mine: and yet for all that, the seruice which you doe mee shall be accepted in so good woorth, as yee shall perceiue that I take yee for my children, yee shall feele my gracious goodnesse and benefites in all sortes, and to be shorte yee shall not loose your labor. Seeing then that God stoopeth thus vnto our rudenesse: ought not wee to be rauished at so great goodnesse? And although we had all the lettes in the world against vs sought it not to ridde them all quite away? Otherwise, what an vnthankfullnesse were it?

Therefore let vs learne, that whensoever God matcheth promises with his commaundements: it is to win vs by gentlenesse, because hee seeth vs so slowe as is pitifull, and therefore he allureth vs as a father that flattereth his children as ye would say. That is the y thing which wee haue to gather here.

Now if wee consider this lesson well: wee shall not say as the Papists doe, That seeing God promiseth reward to such as shall haue serued him, it appeareth thereby y we deserue, and that God is as well bound vnto vs, as we to him. But cleane contrariwise, Gods promising vs, to doe vs good, is not for that our seruice can deserue aught at his hand, nor for that hee is or can be beholden to vs for any thing: but his shewing of himselfe so freharted towards vs as to forbear his owne right, proceedeth of his owne free bestowed goodnesse, as I haue declared afore. Surely the Papiſtes doe well ſhew themſelves to be puffed vp with diuiliſh pride, when they preſume after that ſorte to abuſe Gods fatherly goodneſſe. He could doe no more, except he ſhould make vs cockneyes as I haue ſayd already: and yet notwithstanding, mortal men which are but carion and dung, fall to aduancing of themſelves and ſay it is a token that God is bound vnto them. Now then let vs beare in minde, that the promiſes which GOD ſeteth afore vs to prouoke and incourage vs to doe him ſeruiſe, ſerue not to ſhew that he oweth vs any thing, or that we can deſerue aught at his hand; but they be a record vnto vs of his free beſtowed goodneſſe, inſomuch as hee byndeth himſelfe to vs of his owne good will, notwithstanding y hee can not be any way indebted vnto vs.

Moreover it behoueth vs to marke that in ſpeaking, Moſes ſeteth y lawe in the firſt place, to the ende to leade the people yet further. For by the lawe wee knowe our dutie and how wee ought to liue: that is to wit, that wee ought to loue God with all our heart, with all our minde, with all our affections, and with all our powers: and that wee ought to loue our neighbors as our ſelves. Now when wee once know this: we muſt fee whether wee be able to doe it or no. But ſo vnable is any man liuing to diſcharge himſelfe thereof: that we cannot ſo much as ſtirre one finger to begin it. Therefore are wee all guiltie before God. And what is there to be done? We muſt flee for refuge to his grace, and therewithall beſeech him to be mercifull to vs in forgiving vs our finnes: and moreover to vouchſafe to reforme vs forſomuch as hee ſeeth that wee be not onely weak but alſo vtterly vnable to doe any good, becauſe there is nothing but corruption in vs: And finally that when he hath made this lawe to be preached vnto vs, hee vouchſafe alſo to ingraue it in our hartes, and to giue vs ſuch a minde as wee may ſeek to ſerue him. This is the manner of proceeding which wee haue to beare in minde, in that it is ſayd that the lawe is preached vnto vs, to the ende wee ſhould ſerue our God: as in deede the ende whereto it tendeth is to ſhewe men what they ought to doe.

Nowe herewithall let vs examine all our owne abilities, and wee ſhall finde out ſelves ouerwhelmed, and that wee be all of vs curſed and damnable, if God added not a remedy to drawe vs out of the curſe which the lawe bringeth vpon vs. And therefore Saint Paul ſheweth that if men will needes holde themſelves to the lawe, they ſhall be damned without any further hope of ſaluation. And why? for it is written, hee that doth theſe things ſhall liue in them. Now then (ſayth Saint Paul) let euery man looke into himſelfe, and examine his whole liſe: is there any man that is able to vaunt that he hath fulfilled Gods lawe? No, wee be all diſobedient. Seeing the caſe ſtandeth ſo, there is no more liſe in the Lawe; but wee muſt rather flee to the free forgivingneſſe of finnes, and ſpecially beſeech God to giue vs power to doe that which we can not. And ſo whereas the Papiſtes doe make themſelves drunken with their diuiliſh imaginations of meritorious works and ſuch other lyke things: let vs vnderſtand that after our Lord hath allured vs by gentleneſſe, he addeth a ſecond grace: which is, that albeit we be not able to performe his commandementes throughly in all reſpectes, yet he beareth with vs as a father beareth with his children, and impueth not our finnes vnto vs, but receiueth our halfe ſeruiſes as though they were whole and perfect, not for any worthineſſe that he findeth in them, but becauſe he purpoſeth to play the father with vs. Marke that for another poynt.

Besides theſe, there is a third grace which hee vſeth: which is, that he ingraueh his lawe in our hartes, inſomuch that whereas he ſeeth our hartes to bee as hard as ſtone or ſtithies, hee maketh them as ſoſt as fleſhe, and meeketh them y they may be obedient. And hee not onely prepareth vs after that maner to ſerue him: but alſo giueth vs diſcretion, power, and performance. Sith wee ſee this, let vs put all meriting or deſeruing out of minde, and let vs not be ſo preſumptuous as to aduance our ſelves any way: but as wee haue iuſt cauſe to abate our ſelves, ſo let vs w all humbles giue the glory vnto god. Thus ye ſee what we haue to do, y we may take profit of y doctrine cōtained here.

And immediately heretoone Moſes addeth, That men muſt purely and ſimply followe the doctrine ſhat hee commandeth, without putting any thing to it or taking any thing from it. To the intent (ſayth hee) that yee may keepe the commandemens of your God which I inioyne you. Before wee proceede any further, we muſt marke the authoritie that Moſes taketh to himſelfe in this text. Hee had ſayd heretofore, I teach you: and now hee ſayth, I inioyne or command you. And why is that? To ſhewe that hee ſpeaketh not in his owne name, but as ſent fro a greater maſter, in reſpect wherof it is meete that every man ſhould wholly ſubmit himſelfe to him without gaineſaying. And here wee ſee how all true ſhepherdes ought to behaue themſelves, and all ſuch as haue charge to preach Gods worde, or haue the government of the Church: that is to wit, they muſt be ſure that God hath ſent them, ſo as they attempte not any thing of their owne head, but ſpeake as in the name of God, and vtter all their ſayings as on his behalfe. Being once at that ſtay, then muſt they alſo maintaine Gods maiesty, and deale in ſuch wiſe as the doctrine may be receiued with all reuerence, and no man ſtep vp to incounter it. To be ſhorte, there are two things requiſite in all good ſhepherdes. The one is, that for their part they muſt not burden men with any tyrannie, nor inuent lawes to tye their conſciences, thereby to bring them in bondage, nor forge any doctrine vpon their owne head, but faithfully deale forth the things that are committed vnto them. Haue they that? Then let them aduance the thing which they know to proceede of GOD, ſo as they ſuffer not the heavenly doctrine to be ſcorned, but ſhewe men that they ought to reuerence GOD, and to ſubmit them-themselves to his word, and let them withstand all softness that vaunteth it selfe against him. After which manner we see how God strengthened his Prophets, telling them that they must not passe for any mans greatness, nobleness, or ought else, but rebuke the Mountaines and set themselves against the Hillles: that is to say, let them not shrink for men, but let them shewe y<sup>e</sup> word which they bring, and which is committed to them, as if it were Gods roayll mace, at the which all creatures ought to stoope and to bow their knees. Ye see then that all ministers of Gods word ought to seeke those two things.

But yet for all that, wee see the cleane contrarie. For such as raigne with roughnes and churlishnes (as Ezechiel termeth it) passe not to keepe this rule of Moses, which is, to serue God purely. For wee see that the Pope and all the filthy rable of his Clergie (as they terme themselves) are euer thundering, and would not haue men in any wise to open their lippes against any point [of their doctrine,] but that they should without any gainesaying obserue whatsoever they list to ordaine. Yea marie, but in the meane while whence haue they their stuffe? whence do they preach it? It is ynough for them that they may lorde it, & they beare themselves on hand that they may hold the poore soules vnder their tyrannie, which were redeemed with the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ. But neither Moses not any of y<sup>e</sup> Prophets did euer giue themselves such libertie, for they spake in Gods name, without setting forth any thing of their owne. Let vs then learne to hearken to such as come in the name of God, and discharge their duties vnfeinedly. Againe we see that such as should maintaine Gods truth, doe ler all slippe, and though they see neuer so much disorder: it greues the neuer a whit, neither doe they passe though all goe to hauocke. And why? Because they haue no zeale at all to aduance the Maiestie of Gods word. Also on the other side wee see a number that vaunt themselves to bee Christians, which can as much skill of the reuerence that Moses speakes of here, as if they had bene brought vp in a swines stie or on a dunghill. Are there not a number to be seene which will say continually, tush, you haue nothing to doe to command mee? Yes: and you my friend are a verie brute beast in so saying, for if I haue not to doe to command you, you haue no more Christianitie in you than is in a dogge. For when wee preach Gods word, to what end is it? That God should bee the seruant? or the maister? Let that be well considered. Speake wee in our owne names? Or set wee forth any thing that is not giuen vs in commission by God? Now, he will haue vs to represent his person: and yet we must neither command, nor beare any sway at all for these rascalles and vnthriftes, which aduance themselves with exceeding vnshamefastnesse to fight against God. But what? Ye see what the Christianitie of Genoua is, where the Gospell hath bene preached this twentie yeeres, insomuch that y<sup>e</sup> verie walles ought to ring of it, and the verie pauing of the streetes ought to beare some marke of Gods truth: and yet these wood beastes continue still in their grosse and barbarous rebelliousnesse, so as they be worse than bulles with their hornes, or I wote not what other beastes. Yet notwithstanding it cannot be wyped out of Gods Register, but that whensoever Gods worde is preached, both great and small must receiue it, at leastwise if we acknowledge it to be Gods truth. Yea and we must receiue it with such reuerence, as to thinke thus with our selues: beholde, it is our God that speaketh: and if he be our maister, doe not we owe him all reuerence? If he be our father, doe not we owe him all honour? What is to bee done then, but onely to shewe by our deedes, that our whole seeking is to bee ruled quietly by him? Thus yee see what we haue to remember here, in that Moses speaketh not as in the person of a mortall man, but taketh vpon him the authoritie to commaund: howbeit not as chalenging any thing to himselfe, but as being desirous to be heard, because he was a faithful setter forth of Gods lawe: shewing also that he had vengeance readie prepared for all such as would checke against him, or reiect the doctrine that he did set forth.

He saith yet further, that men must neither adde any thing to that which he commaundeth, nor take any thing from it, to the ende they may keepe Gods commandementes. Whereas he saith that nothing must be added nor diminished: it is to shewe the thing that I touched euen now: that is to wit, that God mindeth to try our obedience, by restraining vs from fetching our windlasses, and from scotterloping ouer the fieldes, to taught at euerie thing that we like off: and to hold vs fast tied and bound vnto his word. Then is it not ynough for vs to receiue that which God sendeth vs, and to allowe it as good: but wee must acknowledge it to be our whole wisdomes, (as shal be added hereafter in this Chapter) so as wee be not skilful to mingle any thing with Gods word, but conclude thus with our selues: Seeing God hath spokē it, it is not lawfull for mortall me to interlace any thing wth it, but they must be contented with y<sup>e</sup> which they haue heard of such a maister. This is in effect the meaning of Moses. And this is not said in this place onely: wee shall see it repeated againe hereafter in the twelfth Chapter, and in other places, and the scripture is full of it. And yet we see there is not any thing worse kept, than this present exhortation. And what is the cause thereof? That men doe take it for a principle, that they haue alwayes some reason with them, and that they bee of sufficient abilitie to gouerne themselves as they ought to doe. Thus then doth pride take the first place, when men will needs discern betweene good and euill after their owne fanisie. Contrariwise Gods will is to be wife for vs, & that we as silke sheepe should hearken to our shepheardes voyce, and quite forget the sufficiency which the vnbeleeuers imagine themselves to haue. Let vs thinke, there is nothing in vs but error and follie, there is nothing but vanitie and leasing, vntill our God haue taught vs. That is the point that God wold bring vs to. But it is exceeding hard for men to reftaine them felues continually from being puffed vp with this fond ouerweening of selfewifedome. And therewithall is mingled curiofitie: Our eares itch to heare this and that, wee make difcourfes, we haue our imaginations, and a number of things do runne in our heads. Why fhould not this be good, fay we? Why fhould not that be lawful? Becaufe then that curiofite hath taken fo deepe roote in our mindes: therefore cannot God hold vs to the pure fimplicite of his worde. Befides this, wee haue a forte of naughtie affections, which turne vs away from God, and are al of them enemies to make warre againft God, fo as wee cannot fo much as thinke a good thought, but wee be full of vice and corruption. That is the caufe why wee cannot hold our felues in obedience vnto God. And yer nor-withftanding, when wee haue offended him a thoufand wayes, doe wee fall to amending of any whit of it? Yea marie, but after what fashions?

 After our owne guife. Wee lay on plaifters that make the fore worfe, as wee fee hath befallen in all ages. For the Prophets fought againft thefe fame vices without ceaffing. Although the people of Ifrael had the lawe with fuch ftrait re-ftraints as ye fee here: yet were their fingers alwayes itching to intermingle fome inuentions of their own therewithall. The Prophets cried out, how now? Shall your God neuer ouerrule you as his flocke? He hath purchafed you by deliuering you from the bondage of Pharao, he hath giuen you his lawe, hec hath helped you a number of wayes beides: and yet ye cannot finde in your hearts to liue as he will haue ye. And wherefore was this people fo vnruy? Firft becaufe of pride, (which, as I told you, hath reigned in men in all ages) for that the Iewes would needes be able to rule themfelues. For they were of opinion, that whatfoeuer feemed good to themfelues, y<sup>e</sup> fame ought to haue bene allowed of God. The verie ground fro whence they tooke their boldnes, to make al the charges [of Religion] y<sup>e</sup> happened among the, was their gaffing about them, [& their thinking wth themfelues] wee fee that our neighbours do thus. Hereby fupertition gat full fcope, fo as they ran gadding after the idoles of y<sup>e</sup> heathen. And when they fawe that they had troden Gods lawe vnder foote: Oh (foid they) this muft be amended. And howe? By dabling y<sup>e</sup> mifchiefe from time to time. Wee fee the like in the Pope-dome: and would God wee had the wit to profite our felues by fuch examples and looking glaffes.
 For what is the chief point that troubleth Chriftendome at this day? Wee demaund that men fhould heare God fpeake: and that therevpon there fhould no doctrine be receiued that is demanded at the pleafure of men, but that the world fhould fubmit it felfe to God, that the holy fcripture fhould be taken as the doctrine of perfection: and that wee fhould acknowledge it to bee Gods truth, whereunto it behoueth our whole life to be framed, wout adding or dimini-fhing. That is our demaund. On the contrary part, it is certaine that all Poperie muft needs fall to the ground, except mens inuentions may haue their full courfe, fo as Gods word may be mingled, turmoiled, ftuffed, yea and euen falffied wth mens deuifes. And yet notwithstanding the Pa-pifts are fo fhameleffe ftill, as to vpbraide vs that we will needes be too wife in our owne conceits.

 Yea marie, but wherein? When it comes to the triall, wee defire no more but that Gods worde may nor in any wife be diminished, and that the things which wee thinke good of our felues fhould not be admitted, but that wee fhould forfake whatfoeuer is of man, and thruft it vtterly vnder foote and abolifh it, fo as onely God may be exalted. Is it our intent to be ouerwife, when we confeffe, firft of all that there is nothing but foolifhneffe in men, and that fuch as will needes be skillfull and wittie [of themfelues] are ftarke mad, inafmuch as they can not put themfelues wholly into Gods hand, to be governed by him as he listeth? And yet notwithstanding, that is the thing wherein wee differ. And that is it that ingendreth moft ftrife in thefe dayes, becaufe the Papifts cannot yeelde to this reason, that God fhould be obeyed according to his worde, and that men fhould be contented to be taught by him in his fchole. In decde they will not bee fo bolde as to denie that Gods lawe is holy and rightfull: but yet to their fecming, God hath fpoken but by haltes, & men had neede of a higher and profounder doctrine, and of ftraiter lawes.
 But it is not faid here, that men fhould but onely heare what God faith, & afterward do what they lift themfelues: No, God giueth them no fuch choife. For what a thing were that? He fhould not onely admit vs to bee his fellows, but allo giue vs fuperioritie ouer him. And y<sup>e</sup> were euen a turmoiling of heauen & earth together, & a hellith cofounding of al things. Yet notwithstanding, fuch hath it bin, & fuch is it ftill among the Pa-pifts at this day. For notwithstanding that they graunt Gods Law to be holy and righteous: yet they ceaffe not to turmoile it with whatfoeuer feemes good to themfelues. O (fay they) this is the comandemēt of our mother holy Church, this is a doctrine of hers y<sup>e</sup> muft be obferued, this is a good deuotion, this is a law of hers, this is an ordinance. To be fhort there is no ho. And is this an obeying of y<sup>e</sup> which Moles faith here? So then let vs learne to giue attentiuē care to this exhortation, feeing it is not for nought y<sup>e</sup> it is fo often repeated vnto vs. And if y<sup>e</sup> Prophets in old time had fo hard hold wth the people for this vice: let vs affiure our felues y<sup>e</sup> we allo fhall cuer be vnruy & wildheaded, vntill our Lorde haue tamed vs by long handling, & made vs to fticke to this good.
 That it is no more lawful for vs in any wife to adde any thing to his law, than it is lawful for vs to take any thing from it. Now in decde the Pa-pifts alledge y<sup>e</sup> this was fspoken to the Iewes: but y<sup>e</sup> as for vs, we be now vnder the law of libertie. But they fpeake like beafts. For when the Gofpell is named the Law of libertie: it is not ment y<sup>e</sup> God layeth the bridle in our neckes, and that we may henceforth followe our owne fwinge: but (as I faid afore) it is becaufe it beareth with vs, & con-tinueth not the extreme rigor of curfing vs, whē wee haue not performed Gods comandemēt. Rom. 8. 2. & Gal. 3. 12. in all pointes to the full. In that refpect is y<sup>e</sup> Gofpell 8. 2. & Gal. 3. 12.

pellnamed the lawe of libertie. Neuerthelesse forasmuch as God hath more fully reuealed the things vnto vs, which were hid for a time: & for-asmuch as wee bee taught much more largely now adayes, than the Iewes were: there is much more reason why wee shoulde holde our selues more in awe, and walke reuerently before God.
 For in comparision of vs, the Iewes had a verie slender teaching: and yet notwithstanding, they bee forbidden to put any thing to it. And shall we then presume now adayes to adde any thing to that which God hath left vs, when he hath reached out his trueth farre and wide, and that besides his lawe and Prophets, we haue this further perfection, that he hath spoken to vs with open mouth by Iesus Christ? What a presump-tuousnesse were that? Besides that we should offer wrong and dishonour to the lawe: we should also blasphemie the Gospell. And therefore let vs vnderstand, that Gods spirit hath not spoken it for any one time onely: but that he meant to deli-uer it for a rule to continue to the worldes end when he saide, Put not any thing to that which I commaund you, neither take any thing from it. When he saith, Put not any thing to it: It is to shewe vs that onely God must bee wise, and haue authori-tie to gouerne vs, so as we must not sticke to our owne foolish deuotions, which wee had in the time of our ignorance, when wee were wretched blind Papistes. Then let vs learne to holde vs to the simplicitie of Gods worde, and let our onely wisdom bee to obey that which he saith, that he may haue all preheminece. And like as God forbiddeth vs to adde any thing to his worde, so doeth he forbid vs to take any thing from it: and not without cause. For if wee will needes obey God but in part, & in the meane while exempt our selues from whatsoever wee list: it is such a partaking, as shall neuer bee admitted. Accordingly as now adayes wee shall see many, which will bee contented to obey, so farre forth as it pinche them not ouer neere: but if it be a thing that trouble them, they seeke to bee rid of it, and fret and chafe against it. But it is not for vs to proceede after that maner. For as I saide, like as God forbiddeth to adde any thing to his do-ctine: so forbiddeth he to take any thing there-fro. He that saide, Thou shalt not commit adulterie (saith S. James) hath saide also, Thou shalt not steale. And therefore let vs bee well ware, that we rend not Gods lawe in pieces. For it is not for mā to put the things a sunder, which God hath put together. And let vs assure our selues we can not breake: Gods law in any point, but we violate Gods Maiestie which is contained therein. That then is a thing which we haue to remember vpon y text. For otherwise we shall not be able to keepe Gods commandements, y is to say, we shall not yeeld God y authoritie which he deserueth. As for example, when the Papistes obsetue Gods lawe: how go they to work? They leaue it behinde them, & in the meane while rest vpon the commandements of their Mother holy Church. And where vpon ground they theselues: Behold, there comes mee an idole, euen a stinking carion, & he loades them with a law. A Papist imagins himselfe to bee a litle Angell, if he keepe y ordinance of a worme y is but dung: and he will say it is Gods law. Nowe I pray you, in dooing what preferment yeeldeth he more to God, than to creatures: Is it not apparant, that in that case God is as it were raiged in aray, to be but companion with men? Now surely such obedience of y Papists is diuinish, because it fettereth vp mē in Gods sted. Therefore let al such dealing be done away, yea and let vs abhorre it vtterly.

Finally let vs marke, y whereas Moses saith,
That thou must enter into the lande & liue: it is not meant y God giueth vs any payment or wages, as though he were bound vnto it: but y he must euermore haue the souerainetie of vs, & wee bee subiect to him, forsaking all our wicked affectiōs which may turne vs away fro following his com-mandements. And although he speake to vs by the mouthes of men: yet let not vs cease to honour him in the Maiestie which he vttereth by his worde, but let vs learne to holde our selues wholly thereunto, without swaring one way or other, & let vs giue ouer all our owne wit & reason. Againe, let all our lustes be so beatē downe, as wee attempt not in any wise to stand against God, but walke before him in such reuerence & lowelineffe, as we may giue proofe that wee bee his people in deede, and that we take him for our father and soueraigne Prince.

Now let vs kneele downe in y presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele the more & more, yea euen in such wise as we may come to submit our selues to him with true repentance, & pro-ceede therein more and more, vntil such time as being quite rid of all our fleshy corruptions and clothed againe w his righteoufnes, wee be made partakers of the immortall glory wherunto he calleth vs dayly by his word. And so let vs al say, Almighty God heauenly Father, &c.

On Monday the xx. of May. 1555.

The xx. Sermon which is the second vpon the fourth Chapter.

3 Your eyes haue seene what the Lorde did to Beelphegor, for the Lorde thy God hath rooted out all the men from among you, which walked after Beel-phegor.

4 But you which haue cleaued to the Lorde your God, are all aliuie at this day.

5 Beholde, I haue taught yee ordinances and lawes as the Lorde my God commaunded mee, that you should doe thereafter in the land which you are entering into to possesse it.

6 Keepe them [ therefore ] and doe them: for that is your wisdom and vnderstanding in the sight of the Nations, who hearing of all these ordinances shall say, surely it is a wise and vnderstanding people, it is a great Nation.

God sheweth his great goodnes in labouring to drawe vs to him by gentleness: and great also is his grace if he draw vs to him by force, when he seeth that wee cannot otherwise bee subdued. And that is the cause why he not only setteth his promises before vs, but also addeth threatenings, shewing vs his rigour, and making vs also to feele it: euen to the ende to win vs by some meanes or other. But yet doeth all this re-10 round to our welfare, and God sheweth how much he tendereth vs, eue in that he is so sharp and rough towardes vs. For if wee coulde suffer our selues to bee led gently by him, surely such is his nature that he would deale that way with vs, according to his owne saying that he is a kinde hearted and pitifull God, forward to shew mercie, and of long sufferance. When God intendeth to shewe what good will he beareth vs, he 20 allegeth all the properties of a good Father. Then will he neuer vse any roughnesse, vnlesse he bee enforced, because he seeth vs dul vpon the spurre, and is faine to prick vs, or else wee would neuer goe on our way. Therefore when we come to reade the holy Scripture, let vs alwaies haue 30 this before our eyes, that our Lordes desire is to drawe vs to him by gentleness, if wee bee payable: and therevpon let vs humble our selues vnto him, and not looke to haue him deale roughly with vs, but followe him quietly as soone as he hath shewed vs that he is willing to receiue vs. And if we haue bin so farre ouerleene as to haue
 40 giuen deafe care to all his promises, and not to come at his call: at leastwise it were not meete for vs to bee drowfie still, when he addeth his threatenings to waken vs. Therefore let vs vnderstand that it is time for vs to yeeld our selues to God then or neuer. And that is the cause why that in this text, Moses putteth the people in remembrance, of the punishments that God had laide
 50 vpon such as worshipped the idole of Ammō which was called Beel-phegor. But we haue yet one point more to mark, which is, that God spareth vs and punisheth others, to the intent we should learne wit at other mens cost, as they say. If God should steepe vs at the first dash, and correct vs as soone as wee haue done amisse, or 60 rell vs that we should looke for vengeance at his hand: yet ought we to take it as a token of his fatherly goodnesse, as I said afore. But his will is to beare with vs, and he setteth the faide chastisements before vs, to make vs knowe that his punishing of offenders is not without cause, & that we ought to take the same for a warning to our selues. And so doth Moses vse it here. For he saith not, God will punish you if ye offende: but hee 70 saith, Ye haue seene howe they were punished which worshipped Beel-phegor. Nowe therefore, prevent Gods wrath, and tariē not till he be angrie with you, & set on fire: but cleaue simply to his word, and let the corrections that he hath shewed you auail you, & not bee shewed you in vaine. Thus ye see the third point which wee haue to marke: that is to wit, that our Lorde vttereth not his threatenings vnto all men, but heweth vs howe he punisheth the vnbeleueers, to the intent that 80 wee should not bee of their number, least wee should be wrapped in the same condemnation with them. And it is the same thing that S. Paul 90 sheweth. For after he hath tolde the faithfull, that they must abstaine from couetousnes, theft, whoredome, drunkennesse, and such other like things, yea and euen from all manner of loose- nesse and wantonnesse: he addeth, be not deceiued, for Gods wrath commeth vpon the vnbeleueers for such things. He saith not that Gods

 100 wrath shall come vpon them: but he tempereth his speach and saith, Consider that God punisheth the vnbeleueers for such causes, and therefore separate your selues from their number and companie. After the same maner speakeh he likewise in the tenth of the first to the Corinthi-
 110 ans. After he had tolde them how God had punished idolaters, rebels, and such as had coueted vnlawfull things: he addeth that those things are written for vs, that we might see and behold 120 Gods iudgements as in a liuely picture, & keepe our selues from falling into the like punishment. Nowe therefore let vs come to that which Mo- ses rehearseth here: Your eyes (saith he) haue seene
 130 what the Lorde did in the case of Beel-phegor. In saying so, he telleth not the people a tale that shall doe them no good: but he doeth them to vnder- stand, that Gods vttering of his vengeance a-140 gainst such as had worshipped that idole, was to giue a generall lesson to all men: and therefore that they ought to thinke themselues worthe of dubble blame in that behalfe, forasmuch as they had fared neuer the better by Gods scourges, but had shut their eyes all the while that he was about to warne them to their benefite and wel-150 fare.

Nowe remaineth to apply this geere to our vse. When God sendeth any trouble vpon the world: let vs vnderstand that it is not without cause that he is so fore displeasēd. For if we consider the offences and misdeedes that haue bene 160 commuted: wee must needs conclude y God sheweth himselfe a iudge in punishing finnes. But doeth that serue onely for them that feele the strokes? No: Gods will is to shewe his iust vengeance generally, that men may learne to stoope to him, and to walke in feare of him, and to giue theselues no more to prouoking of him. To be short, all the chastisements that wee see in the worlde, ought to serue for our learning: according to this saying of the Prophet Esay, O Lorde, when thou executest thy iudgements, the dwellers of the earth shall learne righteou- nesse. For when God winketh, and punisheth not the wicked and vnrighteous: men take leaue to doe euill, it seemeth that all things shoulde scape vnpunished, and euerie man beareth with himselfe, accordingly as all of vs are natu- rally too much inclined to flatter our selues in our sinnes. But when wee perceiue that GOD calleth mens sinnes to account, and that all things are inrolled before him, he sheweth him selfe a iudge in punishing men, whereas they thought they had bene forgotten: then behold, wee be wakened, so as euerie of vs beginnes to bethinke himselfe, or at leastwise it were good reason that he should do so. True it is that Gods iudgements doe sometimes passe before our eyes, and wee make none account of them, by means whereof wee can fare neuer the better for them: but vnhappy are wee when wee bee so blinde. And why? For (as I saide) Gods intent is that other men shoulde take example, by his chastising of those that haue offended. Yea and euen the worldly iudges obserue the same order, inso much that when they punish a theefe, or a murderer, or any other euill dooer, they doe it not alonely to be reuenged of euil that he hath done as in respect of himselfe: but also to set him forth as a looking glasse, to the intent that all other folkes shoulde ser a watch ouer themselves, and abhorre such crimes, and not suffer them to haue their full course and scope. And thinke wee that God goeth yet any further? So then, let vs suffer our selues to be amended at other mens cost, and let vs haue our eyes open to beholde the punishments that he sendeth. And nowe in these dayes, must it not needes bee that wee be worse than asleepe, if wee bee not moued at the great number of corrections that God sendeth: Wee see howe the whole worlde is in maner past recouerie, and (as the Prophet Esay saith) there is not one whit of soundnesse from the crowne of the head to the sole of the foote: Gods scourges runne abroad euerie where: euerie man complaineth, great and small lament: On the one side wee see warres, famine, and pestilence, (and those things happen not by casual- tie:) and on the other side euerie man bewail- leth his owne private case. And why so? Where- fore doe wee not knowe the hande that striketh vs? Wherefore doe wee not consider that God sheweth himselfe a iudge towards vs, to make vs returne vnto him? For mens sinnes are not vnknown, wee see well that the whole worlde is out of order, and that God must bee faine to put to his hand, And yet in the meane season wee abide still blockish, but wee shall be helde the lesse excused for it in the ende. And why? For it may bee tolde vs to our shame, that our eyes haue scene howe God warned vs: it was long of none but our selues that we were not brought to repentance. Seeing that GOD did lay his iudgements open to our sight, and wee mar- ked them not: wee must needes bee punished the sorer for such negligence, because wee haue played the deafe and blinde folkes, when GOD went about to bring vs gently to him. And so the thing that Moses spake to the people of Israel, is written to our vse in these dayes. For it is as much as if the holy Ghost shoulde tell vs, that when God punisheth men, bee it generally or particularly: we must not be purblind, in that case, but bethinke vs well and see whether wee our selues haue not deserued the like: and there- vpon bee sorie for our sinnes, and not tarie till God drawe his sworde against vs, but hie vs apace to him seeing hee warneth vs to returne. And for the performing hereof, let vs vnder- stande that the calamities which light vpon the worlde, come not by haphazarde, but from heauen, and are corrections for the of- fences where into the worlde hath ouerflowed it selfe.

Nowe Moses speaketh heere by name of Belphegor, which was the ydoll of the Ammo- nites, as is saide afore. And the worde Baal be- tokeneth a Principal, a Master, or a Patrone: which thing is well worthie to bee marked. For when wee heere speaking of the ydolles of the heathen, they seeme to vs to bee farre other things than those that wee see nowe- dayes. But the Scripture sheweth vs that they bee in manner all one. And why? For the hea- then were not so grosse and dulwitted, but that they knewe there was a certaine soueraine ma- iestic which had created heauen and earth, and helde soueraine Dominion ouer all things. But therewith all they would needes haue vnder- gods and meane gods whom they termed their Patrones, as they doe nowadayes in the Pope- dome. Againe there was another sort of gods, whom they thought to haue the charge of seuer- all Countries: for euerie countrie had his ydol. And so also this worde Baal was the name as wee would say of a God that had the gouernance of a whole countrie, and serued to get men fauour at the great Gods hand. Nowe it may seeme at the first blush, that this was no defacing of Gods glorie, not any impeachment to the continuall seruing and worshipping of him: and yet is it such a corruption as he cannot abide. For he will haue all preheminance to himselfe, and hee will not haue men to giue him or assigne him any companion, as we shall see hereafter where Mo- ses will say, The Lord thy God is the only God. Againe, when men make such mingling, and will needes haue a multitude of gods: wee see how God speaketh of it in the twentieth of Ezechiel. Goe your wayes (saith he) I giue yee ouer, seeing yee haue other Gods: than me: go serue the diuel al- together, for I will haue nothing to do with you. Let vs mark wel then, that Gods seruice can ne- uer be kept in his purcell, except all superstition be laide downe, and men holde themselves simply to his worde, without inuention of any thing, & without intermingling of any thing de- used of their owne brain: Thus yee see that the true and pure religion, is the exalting of the only one God, so as his glorie is not darkened by ad- ding any companion vnto him.

Eze. 10. 33

Esai. 26. 9.

Esai. 6.

And nowe hee sayeth expressly, You thus haue cleaued to your God are all aliue this day. This serueth not so much to make the people gladd: as to shewe them that seeing they be so greatly bounde and beholden to their God, they ought to serue him with the greater zeale. Moses then telleth the people thus: Yee haue scene Gods wrath: and what hath preferred you from it hitherto? For yee might haue bene ouerthrowen and destroyed as well as they that worshipped Beelphegor. Knowe yee therefore that your continuing vnto this day, is through the free fauour of your God. And therefore looke that yee serue and honour him as hee deserueth, seeing hee hath mainteined you after such a fashion, and against all hope. Nowe this warning belongeth vnto vs, because we liue not to any other end than to serue our GOD, and woe bee to them which being in this worlde doe rauen vp Gods benefites, and knowe not to what ende, but are here as brute beasts. So then let vs marke well, that as long as we bee in this worlde, God will haue vs to doe him homage for our life, and [to vnderstande] that we bee bounde to him [for all things.] and to make that our marke to shoote at, according to this sentence often spoken in the scripture, I shall liue and goe into the temple of the Lorde. Yea & when Ionas was come out of the Whales bellie, and euen when hee called vpon GOD being there as in a gulfe of hell: hee saide not I will liue and make good cheere, but hee saith that hee shal yet againe see the temple of God. And what to doe? to giue him thanks for prolonging his life after that sort. Therefore let vs marke, that in all the benefites which we receiue at Gods hande, he bindeth vs so much the more streitly vnto him, to the intent that we shoulde indouour to serue him, and to giue out selues wholly vnto him, and to walke in the obedience of his righteousnes. This is it in effect which Moses meant to note.

And hee setteth downe afterwarde, that hee had giuen them statutes and ordinances according as God had commaunded him. Wherein hee protesteth that hee had bene a faithfull deliuerer of the doctrine which hee did set forth, to the end that the people might not receiue it as the doctrine of a man, but consider howe it was God that had spoken it, and so embrace it with all reverence. And heereby wee see that GOD doeth euermore referre to himselfe, the right of gouerning vs as in respect of the spirituall gouernement of our soules. True it is that God woulde there shoulde bee ciuill policie in this worlde, and hee hath put men in commission for the same: but in the meane while hee will haue none but onely himselfe to haue power to lay lawes vpon vs. When the case concerneth his owne seruice, and religion, and spirituall things: then must onely he himselfe bee heard, and no man must vsurp his office or meddle in it, nor no man steppe in to adde one word. For if euer any man in the worlde was worthe to bee hearde: was not Moses so excellent, that hee might well bee fornoist and chiefe? Yes:

for wee shall see hereafter, that there neuer was such a Prophet in the worlde, neither before him nor after him, euen to the coming of him that is about al Prophetes, that is to wit, the sonne of God. And yet for all his worthinesse, Moses holdeth himself in the number of those which ought to herken vnto God without setting forth any thing of his owne deuitie. Seeing it is so, whosoer taketh vpon him to make lawes to rule mens soules, shall goe to confusion with his diuinish presumptuousnesse and ouerweening. To bee short, when any doctrine is to bee followed, let vs on our side looke that wee bee sure that it proceedeth from God, & that our faith be grounded on him alone, so as wee hang not vpon mortall men, nor vpon any creature. For there woulde bee no steedinesse. Thus yee see that the first point which wee haue to marke vpon this text, is that Moses protesteth that hee commeth not in his owne name, nor setteth vp Lawes at his owne pleasure, but receiued the things at Gods hande, which hee taught. And for that cause he saith, The Lorde my God commaunded mee. True it is that the people might haue saide so as well as Moses, according also as Moses addeeth oftentimes, The Lorde your God. But here hee appropriateth the title of God to himselfe, saying, The Lorde my God. And whic? It is like as in a Countrey where there is a Prince, euery man may well say, yondsame is the king, yondsame is the Prince: and yet notwithstanding, they that are of his household or beare any office may adde these wordes ouer, the King my master, or they may saye, the Prince my master. And why? For they bee his officers or his household seruantes. After the same manner delt the Prophetes. As for example, Esay in his seuenth chapter speaking to Acas, saith: Yee house of Dauid, is it not ynough for you to [greue men, but yee muste also] tempt my GOD? Heere yee see howe Esay setteth himselfe alone. And why? for hee is Gods officer, and hath his commission to bee his Prophet. Wee see as much in Helias. And Saint Paul likewise inuerocheeth vpon the tytle that is common, and sayeth, The Gospel which I haue receiued of my God. Whereby hee sheweth that hee was ordeyned to be an Apostle. Euen so is it in this text, where Moses declareth that hee was not a Prophet of his owne making, ne came forth at auenture, but that GOD had called him to that state, and committed that charge vnto him. The reason then why wee muste giue eare to men that teach vs, is because they be sent of God, so as hee diminisheth not his owne authoritie, ne dischargeth vs to goe where wee list, but will haue vs alwayes ruled by his

Nowe Moses addeeth immediatly, that he hath set forth the statutes and ordinances, to the ende that the people shoulde doe them, when they were come in to the lande so possesse it. Wherein wee see the same that hath bene shewed heretofore; that is to wit, that God wil not haue me to dally with his his doctrine, but to imbrace it with all reuerence, and to obey it by framing themselves thereafter. Wherefore let vs be well aduised, that if wee will be well taught at Gods hande, wee must serue him all our life long. For without wee doe so, wee shall be condemned of false abusing the doctrine, which was giuen vs to kill our vices and to alter our lewde and inordinate lustes. As often then as we come to heare Gods worde, let vs alwayes haue this before our eyes, that his will is to bring vs home to himselfe, and not to haue vs wander after our owne wicked lusts and likings, but to bow down our necke vnder his yoke to yeelde him obedience. And heereby wee see how the Gospell is vnhalloved nowadays. For wee haue our cares sufficiently beaten with the things that wee ought to doe: but who is hee that doeth but so much as liue vp his finger, to streine himselfe to serue God? The number of them is verie small. But there is great store of them that take greater libertie to doe euil vpon the preaching of the Gospell, and in their opinion God is much beholde to them, in that they suffer his worde to be preached, themselves holding scorn of it. But needes must such vngodnesse and diuillish pride be horrible punished. Why so? For the worde that G O D sendeth vs, is the seede of life which ought to yeelde fruite in vs: and yet for all that, wee make no reckning of it, but trample it vnder our feete, and wee become starke blockes. And it is not ynough for vs to be a barren ground that beareth no fruite: but wee doe also bring forth the frukes of bitternesse, as God complayneth by his Prophet Ieremie: inasmuch that yee shall see a great number that doe euen spire God and rancie in malice against him, seeking nothing else but to kindle his wrath more and more. Such folke must needes looke for dreadful damnation and mercilesse vengeance.

Ier. 2. 21.

And truly like as Moses hath declared here that hee came nor in his owne name: so also, his protesting that hee had inioyned them the lawes and ordinances as G O D had vttered them vnto him, sheweth that men cannot deuise to spite God more openly, than by straining against his worde. Indeede they will alledge that their intent is not so, like as wee see in these dayes that these scorners of God which make none account of any doctrine, doe dresse with their hornes like madd bulles against all good gouernement and policie, and would faine that there were nothing but vtter desolation in the Church: and yet notwithstanding to couer themselves, they will [not sticke to] say, what doeth the matter concerne the Gospell: who is he that would not maintaine it? Yea if the diuels of hel maintain it, Wee see some such among vs, yea euen which shew themselves much wickeder than the Papists, And the diuel also must needes be faine to strew his surie, and the libertie that God hath giuen him against such despisers. But all is well if they can couer themselves alwayes with this faire excuse, that they mind not to fight against the Gospell, but against the preachers.

Nowe seeing they be at that point, wee must fall to scanning of the matter, to wit whether the preachers doe set fourth any strange doctrine, whether they haue put forth any forged dotages, or whether they haue set vp any lawes at their owne pleasure. If it be found that the ministers preach Gods worde purely: that they are glad and faine to aduance the kingdom of our Lorde Iesus Christ: that they procure the same to the vttermost of their power: and that they seeke to haue such order in the Church, as God may alwayes be worshipped, and good policie be maintained among men: with whom haue they to do, which strue here against? And we must be faine to come to the protestation that Moses made, saying: What are wee Moses and Aaron? What haue wee set fourth, which wee haue not receiued of God? What cause haue you to moue this sedition and vproure, in saying that yee cannot abide that wee should reigne ouer you? What is the fourecintie, what is the dominion which we would haue ouer you? Wee desire nothing but that God be obeyed, and that hee haue the authoritie and preheminece that belong vnto him. Loe howe Moses spake of his time. And after the same manner speake wee nowadays to these roysters, which seeke to bring all to confusion, vnder shadowe and pretence that they intende to mainteine the Gospell, whereas it appeareth that they make a flatter mockerie of it, and raile against it. Yet for all this, they that haue any taste of Religion, wil defie such plagues, and separate themselves from them, least God wrappe them vp with them in the same condemnation: and they will looke to make the knowledge profitable which they haue receiued, yea and with all humblenesse receiue the things that are taught them by men, so they be sure that they come from God. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember vpon this sentence.

Nowe afterwarde hee commaundeth them to keepe these things and to doe them. And why: for (saith hee) Beholde your vnderstanding and your wisdom in the sight of all Nations, is that you be taught of your God. Whereas he saith, ye shall keepe them therefore and doe them: it is a conclusion well worthe to be noted. For must it not needes be that men are starke madd, when they haue no minde to heare God at such time as hee teacheth them? What are wee that G O D should take the paine to doe the office of a teacher towards vs? Is it not a great stooping downe from his highnesse? But seeing that God doth so lessen himselfe, as to stoop to our rudenesse to teach vs: should wee let his worde fall to the grounde and despise it? So then let vs vnderstande, that whensoever wee be spoken to in Gods name, we ought to tremble vnder his maiestie, yea and to imbrace his worde with all reuerence, truly, hartly, and zealously. For it is but a counterfeit worshipping of God, if we be not as Lambes, suffering our selues to be led by his onely voice: and it is certaine that if we followe not after him as soone as hee doeth but

but make a signe, wee be wilde beastes, and hee will not knowe vs for any of his. And so wee see what authoritie the name of God carrieth with it: insomuch that when Gods worde is set afore vs, wee must all cast downe our heades, and bowe downe our neckes to receiue the yoke that is laide vpon vs, and seeke by all means to please him and to be obedient to him.

Nowe Moses returneth to that which I touched at the beginning; namely, that God indeuoureth to drawe vs to him by gentleness: and hee sheweth it heere to the people of Israel, in telling them of the excellent prerogative that had bene giuen them. For beholde heere (saith God) this is thy wisdom and thine vnderstanding in the sight of all nations. Wee knowe that naturally it is a grieue to men to be counted beasts. And why? For they knowe that the thing wherein they differ from beastes, is that they haue discretion and reason in them. God to the intent to make vs excell Oxen, Asses, Dogges, and Swyne, hath printed his image in vs. And wherein consisteth this image, but in the hauing of discretion to discern betweene good and euill? And therefore it is not to bee maruailed at, though men couet to bee skilfull, and to haue wisdom and abilitie to iudge. But yet for all that, there are verie fewe that seeke rightly to haue a true iudgement, insomuch that al doe rather turne away and wander after their owne fancies, and become brutish in themselves. Yet neuertheless, (as I saide afore) wee make great account of the hauing of discretion and wisdom to iudge betweene good and euill. But heere Moses sheweth, that men are vnable to rule themselves. In deede wee weene yes: but it is but a weening, yea and an ouerweening. For our life is vtterly out of order, and there is nothing well ruled in it, vntill GOD haue shewed vs the way, and that wee haue profited in his schoole. That is the thing where vnto Moses leadeh the people as now. All men [sayeth hee] are desirous of knowledge, and loath to bee as brute beastes. Because they bee shapd after the image of God, they woulde faine haue discretion, that they might know how to liue.

Nowe it is so that GOD giueth you discretion and wisdom, by vouchsafing to set his worde before you. So then, bee not so vthankesfull towards him, as to misse so inestimable a benefite. Suffer GOD to make you profite in such wise by his worde as yee may bee skilfull and wise, and not wander any more. Wee see now in effect the meaning of Moses.

Nowe haue wee to gather vpon this text, what the weaknesse of mans minde is. True it is that our father Adam receiued vnderstanding and power to discern betweene good and euill in his creation: but after hee had sinned hee was after a sort blinded. And wee likewise are corrupted, so as wee discern in a manner nothing at all. Wee take white for blacke, as it appeareth by our corrupting of the whole seruice of GOD by our superstitions. True it is that God hath left vs some discretion, so as we knowe it euill to commit theft, whoredome, murder, &c. but yet notwithstanding, wee be daseled in such wise, that our insight is not so cleare and sure as to make vs walke aright. Yee see then after what sort men are made, and it is the thing that the scripture sheweth vs, insomuch that the wretched Paynims and such as knew not God, could not but be plunged in darkness and so destitute of reason, as they could not discern any more. That is the first point which wee haue to marke.

And when as Moses intytleth Gods worde and his lawe to bee our wisdom: thereby hee sheweth that wee haue no wisdom in our selues, ne knowe howe to behaue our selues, but are as brute beastes, vntill such time as our Lorde haue taught vs. That is another point. And were the same well borne in minde, surely men woulde not bee so bolde to ment things after their owne liking, but woulde hold themselves soberly and meekely vnder Gods worde. And so much the more neede haue wee to mind this texte, because wee knowe there is no other wisdom in vs, than to submit our selues teachable vnto God, and to harken what hee saith to vs, to sticke thereto quietly, refusing all that euer we can conceiue of our owne head.

According wherevnto Saint Paul saith, that wee cannot bee wise before God, vntill wee be become fooles in our selues: that is to witte, vntill we know that there is nothing but vanitie & leasing in our owne vnderstanding, and therefore that wee must giue ouer all that we thinke good, and not knowe aught but that which God commaundeth. And therewithall, as Moses ment heere to bereaue men of all selfweening, to the intent they shoulde stoope, and submitte themselves vnto Gods worde: so on the contrarie parte hee ment to shew that when men haue Gods Lawe for their rule: they shall want nothing, but all shall bee well and perfect. That is a seconde point which wee haue to note. I haue told you already that men must vnderstande, that there is not one droppe of founde iudgement in them, but that to become wise, they must yeeld themselves wholly vnto God. It is not ynough to knowe this: for wee might partly heere GOD, and afterwards adde thereto of our owne, as we see the Papiests haue done. They will not saye that the Scripture is false, (howbeit that they themselves doe falsifie it moste wickedly: and yet for all that they bee inforced spite of their teeth to saye still, it is the worde of God:) But they woulde faine mingle their owne lawes with it: whereby it is euident that they haue made such confusion, as a man cannot discern betweene the holy scripture, and their fancies. And why [haue they done so]? Because that to their seeming there is some want in Gods worde, and hee hath not taught things perfectly ynough: but that is a cursed blasphemie. For Moses, to giue due authoritie to Gods worde, saith expressly that it is the wisdom and vnderstanding of such as heare it, and taste of the doctrine that is conteyned in it. As if hee shoulde say, say, couet not to knowe further than your God sheweth you. Holde yee there: for those are your boundes and liffes, and whofoeuer passeth them confoundeth heauen and earth together. So then let vs learne, that when God is so gracious as to teach vs, it behoueth vs to yeelde simple to that which he saith. And how may that bee done? Verily if wee take things whole as hee telleth vs them, and not by halfe as wee see these braue laddes doe, which would cut off Gods authoritie from him by the waste. Well, say they: Let the Gospell be preached; but if there bee any thing that wee mislike, let that be laide away, such doctrine must bee let alone. Yea? Shall God then be subiect to mens fancies, so as they shall receiue nothing but what they thinke good themselves? What a madnes is that? Now when wee see these rascals aduance themselves after that sort: let vs on our side learne to giue care to God in all points, and to make no exception to restraine his authoritie, but to receiue obediently whatsoever proceedeth from his mouth. Let that serue for a principle: And againe, when we once know what is in the holy scripture, let vs receiue all the rest as straunge and bastarde stuffe. For our Lorde hath not taught vs as it were an Apfie, to sende vs to a greater and excellenter master than himselfe: For what a presumptuousnesse were it [to think,] that God hath shewed vs but onely the first entrances, and that men must leade vs higher? What a comparison were that? And yet notwithstanding it is the thing that is done in poperie. For the Pope saith, that the lawes which hee hath made, are the reuelations of the holie Ghost, wherof our Lorde Iesus spake when hee saide to his disciples [I haue many things to say vnto you,] but yee cannot beare them all away as nowe. Verily as who shoulde say, that God had giuen but some small enterances in his Lawe and his Gospell: and that the Pope were inspired about the Prophets and about Christ himselfe to bring a much more exquisite doctrine than theirs. Wee see then that the diuell hath passed all measure in this behalfe. Wherefore let vs learne to knowe nothing but that which we receiue from above, and which it pleaseth God to shewe vnto vs. Take that for a principle. Moreover, if this was verified of the lawe of Moses: let vs assure our selues there is much more reason that it shoulde properly be iustificed and verified of the gospel, so as they which haue profited therein, may assure themselves that they haue perfect learning, whereto to beholde euen the heauenly giftes, as Saint Paul speaketh of it. And therefore let vs humble our selues when we see our Lorde so gracious to vs, as to teach vs familiarly as it were with his owne mouth. This is in effect, which we haue to remember vpon this streine. In dedee it deserueth well to be laide forth more at length, and I must touch it againe hereafter: neuertheless I will now conclude with a complaint. I see walkers yonder, & I knowe for what their comming is, except it be to shew a contempt of God and his word, which is an intollerable lewdenesse. They come babbling heere to the doore, and that not twice or thrise, but more than a doozen times. It sheweth well that they despise God manifestly. Such is the honour of Geneva, that when the Gospell is a preaching, men come euen to the Church doore to make a flatte mockerie of it, and after the same manner also is baptisme honored heere: and it is too common a dealing.

Therefore let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of the innumerable faulces which wee haue committed against his maiestie, and for the which wee bee worthy of eternal death if hee pittie vs not. And therefore let vs pray him to shedde out his mercie vpon vs: and that we may the better feele the same, let vs beseech him to vouchsafe to traîne vs so vnto him henceforth as hee subdue all our stubburnnesse and all the wicked lustes of our flesh, and reforme vs in such wise to his obedience, as wee may fare the better by the chastisements that he sendeth vs: and therewithall graunt vs the grace to receiue our Lord Iesus Christ for our guide and shepheard, and to heare him as our teacher and master, like as hee speaketh to vs daylie by his worde. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onelic to vs, but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewsdai the xxj. of May. 1555.

The xxj. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fourth Chapter.

6 Which you shall keepe & c.

7 For what Nation is so great, that hath Gods comming so nie it, as the Lord our God commeth vnto vs, in all things that we call vpon him?

8 And what Nation is so great, that hath so righteous ordinances and lawes as all this lawe is, which I set before you this day?

9 Therefore take heede to thy selfe, and keepe thy soule diligently, that thou forget not the things which thine eyes haue seene, nor let them depart from thy heart all the dayes of thy life, but teach them to thy sonnes, and sonnes sonnes.

10 Forget not (say I) the day that thou stoodest before the Lorde thy God in Horeb, when the Lorde saide to me, gather me the people together.

MT was declared to vs yesterday, that forasmuch as GOD seeth that we know not how to liue: hee taketh paine to teach vs, and doth it in such fort, that as manie as list to obey his doctrine, haue a perfect rule to deale by. And at this day it is long of none but our selues, if we be not wise and well aduised to guide our selues. For wee haue a God that will not faile vs, and his worde is a sure rule for vs. But heere in wee see mens leawdnesse and vnthankfulnessse, in that they cannot finde in their heartes to submitte themselves vnto God, but will needes bee wife in their owne conceit, and still follow their owne intentions. Yet notwithstanding this maxime cannot bee rased out by men: namely, that wee haue neither wisdom nor discretion, except wee haue profited in Gods schole. And therefore we be warned heereby, to holde our selues simple to Gods commaundementes. For as soone as wee fall to adding of any thing to Gods worde, it is by and by but corruption: and when wee bee out of those boundes, wee can doe nothing but stray. Neuerthelessse, a man might make a question heere, howe Moses could say that the people of Israel should be counted sage and wise among all Nations: seeing wee knowe that the heathen did glorie in their owne follies and superstitions, euen in despite of the lawe. Seeing the Infidels were so proude that they reiected the good learning [of the Lawe,] and rested vpon their owne sonde toys, it should seeme that this was not accomplished in such wise as Moses speaketh of it heere. But wee must wee well the speech that is set downe heere: that is to wit, that the nations which shoulde heare the Lawes in such wise as God had giuen them, shoulde say, beholde heere an excellent and noble people: Nowe as for those that held scorn of Gods law, and were caried away with pride and ouerweening, did they cuer vnderstande what Moses had saide vnto the people? No. So then, yee see that the question is resolu'd in this wise: namely that as many of the heathen, as had knownen and tasted well the doctrine that God had deliuered to the people of Israel, confessed (as truth was) that Gods choosing of a certaine people for himselfe, was a great and singular priuiledge. But verie fewe of them vouchsafed to consider that: for all of them lay weltring still in their owne dung. And although it was apparently scene that the people of Israel had a feuerall lawe and Religion by themselves: yet did all men that their eyes and stoppe their cares. And that was the cause why they made no reckening of so great a benefite.

Now herewithal Moses sheweth in two things, how greatly the people ought to haue esteemed of the grace that was giuen vnto them. For let vs (saith he) bee compared with the rest of the worlde: and it shall not bee founde that those which worshipp Idolles doe finde such power among them as to bee succour at their neede, or that their Gods whom they call vpon, bee so familiar with them. There will no such thing be found. For as soone as we pray vnto our God, and resort vnto him: wee feele him neere vs by and by. Yee see then an inestimable benefite. Again, wee haue his lawes and Statutes which hee hath giuen vs, wee haue his righteous ordinances: all others doe but goe a strae. True it is that they weene they doe well: but in the meane while they haue no certaintie in their religion: for they haue no trueth concerning God. Therefore let vs consider the good that hee hath done vs, to the ende wee may inioy it. For all this is treated of by Moses, to the intent it shoulde bee applyed vnto vs, and we learne to serue our God with y greater zeale, and to holde our selues in awe. For the setting of his benefites and gracious giftes afore vs, is one of the wayes whereby God intendeth to winne vs to him. And it is a shame for vs if wee serue him not, seeing hee hath chosen vs and adopted vs to bee his children. Thus much concerning the first part, where it is saide that other nations haue no Gods that come so nigh them.

This saying (as I haue touched afore,) is meant of Gods helping of his people of Israel as ofte as they called vpon him: yea and oftentimes also euen before they required it, after which manner wee see that hee dealeth with vs also. Hee thinketh vpon vs while wee bee asleepe, hee watcheth for vs, and hee maketh vs to feele his succour at our neede. Neuerthelessse, in telling them that God will succour vs, euen in all things that wee require at his hand, his intent is also to encourage folk to call vpon God, and to make them to blame themselves for their owne negligence whensoever they bee destitute of helpe and succour at Gods hande: and to doe vs to vnderstande that Gods forgetting of vs, is for that wee seee not to him for refuse as wee ought to doe, ne seeke vnto him, who is alwayes readie to helpe vs at our neede. Thus yee see that the intent of Moses was to exhort the people to prayer and supplication, and therewithal to shew that God had alwayes shewed himselfe at hande vnto such as had returned to him.

It is not so with any of the Gods of the heathen. If this saying were well obserued, the wretched worlde woulde not ouerthoote it selfe so farre as it doeth. Wee see what windlasses men make to seeke saluation: but there are very few which goe right forth vnto God, and yet doeth hee allure all of vs: the way and the gate is open. Whereof is it long that wee goe not on? It is for that euen of nature wee desire to bee deceiued. Wee see howe all men doe desire patrones and aduocates to themselves, and it seemeth to them that they cannot be disap- pointed, when they haue their owne deuotions after what sort soeuer it bee. Thus doe men wilfully beguile themselves, and runne gadding vp and downe. But when they haue toyled them- selves neuer so much, in the ende they finde themselves ouer-winded, & yet y they haue gained nothing by all that euer they did. Wee see then howe it is not without cause faide, that if wee looke well to our selves, none of all the wretched vnbelceuers which torment them- selves to attaine vnto God, and holde not the right way thither, haue such aduantage as wee haue. For whensoever we call vpon God simple and according to his worde, wee be neuer disap- pointed.

Pla. 145. 18

But now let vs come to that which Moses ad- deth concerning statutes and laws, which is the principall point of this sentence. What people is there (saith he,) which hath so rightfull statutes and ordinances as we haue? Truly if a man would haue beleued the heathen, they thought verie well of themselves in their owne dotages, and they bare themselves in hand that there was nothing but sound perfection in them. But yet for all that, it is a wonder to see howe they became so dull. They that otherwise were of great skill and sharpewitted, were become so brutish in their superstitions, as euen little children might iustly haue beene ashamed of them. But the light must be faide to shine in the darke: or else it will neuer bee possible to discerne a right. And for prooff thereof, what is the cause that the heathen are so hardened in their owne dotages? It is for that they neuer knewe Gods Lawe, and therefore they neuer compared the truth with the vnruth. But when Gods lawe commeth in place, then doeth it appeare that all the rest is but smoke: inso much that they which took them- selves to be maruelous wittie, are founde to haue bene no better than befotted in their owne beastlinesse. This is apparant. Wherefore let vs marke well, that to discerne that there is nothing but vanitie in all worldly deuises, we must knowe the Lawes and ordinances of God. But if werest vpon mens lawes, surely it is not possible for vs to iudge rightly. Then must wee needes goe first to Gods schoole, and that will shewe vs that when wee haue once profited vnder him, it will be ynough. That is all our perfec- tion. And on the other side wee may despise all that euer is inuented by man, seeing there is nothing but fondnesse and vncertainty in them. And that is the cause why Moses termeth them rightfull ordinances. As if he shoulde say, it is true indeede that other people haue store of cere- monies, store of rules, and store of Lawes: but there is no right at all in them, all is awrie, all is crooked. True it is that they perceiue it not: and what is the cause thereof, but for that it is not possible for them to discerne good from euill, without Gods worde which is the truth? Howe soeuer wee fare, we cannot do the thing that is iust or right, except wee haue first learned it at Gods hande. And if wee haue bene so farre ouerwise as to allowe our owne doings, let vs not goe on still, for God will dis- lowe euerie whit of it, because wee must take all our rightnesse at his truth. In this case it is not for euerie man to bring his owne weightes and his owne balance: but wee must hold our scales to that which God hath vttered and doth viter. True it is that Moses doeth greatly magnifie the people of Israell heere: but yet neuertheless we must vnderstande, that the priuledge which is so greatly magnified here, did nothing aduan- tage those which reiected the lawe and profited not themselves thereby. The Iewes are termed heere a wise and skillfull people, a noble people, a people that hath nothing but excel- lency and worthinesse in them. And why so? Be- cause God had chosen them, and vttered his iudgements and righteousnesse vnto them. But yet for all that, on the other side they be termed blinde and deafe. And why? Because they did what they coulde to haue quenched the light that God had kindled for them. We knowe that they were taught by the doctrine which cor- reined their whole wisdom. And therefore when they despised it, they coulde not be but dubble blinded inso much that the ignorance of the hea- then and infidels, was nothing in comparison of theirs that had so reiected Gods grace, when it was put into their handes: And that is a point well worthie to be weyed. The Iewes do arme themselves yet still at this day with the same texe, when they list to commend themselves. Truth, say they: it is faide that wee be men of vnderstanding, a people of great wisdom, a people of passing noble and worthinesse. This is true, if they had helde fast the treasure that God gaue them, and kept it well. But seeing they be flected away from the law, or rather y a veyle is cast before their eyes, because of their reiecting of Iesus Christ: yea and seeing that e- uen before his coming, they disobeyed the Prophetes and became hardhearted against the doctrine of saluation that was brought to them: it coulde not be but that (as I haue afoie) they must needes become more ignorant than all the rest of the worlde. For if the heathen bee as good as destitute of reason, because they haue not bene in Gods schoole: needes must they to whome G O D hath spoken, and yet are dis- obedient thereto, needes must they (I say) bee stricken with the spirite of disnesse, and be- cared away by the diuell, and become as wilde beastes, so as they shall not offend of simple ignorance as they doe which neuer heerde any thing, but of willfull rage more than beastly. E- uen after that manner is it happened to the Iewes. And it is the verie same thing where- with the Prophete Esaye vpraideth them in his two and thorteth chapter, saying: Hearken ye deafe, see yee blinde. And why speakech hee to the deafe and blinde, to heare and see well? Hee addeth the reason by and by, saying: yee haue seene ynough, and yee haue hearde ynough: but yee haue not regarded it.

Also God complaineth of his paines taken in teaching of his people, and of losing his labour therein. For (saith hee) haue not I done workes ynowe among you? Yes, but what for that? You haue had neither cares nor eyes. And nowe if yee bee compared to the rest of the worlde, yee passe alle the heathen and vnbeleuers in blindnesse. And why? For yee haue had teaching ynough and too much. And his vpbraiding and blaming of them, is not for that they had not sufficient experience whereby to haue bene dewly taught: but for that they did shut their eyes, and woulde not profite themselues by the thinges that GOD shewed them.

Seeing that the Iewes are thus blamed by the Prophet, notwithstanding that Moses had reported them to bee a people of wisedom and vnderstanding: let vs come to our selues, and consider that if this bee happened to the naturall braunches, what shall become of the impes [that are grafted into the tree,] as Saint Paul speakech of it in the eleuenth to the Romanes. It is certaine that the Iewes went before vs in prehenience, or at lestwise they had the birthright in Gods Church, and haue it yet stil. And which more is, at such time as wee were straungers vnto God, they were his householde folke, and in his house and Church. Yet notwithstanding, euen after they had bene enlightened as wee see heere, they were condemned of greater blindnesse than the wretched Painims that neuer had any taste of the truth, nor any one sparke of good knowledge. And why? for they had made themselues vnworthy of such a benefite. But God in these dayes sheweth himselfe more familiarly to vs than he did to the fathers in the time of the lawe. For in the Gospell his face shineth forth in such wise, as wee may beholde it to be transfigured into his glorie. Is not our Lorde Iesus the luely image of God his father? And doeth not hee shewe himselfe in such wise in his Gospell, that we may discern him as well as if he dwelt among vs? Nowe then, if wee haue not our eyes open to receiue this doctrine, nor bee diligent to profite in the same: muste not the vengeance which the Prophet Esaye speakes of, light vpon our heads? that is to wit, that wee shall be more blinde and brutish than the heathen, for as much as wee haue seene and woulde not see? And in good sooth wee knowe it without his telling vs thereof. Looke me vpon the Turkes: they haue some reuerence to their religion, and so haue the Papises also. & yet are both of them cut off from the Church of God through their own fault, but yet are they not so much to blame as wee. Therefore when men slide backe againe after they haue once knowen the Gospell, yee shall see them become like dogges, so as there is no more honestie nor feeling of God in them, but they bee vtterly bewitched, and growe into the senslesnesse of minde which Saint Paul speakech of, namely that they make no remorse of conscience at any thing. And wee neede not to goe farre to seeke examples hereof. For euen among vs there are diuers to be seene, who hauing vnhallowed Gods word after that sort, are become starke inmadde and fall at defiance with GOD, being possessed with such diuellish rage, as there remaineth not any more shamefastnesse in them. Therefore when wee see this geere, we ought to quake at it and to say, Loe howe GOD reuengeth the contempt of his worde. And therefore let vs beate in minde, that when God hath bene so gracious to vs as to doe the office of a scholemaster among vs, and to teach vs by his word: it behouoeth vs to followe the light thereof. For if it bee put out through our naughtnesse: it must needes bee that wee shall become more dull of vnderstanding, than all the rest of the worlde whiche neuer wist what GOD or true Religion is. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke as in respecte of this sentence.

Nowe Moses addeth immediatly, Take heede to thy selfe and keepe thy soule diligently, that thou forget not the thinges which thine eyes haue seene, nor let them euer depart from thy heart: that is to wit, the day wherein thy God made thee to appeare before his Maiesitie in the valley of Horeb. There hee taught thee his lawe, when hee willed mee to make you all to appeare together before him. Therefore be mindful of that day, and let it neuer be forgotten. Nowe when as Moses saith take heede to thy selfe & keepe thy soule: Hee sheweth that hee cannot sufficiently expresse the care which wee ought to haue to walke in the feare of God, and to make and keepe good watch, for feare of starting from him, lest the diuell harrie vs abroad and make vs become as stray theepe. Nowe if this bee not superfluous, what needeth any more to quicken vs vp withall? See howe God speakech heere: hee saith not onely, take heede to your selues: but also, take heede to your selues and take heede to your soules. That is to say, vpon perill of your liues take heede to your selues and watch well, that yee bee not taken vnwares. And this is not said without cause: for we see howe frayle wee bee. Although God haue giuen vs so sure a foundation, as wee can neuer be shaken downe if wee holde vs to it: yet doe wee nothing but totter, and euerie thing of nothing maketh vs to reele. Seeing then that our nature is so vnconstant, and wee swaue so easily from Gods truth: let vs assure our selues that this exhortation is not set downe heere without cause. Again, we see also howe wily the diuell is, and howe many meanes hee hath to beguile vs, and wee are easily ledde to giue care to such as seduce vs. Also there is great policie vsed to deceiue vs: inso much that the couisers doe throude themselues euen vnder the name of GOD, in their suisting in of their false doctrines and errors: and the diuell disguiseth himselfe by transforming himselfe into an Angel of light (as S. Paul speakech of him): and hee assauleth vs not some oneway onely, but when hee perceiuech that hee hath missed on the one side, hee runneth straight to the other, so as wee haue no sooner withstoode one assault, but wee must fly by and come to another. Seeing then that wee on our side are so fraile, and the diuell hath such shifte of wyles and flyghtes to beguyle vs: we may well assure our felues it is not for nought that Moses willett vs here to beware, euen vpon perill of our soules. But what for that? Wee see neuerthelesse how ill this doctrine is put in practise. For wee bee carefull ynough for the things that concerne this earthly life: in somuch that wee stande alwayes vpon our gard for feare of being taken vnwares, and on what side so euer a man come to assaile vs, he can not enter vpon vs, for wee are euer armed: but as concerning Gods worde, wee forget that out of hand. True it is that men will come to some Sermon nowe and then for fashions sake: but when they come home againe they neuer thinke more of it, it is quite out of their remembrance, it goes in at the one eare and out at the other, as saith the prouerb: so that [in the ende] they finde themselves emptie and hungerstaru'd, because they made none account of the warning that is giuen vs here. So then, let vs learne to bee more watchfull and to keepe better warde: and let vs weigh well this saying, That we must take heed to our felues. Why so? For if wee doe not keepe good watche and looke well about vs: wee shall wonder to see how soone the Diuell will haue snarled vs in his snares. Moreouer forasmuch as it is vety harde for vs to doe so, and wee see that at one time or other wee bee quickly thrust out of the way: let euerie of vs take good heede to himselfe, and rowse vp all our wittes, and gather them about vs, applying them earnestly to this care & warrenesse which Moses speaketh of here.

And he saith purposely, Take good heede that thou forget not the things which shine eyes haue seene, and beware that they neuer depart from thy heart. Whenas he saith, The things which shine eyes haue seene: thereby he meaneth that the people are vterly without excuse, if they regarde not the things that God had shewed them, according to his former vsing of the same maner of speech, And wheras he saith that our eyes haue seene, it serueth to expresse the things which our Lord hath shewed vs tootoo evidently, so as wee cannot alledge ignorance, nor say, this or that was too high or too darke for mee. Thine eyes haue seene it, saith Moses. As if he should say, No no, ye neede not to bee great Clerkes nor Doctors in this behalfe, ye neede not to bee verie futtle-headed: our Lordes manifesting of himselfe vnto you hath bene in such sorte and so evidently, that euen the vveriest idioles and ruderst sorte of you haue perceiued the things that he told you. And in good sooth, although Gods worde conteinie wonderfull secretes: yet notwithstanding they bee so manifest vnto vs, as wee may be able to conceiue them, at leastwise if we our felues bee not in the fault. For wee see howe God lowlieth himselfe and stoopeth to our ruderesse, because he knoweth what wee be able to beare. Nowe then seeing it is so: let vs but open our eyes, and when God hath once shew'd himselfe to vs, let vs take good heede that wee forget him not: for if wee doe, wee shall bee vnexcusable, and our vnthankfulness will bee manifest and sufficiently proueed. Againe he sheweth that it is not ynough for vs to haue some light rememberance of it swimming in our braine: but it must bee well rooted in our heartes: And after that manner ought Gods worde to bee sowed in vs. It is not ynough for vs to haue skill to talke of it, and to bee able to say, I knowe this & that: but wee must holde fast the things inwardly which wee haue heard outwardly. Nowe then, if Gods worde bee setled in our heartes, and raigne there: then haue wee good remembrance of it. But if wee bee not touched with it, nor haue any willingness to keepe it: it is all one as if wee had neuer heard of it. Thus ye see what we haue to marke concerning this speech of Moses, where it is saide, that the things which wee haue once knowne must neuer out of our mindes.

But forasmuch as God had vetered himselfe diuers wayes to the people: it behoued Moses to shewe his meaning more particularly in this text. And therefore he addeth, The day wherein thou wast before the Lord thy God, thou diddest appeare before God in the valley of Horeb, at which time hee commaunded mee to summon you, and to call you all together. Albeit then that God had shewed himselfe to the people of israel by diuerse myracles, by sundrie kindes of sightes, and also by diuerse reuelations as in respect of his worde: yet doeth Moses bring backe the people here, chiefly to the lawe, and to the solemne day wherein the lawe was published. And that is according to the matter that wee haue seene. In so much that if wee haue not that grounde, wee shall but bulde in the aire, and all that euer can bee saide vnto vs will slippe from vs. The grounde that I meane is the submitting of our felues vnto God, to bee guided by his worde and to bridle our felues thereby, so as he alone may haue the whole authoritie and maisterhip ouer vs, and wee become his true Disciples in sticking to his pure doctrine. That then is the cause why Moses doeth make speciall mention here of the solemne day wherein the lawe was giuen to the people of israel. For he sawe well that it woulde not haue booted at all to haue vppened neuer so many things by parcelmeale, if he had not set downe the chiefe groundwoorke, which is that men must suffer themselves to bee governed by Gods lawe. Likewise at this day, when wee shall haue disputed at large of a number of pointes, if wee doe not first and foremost winne that men should obey God, and make them not knowe that his worde is the right truth wherunto they must holde themselves: to what purpose is it? They will bee still wauering and vnconstant, accordingly as wee see howe a great number will bee tasting of this and that, and can finde nothing whereto rest. And why? For they know not the first point of Christianitie, which is, that the holy Scripture is our whole wisdom, and that wee must hearken to God speaking there, and not adde any thing thereunto. Nowe then, vntill such time as wee bee come to that point, wee shall bee euer changing, and doe nothing but totter and wauer like Reedes. And for the same cause doeth the Prophet Malachie say, Be mindful of the Law that was giuen you by

Deut. 3. 31.

Col. 1. 28.

Mal. 4. 4.

Moses in Horeb. For it was Gods will that thenceforth there shoulde bee an intermission, so as a certaine time shoulde passe where in the Prophetes shoulde speake no more till the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Nowe in the meane while the Prophet Malachie saith, Bee mindefull of the Lawe that was giuen. As if hee shoulde say, yee can not doe amisse if ye hearken to your GOD, and suffer your selues to bee taught by him; but you shall haue perfect learning, for it is vttered there. Now therefore wee see what the meaning of Moses is, and howe wee ought to apply the same to our owne vse: that is to wit, that about all thin;es wee must assure our selues, that our Lorde hath vttered him selfe vnto vs in such wise, as he will be a good and faithfull teacher vnto vs, if wee bee good schollers vnto him. And therefore let vs settle all our wittes to the obedience of faith, so as wee presume not to adde any thing to that which GOD telleth vs. When wee bee once come to that point, then shall wee bee guided forth from point to point, and from degree to degree to our perfection: but yet must wee haue the foresaid groundworke, before wee can build well.

Nowe let vs come to this saying of his, Call to minde the daye wherein yee were before the Lorde. This saying importeth much. For although that GOD did then testifie his presence in the valley of Horeb, as wee shall see hereafter; yet notwithstanding whensoever hee speaketh vnto vs, wee appeare before his iudgement seat, though wee haue no visible myracles. And it is all one as if a Prince being set to hold a Court of estate, should cause his statutes and ordnances to bee proclaimed by the sounde of a trumpet, to the intent that all men might haue knowledge of them. After the same manner doeth GOD deale in this case. For when he vouchsafeth to haue his worde preached vnto vs, it is as much as if he summoned vs to him, and called vs to his throne, there to appeare euerie man for himselfe, to yeelde account as before our iudge. And (as I told you) this importeth much. For wee bee greatly destitute of wit and reason, if this moue vs not to heare Gods worde with other reuerence than wee haue done. If we considered well, that when we come to a Sermon, or when wee take the Byble in our handes to reade, God citcheth and summoneth vs, so as we cannot cast our eye vpon his word, nor receiue so much as one worde that is vttered to vs in his name, but that his Maiestie is present there with it, and wee our selues are present in his sight. If wee thought well vpon that: I pray you should wee not bee otherwise prepared and humbled to yeeld our selues teachable? Should wee not bee in another manner forwardnesse than wee are seene to bee? Therefore if wee come hither with such coldnesse, as it were but for orders sake, or when in reading of the Byble, some of vs are cayed away with sonde curiositie, some thinke them selues discharged to Godwarde with the hauing of two or three sentences, and other some make but a pastime of it: doeth not this dealing of ours shewe well, that wee neuer tasted of this saying? Namely, that if GOD speake vnto vs, wee must come before him and feele his Maiestie, to be as it were beaten downe vnder it, to the ende to fill mit our selues the better to his worde. That is one principall point.

Besides this there is also an assemblie that Moses speaketh of, howe he was commanded to gather the people together. For it hath bene Gods will to keepe that order from the beginning for the better exercising of vs in the vnitie of faith. True it is that he could well teache vs euerie one alone by himselfe: and in deede he vsed that way too, so that whether he instructed vs by teaching, or giue vs grace to profite by reading, it may well bee done by our selues alone; but yet therewithall there is the common order, which he will haue to continue inuioleable. And why? Forasmuch as wee haue all one faith, and haue neede to be tyed and knit together in one: GOD vsed this meane of teaching vs all as it were by one mouth, and maketh vs to meete together: as it were in one bodie: and that, not onely to the ende that a great multitude may take profite at one mans mouth, but to the ende wee shoulde knowe that there is but one rule, one truth, one God that speaketh, and which caufeth vs to bee of one accorde and one melodie in that beh: life, in so much that when euerie man holdeth in with his neighbour, it is because there is a right conformitie. That then is the thing whereunto Moses had respect, in saying that God commanded him to assemble the people, as he that was his Lieutenant. Hee gaue the Lawe generally to the intent that the people might by that meane bee taught to thinke thus with them selues: behold, our God will haue vs to bee of one accord in him, and to bee one bodie wholly conformable to his worde, so as euerie man thurst not for himselfe like bandes that were scattered and put to flight in battell, but linck together in one right and holy vnion. And this is not for one time onely: but it must be put in vre vnto the wordes ende. For it is Gods will that his Gospell should bee published. And how? Nor in huddier mudder and in folkes cares: but he will haue men to bee taught openly, and to meete together, yea and their meeting to bee to the ende that hee bee preached, so as there may be a good vnitie of faith, & that the mark: whereat all of vs doe shoote, may bee to bee gathered and knit together in our head Iesus Christ, who is the bond whercof S. Paule speaketh, which proceedeth of the common preaching. Wherefore let vs learne that wee can not bee rightly of Gods housholde, nor of his flocke, vnlesse wee meete together, and that our meeting be not onely a coming together in the Church, but also a continuall linking together in vnitie when we be gone thence, and when euery of vs is alone by himselfe from companie, so as wee shewe that Gods gathering of vs together vnto himselfe is not in vaine, but that there is a right brotherhood among vs, to come all vnto him in y name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. For the diuill seekes by

Eph. 4. 5.

Matt. 10. 27.
& Luk. 12. 3

Eph. 4. 11. 18

by all meanes to breake that bend, as we see he hath laboured in all ages to stirre vp sectes to rend asunder the bodie of the Church, and it is the thing that he strueth to doe in these dayes more than euer he did erst. And if hee cannot obtaine that false doctrines may haue their full scope to make haucke of all things: yet will hee sowe darrell among vs, so as in stead of being vnitd, we shall bee heauing one at another, or at leastwise as good as drawn a sunder, so as our bond shall not bee strait and well knutte together. When we see the matter in that taking, let vs vnderstande that it is a practise of the diuels diuising. And why? Gods intent is that we should bee gathered together before him, yea euen before him. For the wicked wil wel ynough make leagues and confederacies. howbeit, that is but to spire GOD: and in verie deede they turne their backs vpon him, and hide themselves from him, and by all meanes possible eschew to come at him, for they haue no liking at all of him. But wee on our side must come together in the presence of our God. Sith it is so, let vs bee afraide to shrinke a sunder, and let not the Diuell separate vs as we see hee labourth to doe; and he knoweth that hee shall haue ouerthrowen the principall point of our saluation, if he may winne that at our handes. And therefore let vs abhorre all such fowers of discord in the Church of God. Wee see now adayes, that in stead of assembling together, there are diuers which seeke nothing but to scatter Gods flocke: and wee neede not to goe any further than to this present place. We perceive howe the re scall'es doe now adayes scue the duell as though they tooke wages of him; or were vterly solde to bee his seruantes. A man may see whereat they shoor. There needeth no guessing or coniecturing; there needeth no great inquirie of the matter: let a man but looke vpon their doings, and he shall finde that their whole seeking is to breake al vnion, and to pluck asunder the things that haue bene knitte together in the name of God. If GOD did euer worke myraculously in any place: he workeeth here as myraculously as in any place of y world, and hee sheweth the power of his wordes as mightily as may bee. Goe whither ye will, and such as are scattered from all other places, resort hither to shewde themselves as it were vnder Gods wings, and to bee as it were one flocke gathered together in his name. And what doeth the Diuell on the contrarie parte? There is nothing else but banding, that the wicked may sined aboarde their venim and poison. And howe? Euen by vnioyning the things that GOD had ioyned. In deede they will not say it: but the thing it selfe is too apparant, and there needeth no long disputing or discouraging of the matter, if a man doe but open his eyes he shall see it. And it is a great shame that it is suffered and winked at: for the matter is too open and manifest. Yet notwithstanding it is not our Lordes will that the things which hee hath knitte together shoulde bee so vnhappily rent a sunder, and all bee put out of order after this sort. Wherefore let vs abhorre such plagies, and beseeche GOD to rid his Church of them & the world too, by powring out his vengeance vpon them; seeing it appearth that they bee vterly reprobate, and that there is no meane to reclaim them againe. God so thunder downe vpon them, as men may knowe howe highly hee esteemeth the vnitie of the faith, and his Church bee maintained in true brotherhood and concord. And in the meane season let vs labour to bring this to passe: and if we bee true members of Iesus Christ, let vs doe the cleane contrarie to that which wee see the wicked doe. For sith that they doe straine themselves so to put all things to haucke; let vs on our side walke on in good vnion, and looke that wee come together in the presence of our God, and that in such wise as his worde doe maintaine vs in good agreement, and caule vs so to serue him; and wee being conuertant one with another in good brotherly friendship, may bee followers of the fatherly goodnesse of our GOD, whereby hee gathereth the things together which were scattered asunder before.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feel them, as wee may repent vs of them aright and seeke the remedie of them, which is, that he cleanse vs from all our affections and lustes, making vs to renounce all our owne desires in such wise, as we may no more bee giuen to our owne fancies and likings, but seeke altogether to be ruled by his wordes, and to profite therein after such a sorte more and more, as our whole wisdom and perfection may be to be ruled altogether by y same. That it may please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs, but also to all, &c.

On Wednesday the xxij. of May. 1555.

The xxij. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the fourth Chapter.

and I will make them to heare my words, which they shall learne, to the end they may feare mee all the dayes which they shall liue vpon the earth, and that they may reach their children.

11 Then came yee and stode vnder the hill, which burnt with fire vnto the middes of the skie, and there was darkenesse, cloudes, and mist.

12 And the Lorde your God spake vnto you out of the middes of the fire. Yee heard the voyce of his wordes: but you sawe not any image besides the voyce.

13 Then declared he his couenant vnto you, which hee commaunded you to doe, that is to wit, the tenne verses, and hee wrote them vppon two tables of stone.

14 The same time the Lorde commaunded mee to teache you the ordinaunces and Lawes, to the ende yee should doe them in the Land which you goe into to possesse it.

Declared yesterday after what manner wee must come together in the name of God, to appeare before him. For the meeting of the wicked is to make confederacies, and it is apparant that their seeking is but only to conspire against God and all goodnesse: but yet their meeting is by hiding themselves from Gods presence, & they would faine turne their backs vpon him, so as he should not see them. Truly they doe but loose their time: for all things must needs come to account before God. And if mortall men espie their wicked practises, so as they perceiue that their banding of themselves is but to overthrow all order: the same must needs bee known to the heauenly iudge, from whom nothing is hidden. If their lewdnesse appeare euen to little children: thinke they that God hath his eyes stopped? But it behoueth vs on our side to present our selues before God in all our meetings, to the intent that he may sit among vs, & wee bee taught as it were by his mouth and gouerned by his hand. Furthermore forasmuch as wee see that the wicked seeke altogether to rend a sunder the vnion of the Church: let vs endeavour so much y more to come together in Gods name. For wee can not prouoe our selues to bee his children, if wee haue not the marke whereof Moses speaketh here. And thereby it may bee iudged, that such as passe not to haunt the companies of Christians, when they meeete together in the name of God to heare his worde and to pray vnto him: are but as dogges, and deserue not to bee reckened in the common aray of nie, but are to bee abhorred as dung and filth, because they haue cut off themselves from Gods house. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember concerning that text.

And nowe Moses addeth, that if we nunde to fare the better by the meetings that are made in the name of God: Wee must hearken to the things that he telleth vs, and that must bee to the ende that wee may feare him, that is to say, to the ende wee yeeld him all reuerence, and it may appeare that wee take him for our Father and God. For if we thinke to content God with ceremonies, we decieue our selues, as they doe which could finde in their heartes to haue no Religion at all, and therefore resort hither, some but once a moneth, and other some as seldome as may bee. There are also which come hither vpon the Sundayes and Wednesdayes as it were for fashions sake: but in the meane while doeth it appeare that they bee any whit edified in the feare of God?

Doeth it appeare that their comming hither to crowd themselves into the flocke, doth any whit amend them or make them the better? Nay rather they become the more venomous against God, & therefore their comming to infect Gods house, is to their greater condemnation: for they bee vnworthie to come here, they bee no better than swine. Therefore our comming to the Church must be to another ende: that is to wit, that wee may profite in the feare of God. Nowe (as I haue touched already) this feare importeth that he should ouerrule vs, and that wee should bee subiect vnto him. And for the same cause also doeth Moses match these two sayings together, namely that wee must doe the things that God commaundeth vs, and also, that wee must feare him. Many men thinke they feare God well, whē they haue some fond deuotion towards him, as wee see in Poperie, where euerie man sayes that his intent is to serue God: but after that fashion: Euen euerie man after his owne fantasie. But y obedience which God requireth at our hands in yeelding our selues wholly to his worde, and the reuerence which wee owe him as to our Father and King: are things vnseparatle. Wherefore let vs marke well that if we be minded and desirous to come together as wee ought to doe: Gods worde must haue all authoritic ouer vs, so as our receiuing thereof bee not onely to comfort it with our mouth, but also to frame our liues wholly thereafter. For if wee will needes lue after our owne swindge, and euerie of vs doe what seemeth good to himselfe: God holdeth scorne of vs and disclaimeeth vs, though wee protest to feare him and serue him [neuer so much.] For it is no reason but that he should be heard, specially seeing he taketh paine to teach vs. That therefore is the first point.

Againe let vs vnderstand that our keeping of Gods Lawe, and our walking according to his will, doe not aduantage him at all: for what can he receiue at our hands? But it is to the end that the world may know that we feare him, that is to say, that wee take him for our maister, & that we would faile be wholly his, and that he should gouerne vs. That is the effect of the matter that Moses sheweth here. Howbeit forasmuch as Churches are oftentimes defiled with hypocrits and wicked folke which crowde in coetly, who notwithstanding are worthe to bee euen thrust out of the world: Let vs marke what is saide in the fiftieth Psalme, where God declareth that he separateth his [true seruantes] from such as falsely abuse his name: so as his voyce thundereth to summon those that feare him aright, and haie haue not coucnanted with him vnfeynedly, nor serue him onely with Ceremonies, but also in very deede: them will he alleme together. And on the contrarie part, hee vpbraideth those that take his name in their mouth, and yet notwithstanding doe take part with robbers, murderers, theeues, and traytours. Therefore when men will needes match GOD and the diuel together after that fashion, as it appeareth that most men doe: God complaineth of it, and protesteth that it shall not scape vnpunished. Now if he shewe such a separation aforhand: Let vs be well assured, that when the day commeth wherein the Goates shall be put asunder from the Lambes, the shame of such as haue preached after that sorte into Gods Church shall then be discouered, and they shall be abhorred of all creatures as they deserue, But in the meane while let vs see that we separate our selues from them as neede as we can: and when we see such vnclannesse, at leastwise let vs beware that wee mislike them, and let vs pray God to rid and cleanse his Church of such infectious. Howsoeuer the case stand, let vs be mindefull of the thing that Moses speaketh in this text, whensoeuer we intende to meete together in the name of God.

Afterward hee addeth, that when wee our selues haue walked in the feare of God, euery of vs must teach his children to do the lyke. Wherin wee see that it is not enough for euery man to discharge his duty in liuing orderly himselfe: but that we must (to y vttermost of our power,) procure the continuance of Gods honor and seruice after our deceases. And in good sayth, is it reason that Gods name should be buried with our death? We know how flightfull our life is: but Gods glory must indure for euer without decaying. Therefore let vs learn our owne dutie: that is, to walke righteously all y time of our life, and to indeuer to traine vp our children aright, so as religion may flourish and prosper when wee be dead, and God be alwayes honored in the world, that his name may be called vpon purely. And that is the very cause also why God commaundeth fathers so straightly to teach their children, For he coulde well send his creatures into the worlde, though no man had any speciall care of them: but hee chargeth fathers to bring vp their children. And why? To the ende they should knowe that they must yeelde an account of them. And for the same cause also doth he communicate his name vnto them. For the title of father belongeth to himselfe alone: but yet hee honoreth men so much as to grant them the name of fathers. And to what ende? That they should be the earnestest and carefuller in teaching their children their duties.

So then, let vs doe our indeuour, that there may remaine a good after spring after our decease, so as Gods Church may flourish still, and his name be worshipped from age to age. And wee ought to labour so much the more in that behalf, because wee see how the diuel practiseth to ouerthrow all that euer is builded in the name of God. So farre of is it that the fruite which ought to come of the Gospel doth ripen:

that men doe labor to plucke it vp, or else to marre it and to turne it out of the owne kinde. Sith wee see this, ought we not to bee the more prouoked to doe the dutie that is commaunded vs here? Without going any further, what is to be seene here among vs? The Gospell hath bin preached to vs now a long time: and yet for all that, what maner of ones are they which haue bin borne of all this time, to whom God hath graunted the grace to be suckled with Gods word euen from the teate, and to bee brought vp in it lykewise, so as they being then but little babes, did neuer see any of the diuells abominations of poperie, and therefore ought to bee euen thoroughly soked in the doctrine of saluation? what maner of ones are they? doth it not appeare that most part of them are so frowarde, as if they were the brood of Serpents? The world may see that they despise God openly, and commit such wickednesse and lewdnesse, that there is much more honestie and more shewe of Religion among the Papistes, than there is among these. Seeing then that thunges are so farre out of order, and the diuill indeuoreth to put all to hauocke, ought we not to be the more inflamed to doe our indeuour, that there may remaine at leastwise some little seede after our decease, so as the remembrance of the Gospell be not utterly abolished, nor the thing that hath bin set vp so happily in the name of GOD and by his wonderfull power, be decayed and pulled downe againe by the enemies? Now then, seeing that God hath graunted vs the grace and priuledge to bee called to the hearing of his worde, and to haue it set forth in the pure simplicitie among vs: let vs vnderstand that we be the more bound to serue and honor him, not onely feuerally for our owne partes, but also by teaching our children, and by taking paynes to make them also to liue vertuously, so as the doctrine which they shall haue heard in their youth bee not loste nor marde, as wee see too much by experience. And generally let vs all haue this regarde, that such as come after vs may agree in the true religion, so as there may be no change. But so far off is that from being done; that the enemies of the truth, (I meane the household enemies and not the Papistes, for they bee farre worse than the Papists,) think they shall neuer come time enough to ouerthrowe all order and to pull downe all that GOD hath set vp here. Sith wee see it is so, let vs vnderstand that wee ought to bee as earnest in building vp to the Lorde as the diuillis in pulling all downe. For let vs not mistrust but that Gods power is stronger than all the fiendes of hell. Thus yee see what wee haue to note vpon this freyne: that the chiefe matter is the putting of it in vre.

And now Moses addeth, that GOD shewed himselfe to his people with dreadful tokens, which were able to haue astonishd them. For hee spake to them (sayth he) from the middes of the fyre. And therewithall there was a great clowde, darke nesse, and miste. By these wordes Moses sheweth that the lawe was not brought without good warrant: for it was accompanied with wonders that were able to astonish the whole worlde. And to what purpose serued that, but to make it certainly knowe that the lawe came from heauen, and that God was the author thereof? According whereunto it is sayd in Exodus, that when God appeared after that sorte in a thicke cloude, and a flaming fire, making the ayre to rore and the mountaine Sinay to shake, and the found of trumpets to be heard: all those things (sayth he) were done of purpose to make you hearken to your Lorde God, and to knowe that it was hee that spake, and that whosoever receiue the doctrine that I haue brought you, must fight against the maiestie of God. But [if hee doe so] he shall finde God too strong for him. Thus yee see what belongeth to this text. And so wee see now wherefore Moses made mention of the cloude, darke- nesse, and mist: namely to the ende it should be knowne, that the lawe was not put forth but by the authoritie of the liuing God, and that men might be fully assured that it came from heauen.

And let vs mark by the way, that Gods chosing of the signe that is mentioned here, was to do vs to vnderstand, that we must not inquire of his maiestie further than he giueth vs leaue. GOD shewed not himselfe in any visible shape, least it might bee thought that his essence or being had some shape, whereof we will treat to morrowe by Gods leaue: but hee did set a cloude, darke- nesse, and mist before him. And why? To the ende that wee should learne to be humble, and to knowe that hee dwelleth in vnapprocha- ble light. Wee knowe howe curious and ouer- bolde men are, for they woulde faine knowe what Gods being or substance is, and searchoe out euery whit of him by incheale, and that so presumptuously as though they would pushe vp their hornes into heauen. Such is their nature. But God will haue vs to worship him in feare and humilitie, as good reason is it should be so. And he withdraweth himselfe the further from vs, when we inquire further of him than hee commaundeth vs. For otherwise were it not all one as if we would make him our vnderling? What preheminece should hee haue if he were so shut vp win mans conceit? Therefore to expresse so great and so excessive rashnesse, hee did set a darke clowd before him. But we must marke, that whē God did set dark- nesse before the eyes of the people, it was not to the intent to be vtterly vnknowne, but to hold the people in awe, that they should not prece- nne the hill where the fire and flame appea- red that are spoken of in Exodus as is said afore: and therefore was there a great and thicke clowd hard by the people. That then was the meane which God vsed to shewe himselfe to the peo- ple. Marke that for one poynt.

The other poynts that God did vtter him- selfe in such manner, as the people sought no fur- ther than was lawfull for them, but helde them- selues contented with such discouerie as was gi- uen vnto them. And these two poyntes are well woorthie to bee marked. For many men when they list to excuse their ignorance, will say that wee ought not to be inquisitic of Gods secretes: No truly, but yet is it not meant that we should bee brute beasts. Wherefore hath GOD created vs after his owne image, but to the intent that his trueth should shine forth in vs? And yet notwithstanding, it is as a common proverbe that hath reigned and doth reigne still in the popedome: in so much that the foundation whereon they haue grounded their implied faith, is that they must not know any thing, but that it is enough to beleue as the Church beleueth. And in the meane while they wote not at what marke they shoote, nor what God they worship, nor how his name is to be called vpon. But as I touched afore, Gods meaning is not that men should abolish and destroy the grace that hee hath put into them, for it were an vtter defacing of his image in dis- pite of him; but rather after as hee cometh neer vnto vs & we vnto him, so wil hee haue his I- mage y more knowne in vs & his trueth y more shine foorth there. Let vs vnderstand then that Gods intent is not that men should be ignorant of him, but to vtter himselfe in such wise, as we may be able to discern him from the idols that haue bin forged, so as wee may take him for our father, and assure our selues y we be called to the knowledge of his truth, and y we may boldly resort vnto him to call vpon him, and to seeke succour at his hand. After that maner was it Gods will to manifest himselfe to the people of Israell at the setting foorth of the lawe: and af- ter y same maner continueth hee still at this day.

But yet for all that, the clowde is still before his face, to make men knowe their owne ruden- nesse. Againe forasmuch as wee be ouerfull and would knowe dubble as much as is lawfull for vs, in so much that wee attempt to knowe the things that are vnpossible to bee knowne: there- fore did God cast a great and thicke clowde be- tweene himselfe and the people. And if wee were thoroughly perswaded hereof, it would be as a key to open vs the vnderstanding of y whole holy scripture. For why? Whensoever we came to the reading or hearing of it, we should be sure that our Lord icsteth not when hee speaketh af- ter that maner, and when hee protesteth thus by his prophet Esay: I haue not spoken it in se- crete, neither haue I sayd it in vaine, that men should seeke mee. Therefore whosoever heareth mee, and receiue the trueth that I tell him, shall not bee disappointed in seeking mee. Thus yee see that wee shall profite, if wee beare well in minde that GOD manifesteth himselfe vnto vs, so farre foorth as is behoofe- full for our soules health. And besides this, wee shoulde with all singleness reuerence the things that we comprehend not, wee should euer of vs walke according to the measure of his faith, and wee should continually indeuor to come neerer and neerer vnto him and to gather strength. And moreouer if the things were too high for vs: very well, wee would (as Saint Paul warneth vs in the third of the Philippians) tary till God shewed them more playnely, and yet in the meane while not cease to glorifie him.

him. But we see the cleane contrarie. For vnderpretence that Gods word seemeth dark, many thinke from it, and make a defence of it to excuse their ignorance withall. Other some againe doe rush forward with diueltish presumptuousnesse, to seeke out things that God hath not reuealed; and through vnstatable desirousnesse of knowledge, doe picke out newe questions euery minute of an houre, and if they may not seee all things at will, they bend their hornes against God as wee seee these rascalls doe, which spewe out their blasphemies when Gods secretes seeme strange to them after their owne fancie. If they perceiue not Gods eternall election, if they perceiue not how he choseth the one sort & reuicteth the other euen according to his will: if they vnderstand not how he disposeth of his creatures, and that nothing happeneth but by his good will: by and by they fall to fretting and chafing, yea and they dare euen murmur against God and would haue all things rased out of the holy scripture, which agree not with their fantastical braine. So much the more therefore doeth it stand vs on hand to remember well what is tolde vs here: namely that God casteth a clowde before our eyes. And why? To the end wee should be sober in inquiring of him, and in deuour to profite according to his teaching of vs: for it belongeth him to knowe what is for our behoofe: and moreover that wee should alwayes walke according to the measure of the faith which he shal haue giuen and imparted vnto vs. Thus much concerning the clowde.

And now seeing the Lawe was giuen with record that God is the author thereof: Let vs in these dayes learne to rule our selues thereafter, and not call the thing any more in question, which wee ought to bee most assured of. Secondly if wee compare the lawe with the Gospell, let vs vnderstand that there is much more reason why wee should humble our selues, and reuerently receiue all that is conteyned in the Gospell. For although the lawe was ratified with so many miracles: yet did it not fayle: to stryke the people in feare, and to bring them in greate vexation of minde, insomuch that they sayd, Let not the Lorde speake vnto vs, for then are wee all dead. And why? For if a man looke no further but to Gods commaundements, there is nothing but cursing. By reason whereof men beholding themselves bound to things vnpossible, and perceiuing that God will be their iudge: must needs be cast downe, yea and driuen to vtter despair. After that manner was the lawe deliuered to the people. But the Gospell nowadayes is friendly vnto vs. For there God calleth vs to bee of his household, not for any desert of ours in performing the things that he commaundeth, but of purpose to beare with vs as with his children, forasmuch as he hath adopted vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ. Seeing then that God allureth vs to him so louingly, haue wee not the more cause to receiue the doctrine of saluation with all reuerence, considering that it is the message of life, whereas the lawe was a recorde of death to terrify the people, I meane the people of the Iewes?

And as in respect of miracles, wee are sure the Gospell hath bin warrantred wth moe, than euer the lawe was. And besides the miracles the lawe bin wrought, behold, Iesus Christ in whom dwellth all glory and maiestie, is come into the worlde to beare witnesse therof. Seeing then the lawe we haue the Gospell and the doctrine of Iesus Christ, who hath the fulnesse of the Godhead in him: ought not we to be more humbled vnder the obediēce of the Gospell, than the people of olde time were vnder the subiectiō & bondage of the lawe? yea: and therefore is it sayd, the heauen & earth were both shaken, as the prophet Aggeus speaketh of it, saying that the earth was thoroughly shaken at the publishing of the lawe. And the Apostle alledgeth the same text in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, saying: but now must all be shake, & the power of God must vtter it selfe farre greater in the Gospell. So then let vs learne that if the clowde and darkenesse which appeared at the time to the Iewes, ought to haue taught them to obey God & to submit themselves to his lawe: much more ought the same to preuaile wth vs at this day: specially seeing wee haue not a darke clowde: for (as sayth St. Paule) there is not so much as any veile before vs, but wee haue the image of God shining forth, and wee seee him as it were face to face. Seeing then the God doth nowadayes appeare to vs after another maner than he did to the fathers, so as he sheweth vs his liuely image in our Lorde Iesus Christ, to the intent wee should beholde more for our father and Saviour, and in stead of the darke clowde we haue nowadayes the great light of the Gospell: Let vs assure our selues that wee ought to be the more desirous to obey him in all things. That is the thing which wee haue to remember here.

Herewithall let vs also way this saying that is set downe here: namely, that the people ought to haue rested altogether vpon the voyce that was uttered vnto them, as the vey make whereby God will be knowne. To morrowe it shall be declared more at length, why God would not haue any visible image: but yet notwithstanding wee must at this present, wey well this poynt, that God did vtter forth his voyce. And why? To the intent that thereby the people should bee restrained as with a bridle, and consider with themselves that their eyes must not be wandering and gasing about, to seeke any shape of God, but that their eares must be attentiuē to heare his voyce, so that whensoever God speaketh, men must be as it were imprisoned to it, and content themselves to be taught by him. Therefore when we come before the Lorde, accordingly as it is sayd that they which meete together in his Church doe appeare before him: let vs note that wee must make account of his voyce. [and I thinke thus with our selues.] What come we hither to doe? Whereas the Papiſtes gaue vpon their Church walles, and fiske about after their foolish ceremonies and after murlimewes of their own making: insomuch that although they thinke they please God, yea and hold him bound vnto them, yet they doe but play the brute beastes in behalfe: Let vs haue Gods word as the certaine mark that he sitreth in the midst of vs, & is [alwayes] at hand with vs. After that maner must wee thinke, if wee will not erre: for the true marke for all the faithfull to shoote at, when they assembl together in the name of G O D, is to haue his voyce as a warrant of the presence of his maiestie. And of a truth, lyke as the care was the cause of the withdrawing of the first man from God: so must it draw vs to him again at this day. What was it that banished our father Adam out of Gods kingdom? What caryed him away from the hope of lyfe, but his eares which receiued the voyce of Satan, and the fall-hood that was put to him? Now then, lyke as wee be separated from God by that damnable voyce, when wee haue yeldded vnto euill: so now wee knowe that the onely meane to bee called vnto God and to enter into his house, that wee may be of the number of his children: is to heare Gods voyce and thereby to be vnitid vnto him. This muche concerning that word. Moses addeth thereunto, that as the same time God published his covenants which hee had made afore, and commaunded Moses to bring them the ten articles in two tables, charging him to teach the people his lawes and iudgements, that they might doe them. Hereby wee see againe that which I haue touched heretofore: that is to wit, that God will not haue his doctrine to be as a dead thing, but to bee of power to reforme vs, so that wher-as naturally wee be frowarde and giuen to all naughtines, wee must be subiect to him in such wise as his righteousnesse may taigne in vs. To that intent was the lawe fet forth. True it is that the lawe being writte in two tables of stone, could not be kept vnlasse: God subdewed the hardnesse of mens hartes by his holy spirit: and therefore it serued as a figure to shewe that the lawe ought to be written in mens hearts, though they be neuer so hard. Those stones then were as an image of our hartes. For as God auoweth by his prophet ) wee haue such a hardnesse in vs, as hee can neuer bow vs till wee be softened. Neuertheless lyke as hee ingraued his lawe in the stones: so also doeth hee print the same in vs when it pleaseth him to touche vs by his holy spirit. And this was done at the same time that the lawe was put fourth. And here yee see why comparison is made betwene the Gospel and the lawe. God tolde the people how it behoued the to know theselves, for such as they were in deed, that is to wit y they were hardened in naughtinesse, stubborne, and full of all corruption, so as there was no concord nor agreement betwene the thoughtes and affections of them, and the righteousnesse of himselfe. And for prooffe thereof, let vs marke that there are two things betokened by that which Moses rehearseth here. The one is the goodnes that G O D hath shewed in setting forth his lawe. For it is not enough for men to be taught: that will not boote them vntill such time as he subdew them. Wee may haue our eares beaten long enough with the doctrine of the Lawe, but wee shall continew still giuen to our owne naughtinesse: and therefore it shall be but labor lost and mispent to preach Gods word vnto vs. And why? For it will slip out againe, and so shall wee continew alwayes lyke our selues. That is one thing that is betokened vnto vs.

And therewithall God hath shewed, that yet notwithstanding, the letting fourth of his worde in that wise by the mouth of a man, is not in vaine, for it serued to put the people againe in hope of things that were yet hidden, wherof wee haue not onely a full sight, but also the effect and accomplishment, by the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, according as it is sayd by the prophets Ieremie and Ezechiel, that God will make a newe couenant, after another maner than that which he made with the fathers of olde time. For that couenant (sayth he) was soone broken, because they had no holde of themselves: but I wil ingraue my lawe in your hartes. God then did testify this newe couenant by Moses in mount Sinay, which our Lord Iesus Christ hath performed by his comming into the worlde, and which is offered vnto vs still euery day. And therefore let vs learne that when wee come to be taught, it must not be to any other ende than to be renewed by God, so as hee put away the hardnesse that is in vs, and soften our hartes after such a sorte, as wee may stoope vnder him to receiue his yoke, and hee holde vs in awe, because wee be so fickle that we would start away from him euery day, if hee gaue vs not steddie constantnesse to goe through with our vocation. That is a thing which wee ought to marke well. And why? Euen to humble vs, and to make vs knowe that although G O D spare our liues yet should they bee turned into death, if hee should let vs alone in our owne plight, and not adde a second grace in reforming vs by his holy spirit. And therewithall let vs be of good comfort, forasmuch as wee see that nowadays wee haue not onely the ancient figures, and the tables of stone wherein God wrate his lawe: but also that hee worketh effectually by his holy spirit, as Saint Paul sheweth in the thirde to the Colossians. Seeing then that God worketh after such a sorte, as wee perceiue that our hartes are no more stony, forasmuch as wee be willing to stoope vnder him, and desirous to honor him, in somuch that although there be many lettes and hinderances in vs, (as wee see that the fleshe striueth continually against goodnesse:) yet notwithstanding our Lord giueth vs the grace to be sorie for our infirmities and sinnes, being desirous to eschewe them, inendeoring to withstanding, and inforcing our selues with all our hartes to serue him: Let vs acknowledge the singular grace that hee vouchsafeth vpon vs, and therewithall let vs learne to preace boldly vnto him, and not to stand aloofe vnderneath the hill as is sayd heere. And it is the same thing that the Apostle sheweth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes when he sayth, that wee be not come to the mountaine where there was nothing but fire, where nothing was heard but thundering and tempest, where lightnings flashed, where trumpets sounded, and where there was nothing but terriblenesse: wee be not come to that mountaine: we bee not nowadaies called to bondage: but wee bee heere in the presence of our God, where we haue friendly fellowship with the Angels: wee be matched and knitte in companie with the holy fathers, and with the soules whom God hath already taken out of the world: and we be all called to the end we should with open mouth call vpon God as our father. Then if we be thank our selues hereof, let vs goe boldly to our God.

Moreouer let vs alwayes beare in minde how it is tolde vs here, that Gods inioyning of vs to keepe his lawe, is by way of couenanting with vs. And that ought to giue vs the more courage. True it is that if God did simply vse his authoritie, euen in shewing vs our duetie towards him, and delt with vs by playne rigor, saying, yee must obey mee fyte of your teeth: yet ought wee to doe it, and it were not meete for vs to gaine say him. But now when wee see that Gods suddew-<sup>10</sup> ing of vs vnto him is in such wise, as hee vouchsafeth therewithall to be our sauour and father, couenanting as it were by mutual consent with vs, and binding himselfe to vs in requiring vs to come to serue him: ought it not to moue vs greatly, if wee were not woorse than blockishe? Ought it not to prouoke vs to giue our selues ouer to our GOD, seeing that hee vouchsafeth to ioyne with vs? yes: and therefore let vs alwayes marke well this word Couenansum. And that worde ought specially to touch vs to the quicke in these dayes, when wee compare the lawe with the Gospell. For if God in those dayes made a couenant with the people of olde time: it is in farre other taking with vs nowadaies, that is to say, infinitely better. And for prooof thereof, the pledges of those times were earthly, and serued to keepe folke alwayes in feare. True it is that God did alwayes set to his mark, so as the auncient fathers had an eye to the Lorde Iesus<sup>40</sup> Christe, and were not defaute of this warrant, that hee of his free goodnesse was their Sauour: howbeit that was done but (as yee would say) aloofe. But nowadaies God vttereth his couenant vnto vs so largely, that wee be sure of the forguienesse of our sins: and that although there be many thinges amisse in vs, although wee haue a number of incomberaunces by reason of our infirmities, although wee limpe and hang our wings, yea and although wee stumble and take many a fall: yet shall not all this let him to vse that inestimable goodnesse of his stil towards vs, whereof hee speaketh by his prophet: namely that hee will not deale roughly with vs, no more than a father doth with his children. Seeing then that wee perceiue that our Lord of his free fauour accepteth our seruite though it bee vnperfect and full of faultes: wee ought to bee the more willing to giue our selues vnto him euen with all our power. And sith wee see it hath pleased him to stoope so lowe, as to shewe himselfe to be our father and teacher, dealing more familiarly with vs than hee did in old time with the fathers vnder the lawe: let not vs on our side be slothfull in coming to him, but let vs labor the more earnestly in his commaundements, and strue to withdrawe our selues fro from the worlde, as nothing may keepe vs from attaining to the holy vnion, which is conteyned in the couenant that God hath made with vs on the behalfe of our Lorde Iesus Christ.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our sinnes, praying him to make vs feeble them better, that wee may mislyke of them in such wise as after wee haue condemned our selues for the, our whole seeking may be to feele the mercie that hee hath promised vs, not onely in nor imputing our faultes to vs, but also in correcting them by the power of his holy spirite, that wee may all liue in his obedience. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Thursday the xxiii. of May. 1555.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the fourth Chapter.

15 Therefore shall yee take good heede for your selues, that yee saw no maner of image in the day that the Lorde your God spake vnto you in Horeb, from the middes of the fire:

16 That you marre not your selues, ne make you anie grauen image, or representation of anie portraiture, bee it the likenesse of man or woman,

17 Or the lykenesse of any beast vpon earth, or the lykenesse of any byrd that hath wings, which flyeth vnder the skye:

18 Or the lykenesse of any thing that creepeth on the ground, or the lykenesse of any fishe that is in the water vnder the earth.

19 Also that when thou listest vp thine eyes vnto heauen, and beholdest the Sunne, and the Moone, and the starres, with all the hoste of heauen: thou bee not deceiued and bowe downe before them, and serue them, seeing the Lorde God hath imparted them to all people that are vnder the whole heauen.

20 But as for you, the Lord hath taken you and drawn you out of the yron furnace of Egypt, to be vnto him a people of inheritance, as you be this day.

Whaue scene already heretofore the care that God had of his people, in willing them to take heede to themselves, and to watch well for their soules. For by those words he sheweth howe deare & chare our soulehealth is vnto him. Here we see the like againe. Take heede to thy selfe (saith he) and keepe thy soule. If God did not beate a singular good will to men, he would not speake so. And therefore we haue a sure and infallible warrant that God seeketh our saluation, to the end that we on our side shall thinke vpon it also. But we must marke therewithall, whereof he treateth here: that is to wit, of the worshipping of God purely without disguising of his maiestie. Then is it a token that the same belongeth chiefly to our saluation, and that wee runne to ruine and destruction when we swarue aside from the pure religion, and fall to deuising of any thing that hefeemeth not God. If wee doe so, the diuell reigneth among vs, and GOD must needs forsake vs. Wherefore let vs learne that the holding of religion purely & in such sorte as God alloweth it, as a thing of no small importance. For this kinde of speach were vnexpedient, if to make images were either lawfull or but a small and light fault: and surely God would not speake so vehemently as he doth. And therefore whensoever the case concerneth the worshipping of God, let vs marke well that it is one of y<sup>e</sup> principall pointes of our saluation, & that men must not presume in this behalfe to take leaue to doe what they themselves thinke good, but rather this warning that is set downe here must induce vs to walke in feare and carefulnesse. For what a shame is it, that our Lord shall tell vs wee must stand vpon our garde: and we in the meane while shall runne at rouers, as though wee needed not to passe greatly for the matter: And that God should so procure our welfare, and we make none account of it? And so ye see what we haue to marke vpon those termes.

But now lets come to the chiefe matter of this sentence. You saue not (saith he) any image or portraiture, in the day that the Lord spake to you in Horeb. Take heede therefore that yett marre not your selves, by making you any carued image, or the likeness of any thing, whether it be of man or woman, bird or beest, woorme or fish: Beware of all such things. For your God hath shewed himselfe to you in such wise as was expedient, and not in any shape. So then let vs beare this lesson in minde, namely to worship him in spirit, because hee hath not a body, nor any thing in him that can be represented by the things that are seen with our eyes. Now this doctrine is cleare enough of it selfe, if men would followe it, and that the world would not wilfully resist so certeine a thing. But this pride hath bin in all ages and reigneth yett still at this day, that men will needes haue a presence of God after their owne fashion and deuice. But surely their wittes are fleshly, by reason whereof they conceiue and imagine of God after their owne nature, and thereupon make images vnto him. Neuertheless it is not for vs to counterfeit God, or to attribute any thing vnto him: but it belongeth to him to vtter himselfe: and therefore we must but onely recieue that which hee sheweth vs, and hold vs wholly thereunto.

Now lets vnderstand the gronde that Moses taketh here: that is to wit: At such time as God spake vnto you in mount Horeb, hee shewed not himselfe in anye visible shape. In speaking after that maner, Moses sheweth that wee must not be hasty aforehand to conceiue what wee our selues thinke good, but must tary till God shewe himselfe. Take that for one poynt. For if men will needes giue way to their owne fleshly reason in that behalfe, they shall ouerthrowe themselves and breake their neckes with their owne much haste. But on the other side Moses sheweth, that GOD did manifest himselfe in such wise to his people, as there is no cause why men should any more say, how shall wee knowe God? How shall wee be sure that hee is nere vs? How shall wee worship him? How can wee call vpon him? God therefore hath cut off all occasions of fond curiosities, by shewing himselfe to his people. And the same agreeth now fully vnto vs. For when God published his lawe in mount Horeb: although he had then chosen the offspring of Abraham: yet was it his intent to giue fourth a doctrine that should continue to the worlds end. Then let vs vnderstand, that God in manifesting himselfe by voyce, meant to barre all images, not onely in respect of the Iewes, but also in respect of vs too. And therefore wee see that their beastlynesse is so much the greater, which nowadayes mainteine this corruption concerning images in the Popedome: for they alledge that this was spoken for the Iewes & not for vs: Verily as who should say that Gods manifesting of himselfe by voyce, and not in shape of man or of any other liuing creature, seiued not for all ages, but onely for the people of olde time.

Again, what is to bee said of the reasons that are alledged through the whole holy scripture? seiued they but onely for a time? or rather ought they not to stand fast for euer? Beholde, Esay vpbraideth the Iewes, that they had disfigured the maiestie of God. And why? To whome haue yee likened me, sayth he? The complaint y<sup>e</sup> God maketh is this: dooth wood or stone resemble me? As for them, they be but dead & corruptible things. Doth it not wel appeare then, that dishonor and wrong is offered to my being, when men goe about after that sorte to represent mee vnder suche shapes?

Now is God changed since that tyme ? Is hee not the same that he was ? Then if hee had no lykenesse to wood and stone in olde tyme: neither is hee lyke them now. And therefore it followeth that this neither ought to be nor can be restrained to any one time, but must continue, for euer: Furthermore whereas the Papistes alledge, that Gods restreyning of idolatrie so straitly, was because the Iewes were so much inclined to superstition: I would with all my hart that it were in their power to amend men and to drawe them from their error. But what ? The world sees it is all one full. For if euer the Iewes were fleshed in their foolishie vanities: the world is neuer a whit amended now, but rather become woorse. As soone as men doe thinke vpon God, by and by they wil needes haue somewhat that resembleth their owne kinde, and thereupon they fall to making of images. And when they once haue any thing to gaze at, they cling to that, and their deuotion is tyed to it, so as they neuer goe about to lift vp their hartes to heauen, to worship God and to call vpon him. Wee see this with our eyes, What a beastlyncesse then is it to say, that onely the Iewes were forbidden to worshipp images, that it is lawfull for vs nowadayes to doe it ? Yea, but we see how the new testament aldo doth speake of it. For the reasons as well of Moses as of the prophetes which wee haue touched already, are alledged by Saint Paul, who saith that men went astray or rather vanished away in their owne imaginations, and turned all things vpside down, and falsified Gods trueth, whosoever they made any counterfeite of him, whether it were in the lykenesse of man or of beast. Dorth Saint Paul speake there but onely of the Iewes ? Yes: and euen in the Sermon which hee maketh in the fiewenteenth of the Actes, hee speakeh not to any one people alone, but to all the heathen vniuersally. And to the same purpose he alledgeth them a saying of their owne heathen wryters. For it is written by a heathen Poet, that wee bee Gods generation. Saint Paul reasoneth hereupon, if wee be the generation of God, is it either comely or reasonable that wee shoulde make him any image either of woode or stone, golde, or siluer ? None of these things can resemble him. But wee must marke that when this poore heathen man spake after that fashion, he meant not that wee resemble God either in eyes, or in nose, or in eares, but in soule, forasmuch as wee haue reason to discern between good and euill, vnderstanding to conceiue and comprehend thinges, and are so excellent aboue all brute beastes, that there is no creature in the world so noble as man. That is the thing wherein wee resemble God. But now, with what paynting can mans soule be expressed ? Seeke all the cunning that can be, & what portraiture can be made thereof: And yet for all that, what are our soules ? They be but as little sparkes in comparison of the infinite brightnesse that is in God. Our soules are created, and God is without beginning: He is the ground and welspring of all thinges. Our soules are weake, subiect to ignorance, subiect to sin, and subiect to many wicked lustes. But God with his infinite being and maiestie is the perfection of all vertues. To be short, as oft as we thinke of him, wee ought to be rauished into wondering and astonishment. So then, is it not apparant that men are worse than mad, when they wil needes rake vpon them to shape out Gods being, seeing that no shape can be made of their owne soules, which are nothing in comparison of him ? For seeing that S. Paul speakeh so to y<sup>e</sup> heathen, I pray you do not the Papistes shewe that their meaning is to reprocue him of ignorance, and of the misapplying of Gods lawe ? Or else must they not needes be confounded in their blasphemies ? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that this doctrine y<sup>e</sup> God will not haue any maner of image made of him, serueth not for two or three dayes, but for all euer. And there is euen one reason which ought to suffice vs, which I alledged euē now out of the prophet Esay. How now, sayth God: consider who I am. If I list to gripe y<sup>e</sup> whole world, I need not to stretch out my hand for the matter, For though I kept my hand thut, yet could I hold all the world close in it, as a little grayne of dust. It is true that God hath no handes, for he hath no bodie: but his speaking vs is by a similitude. As if hee should say, doe yee thinke me to be like any creature? No: for all the world is nothing in comparison of me. It is but as a grayne of dust in a mans hand: & you your selues are here beneath as a sort of frogs and grasshoppers. Now then, if yee will needes make some puppet to represent me, is it not as good as a defacing of my glory, & a spying of me to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost of your glory ? Wee see that God is a spirit as the scripture declareth: & shall wee then goe about to make him a bodie? It is he that gueth lyfe to all thinges: & shall we goe take a dead thing to represent him thereby, and say: There is God? When we haue shaped out a stone or a peece of wood, and made it a nose, eares, and all the rest of mans limbes, yet hath it no feeling at all: and shall wee neuerthelesse say, Behold, there is God? What a dealing were that? For the same cause is it sayd in the psalme: Are idols remembraunces of God? In deed men make them mouths, and they haue feete, handes, noses, & eares, but yet haue they no power to goe, nor any other abilitie, they be but corruptible & dead things. And is there any remembrance of God in the Serue theye not rather to leade men into error & beastlyncesse, so as they should make no more account of God? The very heathen men theselues could skill to say it: not that they did practise it in deede: but God wrested such woordes out of their mouthes, to y<sup>e</sup> intent they might all be confuted. And albeit y<sup>e</sup> neither Moses nor y<sup>e</sup> prophetes spake vnto them: yet was it Gods will to condemne the by themselves. Ye see then how it is a sufficient peremptorie reason, that inasmuch as there is no lykenesse betweene God and any of all the shapes that can be made to represent him withall: hee hath wrong done vnto him, and it is an abacing of his maiestie and glorie, when men doe make images of him after that sorte.

And therewithall let vs also beholde mens madnesse. Is it in mans power (as sayth the prophet Eſay) to take a logge of wood, and with part thereof to goe heate his ouen, or to scithe fleshe in a potte, or to bake his bread, or to warme himselfe: and to take another parte of it, and to fashion a nose and eares vpon it, and to say vnto it: Thou art my God, and thereupon to worship it? Now when men make Gods, that is to say remembraunces or representations of God, at their owne pleasure, because they list to put a difference between two or three peeces of wood [to preferre one before another, ] and say, behold, this is GOD: is it not too greata beastlynesse? yes, and the very heathen men themselues haue affirmed it, as I haue declared. Behold, a Paynim, a blinde wretch that was before the coming of Iesus Christ, sayth: Since the time that images came into the world, there hath bin nothing but errour, and it hath bin the meane to make men brute bestes, and to turne them away from the truth. Seeing that euen blinde men knewe this, or rather that God did cast forth those words by their mouth: is it not a horrible condemnation to suche as terme themselues Christians, if they take not heede to it? Another heathen man bringeth in an idoll speaking thus: The Carpenter or Caruer (sayth hee) was in doubt what to make of mee: in the ende hee thought best to make me a God, and so am I now worshipped. See how this blinde wretch skoffeth at the beastlynesse that was among men, and yet hee himselfe ceased not to worship idols still. But what? God wrested this acknowledgement from him by force, to the ende that all mankind should bee condemned, and that there should be no more excuse. But as for vs, wee will vaunt our selues to be taught by Gods word: and yet we will not knowe so much as the fillic infidels haue spoken. And truly, are not wee warned by them? If we heare not the Prophets and Apostles: at least wile yet ought those heathen men to reach vs to our shame. Therefore it muste needes be that wee be woofe than bewitched by Satan, if we consider not all these reasons, specially seeing they be of Gods owne alledging, who will haue men to receiue them euen with all reuerence, as at his maiesties hand, and that for a further confirmation hee addeth the sayings of the infidels which I haue alledged. And therefore let vs forbear to take that vpon vs which belongeth not to vs, that is to witte, the choice and libertie of making images of God, for men to worship, or to cast the wood into the fire to make the potte seeche, and such other lyke things. For it is too much against reason.

Furthermore, let vs also take heede to our selues. For aslone as we begin to intangle our selues in our own imaginations: by and by there foloweth a sea of folish thoughts, which make vs to run gadding heere and there, so as they carry vs quite & cleane from God. If men knew their owne nature: surely they durst neuer aduenture to make any image. I told you at the first, that we ought to know God, & that the same knowledge would be a good bridle to holde vs in simplicitie, and to make vs to preuent all superstitions. And when we enter into our selues, that also ought to teach vs well, that it is a turning of all things vpside down, when wee make any Image of God. For what is the cause that men are so eage to haue some representatiõ of God: but for that they cannot mount vpiinto heauen, for asmuch as their wits goe groueling downward, and are alwayes wedded to the earth? And therefore would they haue God to come downe vnto them. Now it is true y God commeth downe vnto vs: howbeit, that is after his owne maner, and not at our appoyntment. And he must bee faine to stoop vnto vs, because we cannot moue vp vnto him: but yet he keepeth such a fashion & measure, y therewithall he lieth vs vp to him. We for our part could finde in our hearts y God were (as ye would say) vnder our secte, so as wee might treade vppõ him: And y is the cause why we haue idols. For y beginning of idolatrie sprig of this y men feeling their own infirmite, would needes haue God in such wise as their owne wit was able to brooke. Now their wit styeth not high, but rather rucketh beneath vpon y grouid. And therefore although men had no idols at all: yet is idolatrie in them, & they haue y seede of superstition, inasmuch as they would haue God to fashion himselfe to their lyking. Nowe then seeing y this naughtinesse is rooted in vs already: must not y mischiefe become dubble, whẽ we meete w an object? that is to say, when we haue any thing to set vs forward, & whẽ any new occasion is ministred: So thẽ, if there be any idols or images to portray or represent Gods: it cannot be but y men shall be dubble seduced. Seeing they be to much inclined thereto of nature: it is a great inforcement whẽ they be further driue forward by y thing y they beholde. Therefore if we wist it were such a vice, surely we would abhorre idolatrie, knowing y it turneth vs quite away from God. And for the same cause doth the prophet Ieremy say, that there is nothing but doctrine of falshood in Idols: and the prophet Abacuck verifying the same, & comparing idols with the liuing God, sayth that they be a schoole of lyes.

But yet for all this, the Papistes will affirme that images are laymens bookes: and that because all men cannot reade nor are clerkes, there must be some helpe for the ignorant. Very well: if a representation of God be made, that is a booke, that is as good as the Byble, say the Papists: and it is their chiefe ankerholde that they flee to in this case. True it is that this shifte is not of their owne deuising: it was deuised by a man not wicked of himselfe, notwithstanding y he was somewhat tainted with the corruption of papistrie. For he was a Pope himselfe, howbeit not when the Popedome was in such plight as it is nowadayes: but yet when it had already bin greatly corrupted, and the world was fore degenerated. Nowe then, this good man Gregorie thought it good to haue images, and that they would be as bookes for the vnlearned: & this haue the papists receiued as if it were y oracle of some Angel from heauen. But contrariwise y Prophet

Ieremie suoweth that all the doctrine of idols is meere fallhood, and likewise Abacuck in the second Chapter saieith that they teache nothing but lyes. Were it lawfull for a man to coine fallie money on his owne head, bicause he can get none of the right it amp? No: but yet hath God giuen his word to all men, so as he hath vouchsafed not onely to speake to great Clerkes, but also to stoop to the rudenesse of the little ones. And for all this, men stoppe their eares, and say they can not knowe God but by a Puppet: and vnder that pretence they will needes haue it lawfull for them to beely the thinges that God hath reported of his owne being. Forasmuch then as wee haue warrant that there is nothing but fallhood in images: let vs send home such Bookes to the diuell: for it is certaine that he is the author of them, and that they came all out of his shoppe. And herein wee see how that cursed Council which allowed images, was first carried away. For these were the worshipfull reasons that they allegeded for the hauing of images. It is not ynough (saide they) that men be taught by the care: but their eyes also must haue some instruction too. And thereunto they wrested this saying of the Psalm, Wee haue heard and seene: that as wee haue heard Gods worde, so must we also haue some thing to looke at: and (as I said) they rererre this looking, vnto images. But contrariwise the Prophetes meaning is, that God (besides his vttering of himselfe to his people by his word) had bestowed so many and so apparant giftes of grace vpon them, as they might well say, Our God hath sufficiently assured vs that he was our Saviour, not onely by his promises, but also by the deede it selfe whereof we haue had experience. And yet notwithstanding vnder colour of that text, these rascals will needes beare men in hand, that God must be represented by puppets.

But if they will needes that there must be visible images: our Lord hath giuen vs as many of them as he knewe to be for our behoofe. When we haue Baptisme, is it not a visible image of the thing that is spirituall? that is to wit of the washing which we haue by the bloud of our Lorde Iesus Christ, when wee be renewed by his holy spirit? And haue we not a representation of the heavenly mysterie set forth to vs in the Lorders supper? Yes: but yet for all that wee must not make any image at all of Gods being. And why? for it were not for our profit as I haue declared afore: but it would rather turne vs away to lyes and before vs in all manner of superstition. God therefore knowing that the hauing of images is an vntoward thing and as a deadly plague: hath not list to giue vs any, but rather holdeth vs back to this, that hauing such signes as may conuey vs vpward, we should trauell towards him, howbeit without hauing any representation of his being. Thus ye see that the thing which wee haue to remember in effect, is that although the scripture did not expressly forbid vs to haue any image or bodily representation of God: yet the reasons are such as wee ought to worshipping God in spirite, and to flye vp aloft into heauen, and not to sticke fast here belowe. Why so? For in knowing God, we must consider his Maestie, how there is no proportion or likenesse between him and the creatures. Therefore it is but a misshaping of him when we make any bodily image vnto him: he that is the wellspring of life cannot be represented by a dead thing. If we goe this way to worke, then shall wee neuer bee marred nor imbeced, but rather wee shall fecke God in such wise, as he hath vouchsafed to vrter himselfe vnto vs, and we shall not bee so shett-headed as wee bee. For as soone as wee haue taken any toy in our heades, wee bee so doted and intrangled, that wee thinke the ground beares vs not. If wee knewe this (I say,) wee should be soberer. But what? The world must shewe it selfe blind as it is, and be fortified with this drunkennes of Idolatry, to bee carried away thereby, that it may euer turne away from God. For although men be naturally contented to haue some Religion: yet seeke they by all means not to come at God, I meane in truth. They will well ynough say alwayes, God is to be worshipped, and our intent is to doe so, wee must resort vnto him. But how? Whereas they should seeke God in heauen by faith: they will needes goe about the bush. Verie well say they, wee will haue some image of God. And that is all one as if they should say, Behold, here is a God that shall not trouble vs: for wee will deale well ynough with him at all times, he shall not speake a worde, he shall but onely make a mowe. See how the world making countenance to seeke God, doeth drag backe from him as much as is possible, shrouding them selues vnder this pretence, that it is ynough to haue a representation of God, & that his power shall neuertheless be infinite still. But now we haue to marke, that God is not contented with such reasons, forasmuch as he hath tolde vs that it is not lawfull for vs to haue any image of him to represent him withall. And shall wee reply against him when wee haue the woorde of his mouth? What shall we win by it? When we haue pleaded our fill, suppose wee that wee haue any deuises in our braine, that can make God beleue that he considered not all thinges well: No: and therefore (to be short) as many as conet to haue any image of God, bewray themselves to bee ranke rebels against him, they bewray a diuellsish malapertnesse, in that they presume to forge and let vp Gods after their owne fantasie: yea and they bewray their owne beastliness also, in that they doe against nature. For they would allow God such a representation, as agreeth as sily to him, as if they should liken him to a sticke, or I wote not what else. Men therefore doe in all respectes sufficiently shewe themselves to be vnexecutable, when they turne so away after their images.

But by the way wee haue to make further, that all manner of images and representations are not meant here. For our Lord saieith expressly that he shewed not himself to his people any otherwise than by his onely voyce, and therefore that it is a corruption to make images. If this should be drawn to conclude, that it is not lawfull to make any picture at all: it were a mis-applying of Moses testimonie, as some doe, who being too simple in this behalfe, doe say it is not lawfull to make any image: that is to say, it is not lawfull (to their seeming) to paint any storie or to make any portraiture. But when the holy Scripture saith, it is not lawfull to stape any resemblance of God, because he hath no bodie: it extendeth not so farre: for it is otherwise as concerning men. Now then looke what we see, that may wee represent by picture. And therefore let vs see that we apply the textes against the Papistes as we ought to doe, that we may bee armed to prooue our case iust. But yet must wee bee fully resolved of this, that if any man goe about to expresse Gods Maiestie by any shape: he doeth him wrong, and it is high treason to him, because he is vncomprehensi-ble in his glorie. Marke that for one point. Now we see that the Papists haue gone about to expresse God by shapes: therefore it followeth that they haue marred all Religion. And whereas they alledge that there were Cherubins painted vpon the vaile of the Temple, and that two likewise did couer the Arke: it serueth to condemne them the more. When the Papistes pretend that men may make any manner of image: What say they? Hath not God permitted it? No: but the imagerie that was set there, serued to put the Iewes in minde that they ought to abstaine from all counterfeiting of God, in so much that it was a meane to confirme them the better, that it was not lawfull for them to represent Gods Maiestie, or to make any resemblance thereof.

 For there was a vaile that serued to couer the great Sanctuarie, and againe there were two Cherubins that couered the Arke of ys couenant.
 Where to commeth all this, and what is ment by it, but that when the case concerneth our going vnto God, we must shut our eyes and not peace any neerer him, than he guideth vs by his word:
 Then let vs hearken to that which he teacheth, and therewithall let vs bee sober, so as our wits bee not ticklish, nor our eyes open to imagine or conceiue any shape. That is ys thing which God meant to betoken in his Law. And so are we the more confirmed in the doctrine that I spake of.
 But as for the images which the Papistes make of their Heefaints and Sheefaints as they terme them: there is other reason to condemne them.
 For GOD hath forbidden two things. First the making of any picture of him, because it is a disgusting and falsifying of his glorie, and a turning of his truth into a lie. That is one point. The other is, that no image may bee worshipped. But now, doe not the Papistes worship images? If they say, it is requisite so to doe, for it is a continual stirring vp of the peoples deuotion: that is too fond a reason. For first of all, when we come to the Church, it can not be but that we shall be caught in some error, if we haue neuer so little occasion offered vs. For (as I saide) although there bee no image at all to drawe our eyes: yet are we inclined to earthly imaginations euen of our selues, and wee nourish superstition in vs of our own nature. Now then if we be furthered

Exod. 25. 18.

and thrust forward vnto euill, so as wee finde as it were spurtes to pricke vs forward: I pray you shall wee not bee as good as madde? Therefore the setting vp of images in Churches is a declining of them aforchande, and can serue to no purpose but to drawe folke from the pure and true knowledge of GOD. Againe, to what end doe the Papistes set vp images in Churches? Is it to haue knowledge of their Histories? Not but there standes a sort of puppets with demure countenances, as it were to summon folke to come to doe them homage: in so much that an image is not so soone set vp in a Church, but by and by folke goe and kneele downe to it, and do a kinde of worship to it. And can a man devise to teare the Maiestie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to deface his glorie more, than by ys things that the Papistes doe? Beholde, they paint and portray Iesus Christ, who (as wee knowe) is not onely man, but also God manifested in the flesh and what a representation is that? Hee is Gods eternall sonne, in whom dwelth the fulnesse of the Godhead, yea euen substantially. Seeing it is said, substantially, should wee haue portraitures and images whereby the onely flesh may be represented: Is it not a wiping away of that which is chiefest in our Lorde Iesus Christ, that is to wit, of his diuine Maiestie? Yes: and therefore whensoever a Crucifix stands mopping & mowing in the Church, it is all one as if the Diuell had defaced the sonne of God. Yee see then that the Papistes are destitute of all excuse. Againe-wee see howe they behaue themselves: the images are worshipped among them, as if God were present there in his owne person. Where saye they their Pater noster, but before some puppet? And yet are they not contented with that for they will needes make idoles of all things, yea euen to the verie Sacramentes: in so much that they haue falsified them, to drawe the worlde from the right Religion. Is there a more abhominable idol, than that which they haue inuented vnder pretence of ys Supper of Iesus Christ?
 No: for they say, that GOD is there, and there he must bee worshipped. So then, no maruaile though they abuse their puppets and pictures after that fashion, seeing they haue bene so bolde as to peruert the things, that God hath appointed to the furtherance of our faith.

And by the waye let vs marke, that the true meane to seeke God after such sorte as he vtter-eth himselfe, is, that after we once knowe him, wee doe also consider that hee stoopeth to our rudenes, and yet ceasse not to seeke him by mouing vp higher, and by conceiuing the things spiritually which the Sacramentes doe shewe vs.
 It is true that by them God commeth downe to vs: howbeit, that is not to hold vs downe here beneath still: but to make vs flie vp aloft vnto him. It is all one as if hee shoulde reache vs by his hand and say, Come to me, and worship me spiritually. Wherefore let vs learne to seeke GOD euermore aboue vs, and not to tie him to our fleshy and earthly vnderstanding.

Now finally Moses sheweth the vnthankful-nesse of the worlde in seeking new Gods, and in conuoying

1. Tim. 3. 16
Colof. 2. 9.

conueyng ouer of the Maiestic of the liuing God to dead creatures. It was a verie common thing in the East Countries , to worship the Sun and the Moone and the Starres , bicause that to their seeming they were not as the earthly creatures are, nor had any corruption to be seene in them, nor were subiect to such changes as men, beastes, trees and waters are, for we see howe all things vnder the skie are changeable : but seemed to bee things immortall and incorruptible. Yea verily, so seemeth it to men that are become brutish, and haue not the wit to goe to the creation , to knowe that God hath giuen the Sunne, Moone & Starres such nature and propriete as he listed: but yet for all that , howsoever those creatures fare, they bee liuelife. But here Moses rebuketh the wicked fantasticalnesse of men in worshipping the Sunne. They sawe there a kind of Maiestic. Oh, said they, ) these lightes of the skie are excellent things : surely there is some Godhead in them : therefore must we needs worship them. But in so doing (saith Moses) me became vnthankfull towards God. For why? What is the Sunne? Our Seruant : & the Moone is our Handmaide. And for prooffe thereof, was not the Sunne ordained to giue vs light? Is not he our Candlesticke? Yea and besides that he is the Candlesticke, he is also the Candle it selfe, euen to doe vs seruice. It is true that God coulde well giue vs light without the meane of y Sunne: but hee meant to shewe howe greatly he esteemeth and loueth vs, in that he hath put such seruants vnder vs , and aduanced vs so high as to make the Sunne the Moone and the Starres to doe vs seruice. Now then, sith wee see that God hath made his heauenly creatures subiect to vs after that fashion : are wee not too churlish and vnkinde if wee worship him not? Is it not a refusing of the good turne that God hath done vs, and a shutting of our eyes to reiect his gracious fauour, as if they would say in despite of him, wee will not acknowledge the good that thou hast done vs? In deede we see y the Sunne & Moone doe serue vs : but yet will wee not take them for our seruants. Must it not needes bee that men are become starke diuels, when they bee so forward & malicious, as to refuse the receiuing of so great a benefit at Gods hand? That then is the thing that Moses sheweth here.

Moreouer he addeth for a conclusion, that the people of Israel excelled all other Nations. It is true (saith he) y God hath vouchsafed to make y Sun & Moone seruants to the whole world: but thou excellest all other nations of the earth, inasmuch as he hath chosen thee for his inheritance. And seeing it is so: y oughtest at leastwise to worship him as thy God, & to feare him and reuerence him as thy father , & in any wise to beware that thou defile not thy selfe w the abominations of idolatrie. For what a thing were it, if a Kinges sonne should refuse to be in his fathers palace, & go keepe company w some swineherd, yea or go wallow abroad w brute beastes, & fall to wrooting vp of the ground to eate filthy things like y swine theselues? What a thing were it? But Moses telleth vs, y those who God hath chosen to bee his people, do the like, whc they go to cast theselues downe before creatures. Therefore let vs learne to worship our God in spirit & truth, and to doe him homage, & to acknowledge the good y hee doth vs, specially for that it hath pleased him to adopt vs to bee his children, through freebestowed adoption in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Now let vs kneele down in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him so to open our eyes, as wee may no more aduertue to deuse any thing after our own fleshly vnderstanding, but resort altogether to his holy word whereby he hath reucaled himselfe to vs, & also receiue his Sacraments wherby we be yet better confirmed in his knowledge, so as our whole seeking may be to follow the purenes that is set forth in his doctrine, y no error may lead vs away fro him nor from the pure religion y hath bin taught vs: And in y meane season, y as we do him homage in spirit, so likewise wee may serue him w all our heart, assuring our selues y wee can not serue nor worship him by any Ceremonies or outward things, wout yeelding him the honor & praise y he requireth. And finally that it may please him to correct all y idolatrie & superstition in the world, & to rid it in such wise fro the earth which he hath appointed to y vse of men: as his name may be purely called vpon there. For the performace wherof, it may please him to raise vp true and faithfull ministers of his word, &c.

On Fryday the xxiiij. of May. 1555.

The xxiiij. Sermon which is the sixth vpon the fourth Chapter.

19. 20 Also that when thou liuest vp, &c.

21 And the Lorde was angrie with mee for your woordes, and sware that I should not passe ouer Iordan, nor goe into the good land which the Lord thy God giueth thee to inherit.

22 For I shall die in this land, without passing ouer Iordan : but you shall passe it, and possesse that good Land.

23 Beware that ye forget not the Couenant of the Lorde your God which he hath made with you : and that ye make ye not any grauen image, nor the likenesse of any thing which the Lord your God hath forbidden you.

24 For the Lord thy God is a consuming fire and a ielous God.

Yesterday I began to shewe mens vnthankfulnesse, in that they cannot finde in their heartes to profit themselves by the benefits that God putteth into their handes, as this present example sheweth sufficiently. Beholde, God hath ordained the starres of the skie to doe vs seruice. There ought wee to espie his infinite goodnesse towards vs, howe greatly he loueth and esteemeth vs, in that he hath made so noble creatures our seruaunts. But in stead of magnifying our God, and of worshipping him as wee ought to doe, we cleane contrariwise fall to deuising of some error and idolatrie in our heades. After which manner the Gentiles tooke occasion to worship the Sunne and the Moone, bicause they sawe the great benefites that were receiued by them. Yea, but therewithall they shoulde haue mounted vp higher, and haue considered y God is the author of them, and that the Sunne and Moone and the Starres are but instrumentes of Gods fatherly loue towards vs, and haue not any power which proceedeth not from him. Furthermore let vs marke that men sinne not in this behalfe through simple ignorance, but through wilfulnesse, bicause they can not finde in their heartes to yeld themselves to God with a single minde. For if we intend to serue the liuing God, we must not goe to it by windlasses, but we must go right forward. But when men see them selues so pinched: they seeke startingholes, and deuise new fashions of seruing God on their own head, so as they neuer conieuer him. And that is the cause why the worlde hath cuer gone astray, and loued better to followe lawes of their owne inuening, than to cleaue to Gods pure doctrine, and to rest vpon the same, as wee see is done still at this day in Poperie. What is y cause that the superstitions which reigne there, doe seduce men so much, and make them to bee so farre ouerseen? Euen for that it is easier for me to ouerrunne a fewe gay Ceremonies, than to serue GOD rightly and with a single meaning heart. Behold, God will not bee out faced with a sort of pelting trifles, but commaundeth vs to walke soundly before him, so as wee forsake our owne imaginations and desires, and seeke to be governed by him & to haue his holy spirit reigne in vs. Surely it is a verie hard thing to forsake our owne reason, so as we should not bee wise in our owne conceites, to behaue our selues after our owne liking, but yeld that there is nothing but vanitie and vntueth in vs, and learne to humble our selues. That (say I) is a thing contrarie to our nature: for we haue a fond beliefe that we bee wise of our selues. But God on the contrarie part will haue vs to be benef of our selfe-wit and selfe-reason, and to giue ouer our selues to be governed by his spirit. Also our affections do carrie vs away, in so much that me would faine haue the bridle laid loose in their necke to do all maner of euill, and that God should giue them leaue to doe what they list. Nowe our affections are sinfull, and God will haue vs both to condemne them and to restraine them, so as wee may bee as prisoners in that behalfe, and with maine force withstand whatfoeuer carieth vs away to euill. But yee that men list not to serue God with that condition. Againe wee bee commaunded to loue our neighbour as our selfe. Whereas we bee giuen to seeke eueric man his owne profite: God pulleth vs from it, and contrariwise will haue vs to procure the welfare of our neighbours. And whereas wee bee giuen to littlenesse, to shifting, and to all maner of nauertinesse: he will haue vs to deale plainly, and to lay aside all desire of reuenge. If any man doe vs harme or wrong: the world sees how hotte wee bee to acquite like for like. But Gods will is that in such cases we should yeld him such seruice, as to forgiue the wrongs quietly that are done vnto vs. Againe whereas we bee desirous to runne at rouers in taking our delighes and pleasures: Gods will is that we should but waifare through this world, still hauing our eye vpon the euertlasting life: that we should mortifie whatfoeuer is earthly in vs: and that although he giue vs some commodities and ease, yet our vsing of them shoulde bee but as it were in running by them. Moreover he will haue vs patient in all our aduersities. If it please him to keepe vs occupied with neuer so many crossees, he will haue vs to beare them meekely. These things are good & holy: but mans nature striueth altogether against them. And what doe men in stead hereof? It is a much easier matter to haue a sort of gawdies, & gewawes. Churches are fraught full of idols, and they be worshipped with great pompe, so as they bee throughly perfumed, besenced, & painted, and a number of ceremonies are done vnto them: there is great solemnitie, with goodly chaunting on the one side, and with ringing of peale vpon peale vpon the belles on the other side: there is scudding fro altar to altar: there is fasting on this day, and forbearing of flesh on that day: there is trotting to shrift, and gadding on Pilgrimage: men found Yeeremindes, and cause Masses to be sung by note. Thus y world raunging away from GOD, will neuertheless needes seeme to be duentful towards him. And all is bicause we be so froward, that we couet nothing but to mocke God with our hypocrisie, and that he should hold himselfe contented with our dooings, which are no better than rattlebagges to please babes withall. So then let vs mark, that in stead of worshipping God, the world is giuen to fondnesse and superstition, and yet notwithstanding that it doeth it not so much of meere ignorance, as for that it cannot abide to be obedient as were requisite, and therefore it goeth to worke by windlasses, and seeketh by all means to stray from the right way. To be thort, we shall finde that men are alwayes guiltie of wilfulnesse in committing idolatrie, and that it is vaine for them to shrowd themselves vnder pretence of simplicitie. For contrariwise they bring it with them of nature, and they will needes be deceiued, and so they be. And therefore doeth God blind them also. For (as saith S. Paul) it is reason that such as list not to serue their maker, should bee vnderlings to the creatures: and that such as cannot finde in their hearts to beare the yoke of God, should indure the tyranny of the diuel, as is come to passe, and as we see accomplished stl at this day in the vnhappy Popedom. Now therefore let vs mark wel the thing y I haue said already is to wit, that me instead of being thankfull to God for the good y he hath done the, do turn his creatures to their own decay & condénation, & falsly abuse them: for they peruert y vse of the cleane contrarie to Gods meaning. And this is seene to be done, not only in the Sunne and the Stars according to that which Moses saith here; but also in all other things whatsoever. So much the more therefore behoueth it vs to watch and to stand vpon our garde, as it is saide heere, to the end that in vsing of gods benefites, we may euer haue our eyes vpon him to doe him homage for them, and neuer be turned away from him.

Moreouer let vs marke the saying that Moses feteth downe here, namely, Least thou sal, least thou be provoked. Hereby he sheweth y we haue in vs the seede of falling: that is to say, y we haue such a crabbednes in vs, y as soone as we haue neuer so smal an occasion, by & by we be downe, yea & we do euen seeke occasion when none is giuen, as I said afore. Whereas god hath ordeyned his creatures to do vs his seruice, and the same should be a help to guide vs vnto him, so as we shold be the more provoked to loue him, because he sheweth himselfe so good & louing a father towards vs: we take occasion therat to stumble. His dealing is as though he should set vp a ladder for vs: or make a paire of stayers for vs to goe vp vpon: & we fall to rustling against it. Greeces & stayers are made to helpe vs: but if a man fall to rushing & dashing against the, he may hap to break his legs & to hurt himselfe, & he shal rather be hindered thā helped vp by them. Euen so deale we. For gods meaning is to draw vs to him by his creatures, and we fall to rushing against them wilfully and as it were in despite. Now then it itideth vs on hand to mark will this saying, y we may looke the better about vs, to profite our selues by the thinges that God giueth vs for our helpe and furtherance to bring vs vnto him. Thus ye see what we haue to beare in mind. But now we see that Gods goodnes extendeth euen to the vnbeleuers & infidels, according as it is written, that hee maketh his Sun to shine both vpon good and badde. Likewise in this place Moses saith, that God hath imparted the light of the Sunne and the Moone, together with their influences and properties, not onely to such as vse them well, but also to all folke vnder the cope of heauen. Nowe we knowe that at that time all Nations were ydolaters, and there was no truth nor knowledge of God among them: and yet notwithstanding God ceased not to do the good for al that. And it is an excellēt token of his goodnes about ally he sendeth them the light of the Sun, & maketh the stars to do them seruice. The let vs marke wel that although god was neither worshiped nor known of the heathen: yet failed he not to do the office of a father towards them, and alwas to their condemnation. For inasmuch as they abused his benefites in such wise, & could not finde in their hearts to looke vp vnto him: it must needs be y they were y more vnexcusable.

But yet herewithal let vs mark wel the condition y Moses feteth downe here, As for thee (saith he) thy God hath rid thee from the yron furnace of the thraldome of Egypt, to the intent that thou shouldest be vnto him a pure people & an inheritance. Although y Moses haue declared that the vse of the sun & of the stars is common to al folks: yet doth he shew that they be specially appointed to the people whom God hath chosen. As if he should say, that the order of nature is common to al y world: we see that both great & smal are partakers of y benefites that God bestoweth: the earth bringeth forth corne wine and al other thinges, to susteine both y faithful & the vnfaithfull: the wicked & the despisers of God do eat & drink as well as we: nay (which more is) we see they abuse gods creatures with al excesse, & haue more abundance of them than y faithful: for he that knoweth y God susteineth him, wil vse his meat & drinke and al other thinges soberly & meassurably, & he wil consider y he must not vnhallo the thinges which god hath ordeined to a good & moderate vse. But what do the wicked: There is nothing with them but crāning, as if they were minded to spye God of set purpose. But yet for al y, it is Gods will that the propriety of his creatures shoulde belong to vs. And after what sort? Euen to vse the as his true & lawfull heires, and to haue them so warrant as we may auow y the thinges which he giueth vs are our own, & belong vnto vs of right, & that we possesse the by iust title. And soothly there is not a more singular benefite than this. For although y wicked do cram themselves with gods benefites til they burst, as I said afore: yet haue they always a hartbyting within, so as they know not by what right they eat & drink, nor can still to desire God to sustaine them. Nay verily, we see they could find in their hearts, y al remembrance of god were abolished. For when they make good cheere (as they terme it), they must minde nothing but to play the brute beasts. But contrariwise when we consider in our eating & drinking, y it is god which feedeth vs: it is a warrant vnto vs y hee is our father, and that he taketh vs for his children. And surely (as I said) there is not a treasure that deserueth greater estimation, thā y growing of corne, and wine in the world, & the increase of cloth & other thinges y serue for mans vse, together with the fruition of al the other creatures wherof god hath giuen vs the sight & hearing, to ioiuey them al in such wise, as we may say, y the world is created for vs, & that our God will not haue vs deitture of any thing at all, but hath provided for all our neede, and sheweth himselfe so liberal to vs, as we haue indeede iust cause to magnifie him, & to be rauihed with wondermēt at the sight of so great goodnes. This the is the cause why Moses saith here namely, but as for thee. After he had generally declared y god causeth his mercie to extend euen to the infidels & vnbeleuers: nowe speaking to the chosen people, O (saith he) you haue a state of preheminece, you haue a much more singular priuiledge then y ignorant & blind wretches haue. For why? They were not by what title they possesse the good thinges which they haue. But your God wil haue the world to belong by right vnto you: for as all the faithfull are his children, so bee they heires of his good things likewise. Therefore we must conclude, that if the vnbeleuers be to be condemned for abusing the benefits which God hath bestowed vpon them: much lesse excuse is there for vs that are taught in his lawe and doctrine. Thus yee see what we haue to marke.

But withall let vs also beare in mind the lesson<sup>y</sup> is set downe here: that is to say, to know and feele this, that when we inioy Gods creatures, we possess them as our heritage, & yet that this is not for any worthines of our owne: (for we must not here imagine any desert of ours,) but because our God hath chosen vs, as it is saide exprefly here. Moses saith not, Thou thy selfe hast gotten this priuiledge: but he saith, Thy god hath takē thee. He referreth all to that free election of God, at what time that it pleased him to choofe vs to himselfe: that he sheweth himselfe to be our father, y<sup>e</sup> he adopteth vs to be his children, and will haue vs to be of his houshold and that we should be as it were his flocke. Therefore let vs marke wel that we haue not any thing which we can say is our owne for any desert of ours, but only because it hath pleased Gods goodnesse to haue it so.

Moreouer Moses setteth downe two things here: Thou wast taken from the yron furnace, & now thou art become Gods people and his inheritance. Here he sheweth what the state of the people was before God chose them to himselfe: and also to what dignitie they were exalted afterward. Now although we haue not ben fetched out of Egypt: yet doth the thing that Moses speaketh here belong to vs. For in what case are wee, as long as God letteth vs alone? Are wee not accursed, if we continue the children of Adam? And if God shake vs off, are wee not vnder the tyrannie of Satan? Doeth not sinne reigne in vs? Doe wee not see here a furnace much worfe than the furnace of Egypt? And he vseth here a similitude in calling it anyron furnace, as a place that was so to consume the people, as there was no remedie for them to get out of it. If a furnace be once inflamed, and that the same be made of yron, must not a man needs perish out of hand if he be cast into it? If a furnace be but of bricke: yet do we see howe fore it burneth. But here is mention made of a furnace of yron. Therefore it is all one as if God should say, Thou haddest no hope to get out of that thraldome, thou wast as a people vtterly forlorne: and yet haue I deliuered thee from it after a wonderfull manner. And now at this day, coulde we scape out of that bondage vnto Sathan, vntill such time as God deliuered vs out of the same? Must not that curse haue altogether lien vpon vs still, if we had not remedie from else where, that is to wit, from the mercie that God hath shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christ? So then let vs marke, that here we were warned to thinke vpon our beginning, that so we might alwayes know from whence God hath deliuered vs, and in what taking we were when it pleased him to choofe vs. [Which thing if we do,] we shalbe ashamed of our owne wretchednes, yea & we shalbe euen astonished to see how we had bene vtterly damned, if our God had not pitied vs. And thus consider for one point.

Secondly let vs think againe, that our God thought it not ynough to haue deliuered vs from such a bottomlesse pit, and from so horrible confusion: but hee hath also made vs his heires, and likewise vouchsafed to take vs for his heritage. What are wee, or what can God receive at our hands: [Nothing:] and yet doth hee call vs his heritage, to thewe howe dearely hee loueth vs. Like as a man loueth a peece of grounde that findeth and maintaineth himselfe and his housholde, and setteth as it were his heart vpon the same: so doeth our Lorde shewe that he delighteth in vs, yea euen in vs that are but wormes and rottennesse, and which haue nothing but all manner of sinne and corruption in vs. Wee fee then hereby that Moses ment to magnifie Gods grace, to y<sup>e</sup> end that being humbled in our selues by beholding the miseries wherout of we be wadded, we might againe and againe magnifie Gods goodnesse, in that hee thought it not ynough to rid vs out of the bondage wherein we were, but also hath set vs in so high degree, as to choofe vs to be his children. And besides, by terming vs his owne heritage, he sheweth that he will haue his hart as it were fast tied vnto vs. Thus yee what we haue to remember vpon this text or place.

Immediately here vnto Moses addeth, that the Lord was angrie with him, because of the peoples words, and that he had sworne to him that he should not passe ouer Iordan to goe into the lande of promise. But as for you [saith he] you shall passe ouer, and inioy the possession thereof. Moses doth stil vbraide the people with Gods bereauing of him of the inheritance that was promised to all their tribes, not so much for his own fault, as for the common fault of them all in murmuring against God: but yett hath Moses a further meaning. He speaketh this as it were by the way, yea as hauing respect to this, that he should shortly die: and forasmuch as he himselfe might not inioy the lande, hee had a care to instruct the people, to the end that they might abide in Gods covenant, and continue stedfast in it, without swauing aside, or without any changing of religion to peruert the doctrine that had bene giuen them. The effect then is, that Moses being at the point of death doth as it were make his last will, & hath so much the more care of the peoples welfare, for feare least they should start away after his death, as he had seene them doe oftentimes in his life. And he interlatheth this particular matter that I spake of: namely that their words were the cause that he should die before he passed ouer Iordan, and before he entered into the lande of promise. For as I haue touched heretofore, Moses ment not to iustifie himselfe: for indeede he was greatly blameworthy before God, & surely God neuer vseth any crueltie towards such as are his. Now, the case is so, that Moses is shut out of the land with an oth: therfore mult it needs bee that he had offended. But his doing of this, is to the intent that the people on their side should think the better vpon the fault that they had committed. And in good sooth, so ought all faithful teachers to do, that is, they they ought to touch sinners to the quicke, that they may haue remorse of their finnes, that they may crye to God for mercie & aske pardon thereof, that they may be sorie for the, that they may mislike of themselves for them, that they may hate them, and vtterly forsake them. For when men are flattered in their vices: first they be hardened in them, and take alwayes greater libertie to do euill: secondly they thinke not that euer they shal come to account before God: and finally they neuer forsake the world that so they may glorifie God, & consider or feele how much they be bound & beholde to him. By this means theys Gods mercie defaced, & his grace sluppeth away and is vtterly abolisht. Besides this, there is yet a greater enormitie, namely that men goe on still from euil to worse, vntil they be false in vtter confusion. Now then for this caule it is the duetie of such as haue the bearing abrode of Gods word, to exhort their hearers continually to consider their sins and to search the thoroughly. And to what end? Not only to make them bare ly ashamed of them: but also to make them hate themselves before God, & to goe forward continually in repentance, y so they may learne to mislike of their faults, & to glorifie God when they wholly repaire to him for refuge, by asking him forgiveness of the offences that they haue committed. But what? There are very few that can a way with this order of teaching: for there is not so wicked a man, but he would be flattered. And the world seeth that as soone as a man speaketh, some gnash their teeth & seeke nothing else but to bite him: and other some though a man do but by the way glance at their faults which are too farre out of all square, feare not to check him, or to stand with him face to face in the maintenance thereof. But yet for all that, the rule which God hath appointed vs, vs I say which haue the charge to beare abrode his words, that we must daily labor in warning our hearers, to cal themselves to account, and to examine well their owne faults, that they may be sorie for them.

When as he speaketh of hearers: we our selues are comprehended in y number: for we must not condemne others, & exempt our selues: but he y speaketh to others, must first stick & look to himselfe: & cite himselfe before God. But yet neuertheless we must procede in this order y we must al of vs be summoned before God, & haue our inditement redy framed & made, and not tarie til God pronounce the sentence of condemnation vpon vs, but euery of vs play the iudge against himselfe, & that, not by saying in a word or two, I haue done amisse: but by being thoroughly wounded within, so as we be ashamed of our misdeeds. After this fashion must we deale. In the meane season if we perceiue y the wicked cannot away with any correction, but conceiue rancor against Gods word, as we see these despisers of all religio do, who cannot abide that any ma should rebuke them, let vs not maruell at it, for if they be pinched, by & by they spit out their poison like toads as they be: But if we purpose to shewe our selues to be Gods children, let vs learne to suffer correction willingly, & to haue our sins laide afore vs, y we may cōdemn them. For our acknowledging of the, wilbe a mean to haue them buried before god. Thus ye see what we haue to note vpon y text.

But now let vs come to Moses chiete intent which I haue touched atore. I shall not go into this good land, saith he. And therefore I warne ye continue stedfastly in the covenant of God, so as ye neuer forget it, so was shipyard in his steede, but serue him, seeing he hath once chosen you, & vouchsafed to shewe himselfe your god & father. Here we see y Moses was not out of hart, though God chastised him roughly. And here we see how the faithful ought to behaue themselves. That is to say, if God punish them, yet must they not therefore cease to loue him, and to go forward in their course still, yea & to giue ouer themselves wholly vnto him. As soone as the wicked feele but one yrke of the rod with Gods hand, & by and by they kicke against him, and if they may scape from him, they play the horse that hauing shaken of the bridle casteth his rider downe, & afterwards becoming as if he were mad, he stormeth as though no ma were able to lay hold on him, or to restrain him: Euen so play the wicked, which can neuer abide y God thold chastise the and tame them, to hold the in obedience to him. If he make the to feele their sins, they burst out into impatientie, & ther vpon fall by and by to rebellion & fure. But contrariwise, when our Lord visiteth vs with afflictions: we know it is not for vs to stray far from him, nor to take occasion to scape his hands: but rather to submit our selues quietly to his seruice, & to keepe our selues from these tentations y run oftentimes in our heads. If we fall to scanning, so as we say to our selues, how now? must I for seruing of god haue so hard & cumbersome a conditio? It should seeme y he is minded to discourage me: Let vs beware of such conceits, & rather fellow y example of Moses. He saw himselfe bereft of y inheritance y had bin promised to y whole people, he saw he had as it were a marke of reproch for euer, as though God had withered him: for wher as God had chosen him to be the leader of his people, & to supplie his roome in bringing to the that welfare that they had looked for so long time: now towards his death he must be disgraced at Gods hand, and be banished from the possession that was as a pledge of the kingdom of heauen. True it is that Moses continued and doth continue still an heire of Gods kingdom: but he had not that earthly pledge of it, that was set before the people. He law, that of fix hundred thousand persons, (for the whole multitude was so manie) there was not one among them al that was wrothier to enter into the land than himselfe. Therefore he might haue stormed thus with himselfe: Howe now? I see I haue taken great payne in leading this people, God hath wrought so manie miracles by my hand, I haue yettill such zeale to the honor of God and to y welfare of his people as I neuer cease to procure the same, & therwall I may well say God hath granted me y grace to walke more roundly than al y rest: and yet notwithstanding must I be barred out of y land, & the residue enter into it, which haue not taken so much paine as I nothing nere? Moses might haue bin in a chafe & chawed vpon his bridle saying: wel seeing

seeing I have taken so much paine, & God ment to serue his turne by me heretofore: it is ynough for me, I am contented with that which I haue done, but notwithstanding I will giue ouer my roome, and seeing that he will not set me aworke any longer, let him serue his turn by some other. Moses might wel haue entred into such fancies. But what? Notwithstanding y God listed to abace him so before men, by bereuening him of the benefite that he esteemed aboue al other, and to preferre the meanest and miserablest of the people before him who was so excellent a Prophet: yet ceased he not to discharge his dutie, and to goe through with it still. And we see with what carefulnes he goeth about it. My friends (saith he) although I must dye here, and God cutteth me off from you as touching the bodie: yet notwithstanding I will discharge my selfe both towards him and you, and seeing it hath pleased him to make me his minister to teach you his doctrine, I will neuer faile to doe my dutie. In deede he might haue vtyted the people, as them that had caused God to lay such punishment vpon him: but yet for all that hee ceaseth not to serue God and to loue the people still, which (as I said) had caused him to be disinherited of the Land that was promised to Abraham.

Therefore hath Moses good right to say, Because of your words God swaue that I should not goeuer Iordan to enter into this good Land. Neither murmuring nor blaspheming proceeded from Moses: Nay (which is more) we see he crucified himselfe when he saw that god was not honored as he ought to haue beene: whereas on the contrarie part there was a froward & wilfull people, which could not be brought into order by any means. It seemeth then indeede y Moses had iust cause to be angrie with the people, seeing that God had punished him so grieuouly for their disobedience. But yet for all that, a man may see hee sheweth himselfe still a father towards them, and taketh them as his children, for hee knewe to what state he was called. True it is that he vsed sharpnesse and rigor in due time and place, specially when it behoued him to shewe the people their offences. We see that Moses was in that behalf as a burning fire: we see howe vehemently he rebuketh the despysers of God and the Rebels. But when y was once ouer, he shewed himselfe alwayes to beare an affection of loue, towards such as could abide it. As for example, God had now punished the people by the space of fortie yeres, in so much that they which had brought punishments vpon the people, and had bene the authors of sedition, were already dead and their carckesses were rotten in the wildernes: & yet now behold, Moses pittich the children that were descended of them, and ceaseth not to loue them. So then let vs marke, that if God call vs to the preaching of his word, the vnthankfulnesse of such as ought to heare it, must not stay vs from procuring their saluation as much as in vs lyeth. Moreover let vs not forbear to pronounce Gods iustice against the wicked. And though there be some that are vtterly wilful & past hope of recouery, whose diseases are incurable: wel, yet let vs do our dutie towards them: let vs cite them to Gods iudgement, & let our doctrine serue for their condemnation to sende them to hell. And in the meane while, looke where we can reclaime them that haue done amiss: let vs giue good heede thereto and bestow our labor thereon. Behold yet what we haue further to remember out of this place.

And herewithall wee see also, that when Gods seruants perceiue themselues to be neerer their ende, they must be the carefuler to stablish the doctrine which they taught in their life time. And why? For we see how men do easily slip away, & that euen such as haue shewed some good signe, will anon after start aside, if they be not helde in with a dubble reine as they say. And when a seruant of God seeth y in his lifetime he was greatly hindered in the maintenance of Gods seruice, and had much adoe to repress euel: what should he thinke but that the diuill will take possession after his death, if God reuendic not the matter? Therefore such as haue felt and found by experience in their lifetime, how painefull a thing it is to maintain the church, ought cue for this cause to take so much the more paine & trauell when they draw towards their death, to cause the synccer religion to be maintained in his purenesse, that men being once set in a good course, may not swaue away from it. Beholde the example which Moses sheweth vs.

And besides this let vs marke also that he doth not only discharge himselfe here at his death, by vttering some sodaine speach, or by shewing some signe of zeale onely: but that he stood vpon this, and did most yrge it, to wit, all his life long that the people might bee edified in the feare of God. For yee shall see a number that are negligent all their lifetime: and yet they thinke that if they do but once exalt God and make a faire protestation at their liues ende: it is ynough. But Moses delt not so. For hee neuer forgate the commission that was giuen him, but continued throughout in preaching to the people. Neurtherlesse, whatsoeuer he did all his life long: yet when he sawe his death at hande, hee inforced himselfe the more, and burned the whotter in earnestnesse of zeale, because of the vrgent necessitie aforesaide. Wherefore let those whom God hath ordained to preach his worde, looke well that they discharge their dutie all their life long. And that when they shall haue done their indeuer to stablish the true religion, and brought to passe that God is honoured, and that they haue builded Gods Church as much as they coule, and taught those to walke in the feare of God which were committed to their charge: let them indeuer to seale vp al the same doctrine, & to cause it to continue after their decease. This the is another thing which we haue to remember.

Also let vs marke further, that seeing Moses was so careful for the people of Israel: wee also haue neede to be vpon our watches. Do we see that God taketh away a man that hath serued faithfully in his time? Then let vs be sure that anon after, the diuell will in deuour to marre al, and that he will soone make some breach to enter vpon vs, if we be not lustily vpholden & kept.

And there is not a more profitable lesson than this same. For we knowe not how great a good turne God doth vs, when he giueth vs such men as seeke nothing else but to hold vs in aw of him, and to bring to passe that hee may reigne ouer vs, and we liue vnder his obeyfance. On the contrary part, when our Lord taketh such out of the worlde as are able to builde his Church: wee bee carelesse of it, and this carelesnesse is the cause, that the duell findeth a gappe open amongst vs, so that hee may vtterly make hauocke of vs. So much the more therefore doth it stande vs in hand to be watchful in this case, & to know that wee bee well fenced when God giueth vs men to guide vs in his feare. Contrariwise if he leaue vs destitute of such: it is as if a man were without munition in a towne, whereas were no power nor meane of defence. Ye see then how it standeth vs in hand to bethinke our selues, and to pray god that when it pleaseth him to take away those that haue taught vs faithfully, that then the doctrine which wee shall haue received by them, may not die anon after them, but liue stil & continue alwayes fast seled in our hearts, and that it may haue full force and strength, and we be fenced by it against al Satans temptations, neuer to turne away from it, but euermore to remember what we haue learned & alwayes to set our minds vp on it, that it may serue vs for a shield to ward off all Satans blowes withal, and that wee may be armed with it from top to toe (as they say) that Gods word: may bee a worde to vs, our hope a helmet, & our faith a buckler, so as the duell may not bee able to foile vs in any wise whatsoever: that when the meanes shalbe taken away wherewith Gods will was to haue vs edified, yet neuertheless he may stil continue with vs, and we likewise keepe on our way to him.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins, praying him to make vs percecute them better than wee haue done heretofore, so as we may learne to mislike more and more of our felues for them: And that in acknowledging the great benefites which hee bestoweth vpon vs, wee may call vpon him as our father, seeking nothing else but to giue our selues wholly vnto him, to be gouerned by his holy spirit as his teachable and meeke children: & seeing that he doth vs this honor to take vs for his heritage, & to giue him selfe to vs, that we may also remember, sith he taketh delight in vs: to be vnto him such a possession, as may serue to his glorie, & that hee would neuer cut vs off although we wel deserue it. That it may please him to grant this grace, not only to vs but also to al people and nations of the earth, &c.

23 Beware that ye &c.

25 When thou shalt haue begotten children, and childrens children, and shalt haue dwelt long in y<sup>e</sup> land: if then ye shal corrupt your selues, & make carued Images after the likenesse of any thing, and worke wickednesse in the sight of the Lord thy God, to prouoke him to wrath:

26 I call heauen and earth to record against you this day, that out of al doubt ye shall soone perish out of the land whither ye go ouer Jordan to possesse it: and yee shall not prelong your dayes therein, for ye shalbe vtterly destroyed.

W e haue seene heretofore the exhortation that Moses made, to the intēt that Gods seruice might not bee corrupted. Hee shewed that to worship GOD purely, there must no image at all be made, because it is not in any wise agreeable to his nature: but men must worship him after another fashion. His seruice (say I) is spiritual: and therefore wee must rest wholly therevpon. For as soone as we swaue one way or other: it is but presumption, which God condemneth. That is the thing which Moses hath treated of hitherto. Now to confirme this doctrine the better: he setteth before the peoples eyes, the covenant that God had made with them: for when God manifesteth himselfe vnto vs, it is the principall meane whereby to hold vs in the pure religion. Naturally we be blind wretches, and therefore it is verie easie for Satan to beguile vs. And although there were none to deceiue vs: yet doth euery one of vs wander away in our owne conceits and imaginations. Therefore there is nothing in vs but darknes: and Gods maiestie is so high and incomprehensible a thing, as it is no maruell though we be at our wits end, before we can come nigh vnto it. Then if we were not duly taught, we had a grounded doctrine to the w<sup>ch</sup> vs y<sup>e</sup> right path: what could we do but go astray? But now seeing y<sup>e</sup> God hath shewed himselfe vnto vs, & that so familiarly as we may discern him from al the ydols that haue bin forged in y<sup>e</sup> worlde, & we are able to say y<sup>e</sup> it is he whom we ought to worship: there is no more excuse for vs if we be caiued to and fro. And our vthankfulness is the more shamefull, if wee shut our eyes against the doctrine of saluation, and turne our backs vpon God when he hath shewed himselfe to our face, and vouchsafed to bee knowen of vs familiarly. Now we see what Moses ment. For his meaning

is to set forth the greuousnesse of the peoples sin, if it should so fall out that they should turne away from the purenes which they had learned in the lawe. As if he should say, True it is that euen from the creation of the worlde most men haue not ceased to ouerfloore themselves into a number of errors and follies: but that came to passe because they had not so special a teaching, as you haue, whereby they might haue had certeinie of faith to rest themselves vpon. Therefore the wretched infidels went astray: but yet was not their sin so greuous and outrageous. For although they were vnexcusable: yet had they not any such teaching as you. But as for you, yee haue had Gods couenēt, whereby ye were brought into his house: hee hath shewed himselfe as a father towards you, & taught you as his childrē: this is that holy band whereby god hath tyed himselfe to you: now then if you should turne backe againe, and become like those wretched beastes which neuer knew nor tasted of gods truth, what a thing were it? Might you pretende them for a shrowding sheete and say, other men do so as well as we? Yea, but yet had not those other men such teaching as you haue had. Nowe therefore acknowledge the grace that God hath bestowed vpon you, in shewing you out from all nations of the earth, & in cōming to nigh vnto you. And in deed y<sup>e</sup> same is the very cause why y<sup>e</sup> when the heathen are condēned in their superstitions: it is said on the contrarie part, that y<sup>e</sup> Lord dwelleth in Sion, & his maiesty is knowne there. After that manner doth the Prophet Abacucke speake in his second chapter: and it is a doctrine that is rise ynough euery where. As if it were saide, The world runnes at randon, and euery man forgeth and setteth vp some God priuately to himselfe: but as for the God which hath shewed himselfe to bee the true liuing God: his voyce foundeth in mount Sion where the temple was builded. Thē sith it is so: although the whole world bee caried away & go wandering in the darke: yet must not we be remoued, forasmuch as he hath set vp his seat among vs, and we know him by his voyce & by his word. And here we see why it is said in the Psalmes where Gods kingdome is spoken of in such wise as it was to bee stablished in the person of our Lord Iesus Christ, as well in the fourescore and sixtenth psalme as in other psalmes: The Lord reigneth, Let y<sup>e</sup> far countries reioyce therat, let all ydols be confounded, and let all that is set vp by men be thrown downe. For when we haue the truth, which driueth away al darknes & ignorance, then haue we the verie meane to destroy al superstitions. And to the same purpose also is there this like saying in Esay: when the Lord reigneth, then shall al the ydols of Egypt fal. And why? For the wretched Infidels weene they doe well, and thinke they do God good seruice in following their fond superstitions. But when God is once set afore them: then his maieesty bereaueth them of all excuse, and he must needs as then be magnified. And that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why it is said in another place, This is the Lord, this is the Lord. The prophet in the person of all the faithful, desiecth the ydols with their abuses, because GOD should be knowne, accordingly as al things were accomplished at the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ. Now then the thing y<sup>e</sup> we haue to gather vpon this text, is that when we once knowe God by his word, wee must be so fully resoluēd and assured thereof, that although the whole wretched world run rouing after their owne abuses and superfections, yet we must keepe on our way fill: & that seeing we haue a sure foundation which cannot be shaken, that is to wit gods infallible truth, wee must let those blinde wretches breake their necks, sith we cannot remedie it, and in y<sup>e</sup> meane while we must go forward still as the Lord commaundeth vs, seeing he hath reached vs his hand to draw vs to him. And although this was spoken to the Iewes by Moses: yet it perteineth eue now vnto vs. For wee see what fauor God hath shewed vs aboute others. All the worlde is full of error and diuellsish imaginations, & wretched men are become brutish in their ignorance. But what? Neither hath the doctrine of life bene preached vnto them: neither haue they euer in good earnest vnderstood what God is. Indeede they care speake of him, but that is but at randon & without order. But wee haue the scripture declared vnto vs, and by that mean God communicateth himselfe to vs, and allureth vs so sweetly vnto him, as he could not doe any more for vs, except hee should take vs into his lap, and yet we see he applyeth himselfe to our inhirmitie, he chaweth our morsels to vs, he feedeth vs with pappe, & speaketh to vs like a nurse. Now when we see that our God manifesteth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs, there is no more excuse for vs, wee may no more mingle our slues in the order or rancke of vnbelieuers. For our state is cleane contrarie. God is hidden from them: and yet shall they not faile to perish in their ignorance as they be worthe. But as for vs, if we be so stubborne against God, that euen of a spitefull malice wee will not obey the things that he sheweth vs, but will play the wilde beastes with him, so as hee cannot reclaime vs to himselfe: and that euen when we knowe him and do vnderstand that it is hee which ought to be honored, yet wee be so vnconstant and waueing still, as to turne away after our owne dotages: shall we not be double condemned? Shall not horrible vengeance hang ouer our heades? Then let vs beare in mind, that in asmuch as our Lorde hath made a couenant with vs, that is to say, hath called vs into his Church to be taught by his worde: that this is the onely meane, wherewith wee may be armed and fortified against all superstitions. This is one point. And let vs also marke therewithall, that horrible condemnation hangeth ouer our heades, if we wander away, and hold not our selues to the simplicitie of Gods doctrine, but be carried away hither and thither by our owne lusts. These are the two pointes which we haue to matke vpon this text. Wherefore let vs learne to make out profite and com. moditie of the worde that is preached vnto vs for the same purpose. That is to wit, albeit that all bee full of corruption and errour, yet let not vs bee shaken downe, nor bee waunting as manie men are, to saye, yeamarie, but there is so much disagreement [that I wote not what to doe]. Let vs not allege this: but let vs say with the prophet Elay, Behold, this is our God: behold, this is our God. And by that means let vs defie all that the diuell can set before vs to turne vs aside. Yea let vs not make any reckoning at all of it. And why? Because the light that God giueth vs, is strong ynough to driue away all darknesse, and the truth is strong ynough to beate backe all lies. Thus see yee I say what the power of faith ought to be: When wee haue well printed in remembrance the doctrine that is preached vnto vs, and yet notwithstanding continue still for all that in blindness, and bee full as reedes shaken with euerie winde: Let vs vnderstande this that we knowe not God, nor yet euer vnderstood of what great value his couenant towards vs was, nor euer were knitte to him as we should be: but that there was hypocricie insteede of that protitacion that we made to followe his worde. But let vs marke herewithall, that our condemnation shall be doubled, if wee runne alstray after wee haue knowne the truth. For if Gods couenant cannot hold vs in obedience: must it not needs bee that wee bee as cloudes? And what an vnthankfulnesse is that? Indeeede many will say, I haue not bene sufficiently confirmed, I vnderstande it not: but those are fonde shiftes. Wee neede but to open our eyes and our eares seing wee haue Gods worde preached, and our Lorde will certainly make it of power and force, so as wee shall haue sufficient instruction by it, seeing he regardeth vs especially, and therefore wee must needes be founde blameworthy if we swaue one way or other, after that God hath shewed vs his truth. And this much then concerning the couenant that Moses speaketh of here.

Howbeit, to set forth the heynousnes of their crime the more, he addeth that hee taketh heauen and earth to witness, that if the people turne away from the lawe, and inuent or set vp any newe Religion, they shall perish out of hande, and not possesse the lande any long time, which should be giuen vnto them. Now this serueth to waken such as are puffed yp with vaine presumption, vnder colour that God is gracious vnto them, and hath giuen them some priuiledge aboue others. And it is well worthie to be noted. For although we cannot exceede measure in trusting in God: yet doe wee see that a greate number doe falsely abuse Gods name. If they bee once bapfised and taken into the companie of the faithfull: it seemeth to them that God is greatly bounde vnto them. Whereas they should consider that they be called of his free goodnesse, and ought to giue ouer themselves to walke in feare and warrenesse: beholde, they be puffed yp with pride and vaine ouerweening, and beare themselves in hande through fond hypocricie, that they be seaped out of Gods hande, and in the meane while they doe but delie with him. Ye see then what the pride of men is, howe that when God sheweth himselfe bountifull towards vs, and vttereth the great and infinite treasures of his mercie: they thinke still that hee is greatly beholden to them, and therevpon doe ouerthooote themselves, and take leaue to dee amisse. According as wee see that the greatest strife which the Prophetes had against the Iewes, was for that they bragged of their hauing of Gods Temple, and of his sacrifices, and of such other things. Nowe according hereunto Moses saith in this place, It is true y<sup>e</sup> doe now enter into possession of the heritage which God promised to your fathers: it is true that therein you haue an excellent warrant of his preferring of you before all other nations: Surely it is a great and inestimable dignitie, that your God should purchase you with his owne hande, and shroude out the inhabitants of a countrie to set you in their place, yea and that when you be in that lande, you shall be sure to be of his household, and that he dwelleth among you, and that his so doing is to take you vp into his euerlasting kingdome: Surely it is a singular benefite which your God hath vouchsafed vpon you: but yet for all that, deceiue not your selues to despise and reiect his worde, or to shrinke away from him, & to corrupt his seruice. For like as now he performeth the promise that he made to your fathers: so can he also driue you out againe, when he hath settled you there: and he can well ynough weede you againe out of his heritage, & so scatter you abroad that you shall be dispersed euery where. Now then, the more that your God doth presently increase his goodnes towards you: the more diligit be you in seruing and louing of him, and hold your selues vnder his shadow, and beware that ye alter not any thing in the religion that hee hath ordered for you. Marke that for one point.

And now furthermore, whereas Moses calleth heauen and earth to witness: it importeth yet a greater vehemencie. True it is, that some take this for Angels and men. But y<sup>e</sup> is not the meaning of Moses, as wee shall see by the like manner of speech hereafter in the 32. Chapter, where he will say, Hearken O yee heauens what I say, and let the earth hee the words of my mouth. And so saith the Prophet Esay, Hearken ye heauens, and let the earth giue audience vnto mee, for the Lorde hath spoken. Beholde I haue nourished children & brought them vp, and they haue despised me. When God calleth heauen and earth to witness after that manner, it is to rebuke mens brutishnesse so much the more. For we be created after Gods image, to haue reason & vnderstanding: & where to shoulde wee applye such gifts, but to knowe God and to giue our selues wholly vnto him? Shall men haue wit ynough to comprehend the whole order of nature, and shall they in my meane season despise the Lorde? It is all one as if a man shoulde thinke himselfe well forwarde, when hee hath toyled in traueiling and running all day long: and hath wandered all the while without keeping any path. And is not the knowledge of our God the final end of all our perfection? Yes, and therefore when God intendeth to shew men that they be more than blockish, and that they be so marred as they be not worthy to be taken any more for reasonable creatures: then doth hee direct his speech to heauen and earth.

Esa. 59.

Ierem. 7. 4.

Deut. 32. 1.

Esa. 1. 2.

As if hee shoulde say, I haue not nowe any more witnesses in y<sup>e</sup> world: for I chose these to be knownen of them: but hearken you to me yee heauen and earth, hearken yee to me I say nowe yee that are vnreasonable creatures: for I shal finde more reason in you, than in those to whom I haue giuen witte and knowledge to discern betweene good and euill, and to haue skil not only of this present life, but also of the immortallitie of heauen. So then, Moses calleth heauen and earth to witnesses here, to doe vs the better to vnderstand, that if men flatter themselves and play the brute beasts when they haue offended God, and think by that means to go quite: they beguile themselves: for when men shall haue conspired together in naughtines, and that euery man may say, I haue done as all others haue done: so as there remaineth no more but heauen and earth, although they haue no vnderstanding in them, yet shall they be sufficient witnesses. Why so? For shall they not be able enough to bewray our naughtines without speaking, seeing they were ordeined for our seruice? We haue seene already what Moses saide heretofore of the Sunne, Moone and Starres. What is the Sunne? A right noble creature. And yet notwithstanding, what is he in effect, but our seruant? And the Moone that mounteth so high, is our handmaid, & God hath appointed al these things to our vse & commodity. Seeing then that these creatures being without vnderstanding, doe knowe that the end whereto God hath applyed them, is to do vs seruice: what a dealing is it, y<sup>e</sup> when we shal haue inioyed so many benefices, as namely that we shal haue receiued the light of the Sunne and the Moone, that the earth shal haue fed vs with her owne bowels, and that we shal haue bin fraught full of a number of other good things: yet notwithstanding we fal to desiring of the world with our filthines and infection, so as Gods glorie is darkened by vs, and wee ouerthrowe his seruice, and let vp ydols against him to deface and discredit his maiestie? Whether go we in so doing? Shall not the creatures aske vengeance against vs, when we shal haue so abused them, and defiled and berayed the with our filthines as much as we could: Yes: and so we see nowe what the meaning of Moses was.

Nowe remaineth that we applye it further to ourselves: And first and foremost let vs marke well, that if wee haue bene receiued into the Church, and God for a time haue admitted vs to bee of his people and flocke, and haue bestowed many benefices vpon vs, specially if we haue had any excellencie or preheninence aboue others: we must not be proude of it. For if we abuse Gods grace, hee can well ynough roote vs out: and if we follow not his calling, hee can as well cut vs off, as hee coule adoe vs. And in good sooth, it is this befell to the Iewes which were the natural branches (as Saint Paul termeth them) and which came out of this stocke of Abraham: if that holy and high exalted lineage was neuer thelesse cut off vpon the fudden, and disinherited of the possession that God had giuen them: what shall become of vs which are graffed in as it were against nature? For wee were wilde impes: wee came of the Gentiles, which were enemies to God, & separated from his Church, & had not any acquaintance with him. Seeing then that our Lorde gathereth vs to him, not onely by Baptisme but also by the holy supper, and wee haue his worde daily, wherein hee assureth vs that hee is our father, that he will bee the keeper of our soules, and that he will take vs for his people: let vs learne to looke diligently about vs, that we abuse not so great a benefice. But if wee nunde to inioy it for euer: let vs feare our God and walke in his obedience: and that (I tell you) is a thing which wee ought to beare in minde. For if wee thinke to holde God in our sleue, and imagine him to bee bounde vnto vs because he hath once chosen vs: hee will easlie shewe vs that as hee came to vs, so will hee goe againe from vs, if we will needs be ouerlustic. Will wee then haue our Lorde to continue our shepherd still? Let vs be pliable to him, so as we lue quietly vnder his subiection. To bee short, let vs alwayes beare in minde the threat which our Lorde Iesus Christ vttered: That is to wit, that the kingdom of God shalbe remooued far from vs, when wee cannot profite thereby, and that it shalbe taken away from vs, and giuen to a people that shall glorifie their God, when they haue bin taught by his word. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this point.

Furthermore let vs marke well, that whereas it is saide here, that heauen and earth shall beare witness against vs: it is to put vs to the greater shame, in that the Angels neede not to come downe from Paradise, nor the Prophets and Apostles to rise from the dead, to giue euidence against vs before God: but only the liuelies creatures are sufficient witnessse for God to vse to condemne vs with all. It is true that GOD coule bring other witnessse also, as we see, that sometimes hee calleth forth the heathen and infidels to make vs the more ashamed. For (as saith the Prophet Ieremie) goe euerie where, and yett ye shall not see that the ydolaters bee so fickle, as those that haue bene duely instructed in the pure worde of God. Looke me vpon the wretched infidels, which bee headstrong in their follies. Although they haue no certaintie to leane vnto (as also they cannot indeede haue any) & (which more is) their minds be so intangled in their owne dotages as they cannot winde themselves out: yet notwithstanding, say what a man can, they sticke still to the things that they haue learned. And although they keepe one course still: yet doe they nothing but goe astray, without keeping either right way or path: & yet notwithstanding they be held still to it by this persuasion, y<sup>e</sup> they must not change their God. But yett they neuer knew him for al that. And shal we the be caried away at the first dash, which know the liuing God and haue bene taught his truth, and haue had so good warrant therof, as it is not for vs to waver any more: Shall we flart away after wee haue bene trained vp in the pure doctrine of the Gospell? O what meaneth this? Looke mee vpon the Turkes, Paynims, Papistes, and Iewes. Notwithstanding that al these

be bewitched at this day in their errorrs; yet shal they rise vp and bee found sufficient witnesses to make vs ashamed before God, and to disappoint vs of all startingholes. And why? For they go on still in their superstitious, whereas wee for our partes fall to reeling at euery blast of winde, and the diuell plucketh vs out of the place wherein wee were planted. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this place.

But about all things let vs marke, that in as much as God hath bestowed infinite benefites vpon vs, and displayed his liberalitie towardes vs after so many fashions; all that he shall haue bestowed vpon vs shall serue to our condemnation, if wee doe him not homage for the same. To bee short, both heauen and earth shall be armed against vs, and aske vengeance vpon vs. And how shall we be able to finde any excuse, when our Lorde shall raise such a crye to confounde vs and put vs to shame? Therefore let vs nowe looke well to our selues, and let vs walke in the way that he hath shewed vs.

Now here is expresse mention made of Images and other likeneses: but vnder one kinde, Moses comprehendeth all. For it is a maner of speache rise ynough in the holy scripture, to marke our some one kinde of superstition, thereby to warne vs that we must keepe our selues from all superstitions in generall. And Moses himself doth euer obserue the same maner of speaking, as wee shal see in the next Chapter, where he voucheth to speake of the heinouest things, to the intent we shoulde the more abhorre them and mislike of them, to keepe our selues from them. And yet for all that the holy Ghost meant in this place by the mouth of Moses shortly to shew that whē God hath once made his covenant with vs, we must hold vs in the simplicitie of his word, without mingling any superstition with it. Now that we vnderstand the naturall sense of this text: let vs looke that we make our commoditie thereof. For although we haue no images either carued or molten: although wee haue no puppets either ingrauen or painted: yet faile wee not to be idolaters, if we sticke not to our God to keepe his worde throughout. For the matter that the Covenant it self importeth is not that we should confesse in wordes, that the God which gaue his Lawe by Moses is alonely to bee worshipped: but that we should vnderstand his will, after what manner he will be serued, that we should haue his promises printed in our heartes, that we should knowe howe and by what meanes we ought to worship him, and that we should keepe our way to the inheritance whereunto he calleth vs. That is the thing that Gods couenāt importeth. And without that, in what case were wee? If wee should say, verie well, there is but one God which hath created heauen and earth, he hath revealed himselfe vnto vs, and he hath giuen vs his Lawe: and yet notwithstanding we knewe not his will, but euery of vs shoulde behaue himselfe as he listed: to what purpose were this? It were better for vs neuer to haue knowne Gods word, than after the knowing of it to despicke it, and to take leaue to doe what wee list.

Therefore let vs beare well in minde, that Moses meant here to shewe the people generally, that seeing they had bene taught in the truth, it behoued them to keepe themselves from all errorrs and leasings. And this is that which I haue said alreadie, that Gods word ought to suffice to gard vs in such sort, as the diuell may not seduce vs, doe the worst he can. Nowe then will wee be exempted from the threate and condemnation that is contained here? Let vs giue ouer our selues wholly in all respects to our God, let vs hearken to his worde, and let vs obey his voyce without any exception or gauselinge, so as his seruice remaine in such sort among vs, as hee hath commanded by his word. But let vs compare the crime that Moses reprocheth here, with other crimes that are lesse to bee excused. For although there was vnthankfulnesse and rebellion at y time in all such as suffered themselves to be misled, after they had bene taught by Gods word; yet comitted they not so cursed sacrilege against God, as y caittis do in these dayes, which to the vttermost of their power do blot out a religion, and are lo full of wickednesse, that they could finde in their hearts to confound heauen and earth together, in working spite to the whole Maiestie of God. Take mee a man that hath bin taught in the Gospell, and afterwarde through lightnesse ouershooteth himselfe and turneth away from well dooing, howbeit with a minde to doe well againe: truly such as one is not to bee held guiltlesse, as I haue saide alreadie: but yet is he not worthe of so much blame, neither is his fault so heinous before GOD, as another that outrageth so farre as to scoffe and scorne at God and all his doctrine, and to play the mad beelzebub, of purpose to thrust all Religion vnder foot, so as he could finde in his heart that men should lue like beastes: and for the bringing thereof to passe, speweth out blasphemies not onely against the maner of the superstitious in Poperie, but also euen against the word of God. For is not such a one farre more horrible, than the ignorant wretch that is still snarled in some imagination, and thinkes he serueth God, though the same be but vanitie, as I said afore? But nowe let vs looke to our owne time. God telleth the lewes here, that he would not beare with them if they happened to ouershote themselves in any superstitions, but would becaue them of the inheritance that he had promised them. Wee at this day haue a more excellent benefite than that people had, and therefore shall wee be the more to blame, if wee yeeld not homage to our God, which hath esteemed and honored vs so much, as to call vs into his Church. But nowe how doe most men behaue themselves, after they haue bene taught by the Gospell? In deece wee meddle not with the superstitious of Papietrie, wee passe not for shrift, nor for Masses, nor for such other like trash: but what for that? Wee could finde in our heartes plainly and shortly to desie God, and that he should haue no further audience among vs than we list our selues. After this maner doe a great sort deale euen to this day, who neuertheless will needes bee taken, not to be of the common sort of the faithfull, but as the pillars and vpholders of the Church. And yet haue they gone about to stoppe Gods mouth when any thing hath misliked them, or fallen out otherwise than they would haue it. O this must bee taken away. And wy? Beholde, GOD not onely speaketh here of the things that haue bene inuenced by men: but also holdeth vs in awe, so as it is not lawfull for vs to encounter him. He passeth not for them. And againe, let vs see what their life is. We see that they mocke GOD to the ful, and that their desire is to haue their own: swinge in all things. And yet notwithstanding when the diuell raiseth vp such plagie folke to infect the whole flocke with their poison: wee see a great number, whose whole desire is to mingle themselves with them. For as soone as some leawd fellowe, or two or three maintainers of wickednesse, (which shewe them selues to bee readie to vpholde all disorder and offences) doe but steppe vp: it is as good as the displaying of a banner, and by & by alvnthrifes runne after it. And would God that the experience of it were not so great as it is seeme to bee. But what? When wee bee tolde of it, we must repent yea and we must mourne before God, praying him to keepe vs from such deadly plagues as are seene intermingled among vs. And so let vs marke well howe it is said here, that it can not bee that such as doe so peruert themselves, did euer know what Gods couenant is, or of how excellent value. For if his truth ought to restrain vs that we be not led away by any of the wyles and slights of Satan: how were it possible that men should so cast themselves into destruction, if they had known God in good earnest, & bene strengthened in his word? Although then that such folke professe the Gospel, yea and haue taken some smack of it, as saith the Apostle: yet may we perceue that it neuer entered into their hearts in good earnest. They be but hypocrites, which make countenance to serue GOD for a time, and afterward doe flecte away, as wee see these roisters doe which band themselves together. As soone as they see any aide or support to vphold their wickednesse, they fall to praesing and confederating, and they contriue all the drifts that they can possibly, to ouerthrow Gods Church. Therefore let vs vnderstand, that although the Gospell be preached among vs: yet are there many deafe folk which heare not what God saith to them: not that that shall seeme to lessen their fault, for they shall not faile to be taken for guiltie as well as others.

Now here a man mighte demaund a question, wherfore Moses saith that they shal not lue in y land that is giuen them, but shall be shortly rooted out of it: for wee see that God is patient: and in deepe it appeareth sufficiently. And therefore it seemeth at the first sight that the thing which Moses saith here, shoulde not come to passe. God spared his people a long time. Although they gaue themselves to idolatrie and superstition: yet did God vs long patience towards the, inso much that the Prophets laboured to bring them backe againe whē they wēt reuolued. Although they were wilfull and hard hearted, yet did God assay to win them to him. Notwithstanding all this, it is said here that they shall soone be rooted out. Yea, but this soone or shortly must agree with that which is written in many other places: that is to wit, that although Gods wrath light suddainly vpon offenders, & ouerwhelme them as a storme that cometh vnlooked for: yet doth he not faile to be patient, and to delay his vengeance till mens wickednes bee growen ripe, yea and euen till it be flarke rotten. Therefore it is to be vnderstoode that God punisheth not offenders out of hand, for he saith that he is slowe to wrath, and he must needs keepe his owne nature. Neuerthelife in vsing patience, and in bearing with them that haue doone amisse: he ouerthroweth them sooner then they would. Ye see then that this soone, shortly, by and by, or out of hand, must be referred to mens carelessnesse, who make their account that all shall go well with them, and beare themselves in hande that they haue made a couenant with death (as saith the Prophet Elyas,) and they be as drunken folkes in that behalfe, so as if God winke at them for a time, they thinke they bee escaped from his hand. See how the hypocrites abuse Gods goodnesse, bearing themselves in hande y they shall neuer come to account for it. For this cause doth Moses say here soone or shortly. Not y God forgetteth his owne nature (as I said,) or tarieth not a long time for the amendment of offenders: but that when all is done, his vengeance is alwaies in readinesse, & there needeth no more but to kindle it, and by and by without any further tariance, yea before one finger cā be stirred, there needeth no more but to shewe forth his wrath, and we shall bee euerie one of vs ouerwhelmed as it is saide in another song of Moses, or in the XC. Psalme. Such it is so, let vs not thinke it strange that Moses threatneth the people here, that they shall soone be rooted out.

And to the same purpose, (that is to say, for a further declaration thereof) serueth this also which he addeth: namely, When ye shall haue begotten children, yea euen a two or three descētes: if superstition doe then raigne among you, thy God can roote thee out. Hereby Moses sheweth, that long possession will stand vs in no stead. For though we beare our selues on hand, that it is betwene God and vs, as it is betwene man and man, yet it will not preuaile. If a man haue bin a long time in authoritie & estimation, so as he be well friended or of great kindred and alliance: he beares himselfe on hand that hee shall neuer bee put from it. But we see how the world passeth away, and small occasions will serue to ouerthrow euen them that are mounted highest. And therefore the Prophetes vpbraide them with their pride, which glorie in their owne credit and authoritie, saying vnto them: ye beare your selues in hand that ye bee so fast settled, as ye can neuer be shaken downe: and yet if God doe but blowe vpon you, by and by ye be gone in the turning of a hand. Now according hereunto it is saide here, that if we thinke to claime any title against God by prescriptiō (as they teeme it,) that is to wit, time,

because wee haue possessed his benefites a long time, imagining that we can neuer bee diseated or dispossessed of them, but that they must continue still in the same state, not onely vs, but also to our children, euen to the third & fourth generation: both they and wee shall for all that bee benefite of them, and God will withdrawe his hand which he had erst stretched out to doe vs good. So then let vs mark, that whensoever God shall haue bin patient towards vs, it is not to be saide that he hath forgotten our transgressions: but his bearing with them, is for that it is not yet convenient time to punish them. Therefore let vs not trust to that: but let vs alwayes beare in minde howe it is saide here, that if wee serue not God, we shall soone be cut off. Although it please him to wink at things, and to taria a time for vs: yet shall his wrath come suddainly vpon vs, though it seeme not so to vs. And when we shall

1. Thef. 5. 3. say, all is whit and still, imagining our selues to be safe and sure: then must we be ouerwhelmed by his hand. Let vs consider this, that wee may walke warely and keepe good watch, and not trarie till the fire be kindled.

And for y<sup>e</sup> same cause is this saying set downe: Thy God is a consuming fire and a ielous God. When Moses speaketh after that maner, especially when he calleth him a ielous God: he sheweth that God cannot abide that men should mocke him and despise him, but that he will maintaine his owne honour, as good reason is that he should: and in so doing he sheweth vs how dreadfull his wrath is. Behold then, here are two points which we must mark for a conclusion. Not y<sup>e</sup> we can lay them forth at length as at this time: but that it shall suffice to haue some fortaiste of them. Let vs make then that the cause why God vtereth himself vnto vs, is y<sup>e</sup> hauing once knowe his goodnes, & that he hath chosen vs & called vs by his word: we should couet nothing but to be quickly gouerned by him, and acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> it is he to whom al honour & praise belongeth, & therevpon apply our whole induours to the glorifying of his holy name. That (say I) is the end why our Lord hath once called vs to his knowledge, and why he calleth vpon vs daily, and exhorteth vs still to come vnto him. But yet let vs consider there withall, that if wee doe not serue and glorifie him as he deserueth, and as wee bee bounde: wee shall feele him a consuming fire: that is to say, wee shall feele that it is no dalyng with such a Maister: not that this is saide to make Gods Maiestie terrible vnto vs, so as wee should bee afraid to come at him: but rather that wee shall not bee a whit dismayed, if we take him for our Father. But if wee will not behaue our selues as children towards him, but continue vncommendable: he will lay away the person of a Father, and stewe himselfe to bee our iudge: and that, not such a iudge as needeth to make long inquirie, & to call the hangman to put his iudgements in execution: but if he do but cast forth the fire of his spirit, or but his breath, by and by the fyre is kindled as sayeth the Prophet Esay, Esa. 5. 25. so as wee must needes bee consumed by it. So then, if wee will not haue the Maiestie of our God terrible vnto vs, but rather that wee may goe vnto him: let vs looke that wee glorifie him in all our life, and nor giue him cause to kindle his wrath against vs, nor prouoke him vnto ielousie. For then doeth he tell vs that he will prouoke vs to ielousie likewise, by casting vs fro<sup>m</sup> him & by taking another people in our place. Wherefore let vs looke that wee persist in the vocation wherunto he hath called vs, and that wee kindle not his vengeance against vs. And seeing he hath once vtered his goodnesse and manifested himselfe vnto vs in our Lord Iesus Christ: let vs not doubt but that he on his side will continue to make vs feele the same still, if wee on our side continue in glorifying him.

Deut. 32. 21.
Rom. 10. 19.

Now let vs kneel down before y<sup>e</sup> maiestie of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, so as wee may bee sorie for them and depart from them by the power of his holy spirit. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

On Monday the iij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxvj. Sermon which is the eight vpon the fourth Chapter.

27 And the Lorde God shall scattet you among the Heathen, and ye shall remaine fewe in number among the Nations whither the Lord will bring you.

28 And there ye shall serue gods which are the worke of mans hand, wood & stone, which neither see nor heare, eate nor smell.

29 And there thou shalt seeke the Lorde thy God, and thou shalt finde him if thou seeke him with all thy heart and with all thy soule.

30 And when thou art in tribulation and all these thinges are come vpon thee: in the end thou shalt returne vnto the Lord thy God and obey his voyce.

31 For the Lord thy God: he will not forsake thee, nor destroy thee, nor forget the Couenant of thy fathers which he sware to them.

He haue saide heretofore, that Gods vsing of the similitude of fire, is not to dismay vs in such sort as we should not come vnto him: but contrariwise to make vs come to him with reuerence.

For what shoulde it boote me to bee stricken in such terror, as shoulde make them shrink away from GOD, and loth to haue any thing to do with him? Againe we know that our

Eze. 18. 23.

10 Lorde hath not any other marke or intent, than to winne vs to him and to drawe vs to saluation. Nowe the onely meane thereof, is to goe right forth vnto him, and to be ioynd vnto him.

Wherefore let vs beare well in minde this lesſon, that Gods intent is not to feare vs in such wise, as we should than him: and that is the thing which we haue to gather at this time vpon that which is rehearſed here. For the threaten that Moses giueth here, is hard: but yet irserueth to bring the people backe to God.

15 If thou disobey the voyce of the Lord thy God, (saith he,) thou shalt be scattered. Flaunt not thy selfe wth his choosing of thee from among all other Nations to be his inheritance, nor with his giuing of thee this land in possession: for he can well ynough bereaue thee of all these benefices. Yet notwithstanding, hee addeth that if God see repentance in his people, after he hath chastised them: he will bring them againe & deale fauourably with them, so as they shall feele him to be a mercifull God, and such

20 a one as powreth not out his rigor with extremitie vpon offenders, when he seeth that they be not vtterly past amendment. What is to be done then? First of all, when wee heare this sentence which God gaue in olde time vpon his people: let vs learne to beware that wee abuse not his goodnesse. Let vs goe to him with all humilitie while he allueth vs by gentlenesse, as the Apostle declareth in the Epistle to the Hebrewes. For

He. 12. 18. 22.

25 there he saith that wee be not come to Mount Sinay where there was nothing but flashes of Lightning, and Thundercraks: and where the people were so amazed, as they looked for present death. What remaineth then? Behold (saith he,) God calleth vs by his Gospell, to the intent we should bee fellowes with the Angels, & with the spirits of the faithful, and that we should bee verie Citizens of his kingdome. Seeing it is so (saith he,) let vs enter into the heauenly Ierusalem, for our God is a consuming fire. It should

30 feare me at the first sight that there is some contrarietie in these two sayings. That we should come boldly and after an assured maner to our God: and also that he should be a consuming fire. But both these agree verie well together. For first the Apostle sheweth that wee ought not to be so afraid of the Maiestie of our God, as that wee should shunne him, but rather consider that there is nothing in him but gentlenesse. But yet

35 therewithall wee must knowe also, that wee must worship him vntaindly: or else wee must learne that he can well reuenge himselfe of such as shall haue abused his grace, and of such as shall haue held some of it. Therefore let vs receiue Gods goodnesse when it is offered vs, & that with such reuerence and lowlineſſe, as wee protooke him not to wrath against vs, ne make him to arme himselfe as he doeth against the despisers of his grace.

But nowe let vs come to that which Moses saith here. The Lord thy God, (saith he) will scatter thee among the Heathen, and there thou shalt be fewe in number, and thou shalt serue strange Gods that are made with mans hand. Here Moses setteth Gods curses against all the benefices that he had promised to his people. It was a singular benefice that the people were gathered into one bodie, that they had a land alone by themselves, that they were settled quietly there, and that euerie man had a house of his owne. But here he saith that they shall be driue out of it. The first threat then betokeneth that the people of the Iewes shall be thrust out of the land that God had giuen them. And let vs mark herewithall, that the bringing of the people into that land, was not onely to the intent they should liue at their ease and in rest: but to the intent they should also be sanctified vnto God. The Land of Chanaan was as a mirror of the heauenly life, so that by dwelling there y<sup>e</sup> people were assured that they were the children of God: and therefore this threaten that they should be driuen out among the heathen Nations, was not to be esteemed lightly.

25 Also it is said that there shall be a small number left of them. But we knowe that among other things, God had promised Abraham to multiply his seede as the Starres of the skie, and as the sande of the Sea. It is said here that they shall be fewe in number: yea, and wee see they had bin euen as Sodom and Gomorrhie, so as they had perished euerichone, if God had not vouchsafed to referue some litle seede to himselfe, as is said in the Prophet Ely. Lastly it is said that they shall 30 serue strange goddes which are made with mans hand. This is the grieuousſt punishment of all, that the Iewes which had Gods Lawe, should neuertheless be subiect to uch tyrannie, as to bee faine to worship the idoles of the Heathen, so as they should haue no Religion among them but such as should defile them, and that all their toyling of themselves should bee but to their greater condemnation. Thus wee see in effect what this text comprehendeth. Now remaineth that we apply it to our instruction.

35 First therefore let vs learne to vse well the benefices that God bestoweth vpon vs, and to submit our selues vnto him seeing he sheweth himselfe so friendly and louing towards vs, assuring our selues that he can well take away the things that he hath giuen vs. Nor that wee must be afraid that God will nor continue his goodnesse still towards vs, yea and also increase it if we on our side walke aright, and continue in the possession of y<sup>e</sup> things that he hath put into our hands: but that such as despise God, shall feele that he is not bound to them, nor vnable to pluck y<sup>e</sup> things out of their fistes which he had giuen them. Let vs therefore possesse Gods benefices in feare and carefulnesse. This is the thing in effect, which we haue to gather vpon the said saying of Moses. True it is, that wee haue not nowe a dayes a land of Chanaan, so as Gods Church should be separated into some one countrie, where it pleaseth him to haue his name called vpon : but yet notwithstanding if wee haue a place where wee may serue him vncorruptly, hee graunteth vs a speciall grace, and weought to let great store by it. And if wee know not that: we shall feele that Moses hath not sayd in vaine, that we shall become lyke other nations. How many nations see wee in these dayes, that inioye the lyke benefite as G O D hath bestowed vpon vs? Nay contrariwise, they y haue any tast of the Gospell, doe languishe among the enemies of the faith, and are there as sheepe in the woolues mouth, wandering vp and down as in a wilderness, while in the meane time our God keepeth vs as in his flocke. Seeing then that wee haue such an aduantage: is it not reason that wee should streyne our selues to serue God, and that wee should lue peaceably vnder his hand, seeing hee doth vs the honor to receiue vs, as in deede it is he that governeth vs, and the thing is as apparant as any thing may be? Now then if wee will needes bee ouerlusive, the threate that was vttered in old time against the Iewes will light vpon our heads. And as it is sayde here that they shall bee fewe in number: so although G O D haue gathered a greate sorte of vs together, hee can well enough diminish our number, if wee misbehaue our selues; and in the end, y thing that is most of all to bee feared will come vpon vs, that is to wit, y we shall serue strange Gods. And in deede if we cannot finde in our heartes to beare Gods yoke, but are loth to be subiect vnto him: is it not reason that wee should be vnder a cleane contrarie gouernment, that is to wit, that we should be bereft of the true and pure religion, and be plunged in idolatrie? We heare what hee sayth by his prophet Ezechiel. For hauing blamed y Iewes for their vnthankfulnesse, he addeth y his deliuering of the into y handes of tyrants, is rightfull. I haue giue them (sayth he) a good & holy lawe, yea euen w promis, y if they walked in it, they should finde lyfe and welfare therein: and I cannot tel what I might haue done more for them. What a thing is it, that God doth vs the honor to rule vs, and to take the paine to guide vs all our lyfe long? Againe, seeing he addeth a promise, that his teaching of vs is for our welfare: if we will not yeeld our selues teachable vnto him, but shake off his yoke lyke wood bestes: is it not reason that we should be cast into most vile slauerie, seeing we can not abide such a master as our God, specially sith he desireth not to rule vs otherwise than to our welfare: [yes, and therefore] the creatures, yea and euen the diuell himselfe in the end must reigne ouer vs. For that is the thing which Ezechiel meaneth by the Tyrannie of Babylon.

Gen. 15. 5. &amp; 22. 17.

Esa. 19.

For there (sayth he) they shall haue lawes giuen the for their own toth, and such lawes as they can finde in their heartes to keepe: but they shall not lue by them. When they haue toyled themselves to the vttermost, and payde impostes and tributes to the infidels: yet shall they bee faine to serue their idols too, so as they shall defile and beray themselves with all superstitions. And what shall be their reward? Euerlasting death. That is the payment of all such as cannot finde in their heartes to serue God quietly, and to keepe his law and his word. But to the intent wee may not thinke that this serued but for that one time: Moses sheweth that the lyke should befall to all such as misbehaue themselves and withdrawe themselves from the Church. And this vengeance of God hath bin accomplished vpon the greater parte of the world, as we see all eady. For whence came the hellish confusion of poperie? Euen of gods iust punishment for the rebellousnesse of the world, because men were hardhearted and would not stoop. For when God caued his Gospel to be published: then was the trumpet sounded, to the end that all men both great and small should haue bin brought vnto him. But we see what befall on mens behalf. They would in no wise stoop: they were very loth to doe that. And not that onely, but also some desired God openly when hee would haue brought them to his lue: and other some made countenance of obediece through hypocrasie, but it lasted not: for they were vnconstant and fled touch anon after. Therefore it behoued him to punishe such spitefull wickednesse, and so hee did. Because they would not obey the truth: therefore did lying get the maiestie of them. God gaue Satan the bridle, so as his errors wrought effectually, in besotting such as had wilfully shut their eyes, against the doctrine of saluation when it was offered them. Now then sith we see that God offereth vs great good nowadayes in gathering vs into his flocke, and in giuing vs his worde whereby we haue life and saluation: let vs learne to inioy fo greate a benefite. For God mocketh vs not when hee telleth vs that he is our father and Sauour. Hee taketh not the things with the one hand which he gaue vs with the other. Onely let vs be contented to continue still in the possession of his grace.

But yet besides this, let vs stand in feare of this horrible curse of seruing strange Gods, and of being bereft of the pure religion, for refusing to make our commoditie of the honor and priuledge that God giueth vs in drawing vs to him, and in shewing vs that hee is willing to reigne among vs. And Moses speaketh here exprefly of the vanitie of idols, to the end that the people may bee the better touched therewith. For the wretched Paynims in worshipping a peece of woodde or stone, could not conceiue what an abomination it is to worship a dead thing. But they that knew the luing God, euen the G O D that giueth lyfe to all things, ought better to perceiue that it is against nature, yea and a detestable thing, to worship a puppet, so whether it were made of woodde, or cast of mettall either golde or siluer. For they bee all of them corruptible creatures: and without G O D there is no lyfe, without his power there is no mouing.

So then Moses hath set downe these circumstances, to y end that the people might knowe that

Eze. 20. 11, 13

2. Thef. 2. 18

that they shoulde not be punished lightly, but that in disobeying God and in refusing to keepe themselves holy vnto him: they shoulde defile themselves. And it is good reason that when God hath shed forth his grace vpon vs, wee should bee punished the more grieuouly, if wee cannot profite our selues by it. The more then y eueery of vs hath made proceedings in Gods grace: the more earnest let him bee to loue him and serue him: vnlesse we will haue him on the contrary part, to vse the extreme rigor that is spoken of here.

Howbeit herewithall (as I haue touched already) Moses sheweth that God will not so punish his people as to leaue them in despayre: but that hee intendeth a cleane contrary ende, that is to wit, to bring them to repentance. And surely this is a very notable place. For although God thunder against vs, so as to our seeming we may iudge by all lykelyhood, that he is minded to make cleane riddance of vs without any mercie: yet notwithstanding hee seeketh our saluation by that means, and giueth vs alwayes space of repentance: atleastwise so long as his word is preached vnto vs. For sometimes the gate is shut vp, and we must euer beare in minde how the prophet Elay sayth, Seeke the Lorde while hee may be found. And againe in another place correspondent vnto this, he sayth, I haue heard thee in conuenient time, I haue succored thee in the day of saluation. Herby it is shewed vs, that there is still space of repentance, and the gate is still open for vs to come vnto God, so long as hee giueth vs his worde. But if wee passe not to enter while GOD giueth vs the meane: wee shall bee bereft of his worde, and then may wee well seeke after him, howbeit but as blinde folkes that grope in the darke: for the Lorde will haue shut vs out from him. But here Moses teacheth, that although God seeme vmeasurably sharpe in chastising his children: yet notwithstanding he giueth them space of repentance, and ceaseth not to haue a care of their saluation. For hee sayth, When thou art so chastened, if thou seeke thy God: thou shalt finde him: yea verily, if thou seeke him with all thy heart and with all thy soule. Now, that wee may the better vnderstand the things that are contyned here: let vs note first of all, that when men are once gone away vnto wickednesse, it is very hard to tetch them backe againe, vnlesse they bee subdewed by maine force. And that ment Moses to expresse in saying, Then shalt thou seeke the Lord thy God. When is this shan? not when the people are fulfilled, nor when they haue store of all Gods benefices: for wee shall see in the song, how the people are lykened to ouerpanpered horses, which are lacking and wincing against their masters, and will not suffer themselves to be handled. Moses then meaneth that the people should be faine to bee reformed after a forcible manner: for (as I sayd afore) that is our nature. If wee be once gone astray, GOD shall neuer get vs home againe, till hee haue throughly tamed vs. True it is that hee coulde geue another way to worke, and it is not for that he is vnable to re-clayme vs by his holy spirite, if hee listeth: but hee intendeth to shewe vs what our lewdenesse is, and that is the cause why he vseth these inferior means. This is the first poynt which we haue to marke vpon this place.

And hereunto answereth that which is written in the second of Ofsee: for there our Lorde complyneth of the Iewes, saying that they bee lyke a harlot that hath forsaken her husband, and giuen ouer herselfe to all commers, bearing her selfe in hand that she is best at ease when she may receiue rewarde, and bee catching and snatching on all sides: so that (to her seeming) if shee were an honest wife, she shoulde bee faine to be contented with a litle, whereas now being a stumper, shee catcheth of the deuyntest morsels, and hath store of presences brought her. God therefore sayth that the Iewes were in the same taking, when they were in loue with their idols, and in the meane time fathered all their good things vpon them. What shall I doe now, sayth the Lorde? When yee say, it is our idols that giue vs meate and drinke: ye be vnthankfull vnto mee: for yee haue receiued all these things at my hand. Now therefore I must be faine to bereaue you of them. I will take away the bread and wine wherewith yee haue bin susteyned, and your wool and flaxe & all other thunge. I will bring you out (sayth he) into the wilderness, I will make you to pine away there, yee shall be lyke a wretched harlot, which after she hath played the naughtypacke, and hath runne gadding here and there, and in the ende hath bin driuen to eate her owne dung and filth, is rieckted of all men, and dyeth for hunger and thirst, not hauing wherewith to couer her shame. Thus will I handle you (sayth he) and then shall ye finde that there is nothing better than to sticke to me. Yee shall say, Alas where is my husband that dealt so gently with me? I must be faine to returne to him. By this similitude the prophet doth vs to vnderstand, y when men giue themselves to lewdenes, and doe not serue and honor GOD, after he hath giuen them his worde: they must be reformed by force. And why? For as long as they hue at their ease, they forget themselves, they flatter themselves, they be proude, and thinke they may euen despise God. For when God pincheth vs nor, nor maketh vs to feeble his strong hand: we take occasion thereat to sooth our selues in our vices, so that wee haue neede (as I said afore) to be reformed by Gods striking vpon vs with maine blowes. For if hee dally with vs, it will breede our destruction and decay. And surely there is not a notabler poynt than this: For wee thinke it strange, that God should vse so sundry sortes of rigor in this world: but in the meane while wee consider not the hardnesse of mens heartes. For although Gods curses haue their full scope, so as we see warres on the one side and famine on the other, and euery man cries out alas: yet notwithstanding, who is hee that looketh to the hand that smiteth? Howe many returne to GOD for all that? doth it not rather seeme that sinners haue conspired to resist God still: Nowe seeing it is so, let vs marke that Gods shewing of himselfe so rigorous, is not without cause, and let vs impute it to our owne felues. Then if any of vs bee afflicted alone, or all of vs in common, so as we bee smitten with Gods scourges: let vs vnderstande that wee haue neede of it, and that it serueth to stoppe our mouthes, that we grudge not against God, assuring our felues that his nipping of vs after that fashion is not causelesse. 10

Besides this, let vs also learne to comfort our felues sith wee see the ende that God aymeth at. Forlike as hee sheweth himselfe rough and sharpe: so will he also haue vs to tast of his loue and care towards vs: that is to wit, that forasmuch as we haue forgotten him & turned our backs to him, & not sought to him, but rather induored to flee from him: his intent is to drawe vs to him by that meane, and to induce vs to seeke him againe. Ye see then that the true comfort of wretched sinners when God scourgeth them, is to consider, thus with themselves: yet G O D hath pitie vpon vs: in deede wee remembered not him: but yet for all that, hee hath not forgotten vs, and that doeth hee thus by the effect. Neuertheless, the cheefest [comfort] is in this that Moses addeth, namely, that they shall finde God if they seeke him. For if wee goe to seeke God, being onely in distresse and trouble: can wee haue any courage to come vnto him? True it is that when the wretched vnbelleeuers are distressed, they toyle themselves and doe all that they can to seeke God. We see that euen in the Popedome, when men are in sorowe and haue their sinnes laide afore them, [their saying is,] goe to, let vs see if wee can pacifie God. But as for them, they haue no warrant that God will receiue them, neither trust they to his free promises, neither pray they in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ. They can well speake of repentance: but (to their owne seeming) God should receiue them for their owne worthinesse, and not otherwise. And so wee see they come thither as it were doubting: for it is certaine that such repentance is full of hypocrisie. For why? They be not sure of Gods goodnesse: nay they neuer wist what it meant. But as for vs, let vs put the thing in vre which is sayd in the psalme, Lord, thy mercy is cuer ready in thee. Hereby it is shewed vs that we can neuer returne vnto God, to submit our felues vnto him: vnlesse wee taste his merce, that wee may trust to it and rest vpon it. That is the cause why I tolde you that we must marke the text where Moses sayth, If thou seeke the Lorde thy God, thou shalt finde him. Will wee then be prouoked to repentance when we haue sinned? Let vs hearken to the promises that G O D hath giuen vs. For there hee assurcth vs that as soone as wee open our mouth to pray, he will stretch out his hand to succour vs at our neede: yea and that he will preuent vs, so as wee neede not distrust him that hee will not receiue vs to mercy, seeing we haue such a warrant. 20

Psal. 86. 5.

Psal. 32. 5. &
50. 15. and
145. 19.
Esa. 65. 23.

Howbeit forasmuch as men would alwayes pacify God with countenances and ceremonies: Moses addeth purposely, that wee must seeke him with heart and with soule. I sayd that men are cuer desirous to content God with trifling thinges: and wee see it too much. For when they speake of repentance or penance in poperie: what meane they by that worde, but that men must vse much li labour, and make a sorte of Apes toys? But the heart must abide stil locked vp, and men must in no wise rid themselves of their wicked affections, nor cleanse them away. They will alwayes keepe a backe shop behinde, and in the meane season if they shewe some good outward signe, they thinke it is enough, and that God ought not to presse them any further. They be dubble hearted: and therefore they would haue God to receiue but the one halfe of that which he requireth: and the other halfe they would pay him as it were in way of raunfome. But as for vs, let vs on our side learne to vnderstand, that to finde him, and to be receiued of him, we must seeke him with all our heart, and with all our soule. Not that wee can come vnto him with such perfection as were to bee wished: but yet must wee haue this foundnesse with vs, that wee seeke no lurkingholes, but rather examine our sinnes throughly, and when wee haue condemned them, seeke the remedie with sighing and groning, that it may please our God to reclayme vs to him, so as wee condemning our owne sinnes, may desire nothing so much as to be reformed according to his righteoufnesse. Thus ye see what it is to seeke God with all our heart and with all our soule. And when wee go so to worke, let vs not thinke that wee shall bee disappointed of the promise which hee made to the fathers of olde time. And so ye see that the thing which we haue to marke vpon this place is that forasmuch as wee come not to God of our owne good wil, we are faine to be driuen to it by force, and that is the cause of the afflictions that God sendeth vs. 30

Furthermore we must also consider his fatherly goodnes in striking vs: for he doth it to bring vs home againe to him by that meane. And how come we thither? It would behoue vs to be stripped starke naked out of all self trust, and to be vterly cast downe in our felues: but wee cannot away with y, because our nature driueth vs y clean contrary way. But yet foral y, wee see we haue wherwith to comfort vs in our afflictions, For our

Lorde seeketh not our destruction, but bringeth vs home againe to himselfe: and y not doubtfully: but assuredly warranting vs that if wee come vnto him, it shall not be in vaine, neither shall we be disappointed. Why? For if wee seeke him, wee shall finde him. But therewithall let vs looke well to it, that there be no feining nor dubblenesse in vs: for God cannot away with such hypocrisie. 1. Pet. 4. 12. Ezech. 18. 23

And now it is immediately sayd, When these aduersities are come vpon you, ye shall reuise to your G O D and obey his voyce. And because the Lorde is mercifull, hee will not forget you nor caste you out of his presence, nor out of the covenants of

of your fathers. This serueth to expresse yet better the doctrine which I touched where Moses saide, When these miseries are come upon you, then shall you seeke your God. For he sheweth that men ply the drunken folke so long as God dealeth gently with them: and that they cannot perceive their finnes, except they be made to smart. When these miseries haue caught hold of you, shal hee (saith he) &c. By the miseries y<sup>e</sup> he speaketh of, he meaneth the punishments wherewith he had threatened the people before. To be stout, God must be faine to shew vs his wrath to our faces, and to make vs to feele it: or else we conceiue it not. And we see it is so. For when we be daily told of Gods wrath, we make but a sport of it, it moues vs not a whit. And why? Because wee be earthly and fleshly, and therefore God is faine to make vs feele his wrath and vengeance according to our rudenesse. Yet notwithstanding we be still nice and tender, inso much that if wee feele any thing amisse in our bodies, and that we haue not our owne desires: we be by and by vexed & greeued, and by that meanes God amendeth vs. Not that we be humbled at y<sup>e</sup> first stripe: but we come to it by litle and litle and as it were by degrees, so as in the end God maketh his corrections attainable. And whereas I say that God bringeth vs home to him by the chastisements that hee sendeth vs: that is not generall to all men. We see that the vnbelieuers become the frowarder, inso much that when God chastiseth them for their finnes, they storme against him, they gnash their teeth, and in the end they fall to despair. But this saying concerneth those that are rightly of Gods Church: those when they be chastised are willing to returne to God in their aduersities. Thus ye see what Moses meant to expresse in saying, When these miseries shal haue caught hold of thee. As if he had said, so long as your God suffereth you to lue in rest, so long as hee setteth not your finnes before you, so long as he calleth you not to a reckoning: you thinke your selues out of daunger, and that no man can hurt you, and (which worse is) your faults neuer come to your remembraunces. But if yee be once pinched with aduersitie, then will yee cling to your God. Hereby we be warned againe, to beare the corrections patiently which God sendeth vs: for they doe vs good: whereas prosperitie blindeth vs and breedeth our destruction. True it is y<sup>e</sup> gods gentle handling of vs, ought not to cause vs to despise him nor to neglect him. Whē God sheweth himselfe louing towards vs, surely wee ought to be the more inclined thereby to loue him. But what? Our dragging cleane backward, bewrayeth that prosperitie is not good for vs. And therefore our Lorde must be faine to scourge vs. Wherefore lets learne not to be grieued out of measure when God beateth vs with his roddes: but to beare his stripes meeke-ly, forasmuch as we see that the ende thereof is our welfare according as it is sayd here, when thou art pinched with aduersitie. Yea and if our Lord hauing smitten vs after one sorte doe double his stripes: let vs not murmur against him as we be inclined to doe. For [some times] hey that haue bin patient in some one aduersitie, fall to storming and chafing against God whē it commeth to the second or the third. But wee must not doe so. For on the contrarie part, we see our Lorde withdraweth not his hand at the first as soone as he hath chastised vs once: and wee abide by it still. In deede when wee feele any aduersitie, we will set a good face vpon it at the first, and say, very well, seeing that God chastiseth mee, I must returne vnto him. But let him turne his had on the other side: and we fall to fretting and chafing by and by. Therefore we must be chastised throughly: that is to say, God must let vs alone in distresse, & aduersitie must so ouermaister vs, as we may be throughly tamed, & it may so stick by our ribs, that when he shall haue withdrawn his hand, we may remember it al our lyfe after. Then let vs learne that wee must be patient in our aduersities, not onely for a day or twayne, or for some affection: but so as we holde out quietly vnder the hand of our God, euen when he doubleth and increaseth his stripes. That is the effect of the thing which hee haue to marke.

Now when Moses sayth, The Lord thy God is mercifull, and therefore hee will not forsake thee nor cast thee off: he bringeth back the people to the nature of God that they might hope to be receiued to mercie, if they repented them of their finnes. And it is another very notable poynt. In deede I haue touched it heretofore: neuertheless, Moses maketh a larger declaratiō thereof, and not without cause. For lyke as hee had earst sayde that GOD is a fire which consumeth all things: so it behoued him to shewe on the contrarie part, that Gods nature is louing and gentle, and that he is ready to forgiue the faultes of such as acknowledge them. And that also is the cause why God telleth vs so often of his mercie. But whatsoeuer hee sayd to vs concerning his goodnesse: yet can we not trust in him as we ought to doe. There is not any thing harder to vs than to assure our selues of the goodnesse and fatherly loue of our God. It is a great thing, that whē God shal haue auowed a hundred thousand times, y<sup>e</sup> he loueth vs & wil be fauorable to vs: yet we continue still in a waunting, and stand disputing vpon the matter, & feede our owne distrustfulnesse, as though we would needes disable the record y<sup>e</sup> God giueth vs of his goodnesse. Now then, it is not more than needeth, when Moses telleth vs that God of his owne nature is pitifull. It is a propertie y<sup>e</sup> is euermore attributed vnto him, and that not onely in this text, but also in other places as we shal see hereafter: and the Scripture is full of the same doctrine. And why? Because that else it were not possible to assure men, forasmuch as they be so giuen to vnbeliefe, as they still martyr themselves, and are alwayes in perplexitie and vquietnesse, bearing themselves in hand that God wil neuer be at one wth them. True it is y<sup>e</sup> (as I haue sayd already) we be but too hardy in doing euill: but whē we should assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> God wil haue pittie vpon vs, & when we should seeke him: then doth our vnbeliefe bewray it selfe. Not without cause therefore doth Moses say here y<sup>e</sup> God is merciful,

Deut. 5. 10.

Psa. 145. 8. 9.

full, to the end that the people might conceiue Gods nature and take holde of it, which is altogether contrarie to their owne, as God himselfe auoweth in other places. My thoughtes (sayth hee by his prophet Esay) are not lyke yours. For if a man be offended, although the wrong that is done him bee but small: yet is there no meanes to pacify him, there will alwayes remaine some roote of displeasure in his heart. Now we imagine God to be lyke our selues, & we measure him by our owne yard. For this cause hee protesteth thus: looke how farre heauen is from the earth, so farre are my thoughtes from yours. And therefore assure your selues I seeke nothing else but that all such as haue offended mee should be at one with me. Yea & although your misdeedes be neuer so greuous & heinous: Yet so it is y I am ready to forget them out of hand. So then let vs hearken to y textes of holy scripture, where God telleth vs that he is slowe to wrath, patient, and ready to forgieue the faultes that are committed against him. Let vs beare this in minde, that it may be as a foundation for vs to builde vpon, when the case concerneth the forsaking of our sins, that we should be sorie for them, and obtaine the mercie that God hath promised vs. This much concerning that poynt.

But it were not enough for vs to knowe Gods nature, except wee had his promise, and that hee shewed vs his will there. For the Papistes, the Turkes, and the Pagnims alio can well enough say (as they haue alwayes sayde) that God is mercifull: but they cannot seeke it to taste thereof. And the reason is, because they doe not sticke and leane to his promises. True it is that when they haue once imagined that God is mercifull, they enter into many questions. Yea but in deede (say they:) what wote I, whether this mercie serue for mee or no? And afterward they put Gods mercy into the ballance with their sinnes, and stand as folke dismayed at it. Then is there a certaine confused imagination of Gods mercy in all men: but yet can they not trust to it, neither can they returne vnto God, with full persuasion that hee will reach them his hand to succor them. And why? for they haue not his promises. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand, to marke well this text of Moses when hee addeth: The Lorde thy God will not forget the couenant of thy fathers which hee swaure to them. And so besides y knowledge which wee haue that God is mercifull, and will receiue sinners when they come vnto him: let vs marke well that it becometh vs also to haue his promises to rest vpon, so as our comming vnto him may be because hee calleth and allureth vs, because hee hath shewed vs his will, because wee neede not feare that wee shall loose our labor. And why? for wee haue a warrant that GOD will heare vs. But Moses sayth expressly here, the couenants of thy fathers which hee hath sworne vnto. And why [hath hee sworne vnto it?] Because it is not enough for vs to knowe that God hath promised to receiue wretched sinners & to pardon them: except wee knowe also that his promises are directed specially vnto vs, and can apply them to our vse.

True it is that his promises stand not vpon mens doings, neither is it in euery mans power to warrant himselfe that God will shewe him fauour. For doe wee thinke him bound to vs? Vpon what assurance shall I conceiue in my head, that God wil accept me? That were a duellish presumption. God then must be fauie to preuent vs: hee must be fauie to promise vs of his owne free goodnesse, y although we be wretched & miserable: yet neuertheless hee will haue prtie vpon vs. So then, if we wil obtayne forgiveness of our sinnes: we must begin at gods promises.

But it is not for naught that Moses sayth, the couenants of thy fathers. That is to say, the couenant that was made with thy fathers, which is as their peculiar inheritance. Now then we see how Moses meaning is, that to come vnto God, wee must not onely consider that hee hath promised to be mercifull to sinners: but also euery of vs must apply it peculiarly to himselfe, so as he can say, in deede I am a wretched creature, I am plunged in cursednesse, there is nothing but despaire for mee. No verily, if thy God should not thewe thee mercie. As how? It is to thee that hee speaketh when hee sayth, Come vnto mee all ye that are weary and overladen, and I will refresh the you. Thou art of that number. Nowe then assure thy selfe that thy GOD giueth thee his promises, to the intent that thou resting vpon them, mightest be sure of his goodnesse, that it cannot faile thee. Wherefore let vs not doubt but that the promises which God hath made to his Church are ours, & that euery of vs ought to apply them particularly to his owne vse and benefite, so as when any man is in perplexitie, that hee woteth not what to say, hee must alwayes come backe to this poynt, how now? hath not thy GOD promised that hee will pitie such as call vpon him: Yes in deede: but I knowe not whether I be of that sort or no. Why? haue I not bin baptized in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ: Haue I not his holy Supper as a second pledge, whereby hee sheweth mee that hee receiue me into the number of his children? Be thou out of doubt therefore seeing thou hast so many records, that thy God will be fauorable to thee, and feare thou not but hee will shewe thee mercie. Thus see the cause why Moses speaketh here expressly of the couenant of the fathers, as it was made with their father Abraham, and to all his seede after him: For otherwise it woulde not haue booted at all in the time of Moses. But forasmuch as GOD had sayd, I will be thy GOD to a thousand generations: his offspring is comprehended in it after his decease. And therefore the Iewes ought to haue assured themselves by the vertue of the same couenant, that they should be receiued: so as if they repented the of their sinnes, they should alwayes finde the mercie that they had neede of.

And now let vs vnderstand, that seeing GOD vouchsafed to extend his goodnesse to the children of those with whome he had made his couenant: and that although they were sidden backe and vtterly turned away from him, and had quite forsaken him, yet notwithstanding he ceased not to shew them mercie. Now seeing he speaketh nowadays vnto vs, and the voyce of our Lorde Iesus Christ foundeth lowde in calling vs, to reconcile vs to our God, and that the forgiuenesse of finnes is preached vnto vs in his name, and tidings is brought vnto vs that God desireth to be friendes with vs, and that all warre should be layd aside betwene him and vs: let vs assure our selues I say, that it is not for vs to bee willfull and stubborne, but that it behooueth vs to submit our selues to our God: and therewithall to assure our selues throughly, that this promise of his is not deceitfull. Why? for the couenant is ours, so as our God intendeth not that his promises shall vanish into the aire, but that they shall bee stedfast towards vs, so as euery of vs may fare the better by them. Thus much concerning this saying of the couenants of the fathers.

But yet herewithall Moses saileth not to shew, that it was not men that did first make the couenant with God, but that God did preuent them: and that it is hee, that of his owne free goodnesse hath bound himselfe vnto them. And for that cause it is sayd that God swaure to that couenants: and both of them are right necessarie. For as I haue told you, if wee take not Gods promises as peculiar to our selues, it is vnpossible for vs to be so grounded vpon them, as to call vpon him with a stedfast heart, but wee shall bee euer wauering. Therefore wee must be fully persuaded, that God maketh vs partakers of all the benefites that hee promised to our auncesters. And when wee be once at that poynnt, we must also consider on the other side, that it is not for vs to be on the forehead with God, neither doth our Lorde tarie till wee come to seeke him: but it is he y<sup>e</sup> hath preuented vs wth his mercie. To be short, it is he y<sup>e</sup> hath vouchsafed to take vs for his children: and although we were straungers vnto him, & had not in any wife deserued to haue any acquaintance with him: yet notwithstanding he hath vouchsafed of his owne accord to lincke himselfe with vs. It behooueth vs to thinke so. For if wee knowe not that Gods promises are of free gift: wee will fall to seeking of some deserue and worthinesse in our selues, and wee will say, that was the meane whereby to come vnto God: he bestowed such a benefite or gracious gift vpon vs, because wee deserued it: wee haue gotten such a thing by the meanes of our own vertues. Let vs beware of such fantasticall imaginations, and let vs not thinke to doe our selues any good y<sup>e</sup> way. So then let vs beare in mind, that whereas God hath declared his couenant vnto vs, & calleth it ours: yet notwithstanding he will haue vs to know, y<sup>e</sup> his vouchsafing to tye himselfe vnto vs, & to giue himselfe vnto vs, is of his owne accord without being bound thereto, insomuch that wee did rather deserue to be vtterly reiecte at his hand. And Moses thinketh it not enough to say singly that God made the sayd couenant: but hee addeth also that hee swaure it: and not without cause doth he set that further here. For as I haue declared already heretofore, when

G O D speaketh, wee inquire whether the thing be so or no. Truly such manner of inquiring is very wicked. But what for that? Our vnbeleefe beareth such way with vs, as we cannot simply trust vnto G O D. Therefore doth he supply our want, and sweareth to warrant his worde the better which hee hath giuen vs. If wee beleeuue not a man vpon his bare worde, wee doe him wrong. And therefore are mortall men put to their othe, because they be inclined ouermuch to vanitie. But when God sweareth at our request, what a thing is that? For seeing he is the vnchangeable truth: why should not men trust him as soone as the worde is spoken with his mouth? But hereby we see how frowarde wee bee, and on the other side we see also how God beareth with vs in humbling himselfe so farre as to sweare for our sakes, because hee seeth that wee would else be alway vnquiet, and that we should still be tempted to doubt. Therefore vouchsafeth hee to confirme vs by sweating, to the intent wee might bee the better assured of the hope of our saluation, and not doubt any more of his promises. Thus much concerning Gods swearing.

Now againe Moses sheweth after what manner men ought to seeke G O D: and hee sheweth it by deede. Hee had sayd afore that such as seeke God: with all their heart and with all their soule, shall find him. And now he sheweth by what meanes men shall yeelde good proofe thereof, that is to wit of their true and vnfeined repentance: that is to wit, by obeying the voyce of God. For men will make bragges enow that they beare a good heart to Godward: and we see dayly this shamelesnesse, that such as haue not one veine that tendeth to Godward, cease not for all that to protest with full mouth, that they loue God, and they beare the worlde in hand that they bee wonderful zealous. But here Moses bringeth vs backe to the tryall. Wee must shewe whereby, (sayth hee,) so as it may appeare by our fruites that our finnes mislyke vs in deede, and that wee be desirous in very deede to seeke God, to sticke vnto him. And howe may that be done? Euen by obeying his voyce, according as wee knowe also that obedience is the thing which God preferreth before all other sacrifices. And that is a thing worthy to be wel marked. For Moses here setteth out two things: The one is, that when men bragge of their willingness to seeke God, if they shewe it not in good earnest by their whole lyle, so as it may be knowne by their fruites: a men may well tell them that they lye, and that they doe but mocke with G O D and the worlde when they say, wee bee sorie for our finnes. That is the thing which wee haue to marke for one poynnt. Therefore lets vs try our repentance by the said rule. When wee seeme to our selues to seeke God: let vs looke that it bee with liuely repentance, not in teete, hands, or eyes: but in y<sup>e</sup> reformation of all our affectiōs, so as they may be giuen ouer all wholly to follow God & his worde. If it be not so with vs: all y<sup>e</sup> euet we can say of repentance, is but mockery. Marke that for one poynnt.

1. Sa. 15. 22.
Psal. 50. 5. 14

The other is the obeying of Gods voyce . When as hee speaketh of the obeying of Gods voyce : it is to exclude all the fond deuotions of mans owne inuention . For when men intend to serue God well , how goe they to worke ? Mee thinkes (say they) that such a thing is good : and thereupon they set vp goodly gay seruices . Moses therefore excludeth all these things , in saying that we must obey the voyce of our God . Wherefore let vs see that we submit our selues vnto him . Because wee see the world is so greatly giuen to inuent fond deuotions : let vs for our part learne to know , that whatsoeuer is of mans deuising , is playne deceit , and euen the high way to leade vs to destruction : and that the onely way to please God and to make our lyfe allowable before him , is simply to obey his worde , & to submit our selues to him , whē he prouoketh vs to repentance , assuring our selues that it is the very meanes also whereby we may obtayne saluation , though wee haue deserued to perishe a hundred thousand times .

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our sins , praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done heretofore , yea euen in such wise , as hauing condemned our selues for them , wee may not forbear to rest vpon his promises , and to resorte vnto him , and to pray vnto him , that hee may haue pitie vpon vs , as hee that desireth not the death of sinners , but that they should come home againe to him , for as much as hee is ready to admit them to the saluation which hee hath promised to his children . Wherefore let vs repayre vnto him , euen in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ , and if wee conuert not at the very first as soone as hee chastiseth vs , let vs pray him to make vs to proceede in true repentance from day to day , by forsaking the vice that is in vs , so as he may governe vs by his holy spirit , and the world may perceiue that Gods word hath such autoritie ouer vs , as we desire nothing but to fashion our selues all wholly thereafter . That it may please him to grant this grace , not onlie to vs , but also to all people and nations of the earth , &c .

On Tewsdai the iiii. of Iune. 1555.

32 For inquire thou nowe of the daies past , which haue bene before thee , since the day that God created man vpon the earth , and from the one end of heauen vnto the other , if euer there were done so great a thing as this , or if euer the like thing haue bene heard of .

33 Was there euer anie Nation that hath heard the voyce of God speaking out of the middes of fire , as thou hast heard and yet continuest aliue ?

34 Or was there euer anie God , that assaied to goe and take him a people from the middes of another people , by temptations , signes , and wonders , by warres and strong hand , by stretched out arme and great terriblenesse , as the Lord your God hath done in Egypt before your eies ?

35 He hath made thee to see them , to the intent thou shouldest knowe that the Lord is God , and that there is none other but onlie he .

Although that all the things that euer God did , ought to serue for our learning , & wee knowe not any thing but by auncient stories : yet the later that things were done , so much the better ought they to touch vs . And although wee ought to profite our selues by Gods workes when wee beholde them a farre off yet ought they to moue vs much more , when they touch our selues and concerne our owne persons . If a thing be tolde vs , which wee neuer sawe : yet ought the storie to serue to waken vs . But if wee be able to beare witness of our selues , so as our eyes haue seene it , and wee haue not had it by other mens report , but euery of vs is able to auowe it by his owne experience : ought wee not to bee much better and much more assuredly taught by it ?

In like case is it when any of vs shall haue seene or perceiued any worke of God : for he ought to be touched so much the more to the quick . In the selfesame respect doth Moses now speake vnto the people , Looke about thee , inquire of the auncient tymes . see whether thou canst finde that euer there haue bin any such wonders wrought since the creation of the world , as God hath done in thy sight . Seeing it is so , thine vnthankfulnesse shall be the more vnexcusable , if thou acknowledge not so great a benefite , by perswading thy selfe fully , that there is none other God than the same that hath vttered himselfe to thee , & hath giuen thee so euident and infallible tokens of his maiestie . Therefore haue a regard to serue the God that hath purchased thee : for thou canst not henceforth alledge any cause of ignorance . Now by the way we haue to marke , the intent of Moses is , to put a difference here betwene the God of Israel , & all those that were worshipped [for Gods] in the world: and not without cause. For when men haue forged any God to themselues, they may well toyle themselves to serue him, but it shall turne to their condemnation. Why so? Because they rob God of the honor that belongs to him, to giue it to a creature, or rather to a shadow. For if wee make idols, they bee not worthy to bee reckoned among Gods creatures. If wee imagine of God after our owne lyking: it is but vanitie and leasing. So then, when men worship the thing that they haue conceiued in their own fantasie: they contuay the glory of y<sup>e</sup> liuing God, not only to creatures, but also to that which is nothing at all. Therefore it is very expedient for vs to knowe which is the true God, that wee may worship him. For euen at that time the world was peruerted, so as al men went wāding in their owne superstitions. Although God manifested himselfe so many wayes: yet notwithstanding, lyke as the world was blinde and ceased not to intangle it selfe in all errors: so euery man forged idols to himselfe. True it is, that all men sayd, wee haue a religion, and our intent is to serue God: but yet for all that, there was no soundnesse, there was no vnderstanding among them. Behold, God gathered his people together, accordingly as he had choosē y<sup>e</sup> house of Abraham, and according to his saying y<sup>e</sup> same should be to him a holy lineage and dedicated to his seruice. Seeing then that the Iewes were not mingled with the other nations of the earth: they should haue considered that they ought not to haue had any fellowship with the vnbelieuers, so as their religion should haue bene intangled and doubtfull: but that being sanctified to the maker of heauen and earth, they should haue worshipped him purely, and submitted themselues vnder his obeyance. Now then wee haue here the counsell of Moses, or rather the counsell which y<sup>e</sup> holy Ghost intended to utter in speaking here by his mouth. And (as I haue told you) that this doctrine is very profitable, so ought wee to be the more heedfull in marking it. For naturallie wee be inclined to goe astray. In somuch that although wee had no occasions before our eyes: yet would euerie of vs deceiue and beguile himselfe. And againe, the diuell ceaseles not to offer vs many illusions, to dazle our wittes withall, and to make vs swarue from the right and pure religion. Seeing then that there is such vice in vs, and that wee be hemmed in on all sides with so many daungers: let vs learn to make our profit by his doctrine.

True it is that the thing cannot bee sayd to vs nowadays, which Moyses telleth the people of Israel here: for Gods shewing of himselfe to vs, or his stretching out of his arme to deliuer vs, hath not bin of any late continuance of time, as was his speaking to that people from the midst of the fire: but yet neuertheless the same exhortation belongeth vnto vs also. And why? For Gods choosing of the people of Israel to himselfe, and his declaring of his wonderfull power for the recouerie of them, was not to the end that they should knowe him and worship him as the true God, by the space of a hundred yeeres onely: but to the intent that the remembrance of the same redemption should continue to the worlds end. Then let vs marke well that Gods deliuering of the children of Abraham from the bondage of Egypt, was to the end that wee also in these dayes should take him for our true GOD which hath all power in his hand, which disposeth of his creatures, and which created the worlde and gouerneth it. Sith it is so, although our eyes haue not seene the miracles that are rehearsed here: yet ought wee to make our profite of them, and to be edified by them, so as wee may bee sure that wee haue not an vncertaine GOD, nor a religion forged at aladuenture, or at the pleasure of men: but that it is the very true GOD, who hath giuen so good prooffe of his power at once already, as wee haue no cause to doubt of him, or to think whether hee ought to haue superioritie and preheminnence or no. For hee hath shewed that all the world is his, and that all that euer was worshipped at that time in the world, was but idols. Thus yee see how this text is to be taken that wee may apply it to our owne profite. For it is not enough for vs to knowe what Moyses ment in speaking to the people of Israel: but we must vnderstand lykewise, whereto the same doctrine serueth vs at this day, so as we may receiue instruction by it.

Now before wee passe any further, let vs marke the wordes that are set downe here. Inquire (sayth Moyses) of the dayes of olde time, since God created man vpon the earth. Here hee sheweth vs that our negligence is partly the cause that wee knowe not God. True it is that wee cannot attayne to his high maiestie by our owne wit: for our sight is too short. Nay (which more is) not onely Gods highnesse is incomprehensible to vs: but also when we think to come neere him, it ouerwhelmeth vs. We be blind wretches that haue nothing but darkenesse in vs: and God in respect of himselfe dwelleth in vnapproachable lyght. But yet for all that, if it bee well and thoroughly considered and looked to: it will appere that men make none account of seeking GOD, but forslowe it as a thing of no profite. So then let vs marke the exhortation that is made here, that at leastwise when God worketh, wee may apply all our wittes earnestly to consider it, and that if there be the lyke inducour in vs as we make reckoning of, wee may preferre that before all other things. For what a thing is it if wee knowe not him that made vs and fashioned vs, and by whose power we haue our being still? When wee shall haue raunged about heauen and earth, and yet know not Gods must wee not needes bee wretched? Now then let vs learne to bee more diligent to know God and religion than wee haue bin. And this stretcheth very farre. For we see how we be sharpe-sighted and forecasting in worldly things, and we spare no paines in y<sup>e</sup> behalfe. If y<sup>e</sup> case concerne our own commodity or profite: we neede no great calling on, for nature leadeth vs thereunto.

But when wee should go to Godward, and seeke his will: then wee haue no leasure, cuerie of vs findeth an excuse, wee bee letted about other things. And is not this a token of great naughtinesse? So much the more therefore ought wee to come backe to that which is tolde vs here: namely that wee bee so farre of from being excused now adayes: that if wee bee negligent and seeke not after God, nor inquire how things goe, nor what God hath done, nor what he teacheth in his Church: wee shall bee condemned by this text. For it is said, Inquire of the dayes of olde time, since God created the world. True it is that all can not bee so great Clerkes as to knowe all things that were requisite: but yet ought wee not to sleepe in that behalfe, as though the knowing of God were a thing of no value. Therefore let vs learne to place it in highest degree, so as all the rest of our cares and businesse may bee put vnder it as inferiour to it, as good reason would that they should be. Now Moses saith expressly, since God created man vpon the earth, because that that people had bin taught concerning the creation of the world. But that was not knowne eueriwhere: insomuch that when those which tooke themselves to bee verie wise, were demanded how long it was agoe since the worlde was created: some woulde make it six times as long agoe, and other some thirtie times. Wherein it appeareth how God punished their shametull negligence. And whereof came it that men knew not when the world was created: but that they were contented to shut their eyes, and to knowe nothing that had bene done: Wherefore seeing that men do wilfully shun instruction: it is good reason that God should giue them ouer to such beastlinesse, as they should not knowe from whence they came, nor what their original was, but bee vtterly dulle. And for the same cause Moses speaking to the people whom God had referred to himselfe, did put them in remembrance of the day wherein man was created vpon the earth.

Nowe he saith, Inquire from the one end of heauen to the other, so wis if ever there were so great a thing, or if euer man heard of the life. After he hath spoken of the time, nowe he speaketh of the places. As if he should say, If folke will make good inquisition, it is not ynough for them to knowe what things God hath shewed to themselves: but it were meete for them to seeke about euery where, and to marke well what they finde, and to call to minde the things that haue bene done in farre Countries. Therefore consider well (saith he) what hath bin doné from the one end of the heauen to the other. And this is it that I sayde afore, namely that wee must profit our selues by all Gods workes, and although we behold them not with our eyes, yet if wee doe but heare of them, and tidings is brought vs of them from a farre, wee must honour God in them. In deede if wee bee witnesses of them, they ought to touche vs so much the more. But yet howfoeuer the case stande, wee ought to doe our indeuour to knowe the things that haue bin done in strange Countries, according as is said here. And when as Moses saith, so great a thing: thereby he sheweth that the more that God manifesteth his power: the more ought wee to be rauished with wonderment. In deede there is no worke of God so small, which ought not to moue vs to acknowledge some token of his Maiestie therein. If wee doe but looke vpon a flie: surely wee haue there wherefore to magnifie God. If wee see but the slip of an herb, or any other thing bee it neuer so litle: wee haue therein whereby wee ought to acknowledge the wonderfull workmanship of God. But if he doe more ouer worke much more euident myracles, ought not all our wittes to be much more occupied or spent about them? Whē God doeth after a sort alter the order of nature, and worketh after a new and vnaccustomed manner: is it not all one as if he should rebuke vs for our negligence and say vnto vs: Seeing you knewe mee not for God by the accustomed order of nature, at leastwise thinke vpon mee now when I goe to worke after another straunge fashion, and consider ye whether I bee God or no. Thus ye see what Moses meant by saying, There was neuer yet so great a thing, neither was there euer the like heard of. Let vs marke well therefore that to attaine to the right knowledge of God, when wee haue rauaged vp and downe through the whole world, and spent all our wittes in looking vpon al things whether they be great or small: if God giue vs any such inclings of his Maiestie as may moue vs more than ordinarie, we must be wholly rauished thereat, and yeild him the honour that is due vnto him. And how that ought to be done, it shall be declared more plainly anon: for as nowe I doe but goe through the wordes of Moses severally as they lie.

He saith afterward, Was there euer any people that heard the voyce of their God speaking out of the middes of fire, as thou hast done, and yet continued alive? Here among other things Moses alledgeth y<sup>e</sup> God had spoken to his people out of the mids of fire. For it was a visible signe of Gods Maiestie, so as it was not for them to doubt any more whether he were y<sup>e</sup> liuing God, seeing they heard his voyce thundering from heauen, and therewithall sawe a great thicke cloud and a flaming fire. Nowe seeing that this appeared to them: was it for them to inquire any more whether it were God or no? No verily: for the thing was most euident. And furthermore, here Moses vpbraideth the people couertly with their leauidnesse, if they continue slowe still in doing homage to the liuing God, seeing that all the heathen were inclined yea and wilfully wedded to their superstitions, and yet knewe no cause why. For had the Heathen men bene asked by what wanton they worshipped their idoles: they would haue answered, by reason of their myracles. Yea, but what maner of miracles were they? fantastically imaginations, diuellsish illusions, and inchantments. But beholde, Moses speaketh here of a thing that was knowne: the hearers of it were present to beare witness of it. For he saith, ye heard the voyce of your God from out of the middes of fire. Seeing that your GOD hath shewed himselfe to you so familiarly: there remains no excuse for you, if you worship him not as your G O D. Either ye must forsake him through wilfull rebellion, or else ye must needs graunt that there is neither power, Maieftic, nor glorie in the whole worlde, other than that which was shewed vnto you, when the lawe was giuen you.

But let vs marke by the way, that Moses matcheth here the worde with the myracles. For the myracles had booted them nothing at all, if doctrine had not bene matched therewith, as hath bene touched heretofore. But yet is it good for vs to bee put in minde of it againe, and it is not for nought also that the holy Ghost repeateth it in this text: and wee shall see it mentioned yet againe hereafter. If the people of Israel had but onely had some visions, to doe them to vnderstand which was the liuing God that had brought them out of the lande of Egypt, and in the meane whyle had bene let alone in their ignorance, so as they had had no lawe, no rule, no promise of saluation, no instruction of Religion: all the rest had bene to no purpose. It is true that they might haue liued, being once deliuered from bondage: but what had the end of it bene? They had become but a barbarous people, and they had corrupted themselves with superstitions as the Gentiles did. But when as God, (after his declaring of himselfe vnto them, and after his shewing of his Maieftie vnto them as it were in a myrtour or rather a luely picture) did also reache them and giue them a sure Lawe: he ledde them into a Religion that was sacred and holy, And so yee see that God gaue them such an euidence as was fitte for their saluation.

Now remaineth how Moses addeth, That the people hauing heard Gods voyce, continued still aliue. Whereby he doeth vs to vnderstande: that it is a speciall grace of God that wee bee not consumed by his presence and by his worde. It is saide that the mountaines melt at the sight of him. And againe, that if he doe but cast his eye vpon the whole earth, it quaketh. For Gods Maieftie in it selfe is so terrible, as it were ynough to sink the whole worlde. When he speaketh, his voyce doeth not onely feare all creatures, but also vtterly dismay them, yea and euen bring them to nothing. Therefore it is a great myracle, that mortall men being so frayle and bricke, and being no better than a shadowe: are inabled to heare Gods voyce, and yet are not consumed thereby. So then, Moses sheweth here, y God did not onely make the people of Israel to perceiue his Maieftie & heauenly power: but also gaue the a louing taste of his grace and goodnesse therewithal, to the intent they should not be too much dismayed at it, but rather haue their wits at libertie and well seled to acknowledge, Beholde, my God hath shewed himself to mee, & therefore it is good reason y I should serue him and submit my self wholly vnto him. Thus in effect wee see two things: whereof the one is that God shewed not himselfe to his people without teaching the by his word: & the other is, y the same word was not only so warranted as they might know it to be the word of God, and submit themselves vnto it: but also was made sweete & amiable so farre forth as was requisite. The people could not but bee partly afraid (as I haue declared already) when they perceiued the Maieftie of God: but yet howsoeuer they feared, God did so moderate his rigour, as they perceiued him to be their father in that he shewed them such reason.

Moses addeth immediately, Was there euer any God that tooke vpon him to bring a people from among other people, by temptations, signes, wonders, warres, and a sresched out arme, as shon knowest that thy God hath done in bringing thee out of Egypt? Here Moses purposeth expressly to confirme the people in the Religion that had bin giuen them, to the intent they should not yeeld themselves to any of the great number of superstitions that raigned euerywhere at the same time, as wee bee commonly wont to doe. Truly if a people haue auncient customes, they bee loth to forget them. And why? Bicause pride maketh vs to like well of the things that growe in our owne gardine, (as they say) and to our seeming, all that euer other men haue is nothing in comparison of that [which is our owne.] But if God call vs to him, and teach vs faithfully what we haue to doe: we be so wildd headed as we cannot abide the things that are shewed vs. We fall to seeking of this & that: behold (say we,) in such a Countrie there is such a custome & such a fashion: & why should not wee haue the same as well as they? Also wee see howe the vnbeleeuers vpbraide Gods children that they will needes bee too wise, if they hold themselves in awe vnder Gods word. What is it that the Papists do cast vs in the teeth withall now adayes? These are the men (say they) which take vpon them to renew the world, they will needes be singular by themselves, as though they had nothing at all to doe with the rest of mankind. For this cause doeth Moses say here, Passie not you for it though you see so many Nations haue diuers fashions, so as euery of the hath a Religion contrarie to yours, and that you be alone by your selues. For why? Your God hath chosen you in such sort, as he hath shewed you that ye may bee bold to defie all other nations. For hath it euer come to passe, that any god hath taken vpon him to conuey a people from out of the mids of another people? Seeing then that you are so schooled out, haue yee not a sure warrant that G O D will not haue you to mingle your selues with other Nations? Therefore if ye haue an eye to Gods bringing of you out of the lande of Egypt, ye shall alwaies bee put in minde, that the Religion which ye hold of him is good and holy, and ye may hold some of all other religions in the world. And moreouer, although other nations bee greater than you: yet may ye be bold to spit at their superstitions. For God hath sufficiently shewed, that he hath not giuen you his Lawes and Ordinances in vaine. And why? For he hath brought you out by your selues: which neuer befell to any people of the world but you.

And to the end that these things should bee the better esteemed: Moses sheweth here, that the said deliuerance had no common thing in it. For it was wrought (saith he) by temptations, signes, wonders, warres, strong hand, and stretched out arme. When as he saith, by temptations: he meaneth that the proofes were lo notable, as the matter ought to be out of all erie. Seeing then that God had giuen them so many tokens: was it not ynough to lay it wide open to them, that the idols of Egypt were nothing, and that Pharao with all his power was vnable to doe any thing against y<sup>e</sup> God of Abraham? True it is that the wordes Signes and wonders import the false same thing: but yet is it not without cause that Moses vseth such diuersitie of termes: And why so? For wee see how lightly men ouerpasse Gods woorkes, and make verie feere reckening of them. Therefore was it requisite that Moses shoulde vse such termes and speeche, to set the more estimation vpon the excellent greatnesse of the things that God had done in Egypt. Beholde, (saith he,) thy God hath giuen thee signes and wonders, he hath vsed his strong hand & stretched out his arme, in deliuering thee from such bondage: and therefore know thou thereby that he hath sufficiently warranted his Lawe, and the rule whereby he will haue thee to liue, & wherunto he hath put thee in subiection.

Now he presently addeth therunto, That this was done before their eyes, so as they were certified y<sup>e</sup> GOD was their maker, and that he onely was the true GOD, and that there was none other God before him. Here againe Moses intendeth to prooue the people the more vnthankfull, if they profited not themselves by the things that they knewe by experience. Thine eyes (saith he) are witnesses of it. As if hee shoulde say, If God of his gracious goodnesse did but send thee messengers to tell thee of y<sup>e</sup> things that he had done: yet oughtest thou to receive the things that were told thee. But now it is not any other bodie that maketh report of them vnto thee: but euen thy God himselfe hath shewed them vnto thee, and therefore there is no further excuse for thee, for it hath bin shewed euen to the sight of thine eye: and what more? that the Lord is the true God, (saith he) and that there is none other but onely he. Here wee haue the same thing to marke which hath bin touched already: namely that Moses speaketh not simply of myracles or wonders, as it were to make a rehearfall of them: but also sheweth the ende whereto they tend, which is y<sup>e</sup> God should be magnified. And it is a verie profitable lesson, [to vnderstand] that when we haue such things, wee must learne in any wise to glorifie our God by them. And had this point bene well obserued, the wretched world had not bene turned aside to so many superstitions as it hath bin, vnder colour of false myracles. Whereof commeth it that creatures are worshipped in Poperie, but vnder the colour of false myracles? O (say they) such a Saint hath done a myracle. And vnder y<sup>e</sup> colour Gods glory must be diminished, in so much that looke how many myracles there are, so many stops are there to wholde the wretched world from comming vnto God, and they be euē fond gasingstocks also to make men stand poring vpon y<sup>e</sup> creatures. Therefore doth it stand vs on hād to mark the things so much the better, which are told vs here by Moses: that is to wit y<sup>e</sup> by myracles God will haue himself only to be knowē without matching of any companion wth him. He will haue his glory to shine fourth in such wise, as men shall stoop to him alone, and yeeld him all y<sup>e</sup> preheminnence. To bee short, (as Moses saith here) he will haue men to know that there is none other but he, neither about nor beneath. According wherunto he forwarnerh vs here to make any vnder gods or meane gods, and doeth vs to vnderstand that the soueraigne God will keepe his state still, so as he will not abyde that men shall in any wise abase it, nor diminish his Maicesty, nor part his offices among his creatures, to allot any peece or portion of it, bee it neuer so small, to one or other: No no, he will continue alone by himself. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke in effect as concerning those wordes of Moses.

But now let vs come backe againe to make a short conclusion of the chiefe matter which I haue touched: which is, that Gods declaring of his strength and power in such wise, was to the intent he might be discerned from all the idoles of the world, and that his people might be tyed to the religio that he had deliuered thē. Neuerthelesse it belongeth to vs also, and in verie deed it behoueth vs to apply it to our selues. And surely seeing that God hath authorized his lawe by so many myracles: let vs assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> he deliuered not a doctrine of two or three daies, but such a one as should continue for euer: in so much that the ratifying which he added vnto it, ought to haue full force euen among vs at this day. Is Gods Lawe abated, I meane as in respect of the substance? It is true that the Ceremonies are no more in vse: they were all laide downe at the comming of our Lord Iesus Christ. But as for the doctrine of the Lawe, which containeth the promises of saluatiō, the couenant wherby God hath chosen those whō he will haue to be of his Church, y<sup>e</sup> records of y<sup>e</sup> forgienes of our sinnes, and finally his will to shewe vs the true rule of good life: all this continueth still, and shall continue to the worldes ende. Wherefore let vs marke well that all the myracles and wonders y<sup>e</sup> were wrought in deliuering the people of Israel out of Egypt, doe serue vs at this day for a confirmation to cause vs to receive Gods Lawe with all reuerence, and to assure and warrant vs that it is not a doctrine of mans deuise, but of Gods owne thundering down from heauen. Let that serue for one point.

But yet notwithstanding, wee haue a greater confirmation giuen vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ. For God hath appeared more visibly in him, than he did to the fathers in the time of the Lawe. Wee knowe that the whole fulnesse of the Godhead dwelleth in Iesus Christ, and that the same hath bene knowne wel ynough in him, Sith it is so then: we may better assure our selues now adayes, than the Iewes could in their time, that wee haue one God, of whose wee ought not to doubt, and that we haue such a Religion as was not inuented by man, and that wee ought not to goe at all aduerture, but that wee haue a most sure way to walke in. And here ye see whereof wee ought to glorie. For surely it is an inestimable benefite, that wee stand not in a mamering, to say, I would faine doe well but I wote not how: but are fully perswaded that God alloweth our doings, and that wee haue to doe with the liuing God: and may take vpon vs to compare our felues with all the wretched idolaters and infidels throughout the whole world. True it is that the Papisfes pretend to worship the same God that wee doe: but wee see how they swarue from Gods worde. And therefore it standeth vs on hand to put the thing in vre which I haue spoken of heretofore: that is to wit, that it is not ynough for vs to conceiue some Maieftie of God, but we must also learne which is he, to the intent wee wander not away in our owne imaginations. For that is the thing wherein we differ from the Papisfes and the Iewes. The Iewes can say well ynough that they worship y<sup>e</sup> God of Abraham, and that they haue the lawe that was giuen by Moses: but in the meane while they haue renounced Iesus Christ who is the end of the law, and they haue the vaile that blindfoldeth their eyes, & moreouer they haue so peruerted Gods seruice, that they are straiued quite and cleane fro the right way. Likewise the Papisfes will say that they worship God, and him whom he hath sent to be the Redeemer of the world: but yet for all that, men see how they haue transfigured God, and abolished his seruice, & made a hotechpotch of all the superstitions of the Heathen, with the Religion that God ordained. To be short, there is nothing but vnclannes among them in that behalfe. In respect whereof, ye see wee ought so much the more to acknowledge the infinite grace of our God towards vs, in that he hath so schooled vs out fro among the vnbeleeuers. And we must also marke the meane: which is, that wee haue not onely the myraeles to proue that there is a God in heauen: but also that doctrine wherein God sheweth himselfe fully to vs, to the intent wee should knowe him, and not haue our eyes bleared any more, nor runne routing here and there: but follow the doctrine that our God hath giuen vs, and whereby it is his will to draw vs to him.

Thus yee see that the meane for vs to put this saying of Moses in vre, is not to looke onely to the myraeles that haue bene wrought for the ratifying of the Lawe: but to goe to the Gospell, and there to perceiue that God hath shewed himselfe to vs againe in farre greater perfection than he did to y<sup>e</sup> fathers of olde time. Besides this, let vs beate in minde the warning that I spake of afore: namely that when we once knowe the myraeles whereby God vouchsafed to confirme his Maieftie: we must repaire to his worde, assuring our felues that that is the verie meane whereby God draweth vs to him. Therefore whensoever we haue Gods word preached vnto vs, let vs vnderstand that it is a confirmation to assure vs that he reigneth ouer vs. And therefore let vs take heede that wee make our profit thereby, seeing he graunteth vs this grace and prouledge, which (as we see) is not common to all men. And let vs pray him to seale the doctrine in our heartes by his holy spirit, which we heare with our fleshie eares, that seeing he hath once called vs to the knowing of him, he will increase the same more and more, and so guide vs as we may rather looke vpon heauen than pore vpon the creatures and things that are mortall. Therefore let vs haue a constant and inuincible fayth in God which hath once manifested himselfe to vs, so as wee may defie Satan and all the abuses and errours that haue bene brought in by men.

Ephi. 1. 3.

According to this holy doctrine wee will cast our felues downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulcs, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as it may bring vs to true repentance: and wee therewithall acknowledge the grace and benefices which he hath powred out vpon vs, so as we may know better to make our profit by them than we haue done, and not bee negligent in considering his workes, but diligent therein as becommeth vs: and moreouer so receive the doctrine y<sup>e</sup> is daily preached vnto vs, as wee may apply our eyes to the discerning of the things that are daily shewed vs, and our good God make vs to finde his power and goodnesse by experience, as he hath done to others in all ages, that we may bee the better confirmed in the loue and obedience which wee owe him, so as wee may neuer be turned from it whatsoeuer the Diuell praefise to turne vs away from it. That it may please him to graunt this grace, nor onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

On Wednesday the v. of Iune. 1555.

The xxviij. Sermon, which is the tenth vpon the fourth Chapter.

36 He made thee to heare his voice from heauen, to instruct thee withall: and on earth he shewed thee his great fire, & thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire.

37 Because he loued thy fathers and chose their seede after them, hee made thee to come out of Egypt in his presence, by his great power:

38 To driue out Nations before thee, greater and mightier than thou, to bring thee in, and to giue thee their lands to inherit, as is seene this day.

Told you heretofore that if God had but only wrought myracles when he brought his people out of Egypt, it would haue bene to small purpose: for they had had no instruction to leade them to right knowledge. But in asmuch as his word was matched with them, now there wanted nothing at all. And that is the cause why Moses exhorteth the people yet againe, to consider howe it is long of none but themselves that they know not God, yea euen to attaine to the heritage, not onely of the land of promise, but also of the kingdom of heauen. Furthermore he telleth them that Gods word had such maiestie, as the people had no cause to doubt: but it was God that spake it. Assure thy selfe (saith he) that the voice which thou herddest was not a human or earthly voice: but thy God spake as it were from heauen. It is true that the voyce sounded from the middes of the fire that was scene vpon the mountaine: but here Moses meaneth that the doctrine was not darke, forasmuch as God gaue certaine signes of his maiestie, to the ende that the peoples faith might bee assured throughly. And for the same cause doeth he vse the worde instruction, which signifieth not onely to teach with words, but also to traine on with often chastisement. As if he should say, thy God in this case hath as it were helde thee in awe, so as it is not nowe lawfull for thee to despise his lawe as though it came from an vncertaine place. For why? It hath so ueraine authoritie, thou canst not but thereby perceiue that God hath declared himselfe to thee, to the intent thou shouldst worship his maiestie and do him homage. Now then we see that the effect of the things which Moses declareth heere to the Iewes, is that God had giuen them visible signes at hande, and as it were familiarly, to the ende that his worde should haue due reuerence, and bee receiued obediently, and all things bee done to the instruction of the people. And although Moses rehearse but the things y were done in mount Horeb, where the lawe was put forth: yet may we gather a general doctrine thereof. For wee see howe God stoopeth to our infirmities. Because we cannot mount so high as to come vnto him, he cometh down to our slender capacite. Seeing that he doeth so, ought not we to be the more prouoked to submitte our selues to him? and if wee doe it not, shall it not bee cast in our teeth, that there was no lette in him that wee had not meanes and helps to instruct vs with all? But what for that? In steede of coming to God, we haue turned our backe vpon him and rebelled against him. Wherefore let vs consider after what manner God applieth himselfe to our rudenesse, that wee may bee the more moued to resort vnto him. And besides that, let vs referre all things to the same ende that Moses noteth heere: which is, y forasmuch as God is so gracious to vs as to thewe vs his truth: wee must embrace it, assuring our selues that it groweth not in the worlde, but cometh from heauen. Therefore let the doctrine of saluation be receiued among vs with al obedience,

For else it is to no purpose for vs to protest that we call vpon God and are willing to honor and serue him. For the prooffe that he requireth thereof, is that we should hearken quietly to his worde, and that our faith should bee settled, so as wee resemble nor the vnbeleeuers, who are alwayes doubting: but stande vpon this sure foundation, that it is God which speaketh it, & therefore it is not lawful for vs to reply against it, but wee must submit our selues wholly in all points to y which he saith. Thus yee see what we haue remember vpon this place.

And herewithall let vs marke when this was treated of. For it is not without cause that Moses speaketh of this instruction. Why so? For if wee bee not subdued, it is hard for vs to submit our selues to God: nay rather we draw cleane backe from him. Therefore must our Lorde bee faine to correct this losynesse in vs: and when he seeth vs after that sort, either rebellious, or stubborne, or that wee bee dull vpon the spurre: hee must vse such meanes as hee knoweth to bee fit to reclaim vs withall. Wee see howe Moses saith heere, that the wonders which were wrought at the publishing of the Lawe, serued as it were for a nurturing, to the intent that the people should no more be so vnruly as they had bene before, but become more fitte to be taught. But this vice reigned not among the Iewes onely: it is to be found continually among all men. Therefore let vs learne to make our own profite of the things that our Lorde hath giuen vs for the authorising of his word, that we play not the wood beastes, but behaue our selues as meek sheepe and lambes, to hearken to the voice of our shepherd. This is the thing in effect, which wee haue to gather vpon this place.

And now he saith, Because God loved thy fathers, therefore hath he chosen their seedes after them: howbeit that he say, thy seede after him. Moses chaungeth here the number, and not without cause: for after he had spoken of the fathers, hee returneth to one alone, that is to wit, to Abraham, because it was he with whom God made the covenant. And againe it serueth to magnifie the grace that is mentione d here, as shalbe declared anon more at large. The effect of y thing y Moses intendeth to tell y people, is that it is a great shame for the and y they be vnexcusable, if they know not the goodnes of their God. And why? Because God of his owne free mercy chose the, not for that they were better than other nations, (as shalbe shewed more at length hereafter) or for that there was more noblenes, or vertues or vertue in them: but for that it pleased him to loue their fathers. Nowe we see that the meaning of Moses was as if he should haue said thus: You haue heere an inestimable benefite aboute all people, namely that God vouchsafeth to reigne among you, that he hath sanctified you to himselfe, that you bee his Churche, that you bee his flocke, that you bee his children, and (as it is saide in another place,) that you be a kingly priesthood. Assure your selues this is not giuen you for any desert of yours, for haue you deserued aught at Gods hande? Are ye better than all y rest of the world?

Exod. 19. 6.

world? No: why then hath God giuen you such priuiledge? Not for any thing that he hath found in you: but because it pleased him of his owne good will. And whereof came that? Euen of his choosing of your forefathers. You were chosen of him before you were borne. And what was the cause that he chose your forefathers? Euen his owne loue, (saith he): that is to say, because hee marked them of his owne free mercie, to shoule them out from the rest of the world: yea euen at such time as Abraham was barren, and a eadie striken in yeeres, and as good as decayed and halfe dead, when as yet hee had no issue at all. And yet for all this, God chose him, so as that poore old fellowe became the wellspring of your forefathers. Seeing then that God hath chosen you after such a sort, yee see there is none other cause of the comming of saluation vnto you, but onely his meere goodnesse. Now therefore consider how much you be bound to your God, and bee not vnthankfull to him, neither suffer such a benefite thereof through your owne lewdnes and vnthankfulness. This in effect is the doctrine that is contained in this place.

Nowe, that we may fare the better by it, wee haue to marke first of all, that when God calleth vs to be of his Church, so as he maketh vs partakers of the Gospell, and of the things depending vpon the same: it is not for y<sup>e</sup> we went to him aforehand, but because he hath choic<sup>d</sup> vs. The word chose is set down here to expresse the better that that thing came not of the people themselues, but that God was the first beginner therof. That is one point which we ought to marke wel. For it is not onely here that the holy Ghost speaketh thereof: but all the whole scripture is full of that doctrine: namely, of telling vs that we must not seeke the cause of our saluation in our selues, as who shoulde say we were better than other men.

Wee see that God giueth not his graces indifferently to all men: but that to set the greater shewe vpon his goodnesse, hee giueth that thing to one nian which hee denieth to another. Wee see that most men are destitute of the Gospell at this day: and we see that euen where it is preached, most folke are as good as blinde and deafe still. Nowe when the Gospell is preached in any place, it is a kinde of choosing, and it is the verie same that Moses speakes of here. Seeing then that God causeth his worde to raine vpon vs, so as we haue our fill of it euerie day: and in the meane season other much greater, richer, and nobler Cities want and are destitute of it: let vs vnderstand that this fo great benefite cometh not of our owne seeking, neither haue we obtained it by our owne traueil or policie: but it is GOD that hath chosen vs to it of his owne mercie. Marke that for one point.

Againe, whereas it pleaseth him to giue vs faith, so as we talke of his word, and are thoroughly fed with it, and it toucheth vs inwardly at the very heart: let vs vnderstand that y<sup>e</sup> is a second sort of choosing which god maketh of vs. So then, let vs yelde him his deserued praise, for in withholding it from him wee be traitors to him, and wee becaue him of the thing that belongeth a-lonely vnto him: and in so doing wee set vp our selues as Idols in his steede. For a man cannot take a greater honour to himselfe, than to beare himselfe in hand that he is the author of his own saluation, and that it is he that preuenteth God. If wee imagin so, it is a defacing of Gods glorie. And therefore let vs beare this les<sup>s</sup> well in mind.

Howbeit forasmuch as men are malicious, & when they cannot abolish Gods praise altogether, they darken it as much as they can: Moses excludeth here expressly all worthinesse of persons, and all desert of workes, in saying, it is the loue of God. For it is not ynough for vs to knowe that God hath chosen vs to himselfe: but we must also know what it is that moued him thereto, and how he was induced therunto. Did hee seeke the cause of it out of himselfe? No: but his owne loue was the cause that he chose vs. Nowe when the scripture speaketh of Gods loue: it meaneth that free fauor which he beareth towards vs, so as he respecteth not our persons nor seruices, nor aught else that wee can bring. Sith it is so, let vs consider here Gods goodnes two wayes. For first of all when we haue his Gospell preached among vs, and his Sacraments, whereby he gathereth vs as it were into his fold, and sheweth himselfe to be our shepherd: it is (say I) a choosing of vs, for the which wee be greatly bounde vnto him: in so much that our maliciousnesse must needs be cast in our teeth, and bee called to account to receiue horrible vengeance, if we make no reckoning of so great a grace as he hath bestowed vpon vs. Therefore let vs make much of the benefite that we inioy, that is to wit, of Gods gathering vs heere together in his name, to bee as his household folke.

But there is yet a seconde choosing: which is when euerie of vs perceiueith that God hath enlightened him by his holie spirit, and made vs to talke his worde, so as wee sticke to it by faith, and that hee hath grafted vs into the bodie of Iesus Christ, to the ende we shoulde bee taken & held for members of him: which thing wee must vnderstand cometh not of our selues, nor of our owne power: but of Gods will, which vouchsafed to marke vs out. And why? Let vs not make long circuits to finde some reason in our selues: but let vs holde vs contented with the free loue of our God, for hee is not bounde to any man. Hee might destroye all mankind by his iustice: but yet for all that, he hath pitie vpon vs. And whereas hee pitieth not all alike, but letteth whom hee list alone: therein he intendeth to giue the greater shewe of his goodnesse (as I haue said already) to the ende that wee shoulde compare our selues with others and say, Wherefore am I one of gods elect? wherefore hath God chosen mee to himselfe? I shoulde haue bene as other men are, if God had not reached me his hand. And what moued him to do it? His owne meere goodnesse. This comparis<sup>o</sup>n then must induce vs to glorifie our God, when wee see that he hath stretched out his mighty arme ouer vs. And so we see, that that doctrine was not vttered onely for the instructian of the people of old time: but that the same is common to vs also at this day.

Remember (saith Moses) that thy God hath chosen thee. And why? Because hee loved thy fathers. And the same also is the cause why that in that high and excellent redemption which was made by our Lorde Iesus Christ, the scripture sendeth vs to the loue of God: for that is the onely wellspring, God so loued the worlde that hee spared not his onely sonne. What is the cause that Iesus Christ is come to bee our Sauiour: What is the cause that the saluation which hee purchased for vs, is preached now adayes vnto vs? What is the verie cause that faith is giuen vs, and that God enlighteneth vs by his holy spirit? We must alwayes resort to this grounde, that it is because God loued vs. It is true that Saint Iohn saith generally, that hee loued the worlde. And why? For Iesus Christ offereth himselfe generally to all men without exception to be their redeemer. It is saide afterwarde in the covenant, that God loued the world when he sent his onely sonne: but hee loued vs, vs (I say) whi ch haue bene taught by his Gospel, because he gathereth vs to him. And the faithfull that are enlightened by the holy Ghost, haue yet a thirde vie of Gods loue, in that hee reuileth himselfe more familiarly to the, and sealeth vp his fatherly adoption by his holy spirit, and ingraueh it in their hearts. Now then let vs in al cases learn to know this loue of God, & when we be once come to it, let vs goe no further. Thus we see three degrees of the loue that god hath shewed vs in our Lord Iesus Christ. The first is in respect of the redemption that was purchased in the person of him that gaue himselfe to death for vs, and became accursed to reconcile vs to God his father. That is the first degree of loue, which extendeth to all men, inasmuch as Iesus Christ reacheth out his armes to call and allure all men both great and small, and to win them to him. But there is a speciall loue for those to whom the gospel is preached: which is, y<sup>e</sup> God testifieth vnto them that hee will make them partakers of y<sup>e</sup> benefite that was purchased for them by the death and passion of his sonne. And forasmuch as we be of that number, therefore are we double bound already to our God: here are two bonds which hold vs as it were strait tyed vnto him. Now let vs come to the third bonde, which dependeth vpon the thirde loue that God sheweth vs: which is, that hee not onely causeth the gospel to be preached vnto vs, but also maketh vs to feel the power therof, so as we know him to be our father & sauiour, not doubting but that our sins are forgiven vs for our Lorde Iesus Christes sake, who bringeth vs the gift of the holy Ghost, to reforme vs after his owne image. When as God doth so imprint in our hearts the doctrine that is preached vnto vs by the mouthes of men: let vs vnderstand that he sheweth vs a thirde loue. True it is, that to speake properly, God hath not diuers affections: wee must not imagine so: but I handle these matters according to our capacitie, and wee must consider of Gods loue according to our slenderesse, because wee cannot attaine to his high maiestic as is said afore, and therefore euē he himselfe also vttereth himselfe to vs according to our abilitie. And so wee see now that Gods loue is vttered and shewed vnto vs euidently three wayes in our Lorde Iesus Christe: the cheefe whereof are when wee haue the gospell preached, and that faith is added vnto it therewithall.

And as I saide, when wee once haue this free loue of God, we must goe no further. For we see what hath happened to all such as haue not held themselues in such sobernesse. And surely when men are inquisitiue why God loueth some more than other: some: it proceedeth of a certain pride and spyte, in that they cannot abide that the whole praise of their saluation should rest in god alone. Men seeke alwayes to challenge somewhat to themselues. And therefore when it is tolde them that God calleth those whom he hath chosen, and that hee chooseth whom he listeth of his owne free goodness: they will needs fall to scanning, how so? Why doeth God prefer one before another? When they debate after that manner, it is not a simple inquisitiuines, but a pride as I said, because they would faine be esteemed and finde somewhat in themselues wherewith to deface Gods meere mercie: And therefore it is good iustice that Satan shoulde afterwarde bleare their eyes, & set many fancies before them. And that is the verie cause that maketh them to goe alwayes seeking, that God chooseth those whom he foresawe to be such as would become worthe of his grace. Again, such as dare not alledge altogether their owne deseruings, doe say that they attaine to faith because God foresawe that they would be faithfull, and therefore reserued them to himselfe. So then, by that meanes faith shoulde proceede of mens workes. But such men doe in deede shewe that they be as it were blockish, when they make such conclusions: and yet notwithstanding a great part of the worlde standeth vpon that point, and is still blinded therewith. But as for vs, let vs learne that whensoever Gods loue is set afore vs we must wholly hold vs to it and rest vpon it, so as it must suffice vs that God is righteous, and yet notwithstanding not bounde to any person, but at his free libertie to choose whom he listeth, because hee receiueth them to mercie. For it is to the same purpose that he saith to Moses, as S. Paul alledgeth, I will haue mercie on whom I will haue mercy, and I will haue pitie on whom I haue pitie. As if hee should say, let not men fall to controlling of me in this case, nor bee so malapert as to aske why I shewe not mercie to all men: or why all are not delt with alike, or why I choose one and leaue another. Let them not dispute with mee: for I haue power to vse my freegoodnesse where I list, and they must stoop to mee: And whoeuer daureth repyne at it, shall finally be confounded in his owne pride. Therefore to bee short, let vs learne to glorifie our God. After what manner? Euen for his choosing of vs. As for the castawayes, it is certain that they will doe nothing but grinde their teeth, to blasphemē G O D, and wee see it to bee so. But whereunto doeth Moses bring vs backe? He saith not y<sup>e</sup> they which are chosen shall glorifie God for any thing that they haue of their owne. Howe is it then that God wilbe glorified at our hands? Euen in this, that we beholding the benefites which hee hath bestowed vpon vs, shoulde not exalt our selues aboute others, thinking our selues to be better or more noble and excellent than our neighbors: but acknowledge that hee doeth all those things of his owne free goodnesse. This is the doctrine which wee haue to gather vpon this text.

And it is said here that God chose Abrahams seede after him, because of the loue that had gone long time before. And this serueth for a larger prooffe of the thing that I haue touched: accordingly to Saint Pauls saying, that if God shewe mercie to men before they be borne, & before they haue done either good or euill: it is an excluding of all deserts. And that is w<sup>l</sup> worth the marking.

For God hauing chosen to himselfe the seede of Abraham because of the adoption that had bene made: hath yet a narrower choyce, as hath bene declared alicadie. For Esau was of Abrahams linage as well as Iacob: and so was Ismael as well as Isaac: and yet yee see that both of them were cut off from Gods couenant, and his adoption abideth in the house of the others. What is the cause thereof? Gods choise, which I ternied a testimonie of a more itrait and deare loue, which is the first, and which also I placed in the redemption made by Iesus Christ: and I placed the preaching of the Gospel in the seconde degree, and faith in the third degree. But forasmuch as here is no speaking but of the couenant that God made with Abraham: it is a generall couenant that extendeth to all his linage. Therefore all they that came of Abrahams seede are comprehended vnder that couenant which god had made, God in respect of himselfe, knew who belonged to his election: but yet for al that, anon after, hee shodded out those whom he thought good, and took whom he listed to be of his household. Forasmuch then as wee see it is so: Let vs beare in minde that God continueth his mercie to a thousande generations, as hee himselfe saith. And yet notwithstanding let vs assure our selues that in so doing his minde altereth not. When he setteth vp his Church in any place, he doeth it not vpon some sudden braide, but because hee loued our fathers. Likewise nowadayes when we haue the Gospel preached and the Sacraments ministred: whence shoulde we thinke that that cometh? First we must vnderstande, that the gospel was preached through the whole world, and that our forefathers were gathered in: Gods flock, to be made partakers of the saluation that was brought by Iesus Christ. Neuertheless by reason of their vnthankfulnesse and wicked dealing, the duell got the vpper hande of the worlde, so as there ensued horrible darknesse and all things were put out of order. But nowe God hath as it were raised vp his worde againe: and what hath moued him to it? Euen the performance of his promise. For when hee had once extended his couenant through the whole worlde: it was his will to renew it againe, because of the promise that hee had made afore. And if it be demaunded wherefore God woulde haue his Gospel preached after that sort: it was for that it pleased him to come nere to such as liued at that time, because he had chosen them before they were borne. Againe we must vnderstande that the accomplishing of the fullnesse of time wherof the scripture speaketh, is not grounded vpon men, but vpon the good pleasure of God. We must come to this point, that God had ordeined the preaching of his Gospel in his own euerlasting purpose: and that our attaining to the possession of so great a benefite at this day by the vertue of that vnchangeable ordinance, is because hee had call. d our fathers before we were borne, & that when they had made themselves vnworthe of the kingdome of heauen, and banished themselves from it as much as in them lay: yet notwithstanding God vouchsafed to cal vs againe, and all through his owne free goodnesse. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke where it is saide, that God chose the seede of Abraham after him.

And by the way let vs call to minde the thing that I haue touched alreadie, that is to wit, that Abraham was alone as the Prophet Esaie vpbraided the Iewes. The truth is that he exhorted them to be of good cheere, though they be scattered abroad and cast downe. Haue an eye (saith he) to the quarrie whence ye were taken, and vnto your originall. What was it? was it a great and infinite people? No: It was a sillie olde man al alone without child or issue. Behold, your mother Sara was barren all the time of her life, and her age was a further let that he might not conceiue: and yet hath God taken ye out of that quarrie, that is to say, of one man alone. Why then should yee bee afraide though ye were vterly consumed? But yet for all this, hee vpbraideth them with their vnthankfulnesse, because they trusted still in their owne greatnesse, and if there were any likelihood at all, by and by it puffeth them vp. And therefore let vs learne by this text, first that Gods choosing of our forefathers was not for any worthinesse or nobilitie in them selues: but because he had pitie on them, which pitying importeth that they were in wretched case, and had bene vterly forlorne, if God had not gathered them into the hope which they could neuer haue conceiued of themselves. Marke that for one point.

And secondly if wee see Gods Church scattered, so as wee be fewe in number, and it seemeth that there is no certaintie nor assurance for vs, but all is like to goe to haock in y turning of a hande: Let it not dismay vs. And why so? For God hauing once chosen Abraham did also multiply his seede, notwithstanding that hee was a man stricken in yeares, drooping, and childlesse. So likewise nowe, although there be but a handfull of vs, and we be despised and without power or strength to maintaine our selues: yet can God increase vs, and hauing increased vs he can preserve vs. Wherefore let vs learne to looke wholly to his goodnes, when the state of the Church lieth in hazarde, and let vs not be out of heart:

but although that to the worldwarde wee see it cast downe, and so diminished as it seemeth as good as nothing at all: yet let vs not cease to be of good courage still, and to waite till God performe that which he hath done in all ages. For the manner of setting vp of the Church in good state againe, and of the preserving thereof, muſt be wonderfull to the sight of men.

Now after that Moſes hath ſpoken ſo, he addeth, Thy God choſe thee, euen of purpoſe to bring thee out of the land of Egypt, before his face. He ſheweth that the deliuerance of the people out of the lande of Egypt, proceeded of the ſaid election, and conſequently of Gods free loue. And it is a point which wee ought to matke well. For it behooueth vs to be led from one thing to another. As for example, when God doeth vs any good, we doe in deede perceiue his goodneſſe: but wee muſt mount yet higher. Wherefore hath GOD prouided for vs? not for any worthines or deſert of ours: but becauſe he had choſen vs. And when or wherefore choiſe hee vs? Wee muſt not range any further, but holde our ſelues to this ground: of Moſes. But in any wiſe let vs marke whereof hee ſpeaketh, that wee may the better make our profite thereby. Thy God deliuered thee out of the lande of Egypt, becauſe he had choſen thee before, yea euen before thou waſt borne. In ſo ſaying hee ſheweth, that although this redemption was (to ſee to) but a deliuerance of the bodie: yet was it a figure of ſaluation that God had promiſed afore in the perſon of the Redeemer: and although the deliuerie of the people of Iſrael out of the lande of Egypt, was but as a temporall redemption: yet doth Moſes ſay that it depended vpon Gods free beſtowed adoption. Seeing it is ſo in that caſe: what is to bee thought nowe, when wee bee to be brought out of the gulſes of hell to bee conueyed into heauen? (For by nature wee bee curſed, and plunged in the gulſes of hell:) are wee able to get thence? Doeſt it not belong onely vnto God to deliuer vs thence? And if it were meete that God ſhould chooſe the people of Iſrael to deliuer them from the tyrannie of Pharaos: let vs conlude, that by a more ſtrong reaſon it was meete that when he ſhoulde deliuer vs from the bondage of the diuell and from the bottomles pittes of hell: hee ſhoulde declare this vnto vs: that he had choſen and adopted vs. Wherefore let vs not onely take holde of the death and paſſion which our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt ſuffered for vs, and of his ſauing of vs by his grace: but alſo let vs come to the meane degree, namely that the cauſewhy wee bee made partakers of the ſaluation that Ieſus Chriſt hath brought vs, is for that GOD hath adopted vs. And when did hee that? After hee had founde ſome vertue or ſome good forwardneſſe in vs: no: but before wee were borne, and before wee had done either good or badde, yea euen at ſuch time as wee were alreadie vowed and giuen vp to endeleſſe deſtruction. This is it which we haue to note in the firſt place.

Neuertheleſſe it is not for nought that Moſes ſaith alſo, that God brought out the people before his face: as if hee ſhoulde ſay, hee was their guide. For had GOD reached out his hande to his people but for once, and thenceforth haue let them alone: to what purpoſe had that bene? It is not ynough for a mother to helpe vp her young childe when hee is falſe downe: for hee may fall a hundred thouſande times, and in the ende breake his necke: but ſhee muſt holde him vp ſtill. Euen ſo our Lorde declareth that it was not ynough for him to haue ſhewed himſelfe to be a deliuerer of his people for a day or two: but hee helde on ſtill, and conueyed them before his face, as a man that hath his eye continually vpon his childe. To bee ſhort, hee ſheweth heere that his goodneſſe abode with the people euen to the ende, ſo as hee helde on in helping and ſuccoring them, and maintained them throughout. And why? for elſe his bringing of them out of the lande of Egypt had bene in vaine.

And afterwarde hee addeth, To deſtroy people mightier and ſtronger than they, that their lande might bee giuen them to inherite. Hee ſheweth that God ceaſed not to goe through with his fauour towards the Iewes, till hee had performed the promiſe that hee made to their fathers: that is to wit, of putting them in poſſeſſion of the lande of Chanaan as hee had promiſed. But (as I haue ſaide alreadie) wee muſt compare our ſelues with the ſtate of that people. And therefore let vs learne, that God not onely draweth vs out of the gulſe of hell, and out of the curſedneſſe wherein wee were borne, and which would holde vs alwayes locked vnder his wrath: but alſo holdeth on and continueth his goodnes towards vs, ſo as hee will not miſſe but haue his eye ſtill vpon vs, to watch our vs vnto the end. And if our Lorde had not ſuch a care to defende vs: in what taking were wee? Should not the diuell in ſuch vs vp currie minute of an houre? We ſee hee trotteth vp and downe ſeeking euer to deuour, and hee hath meanes to doe it. And could wee ſcape his pawes if we were not deſcended from the by ſ goodnes of our God? So then let vs vnderſtande, that God doth not onely beginne our ſaluation, and then let vs alone to ſtuit for our ſelues: but that hee goeth through with vs as long as we haue neede, and performeth the thing that he hath begunne. Thus doth hee keepe vs alwayes in his ſight: that is to ſay, hee neuer forgetteth vs, but conſidereth our neceſſities, to prouide for them and to remedie them in due ſeaſon. Now if God haue his eyes ſo open to thinke vpon vs, that hee may ſuccour vs at our neede: Let vs on our ſide alſo walke as before his face.

And let vs marke that wee cannot hide our ſinnes from him: and therefore ſeeing hee yeeldeth vs ſuch fauour and honour as to haue a care of vs: it is good reaſon that all our life ſhould bee anſwerable thereunto. And ſo, Gods goodneſſe ought ſo little to make vs negligent, that it ſhoulde rather ſpurre vs forward to repaire to him with an earneſt minde. In deede a man ſhall ſee ſome dogges and ſwine that will deſame this doctrine of Election. When it is tolde them that God knoweth which are his, and that hee will neuer ſuffer them to periſh: very wel ſay they, then will I ceafe to doe well: and fo they mocke at God and his doctrine, ſhewing in deepe that they neuer wiſt what the worde Election or Choyce meaneth. But as for vs, we muſt take aſſurance by Gods grace, to liue warily and circumpetly: and good reaſon haue we to humble our ſelues; conſidering that we were damned and forlorne, and our God hath declared vs, and moreover ſhewed himſelfe ſo bountifull towards vs as to make vs heires of his kingdome, euen vs that were the bondſlaues of Satan. And on the other ſide it ſtandeth vs on hande to walke in feare, ſeeing we can doe nothing at all of our ſelues, further forth than Gods grace uttereth it ſelfe in vs. Againe it behooueth vs to pray vnto him, ſo far much as if he ſhoulde let vs alone from the one ende to the other, whereas we be now aduanced vp aloft, we ſhoulde tumble into the pitte curie minute of an houre. Therefore we haue cauſe heere to call vpon our God, and to reſort vnder his protection. Furthermore ſeing it is ſaid that hee guideth vs and keepeth watch for our welfare: it becommeth vs to bee the more wakened to walke as in his preſence, knowing that he marketh, not onely all our doings, but alſo our affections and thoughts. Beſides this, ſeing that Moſes knitteth here the deliuerance of the Iſraelites out of Egypt, with their poſſeſſing of the lande of Chanaan: Let vs marke well that God will haue all his benefiſts linked together which he beſtoweth vpon vs, vntill we be brought to the full perfection of our ſaluation. For it is not to be thought that God letteth vs alone when he hath once called vs vnto himſelfe, ſo as we ſhoulde be in danger of being left vp to the ſpoyle: but contrariwiſe let vs mark, that he will go through with the thing that he hath begunne, as S. Paul declareth in the firſt to the Philippians, where hee ſaierh  $\bar{y}$  this his calling of vs, importeth a warrant that wee ſhall neuer bee left deſtitute of his defence, vntill hee haue brought vs to euerlaſting ſaluation. Thus yee ſee that the thing which we haue to beare in mind, is that as God is the beginner of our ſaluation, ſo is he the finiſher thereof alſo.

And as touching Moſeſes interlacing of Gods deſtroying and diſting out of people that were ſtronger and mightier than they: it is true that God vſed an extraordinarie manner of dealing, in his rooting out of the Chananites and ſuch other like as dwelt in the countrie which the Iewes poſſeſſed: but yet haue wee cauſe to thinke vpon the like at this day. For whether is it that wee ought to goe? whether doth our Lorde call vs? To the heauenly life firſt whence euen the verie Angels are ſaine. For wee know that the diuels, which as nowe are not onely baniſhed from the glorie of the heauenly kingdome, but alſo appointed to horrible damnation, were ſometime as the children of God, and held the roome whereinto our Lorde calleth vs at this day. And nowe, are wee worthyer than the Angels which fell in that ſort from aboue? Moreover, if wee come but to men: were not the Iewes a holy lynage? Sprang they not of the roote of Abraham? Yes: and what are we on our ſide? did the kingdome of heauen belong to vs? No: no more than to the wilde Cannibales. But yet thoſe natural children and as it were lawfull heires by  $\bar{y}$  adoption of their fathers, are caſt off and baniſhed from the ſaluation wherevnto God calleth vs at this time. They be driuen out, and we ſucceede as it were in an emptie place. Haue not wee cauſe then to magnifie the grace that God ſheweth vs in theſe dayes? Doeth it not appeare that this text ſerueth not onely for the Iewes, but alſo ought rather to be applied to our uſe at this day? Then let vs vnderſtande, that ſeing God hath choſen vs to himſelfe, wee ought in any wiſe to be wholly his, & to continue ſeſed in the poſſeſſion of his grace, howbeit not by walking in ſtatelines & preſumptio, ſo as we ſhoulde be proud of it: but by acknowledging with all lowneſſe, that wee hang wholly vpon the free goodneſſe of our GOD. And let vs not ceafe to aſſure our ſelues that he will go through with the thing that hee hath begunne in vs, at leaſtwiſe if wee abide vnder the guiding of his hand, to ſuffer our ſelues to be ruled by him.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to rid vs of them by forgiving them for our Lord Ieſus Chriſtes ſake: and therewithall to worke in ſuch fort as wee may daily labour to renounce all our wicked luſtes, and whatſoever elſe hindreth vs to ſerue him, and altogether to rule our ſelues according to his commandements. And ſo lets vs all ſay, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

43 Namelie, Bozor in the wilder nesse in the plaine countrie , among the Rubenites: and Ramoth in Galaad among the Gaddites: and Golam in Basan among the Manassites,

LT was shewed yesterday , that we must assure our selues that God will continue his goodnesse towards vs, and that when hee hath once begunne , wee must not doubt but hee will shewe himselfe a Saviour vnto the ende . When wee haue founde him such a one, wee must walke on in the faide trust, that we may call vpon him all our life long : for ellse wee should bee faued but for a day , and that were all one as if God had neuer shewed himselfe to vs at all . Therefore our hope must extende to the time comming, and when God hath ridde vs from Satans tyrannie wherem wee were to make vs inioy his heritage , we must holde on still as Moses saith here . True it is that God hath not brought vs out of Egypt, but hee hath deliuered vs from the bondage of the diuell and of death . And therefore let vs trust that he will lead vs to the place that he hath promised vs, that is to wit, to the immortal life . But in the meane while we must consider to what ende he calleth vs, and to what end he bestoweth so manie giftes vpon vs: namely to the ende that we should serue him all our life long . And that is the thing which Moses addeth as nowe, and which was touched also as yesterday: namely that our trusting in God must not make vs ydle and slothfull, but rather the more inflame vs to loue and feare him .

pleasure, as though it were some bootie. When G O D is so spoyled, it is all one as if men should set vp ydoles in despyre of him . And so yee see wherefore Moses saith, None vnderstande that the Lord is God both above and beneath, and that there is none other. Heere is the foundation where vpon wee must grounde Gods seruice: namely to knowe that hee cannot abide any companion, but that wee must discretelye him from all mens deuices and imaginations, to saye . This is the G O D that hath reueiled himselfe vnto vs. And Moses exhorteth the people to thinke vpon it that they might beate it in minde. For if wee haue not that care with vs, we shall wonder to see howe soone some wicked fancie will take place in our heade . If such as knowe the truth doe not sticke to it, and walke warely and carefully, they shall soone let them selues runne at rouers . And why ? For naturally wee bee inclined to leanings, and thereto wee bee so waivering as is pittie to see . Therefore it is not ynough for vs to haue knowen the true liuing God for a time: but wee must dayly thinke vpon the thing that is tolde vs, and wee must continually renewe the remembrance of it . For otherwise wee shall bee at our wittes ende to see what superstition will steppe in our way . Then let vs marke well, that it is a continuall exercise for vs all our life long, to knowe which is our true G O D that hath manifested himselfe vnto vs .

& Rom. 3. 9.

Therefore he saith here, vnderstande thou this day, and thinke well vpon it in thine heart, and beare it in remembrance, that there is none other God but the euerlasting, neither above nor beneath. The cheefe intent of Moses is to shewe, that Gods reaching of vs his hand vnto vs, it not to the ende that we should haue no care to honour him: but rather that we should bend our selues wholly therunto, and that wee perceyuing howe hee hath honored vs so highly as to chooſe vs for his people, should shewe in verie deed by our seruuing of him as our God, that his so doing is not in vaine . This is y meaning of Moses. But yet there withall he doeth vs to vnderstande, that we shall neuer be able to yeelde God his due honour, vntill we knowe him. For if we imagine newe Gods of our owne heade, we disguise the liuing God, and beare him of his cheefe honour . I say hee is disguised, when we attribute that thing to the creatures, which is peculiar to him alone, and it is al one as if we did make ydols, though we confesse it not with our mouthes, as a great number do deale, which ca protest wel ynough that their intent is to haue no moe but the onely God, and yet notwithstanding faile not to robbe him of the things that are peculiar to his maiestie, dealing them to the creatures at their owne

And nowe that Moses hath spoken so of knowledge: hee sheweth that our confessing wi hour mouth and our feeling also with our heart that there is but onely one G O D is nothing woorth: vnlesse wee shewe by our deedes that wee take him for our father, our master, and him, to whome wee belong . And for the same cause hee saith that he hath giuen vs his lawes, commandementes, and statutes. So then, wee see that the knowing of God is not a deade and vneffectuall thing: but that it ought to preuaile with vs, so as wee may shewe that wee haue beene schooled by Gods worde, by keeping his lawes and commandementes. The ende therefore whereunto God hath chosen vs of his owne free goodnesse, and the ende whereunto hee mainteyneth vs, and continueth his grace towards vs is this: that we should glorifie him not onely with our mouthes, but also with our whole life . But heere is yet one worde more to be noted: which is, that Moses addeth, that hee seeth before Gods people, his lawes & commandemens: wherin he bereueth them of all excuse of ignorance. As if he should say, ye cannot alleadge y yee know not how to serue God: for I do shew you his will, and therefore strue not against him. So then after as our Lord granteth vs the grace to be taught purely by his word, let vs mark that we be the more bound vnto him, and the lesse to be excused, fo as it is not for vs to vse any shuffling. For wherof is it long that we yeeld him not his due praise, and that we luee not as we ought to do, seing he teacheth vs what to do, and sheweth how we ought to luee? Wherefore let vs labor to make the doctrine powerfull which is dayly preached vnto vs, assuring our selues that the preaching thereof is to the end that God should be the better honored among vs. This is the effect of that which is set downe here.

Now it is set downe consequently, that before they passed Iordan, Moses did seuer out three Cities in the land that had ben conquered from the Amorrhites, (as we haue seene heretofore) & from their neighbours, as the land of Basan: and those three Cities, were appointed for such to sit vnto as had slaine any bodie through vnaduisednes. This Law is declared more fully in other places: and thence must we fetch the exposition of this present text, God had said and ordeyned, that if a man bearing no hatred to another man, did slea him vnaduisedly, that is to say by chance medly (as they term it) without pretended purpose: hee should not be punished. For why? the manslaughter that are punishable must either be wilful, or else proceed of reuenge, or of spyte, or of lying in wait which is worst, & greatest fault of al. But if a man seing no bodie did shoot an arrow & hit a man, & the man dyed: this manslaughter was not punishable as a felonie. Neuerthelesse God woulde not haue it simple pardoned: and that was for two causes. The one was to the ende that men should in any wise mislike of any murder and the shedding of mans bloude: and the other was, that the kinfolke of the partie that was slaine should not be provoked to reuenge: And therefore God had ordeyned that hee which had giuen the stroke should get himselfe out of the way, and keepe himselfe as a prisoner till the death of the high Priest: And then had hee as it were a Iubilee, so that when there was once a newe high Priest, then the partie that had so fled to the place appointed, whether it were at the ende of tenne, twentie, or thirrie yeeres, might retorne to his owne house if hee listed: but vntil that time, it behoued him to be as a banished man. That is the thing which is spoken of here as nowe. Moses rehearseth nor the Law as it was giuen of God & as it is set down in the booke of numbers; but yet in reporting the storie, therewithall hee giueth an incling of the foresaide lawe and ordinance as we haue saide. Nowe for the better vnderstanding hereof, we must first marke the thing that I touched afore: that is to wit, that God abhorreth murder, in so much that although he punish not vnaduised manslaughter rigorously: yet he chastiseth them: wherby hee sheweth that he mislyketh of bludshed. This is a thing well worthy to be noted. For first wee see thereby, how greatly God loueth vs: & he sheweth the cause thereof in the ninth of Genesis, to be for that we be created after his image. Hee saith that the sleaing of a man is the doing of wrong to himselfe. Yee see then that God beareth vs such loue, that he taketh himselfe to be wounded and misused in our persons, because he hath made vs after his owne image. And that ought to be a warrant of his great goodnes and louing kindnesse towards vs, to make vs to trust wholly vnto him & to honor him. And so yee see wherete we ought to begynne, when it is tolde vs that God hateth murder and cannot abide it: and therefore that when a man hath slaine his neighbour wilfully, that is to say, either through malice, or in quareling, or for reuenge, or by laying waite for him: hee is so detested of God that he is not worthy to luee in the worlde. And in good sooth wee see the same by another Lawe, where god curseth whole countries for suffering of murderers. For it is saide there, that if a deade bodie bee founde, search must bee made with all diligence, to finde out the murderer. Why so? To the intent (saith hee) that the lande bee not defiled therewith. We see hereby that if Magistrates and Iudges shut their eyes and make no reckoning to punish a murder: it is as a comon defiling, which prouoketh Gods vengeance vpon the whole land. And therefore it standeth them on hande to consider that God setteth great store by mens lues. Againe if the doore of the wicked deede bee not founde: let the Iudges (saith hee) make solemne protestation, in this wise: We haue inquired diligently whence this murder should proceede, but wee cannot finde the doore thereof, and therefore we are cleare and guiltlesse of it before God. And moreover Gods will was that they should offer sacrifice for the same. Nowe then we see howe lothsome wilfull murders are before God. I call them all wilfull murders which are committed through trecherie or in rage, or howfoeuer else it bee where there was any enmitie or variance afore. Yea & although it be lawfull for men to kill their enemies in the warres that are good and holie: yet doeth the Scripture vse a manner of speech to shewe vs that GOD hath alwayes misliked of murdering. For there it is saide of a valiaunt man, howbeit without blaming of him, that hee defiled his handes. Is it so? Nay rather it is worthe of praise that a stoute fellowe being inured to the warres, should goe through with his dutie. For if hee offer no man any wrong, but behaue himselfe valiantly when hee cometh to the incounter, doeth that deserue blame? No: but as I saide afore, Gods meaning is to shewe vs, that we ought to tender our neighbours lues in such sort, as not to wishe their death, nor to further the same, vnlesse wee intende to violate his image. That is the thing in effect, which is heere set out vnto vs. Nowe then if God doe so abhorre the manslaughteres that are committed when men assaile vs, so as we seeme to haue iust cause to defend our selues: I pray you what is to be said to it whe men fall to quareling with their neighbours, & will needes shed bloud of set purpose? What meaneth this? Suppose we & Gods curse is not doubled vpon the lande, land, when such crimes are borne withall and maintained? It is said that if a murder bee let passe, and the doer of it scape vnknown, Gods wrath is thereby prouoked: and if the murderer be known, then is it a more heynous crime to let him scape vnpunished. But if a theefe lye in waite for a ma that mistrusteth no such thing, and setteth vpon him: is it not a plaine spiting of God, if that bee suffered? And if it be not any one man that is assaulted, but there are such ouer lustic mates as will say, let vs kill and slea, & when they haue their swordes out, they care not against how many they drawe, but make a common hauocke, and such slaughter as all is on a gore blood: are not the folkes that stirre vp such broyles, worse than the theeues and robbers in the woods? Men wil at leastwise mistrust theeues in a forest: but [who would thinke] that where there should be ciuill order, where Lawes [ought to] raigne, where there is a seate of Iustice: there men would fill all things with blood, and violate so many images of God as come in their way, & that the same should be suffered? I pray you is it not abewraying that wee bee loth that G O D should raigne among vs, or haue vs vnder his protection? Yes. Therefore let vs marke well what is said here concerning willfull murders, how there is no pardon for them, but God will haue them rooted out of the worlde and executed by Iustice, which haue violated his image. And why? To the intent wee shoulde alwayes beare in minde the thing that I speake of before, that is to wit, how greatly he loueth vs, and that forasmuch as he hath adopted vs to be his children, he will haue a continuall care of vs, and keepe vs as charly as the Apple of his eye, as he speaketh by his Prophet Zacharie. Now if it bee so that wee desire God (as the holy Ghost teacheth vs) to keepe vs as the Apple of his eye, that is to say, as the tenderest and delicatest part of him: I pray you ought not we to gather thereby, that seeing he loueth vs, he will haue vs also to loue one another, yea euen with more than brotherly loue? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to abstaine from all wrong and outrage. Moreouer whensoever any murder is committed, or whensoever any folke are so wicked and ciuel as to goe about to shed mans blood: let vs make account of them, not onely as enemies to men, but also as deadly enemies to God, for as much as he sheweth himselfe to bee their aduersarie, and telleth vs that he taketh it as an assaulting of him in his owne person, and in his owne Maicstie. That is the thing which wee haue to marke.

And herewithall wee must passe yet further. For we knowe how S. Iohn saith, that whosoever hateth his neighbor in his hart, is a murderer before God. True it is y<sup>e</sup> wee must in any wise keepe our handes cleane from all iniurie and outrage: but yet must our heart also be pure and cleane before God. If it bee not so: we shall be blamed, nor for drawing of our swordes, but for desiring to ouerthrowe our neighbour, and for labouring, so much as was in vs, to bring it to passe by ouerthwart meanes. Albeit that men cannot blame vs, yet doeth God condemne vs for murderers, yea though our hatred were so secret as wee neuer made countenance of it. For whereas S. Iohn saith, he that hateth his brother in his heart: it is alone as if he sleade, although the hatred appeare not, nor men can beare witness of it: yet are wee faulde, if our heart be infected with any rancour, or enmitie. Sith it is so, let vs beare well in minde, that our Lordes intent is to perswade vs to brotherly loue among our selues, and to agree together, in deuouring to helpe one another. For all mankind is knit together as it were into one bodie. And therefore let vs learne to abhorre all murder, as well which is committed against other folkes, as which is meant against our selues. Howbeit let vs learne to hate (that is to say to condemne) continually all murder, without laying litle or much in excuse of it: in so much that although wee were guiltie of it, yet wee should iudge against our selues if wee would iudge rightly. Will wee then condemne murder in another man? Let vs condemne hatred in our selues, by abstaining from all malice and reuengement, that our heartes may be tid of it. If we deale with such vprightnesse, then wil God dwell with vs and make vs to prosper.

But yet for all this, it is saide that the manslaughters which are not committed through malice, nor in rage, nor by quarelling, shall be pardoned: and not without cause. For as I tolde you, the crimes that are punishable, must be committed with a will and intent. Then if one shoote, and meaning to leuell at his marke doe hit a man by the way, he is not punishable: for euen the Lawes of man haue ordained so, and there is an example of it set downe in another place of this booke, where it is said that if a man bee cropping of a tree, and his Ax fall downe vpon one that is vnder the tree, he shall not be guiltie of the falling of his Ax vpon the head of him whom he perceiued not. And why? For it was God that did it (saith the text), whereas we say it was by chaunce or fortune: Because wee cannot conceiue that things happen otherwise than by chaunce. Yet see here howe it is saide to bee Gods doing: that is to say, it was the will of God who governeth all things, by his secret prouidence, that such a one should be taken out of the worlde. Yet notwithstanding, he that gaue the stripe vnawares, ought not to be punished as if he had killed one in anger and in a tray. Thus wee see heere what manslaughters are pardonable.

Howbeit, there are two things to be noted therewithall: the one is, that inquisition must be made of it: and the other is, that although such a one bee not to be taken as a felon, yet doeth God separate him from other men, & will haue him to bee as a prisoner for a time, to the intent he should be an example to others to shun murder the more, seeing that y<sup>e</sup> manslaughter which was committed vnwillingly is punished after that fashion. As touching inquisition and making of search, it is a notable point. For we see how men are abused with the things that are done in fauour of offenders: in so much that if any thing be alledged that may moue to pitie, and a countenance be set vpon the matter that the offender is verie forie: men must shut their eyes at him, and say, alas, what should a man do? And this is done daily, and woulde God that examples therof were not so common. Iustice is commonly abused; in so much that if there bee any cause or reason to be shewed that some mā may happen not to bee so faultie as he is accused to be: the same shall bee wrested to another mans defence, which is not worthy to haue any fauour at all. And why is that? For want of examination. And by that meane wicked men are styll maintained. For were there diligent examination made, and things sifted to the bottonie: men might soone discern: betweene them that are faultie, and them that are faultlesse. But what men are contented to shutte their eyes, and although they cannot but see, yet will they make countenance as though they knewe it not. And so are the wicked discharged. The matters lye open to the worlde, they may bee pointed out with ones finger, the euidence is too too apparant: and yet nothing can bee knowne. And why? Bicause men list not. O ye purblind folkes which cleare your eyes in such sort, yee shall be driuen in the ende, to knowe what place yee hold, & that he which ordeined you to be iudges, seeth for you, yea and that he seeth clearely, and writeth y things in his Registers which you forget and wilfully ouerslip, and he will put you in remembrance of them to your cost. For when so heynous offences are committed, our Lorde will not haue them let slip vnder colour of simplicitie or pretence of ignorance: but he will haue them sifted out, and information giuen of them, & the truth tried by all meanes possible, so as me may not say, where are we now? What is to be done? And when it cometh to Iudgement, he will haue y matter laid forth & handled plainly, so as the truth of it may be knowne: and after al this diligence vsed, he will haue sentence giuen according to y which is knowen. That is the first point: namely that wee suffer not faultes and crimes to slip for want of due inquisition and examination how the case standeth.

There is a second point which I haue touched already: and that is, y God would there should be some correction for such as commit manslaughter vnwares. And thereby he sheweth (as I said afore) that he longeth mankind dearely: in so much that if wee offend that way, although it be not of malice, but by chaunce (as they say,) & in such wise as the lawe which he hath ordeined, meaneth, & although we nient not so to do: yet neuerthelesse we must feele by experience & see with our eyes, howe deare mans life is vnto him. This is another thing which wee haue to marke vpon this place.

And herewithall let vs marke also, y God intended to preuent y dangers, (as we haue said) y the kinsfolk might not be prouoked: for we bee too much subiect to our passions, & therefore he purposed to cut off occasions & obiectes as they terme them. In dede it is a wicked imperfectio in me, & it is a vice worthie to be condemned, when I haue one y hath slaine my brother or my neighbour vnwillingly, or when I beare him any grudge. And why? For the poore mā is not blame worthy, bicause God acquitteth him, & there is no fault in him. And yet for all that, I can not finde in my heart to looke vpon him: but if he come towards, my heart is set against him, & I am moued at him. Therefore am I to blame. Neuerthelesse GOD seeing our frailtie, hath vouchsafed to beare with vs in y behalfe, & hath not left vs without a remedie for it. Now wee are warned thereby, to eschew the occasions of all euill to the vttermost of our power: & if God on his part haue vouchsafed to deliuer vs from such temptations, do not they ouerthrow themselves wilfully, which thrust themselves into them? Sure this lesson is verie profitable, & extendeth verie farr. For we see how a great nōber sicke not to sing out at randō & to offend God. And wherby? Through rashnes. To their owne seeming they be able to resist whatsoever cometh in their way: & thereupon they step forth boldly and without discretio, & they maruaile greatly y God should disappoint their ouerlustinesse, so as they neede not any thing els to make them to stumble, yea and to tumble into some grosse fault. Seeing then that we be ouer hardy in hazarding our selues against a number of temptations: let vs learne y God by giuing vs such a lawe, doth warne vs generally to walke in feare. It is true y if God call mee to any thing, all the daungers in the worlde must not hold me back nor stoppe me. For why? God calleth mee, and he will shield mee. But if I of mine owne foolish rashnesse will needes aduventure vpon a thing that God commaundeth mee not: if it fall out to my harme, what is the cause thereof but the ouerweening & presumptuousnes wherewith I was puffed vp? For I considered not mine owne frailtie, that I should haue humbled my selfe before God to haue walked in his feare. Then let vs marke well, that wee must not cast our selues ouer boldly in daunger, and promise our selues this and that as we see a number doe, which say, as for mee, I can well serue God: Although other men misbehaue themselves, yet may I lue vertuously euen among the wicked. It is true: but art thou sure y thou doest it? No: but this Iustie gallant that speaketh thus stoutly, intermingleth himselfe with the wicked and with their abominations. If he heare Gods name blasphemed and outrageously misused a hundred thousand times, he winketh at it and valeseth his bonnet: if he see any loosenesse and vnonest prances hee intermedleth himselfe with them: and if he happen not to giue his full consent to them, yet he withstandeth them not. Thus yee see how that vnder the colour of hardinesse me cast themselves into daungers which they ought to shunne, considering that God warneth them of them after that sort.

And herewithall Moses here setteth down the inquisition that was to be made, that is to say, Whether there were any hatred as that present time or before. Wherein he sheweth, y it is not ynough to heare a mans confession, and his profestio: y he did it not vpon any malice, wee must not stay there, there. For if the offenders may be beleueed; there shall neuer be anie changed, they will well ynough cleare themselves; and it is a common rule among them; but the iudge must be of wisdom to bowlt out things, & to seeke out the truth some where else than at the mouth of the offender. True it is that the confession of offenders ought to be take, but if a mā should tarie til they vter things of their owne accord, & condemne themselves: it were too great a mockerie. Therefore they must be straitened and constrained to say the truth, and triall must be made by other meanes, that men may be assured and vtterly out of doubt of it. And euen verie nature it selfe sheweth it vs, though there were no lawe written by Moses. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this place.

Whereas it is said that inquisition must be made whether there were any malice borne 10 no day or yesterday or of any time afore: it is a manner of speache that is rise in the Hebrew tongue, whereby is meant whether any hatred or rancour were perceived to haue bin betwixt them at any time before. And why? For it is to be presumed y there is any hatred, the partie goeth to worke w malice. And contrariwise, if it be found: y there was no quarell, no ill will, no hatred, no rancour: can it be saide that the manslaughter was committed of malice and set purpose? No. And hereby we be put in minde, that the life and conuersation of a man ought to direct and leade vs to the finding out of the matter. True it is that we ought alway to iudge of matters without respect of persons, and we must euer haue an eye to the deede & to the desert of the case as they terme it: but that is for the time coming, I meane not that diffinitiu sentence shoulde bee giuen according to that which hath bene known by a man aforesimes: but howe shoulde men deale to come to the truth of things done? Let them 40 consider what manner a one the man hath bin. I see that one is a despiser of GOD, I see a lewde ynthrister that hath neither faith nor honestie in him, I see a drunkarde that is full of surrie and passeth no more to murder a man than to cutte the throate of a Capon or a Henne: I see this: also I see he is a quarreller, and is euer working off some mitchicfe or other, yea I see and can point one with my finger that seeketh to bring all goodnesse to decay and to put all things 50 out of order: I see al this: now I pray you is not this a good inducement to leade mee to the truth of the matter, by comparing the faulte that hee shall haue committed, with his former life? As for example, a man is founde at some murder, or apprehended for some other misdeede that he is charged with; and because there is not sufficient witness, he will denie that hee knows any thing of it: notwithstanding, by the markes that God sheweth mee of him, I see his 60 whole lyfe is as an euidence against him. If I were to take information of the whole matter, and had a doozen witnesses that could say vnto mee, this is the murderer: I could not more clearly perceiue the murder, than by beholding that the partie is a rank naughtipacke, a despiser of God, such a one as hath neither faith nor honestie, a curthrote and robber, of a spirefull stomacke, and full of poison, so as he is vtterly out of all square. I pray you is it meete I should be blinded still when I see such proofes? Now then let vs marke well, that whereas Moses speakes here of the time past: it is to shew vs that God will helpe vs to the knowledge of matters and of the truth of them, so wee on our side shut not the gate, nor quenche not the light when it is offered vs. Loe what wee haue to beare in minde.

And on the other part let vs marke also, that if wee haue known a man to be of a good conscience, and seene none other signes in him but of the feare of GOD, of honestie, and of vpright dealing: wee must not lightly take vpon vs to charge him with any crime. For to what purpose shoulde it serue (such as haue lyued as becommeth them) to haue giuen good example all their lyfe long: if euerie ill report shoulde bee admitted against them at the first dash, so as they shoulde be condemned without further inquirie? So then let vs marke, that God meant here to restraîne vs from iudging vnadvisedly, and from thinking amisse on such as haue liued aright.

Nowe for the sume and conclusion of all, here is the promise that Moses maketh: that is to wit, That the people shall prosper in the lande that is giuen them to inherite, and that God will blesse them for euer, and them also that come of their children. And this doctrine is verie ryse: namely that if wee serue GOD he will blesse vs, as though our seruice were recompensed. But yet wee must not imagine hereupon as the Papistes doe, that wee deserue any thing at all at Gods hand, & that he yeeldeth vs like for like, as though he were bound thereunto or as though there were some hire or wages due to vs: wee must not enter into such dotages: but wee must consider y the cause why God promisseth reward to such as serue him, is to harden the by doing the to vnderstand y it is not lost labor to serue God. By y means then God intendeth to encourage vs to serue him and to do well: and not to make vs proude or to put vs in beliefe that wee deserue aught. Then let vs marke, that whereas God promisseth vs reward: it is for that hee had earst giuen vs the grace to serue him. Whereof commeth it that wee lue as becommeth vs? Commeth it of our owne freewill? Commeth it of our owne selfsmoothing? No: but of Gods gouerning of vs by his holy spirit. Now then, although it were a recompence: yet ought not the same to be attributed vnto vs: but rather to y grace that God hath put into vs, which 1. Cor. 15, 10 grace he crowneth.

But there is yet one point more: which is, that although God blesse vs and make vs to prosper: yet haue not wee serued him as we ought to do, for all that: but he should alwayes rather finde somewhat wherefore to punish vs, if he list to vs: rigour towards vs. Therefore let vs not thinke that euer we haue so discharged our due, as that God should in any thing be bound towards vs. But forasmuch as he beareth with vs, and imputeth not our sinnes and offences to vs, but winketh at them & taketh all in good worth as at his childrens hands : therefore doeth he vouchsafe to reward our workes. And so wee see that all such as attribute any deserte to themselves, are surely before ed with fond selfwening, & must be faine to mislike of themselves, & not to make any account of their owne wretchednesse. And foolishly if we wisit what our workes are, wee should alwayes haue cause to sigh, and to craue pardon at Gods hand : and that will make our workes to be accepted at his hand, notwithstanding they be vnperfect. And why? Because he beareth with vs as with his children. And so he yeeldeth vs, not that which he oweth vs, nor that which we haue deserued: but that which it pleaseth him to giue vs of his meere liberalitie. Neuertheless he giueth such recompence to our workes, to the intent wee should be the willinge to serue him, and vnderstand that our seruing of him shall not be in vaine: but that we must imploy our selues for him as for our maister and prince, and giue our selues wholly to his seruice, though it be not with such perfection as were requisite.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, that being humbled we may be drawn to true repentance, and therewithall knowe to what ende wee are chosen to bee his people, namely to the ende wee should worship him as our King and obey his lawes, not onely in our ward deedes, but also with true and heartie affection: and liue in such wise vnder him, as we may moreouer be linked to our neighbours with brotherly loue, and by that meanes bee assured more and more that his adopting of vs to bee his children is not in vaine. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The xxx. Sermon, which is the twelfth vpon the fourth Chapter, and the first vpon the fifth Chapter.

44 This is the Lawe which Moses did set before the children of Israel.

45 These are the Couenants, Ordinances, and Lawes, which Moses shewed to the children of Israel, after they were come out of Egypt,

46 Beyond Iordan in the valley against Bethphogor, in the Lande of Schon King of the Amorrhites which dwelt in Hesebon, whom Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come out of Egypt,

47 And possessed his land, and the land of Og King of Basan, two kings of the Amorrhites which were beyond Iordan towards the Sunrising:

48 From Aroer which is vpon the banke of the riuer Arnon, vnto the Hill of Schon, which is Hermon:

49 And all the plaine beyond Iordan Eastwarde, vnto the Sea that is in the plaine vnder Aidoth of Phasga.

AND Moses called all Israel and said vnto them. Heare O Israel the ordinances and Lawes which I set before you this day, that ye may learne them and keepe them in deede.

2 The Lord our God made a couenant with vs in Horeb.

3 The Lorde our God made not this couenant with our fathers, but with vs which are all here aliuie at this day.

Or as much as it is hard rokeep men in subiectio to GOD: therefore after hee had chosen him a people, he vouchsafed to rule the, not for once and away, but euen so long time till they ought to haue bin well inured to his yoke. And after the same manner doeth he deale dayly with his Church. One worde ought to be ynough to make vs vnderstand the trueth of our God. But forasmuch as wee beleue not so speedily as were requisite: & when wee haue begunne, wee start away againe: and finally forget the things that he had taught vs: therefore he thinketh it not ynough to haue tolde vs once what is needefull for our saluation, but he doeth also put vs oft in minde of it, & printeth it in our heartes as much as is possible. That is the cause why Moses rehearseth in this rest, y<sup>e</sup> he not onely deliuered them y<sup>e</sup> law in Horeb, but also taught it them new againe, after he had gone about with them a fortie yeres or fast vpon it, yea and ceased not or al that tyme to see the things continually before them which GOD had earst commaunded him to vtter vnto them, as hath bin touched already heretofore. But the diligence of Moses is not superfluous in that hee sayth, that being come to the side of Iordan, and hauing vanquished Sehon king of the Amorrites, and Og the King of Basan his neighbour, hee did sit put the people in minde of Gods Lawes and ordinances, 10 that they might stand to them and put them in vre, and that if they had not had sufficient teaching already, they might atleastwise euen then know Gods truth and sticke to it. That is the matter which Moses meant by this text. And here he setteth downe expressly: the Lawes, Couenants, Statutes, and ordinances, to expresse the better (as I haue tolde you heretofore) that God taught not his people by halues, ne gaue them a doctrine that was darke, short, or vnperfect: but such a lawe as comprehended all that was for their benefite & welfare, soas if they sticke therunto, they should not neede to seeke any further, for they should haue wherewith to direct themselues in all poyntes and all respectes. Yea verily, for the lawe is a full doctrine accordingly also as the worde hath his originall thereof. Againe there are Couenants: which is as much to say, as y<sup>e</sup> God couenanted and indenteth with men, so as he neither forgetteth nor leauech any thing out, that may make for the maintenance of the couenant betwixt him and vs, in that it hath pleasid him to adopte vs for his children and Church, to take vs to himselfe. Whatsoeuer con-cerneth the spirituall alliance betwene him and vs, is comprehended vnder the worde Couenant, because they be articles. For when men intende to couenant, they set downe articles as well on y<sup>e</sup> one side as on the other. We see: then how God protesteth here, that the Lawe hath enough to teach men withall, so they hold them selues to it.

Afterward followe Statutes and ordinances. It is a wonder to see how painefull GOD is in teaching of vs, and how hee telleth vs that he hath not omitted any thing: and yet for all that, our wites are so fugitive, that wee still couet some better thing than wee finde in Gods word. This diuelish curiositie hath reigned at all times in the worlde. And we see that euen at this day, do what wee can, this cursed desire cannot be our-mastered, but that men will still needes be wiser than God would haue them to be. And why?
For when his worde is preached vnto vs, there is no cause for vs to finde fault that hee hath not shewed vs all that is for our behoofe. Yet notwithstanding, wee be uelkith still, and would faine haue this and that, besides that which God hath shewed vs. Seeing then that such faultnesse bewrayeth it selfe in vs: it standeth vs so much the more on hand to remember the counsel that is guen vs here: that is wit, that if wee will suffer God to bee our maister, wee shall finde all perfection of wisdome in his schoole. For his lawe is of sufficient abilitie to make vs wise.

And againe, (as I haue sayd heretofore) it containeth all the poyntes that serue to vnite vs vnto our GOD: wherein consisteth our whole happinesse and glorie. Moreover it sheweth vs the rule of well doing, so as we need not to seeke any where else what GOD alloweth, for wee haue there his statutes and ordinances. Then may wee well knowe and assure our selues that our lyfe shall please GOD, when wee passe not the boundes that hee hath set vs. But if wee ade any thing at al to it, let vs not thinke that GOD alloweth that as right vncoufnesse or as a good thing: for hee forgate not any thing that was necessaric or behoofesfull. And these two poyntes are well worthe to be noted. For they serueto make vs to set the more store by the doctrine that is daily set forth to vs in the name of GOD. Sith wee see it is the perfect wise-dome, ought wee not to apply all our wittes to it, and to holde vs to it? Sith wee see that GOD foresloweth not, but continueth to teach vs dayly: ought not wee also on our side to bee attentive and diligent to profite vnder him? And though wee bee not so well giuen to it as the first as were meete wee shoulde: ought wee not to inforce our selues all our lyfe long to know Gods will still more and more, till wee bee quite rid of all ignoraunce, which shall bee when wee be taken out of this world, and not before? Surely that which Moses did, ought to serue vs for a rule and example at this day. For hee did it not at aduerture. And besides that, GOD ordayned him to bee as a lookingglasse to all prophetes, and to all such as haue charge to teache in Gods Church. Let vs vnderstand therefore that GOD will not haue vs to learne his truth in one day, as though one lesson were enough for vs: but hee will haue the things often reheared to vs which wee haue heard, that they may tary with vs and bee so rooted in our hartes, as wee may no more alleadge in excuse of our selues, O I haue not yet bin wel instructed. God then on his part is alwayes ready, so as wee cannot erre except we doe it wiltingly, willingly, and wilfully as it were.

But here is expresse mention made of: the Temple of Theor, to shewe that although the people had an eyfore there to turne them away to superstition: yet had they a remedie for it also, inasmuch as GOD called earnestly vpon the by his worde, that they shoulde not meddle with the idolatries of the heathen. In deede it was a hard chastisement for them, to bee driuen to haue the temple of an idoll continually in their sight. It was as if God meaning to haue spyted them, should haue sayd, I haue called you to possesse a lande that is allotted to my seruice, where yee shoulde haue seene nothing y<sup>e</sup> should haue offered you: for my Sanctuarie should haue bin set vp among you, I should haue bin worshiped purely, according to my law, y<sup>e</sup> land should not haue bin defiled with idoll superstitions, al such things should haue bin wiped out, so as ye should haue heard nothing sownde in your cares but my prayers. But now ye bee here in a corner of a cuntry, where ye beholde the temple

Colof. 1. 2 8.
& Deut. 6.1. Cor. 1. 9.
10. 12.

temple of an idoll, and where shamfull abominations are committed. Therefore it is as a vengeance which yee be faine to suffer for your finnes, because yee be not worthis to enter into the land that I promised you. Thus yee see how it was Gods will to chastise his people, whē hee did let them dwell by the temple of Pheor. Lykewise if wee in these dayes bee mingled with idolaters, so as wee bee faine to looke vpon the filthyesse which they commit, and vpon their peruerting of all religion: let vs vnderstand that by that meanes God punisheth vs, or at leastwise humbleth vs because of our finnes. And we ought to bee sorry, not onely for the offences that are committed by the vnbeleeuers, but also because wee may well perceiue that wee be not worthis to see the whole worlde reformed, so as there might bee one accorde and consent of harmonie in religion, and GOD bee purely worshipped euery where: I say wee bee not worthis to see it. Nowe then if superstitions bee neere vs, and wee bee driuen to beholde the markes of them, or to heare any peece of them: Let vs impute it to our owne finnes.

But yet how couer the worlde went, GOD failed not to giue the people of Israell a good remedie. For when the lawe was taught them so by Moses: it was as if GOD had separated those that were his, from the blinde wretches that went astray in their superstitions. And hercupon wee haue to note, that although the whole worlde bee peruerted, and great confusion is to bee seene, and all is full of error and corruption: yet notwithstanding we must take Gods worde for our guide, and that must strengthen vs to defy all superstitions and idolatries. And if wee bee so full of vanitie, as to fletee too and fro after that God hath giuen vs his worde: there will bee no excuse for vs. For as I haue sayd afore, Gods declaring of his will vnto vs, ought to bee a sufficient bridle for vs. Though all the worlde went the contrary way, and one sorte followed their owne fancies, and another sorte had some lykelyhood of religion: yet ought none of those thinges to wey with vs, when wee haue once heard the voyce of our GOD, and thereby gotten knowledge of his will. And therefore let vs learne to make this certeine and inflexible doctrine auailable, that it may drawe vs from all wicked opinions, from all errors, and from the thinges which the diuell hath forged and men inuented in the worlde. Thus ye see what wee haue to remember, when Moses maketh mention heere of Pheors temple.

Now herewithall hee addeth also, that this [was done] after their ouercoming of the two kinges, Og king of Basan, and Sehon king of the Amorrites or of Heshbon. And this circumstance serued to blame the people, if they yielded not themselves obedient vnto God. Wee knowe that the more GOD sheweth vs, the more ought wee to bee prouoked to loue and feare him. God hath shewed himselfe beneficiall to vs: nowe ought not the same to drawe vs the more vnto him? Yes. For if wee bynde a mortall man vnto vs by our wel doing: he shall bee taken and deemed vnthankfull, if hee acknowledge not the good that wee haue done him: and howe much lesse are we to be excused, if we doe not so to the liuing God? Then let vs beare in minde that Moses maketh expresse mention here, of the two kinges that had bin ouercome: to the intent that the people shoulde haue considered thus with themselves. Goe to, we haue had here two excellent victories. Heretofore when wee woulde haue attempted it against the forbidding of our GOD: wee were stoutely beaten back, there was no strength nor courage in vs, our enemies came lyke Waspes or Hornets to sting out our eyes, according to the similitude which hath bin set downe heere tofore. But now are two strong and mightie kinges ouercome, without any cost of ours: So as GOD hath giuen them into our handes. Who was the cause of these two victories? was it not God, who directed and ruled all? Seeing then that he hath pitied vs, and begonne to performe the promise which he made to our fathers, and giuen vs so good a handsell of it already: ought wee not to indeuer to giue our selues in such wise vnto him, as wee may be wholly at his commaundement? Should we not put our selues into his hand, which hee hath shewed to be so mightie for the loue of vs? Behold (say I) how Moses meant the thinges that hee reherseth concerning the discomiture of Sehon and Og: namely to blame the people for their vnthankfulness, if they yclded not themselves quietly to y<sup>e</sup> seruice of their God, which had bound the so greatly vnto him.

But now must we also apply this doctrine to our vse. When soeuer wee perceiue any sloth, or coldnes, or rebelliousnes in our selues, so as our fleshe falleth to struing, and wee labor not to Godward with so cheareful minde and lustie courage as were expedient: wee must enter into account of the benefites that we haue receiued at his hand, [And thinke thus w<sup>ith</sup> our selues:] wretched creature how happeneth it that thou art so loth to sticke to thy GOD, seeing hee hath shewed thee his will? consider what thou hast of him, be thinke thee of the benefites which hee hath bestowed vpon thee vnto this houre. Let euery man examine himselfe how much hee is bounde vnto GOD, that wee may bee the more inflamed to serue him. And let vs vnderstand, not onely generally that hee hath created vs: but also that besides his redeeming of vs by the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christ, as hee redeemed the Israellites out of Egypt: and besides his drawing of vs vnto him by his grace: we haue also had the doctrine of the Gospell, which was all one as to take vs vnder his protection, and lice sheweth it vs daily by effect. How many helpes and succours haue wee had in our infirmities? Should not Satan haue ouercome vs a thousand times, if our God had not reached out his hand to rescue vs? Surely we should be vtterly ouerthrowen. Yea we should not only be borne downe w<sup>ith</sup> temptations, but we should also be vtterly ouerwhelmed, if we were not for such rescue as I speake of. Seeing then that our Lord ceaseth not to con-firme vs dayly in his grace: Let vs on our side looke y wee take occasion thereby, to seru him the more earnestly, as wee see is spoken of here.

Nowe proceeding herewith, Moses addeth y he spake thus to y people of Israel, saying: Hearke to the Lawe which the Lord hath caused to beset before ye, that ye may learne it & keepe it. Here againe Moses rehearseth y preface which wee haue scene heretofore: y is to wit, y Gods law was not giue, only to y end y men should heare it & know what it is: but to y end we shoulde be reformed, & that God might haue prooffe of the subiection y we yeld vnto him. To be short, we see that Gods doctrine consisteth in practise, & that we must shew by our deedes that we haue not bin taught it in vaine. Here Moses saith first of all, Hearke the Lawe which I set forth to you in your eares so learne it. As if he should say, Gods meaning is not that the doctrine which is preached vnto vs in his name & by his commission, should fall to the ground: but y wee should receiue it diligently, & let our whole mindes vpon it. For what is the cause why we profite so slenderly in Gods worde, but for y wee busie our selues to much about worldly matters? If we come to a Sermon, or if wee reade the holy Scripture, it is but as it were for fashions sake, we inuour not to doe as wee ought to do, y we might obserue the things y are told vs. Wherefore let vs see that we become diligent schollers, while God is so gracious to vs as to teach vs by his word. And for the same cause doth Moses say that hee sette it forth in their eares. In deed this manner of speech were harsh in our tongue: neuertheless it importeth, that God speaketh not to vs in a darke or strange language: but that he vttereth himselfe familiarly, so farre forth as is requisite. Seeing then y God commeth down to vs, to the end we might haue his wil familiarly vttered vnto vs: what excuse will there be for vs, if his word be lost, or if it slippe away, or if we take not hold of it to fare the better by it? True it is y forasmuch as we be grosse and ignorant, we shall euer finde much darkenesse in Gods word, so as it shalbe to high & profound for vs: but who is to blame for it? Let vs marke then y al such as complayne y Gods word is an vnknown speach vnto the: are here rebuked of lying, & they do good wrong in slandering him, forasmuch as they deny and despise y grace which Moses protesteth to haue bin offered to y Israclites in the setting forth of the lawe. For he saith y at y time God spake to the peoples eares by the mouth of him. Sith it is so: the doctrine ought to haue bin familiar enough to them. And much lesse cause haue we nowadayes to alledge this shift, that wee vnderstand not the things y are contained in the holy scripture. For God speaketh merrily enough and familiarly enough vnto vs. It is long of none but our selues y we haue not our eares bored to heare him. And so let vs marke well, that there remaineth nothing for vs to doe, but to be attentive that we may profite by the doctrine.

But yet herewithall we must resorte to that which I haue touched afore namely that it must be kept and thoroughly followed. for if we doe no more but only lyke well of Gods worde, & yelde recorde vnto it that it is good, true, and holy: God shall be greatly beholden to vs for it. What is to be done then? Behold, God will try whether he be our maister or no. For the thing whereby to rule our lyfe, is not onely to inquire what he saith vnto vs: but also to giue ouer our own desires and affections, and to desire nothing else but to please him, and to be governed by him and by his righteousnesse. When wee be at that poynnt, then is it a good prooffe that God hath such authoritie ouer vs as hee deserueth. But vntill wee be come to that poynnt, we shall neuer knowe what it is to haue profited in the doctrine. Therefore let this worde Doe or Performe runne alwayes in their mindes which heare the worde of God. How now, let them say? Beholde God hath graunted vs the grace to be taught. And to what ende? not to the ende wee should but only hearken to it to say, yea mary, y is well sayd, this is good: but to the end that our whole lyfe should be reformed, and that forasmuch as it is a good and sure rule, wee shoulde no more goe astray as wee haue done, and as the ignorant wretches do, which are wandered out of the right way, and haue not the teaching that wee haue, whose the doctrine ought so to mortify, as God may reigne ouer vs, and wee be subiect vnto him. Thus yee see in effect what Moses meant by protesting to the people in this preface, that his setting forth of the Lawe vnto the, was not to the intent they should but only heare it and haue their eares beaten with it: but to the intent they should also embrace it and keepe it.

And for confirmation hereof hee alledged, that God made his covenants with the people in Moise Horeb, the better to bring them to feare, and to obey him for euer. For if GOD should but onely exact his dew of vs: yet were wee sufficiently bound to cleaue to him, and to stick to his commandements. But nowe seeing it hath pleased him of his infinite goodnesse, to come as it were to a common treatie, and to binde himselfe: interchangeably vnto vs, whereas there is no cause why hee shoulde be bounde: so as hee couenanteth to be our father and Sauiour, and to receiue vs into his flocke, to be his inheritance, that wee may liue vnder his protection, and hee setteth the euerlasting lyfe before vs: Seeing hee doth all these things for vs, ought not our heertes to yeeld, though they were of stone? Seeing that the creatures doe see that the liuing God abaceth himselfe so farre, as to vouchsafe to enter into treatie with the, as if he should say, Go to, let vs see at what poynnt wee be: in deede there is an infinite distance betwixt you and mee, I might commaunde you what I thinke good without hauing any further to do with you, neither are you worthe to come ny me, or to haue any acquaintance w him y can commaund you what he listeth, without making any other protestation than only this, This will I haue ye do, this is my minde: & yet for all y I forbear mine own right, I offer my selfe to you to be your leader & sauiour, I am willing to gouern you, & you shalbe as my little housholde, I will be your

if you will bee contented with my worde : and besides this , thinke not that my making of my couenant with your fathers , was of purpose to gayne any thing at your handes : for I haue no neede nor want of any thing , and if I had , what could yee doe for mee ? but I seeke your welfare and your saluation : and therefore I am here ready to enter into couenant wth you , and to binde my selfe to you for mine owne part : Saying that the liuing God stoopeth so lowe , I pray you must wee not needes bee too vnthankfull , if wee yeeld not to humble our selues vnder him , and forsake all pride and statelynesse : So then , it is not without cause that Moses speaketh here , of the couenant that God made with his people , to the ende that his goodnesse and grace might bee chiefly knowen . And if this tooke place in the time of the Lawe , there is much greater reason that it should take place at this day . For our Lordes couenancing was not onely with  $\ddot{y}$  Iewes , nor for that one time onely : but when hee sent his onely sonne , then did hee shewe himselfe much more fully to bee our father and Sauiour than hee had done afore , and hee did it after as sweete and friendly a manner as could be , so as it is all one as if hee had euen opened his bowels vnto vs . Seeing then that God hath giuen vs his owne hearte in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ , and we heare how Christ protesteth that hee will not henceforth call vs his seruantes but his friends , because hee hath imparted himselfe vnto vs so familiarly : I pray you must not the diuell needes haue bewitched vs , if wee bee not moued to yeelde our selues wholly vnto him , and to forsake our selues and all our owne affections : Therefore wh<sup>o</sup> wee feele any naughtinesse in vs that keepeth vs backe from seruing God , if wee finde any slothfulness in vs , if wee bee fallen too fast a sleepe in this world : then to waken vs vp , and to cause vs to magnify God , let vs also minde the couenant which our Lord hath made with vs .

Now hereupon Moses addeth , It was not with your fathers that God made the couenant , but with vs , euen with vs that are all aliue at this day . This sentence may haue a dubble vnderstanding . For it may be taken as though Moses made a comparison , to shewe the better that the people which liued at that time , might haue bin the more inflamed to serue God , because they had receiued more grace than their fathers . And for the same purpose also doth hee say in Exodus , I haue not imparted this name of mine to your fathers . God speaking there to Moses , telleth him that hee had not manifested himselfe so playnly to be God , vnto Abraham , Izaak , and Iacob , as hee did commaund to be done by Moses . Hereby hee meanch that the people ought to be  $\ddot{y}$  more attentue as now , because God reuizeth himselfe to them after an vnaccustomed manner . And so the meaning of this text might bee that God made not the lyke couenant with our fathers . True it is that God spake to his seruantes Abraham , Izaak , and Iacob , and instructed them sufficiently . And it is sayd expresly in the eighteenth of Genesis , Shall I hide from my seruant Abraham , what I intend to doe vpon Sodom and Gomor ? No : for I know hee will teach his household my decrees , ordinances , iudgements , and lawes . Yee see here that Abraham did sufficiently instruct his household and that not after a slender fashion , but in Gods iudgements , statutes , and ordinances , so as it must needes bee sayd that hee had Gods lawe well printed in his heart . But yet for all that , it was a benefit not to be held skorne of , when God sent his Lawe to the people in two tables , and vouchsafed that there should bee wherewith to instruct them continually , and also that the same things should bee recorded for vs Iykewise . The thing therefore which wee may gather vpon this text is this protestation which Moses maketh to the people , as if hee should say : my friends , consider the benefit which God bestoweth vpon you this day , which ( verily ) hee bestowed not vpon our fathers . For hee gaue not them the lawe in writing as he hath done to vs , neither vttered hee things vnto the by percelmeale . True it is that he taught them sufficiently and as much as was requisite for their saluation : but behold , wee all this day are come a step higher than they were : and therefore ought wee to come the neerer vnto him , seeing that hee is so come downe vnto vs . That is Moses meaning if we take the text after the fore sayd maner .

Iykewise might a man say to vs at this day , that God hath not delt with our fathers as hee hath dealt with vs . And so meant our Lord Iesus Christ when hee sayd to his disciples , many kings & prophets haue desired to see the things that you see , and to heare the things that are preached vnto you , and yet haue not had their wishe . Seeing then that God of his infinite mercie hath vouchsafed to preferre vs before the Patriarkes and prophets : according also as it is sayd , that the Prophets serued more for our times , than for their owne : thereby wee ought to learne to resort vnto him , & to giue our selues wholly to his doctrine .

Howbeit if all things bee well considered : although the matter before rehearsed be very profitable , and that the same exhortation be oftentimes made in the holy scripture : yet if all the woordes be well weyed , Moses meant that God made not his couenant with those that had heard the Lawe at the first giuing of it fourth ,  $\ddot{y}$  is to say , not only with them ; but also with those that outliued them , and succeeded in their place after their decease . So to bee shorte , Moses intended to shewe here , that the Lawe was not mortall , to continue onely during the liues of such as had the first hearing of it : but that it was a doctrine which should continue in force and authoritie for euer . The Lorde our God ( saith hee ) made not his couenant with our fathers : that is to say , hee meant not that onely our fathers should bee his people , and so<sup>l</sup> to binde himselfe in such fort vnto them ,  $\ddot{y}$  his law should serue but for a fortie or fiftie yeeres : but hee hath made his couenant Iykewise with vs , and with those that were yet vborne when the lawe was giuen fourth . Although then that yee were not at mount Horeb , ne sawe the fire vpon the hill : yet notwithstanding assure your selues that your God did adopt you at the same time vnto himselfe , and comprised you lykewise in the couenant that hee made . Therefore it behooueth you to keepe his lawe , because it was set forth to last for euer , and to continue from age to age , and to be preached vnto the worldes end . That is the true and proper meaning of Moses . And hereof wee may gather a good lesſon : which is , that although we were not at the first setting abroad of the Gospell , nor sawe the things that are reported to vs of the lawe : yet must not Gods word forgoe his authoritie wth vs . And why ? True it is that Gods raising vp of Moses was a speciall prerogative to the people that liued in that time : but yet must not the authoritie of the Lawe bee impeached for all that : for it containeth Gods truth , which indureth for euer , and is not variable nor transitorie after the maner of men . It is sayde that men are lyke a flower or as the grasse y whichereth and dryeth away out of hand : but Gods truth endureth for euer . And this truth which is vchangable and vnuariable , is contained in the Lawe . True it is that the Lawe as concerning the ceremonies is quite abolished : but as concerning the substance of it , & the doctrine y which is cōteined in it , it keepeth his force for euer and neuer decayeth . Nowe let vs make that although wee were not in the time of Moses , yet is it not for vs to despise the things that are reported to haue bin done [at that time ,] or which are contayned in the lawe . And why ? For hee spake them to vs . Hee spake not onely to the multitude that was assembled at mount Horeb : but also generally to the whole worlde . Now if this bee verified of the lawe : much more reason is it that it should bee so of the Gospell . For as I sayd , the lawe , as concerning the shadowes and figures , is gone to decay : but in the Gospell there is no such lyke thing . For here our Lord maketh his newe and euerlasting couenant : it is a couenant that indureth from age to age [without ceasing .] What is to be done then , when the Gospell is preached ? Wee must assure our selues that the sonne of G O D is come into the worlde : not onely to teache those wth whome hee was conuerſant when he was a mortal man : but also to purchase them vnto Gods his father , and to call the world to saluation , by giuing his Apostles commission to found fourth their voyces through the whole worlde , that euen those might bee made partakers of his doctrine which neuer heard them : which doctrine wee also must receiue still at this day , as if Iesus Christ himselfe were still among vs , or as if the Apostles spake to vs with their owne mowthes . That (say I) is the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this place . And therefore let vs not make any alteration in Gods Church , or attempt to inuouate any thing in his worde , forasmuch as we knowe that hee will haue it to holde on continually in one equall course and trayne . For seeing hee hath giuen vs his Gospell , and stablished a certaine gouernment in the time of the Apostles and in the primitive Church : it behooueth vs to come to the same , and to stay there . If wee doe otherwise : it is all onc as if wee would make Gods worde mortall and corruptible as wee our selues are . Wherefore let vs learne , that although the worlde bee variable , so as there bee turnes and returnes euery day , and there is not any of vs all which hath not a number of opinions running in his head : yet must wee not looke to haue the libertie to doe now one thing and now another . Why so ? For God hath not made his couenant with our fathers , but with vs that are alieue this day . Then let vs vnderstand that as long as wee bee in this world , God gouerneth vs here and theweth vs the way , to the end wee should not bee as wandering Pilgrims roming vp and downe , to gad after our owne lustes : but bee guided as it were by his hand . To be short , whereas Moses sayth here , vs that are all alieue this day : it serueth to shewe that men must not of all their life long inuent any newe lawe , nor haue one to day and another to morrowe . For why ? Our lyfe dependeth vpon Gods Lawe , and that ought to content vs : therefore let vs but onely profite in that , and haue an eye to the things that tend thereunto .

Furthermore , no doubt but that Moses vpbraideth the people here with their vnthankfulness , if they should not dedicate their liues to the seruice of G O D . As if hee should say , By what meanes lue wee ? Is it not because our Lorde hath placed vs in this world ? Againe , seeing that the lyfe which wee haue cometh of him , ought wee not to bestowe it in his seruice ? Ought it not to bee wholly consecrated vnto his wil : Thus then ye see how Moses toucheth vs such as runne alray and follow not Gods worde . But yet herewithall wee must beare in minde the thing which I haue touched afore : that is to wit , that wee haue not a doctrine of two or three dayes continuance : but that wee must bee confirmed in it as long as wee lue . When wee haue once receiued the things that are contained in y holy scripture : we must in deuer to profite in them : and to goe forewarde still in such wise , as wee may still growe in them vntill God take vs out of the world : assuring our selues that he will keepe couenant with vs , so as he for his part wil not bee vnfaithfull nor vnconstant , but steadfast in his purpose . Seeing that hee is so : let vs bee the lyke , and so long as wee lue , let vs haue none other respect but to streke to him , euen in such wise as hee theweth vs by his word . For wee must not goe about to knit and linke our selues to our G O D by our owne fancies : but looke as hee cometh to vs , so must wee goe to him , and when wee bee there , wee must beware that wee keepe vs there . Thus ye see what wee haue to gather vpon this text , that wee may bee the better disposed to receiue the instruction that shall bee giuen vs hereafter , concerning Gods Lawe and commaundements .

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good G O D with acknowledgement of our

On Wednesday the xij. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the second vpon the fifth Chapter.

4 The Lord God talked with you face to face vpon the mountaine, out of the middes of the fire.

5 The same time I stood betweene the Lord and you, to shewe you the word of the Lord. For yee were afraid at the presence of the fire, and went not vp into the mount: And hee said, 6 I am the Lord thy God which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, from the house of bondage.

7 Thou shalt haue none other Gods in my fight,

EE haue seene heretofore howe Moses tooke great payne to make the people perceiue the maiestie that is in Gods word, that they might receiue it with all reuerence. For although men protest enough that they be willing to serue God: (for euen nature drieth them thereunto:) yet can they not submit themselves to his word, notwithstanding that that is the true prooffe whereby to knowe whether wee be subiect to GOD or no. But therein appeareth the rebelliousnesse of the worlde. For albeit that they graunt that Gods word is to bee receiued without gainesaying: yet shall yee skarily finde one among a hundred, that humbly himselfe in good earnest, to yeelde it the authoritie which it ought to haue. And why is that? Because wee conceiue not the maiestie of GOD which is vttered there.

Yee see then that it is not for naught that Moses hath tolde vs so often heretofore, that Gods worde ought to beare such a maiestie towardes vs, as all creatures ought to quake at it. And now againe hee addeth another confirmation of the same matter, saying, that God talked with the people face to face in the mount, out of the midst of the fire. As if hee should say, yee haue now no cause at all to doubt, whether the doctrine that I deliuer vnto you bee of God or of men. For it is warranted enough and more than enough: God hath declared himselfe to you by visible and apparant signes, so as yee cannot but knowe that it is hee which spake to you. Now wee see Moses meaning,

But before wee goe any further, here a question might be put, how it may be sayd that God spake face to face, seeing that men cannot comprehend his infinite glorie: and with what eye can wee beholde Gods substance? Wee be so weakefighted, that if God should cast but one little beame of his brightnesse vpon vs, by and by wee should bee altogether dafled and confounded. Agayne, wee knowe how it is sayde that wee cannot beholde God face to face, vntill wee be renewed, which shall not be till the last day. For as now (sayth Saint Paule) 1 Cor. 13. 12. wee see but as in a glasse, and in parte, and darkly.

Moreouer hee sayth in another place, that as now the Gospell representeth Gods maiestie in such wise vnto vs, as wee may see him there: 2 Cor. 3. 15. but the lawe was darke, and there hung a veile before it, which hindered the fathers from knowing God in such sorte and so familiarly as wee doe nowadayes. But all this agreeth very well. For if the Lawe bee compared with the Gospell: it is certaine that the thing shall bee founde to bee true, which Saint Paule speaketh heere. For God declared not himselfe so familiarly at that time, as hee doth to vs by meanes of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is his liuely image. Therefore at this day the great treasures of Gods wisdom are layde forth, so as GOD calleth vs to the kingdome of heauen, and sheweth that hee taketh vs for his children and heires: it was not so in the time of the Lawe. Agayne, although wee haue so great & familiar knowledge nowadayes: yet doth y thing stand alwayes true which I sayd. y is to wit, y wee see but in part. And why so?

Colo. 1. 15.
Heb. 1. 2. 3.
Col. 2. 3.
Eph. 1. 5. 14.
1. Thess. 2. 12.

why? For wee be not yet made partakers of Gods glory, and therefore wee cannot come neere him, but hee must be faine to reuile himselfe to vs according to our rudenesse and infirmitie. And albeit that God haue appeared to men euen from the beginning of the worlde: yet hath hee not shewed himselfe as hee is in deede; but according as men might be able to abide it. Therefore wee must alwayes come to this poynt, that God neither was known of the fathers, nor appeareth to vs at this day in his substance: but applyeth himselfe to vs, in so much as hee is faine to stoop to make vs perceiue his presence according to our abilitie.

Neuerthelesse it is not for naught that Moses saith here, that Gods face face to face. For hee meaneth that the people had not some glimmering or gesse onely, so as they might doubt or onely conceiue some opinion of him, but that they had an infallible warrant, so as they might conclude thus: here is our GOD, who hath so communicated himselfe vnto vs, as our faith ought not to be any more vncertaine, neither ought the doctrine that is set forth to vs in his name, to be any more debated in way of disputation. As whether it bee meere to bee receiued or no. And why? For God hath giuen vs a sure marke, which cannot deceiue vs, nor leaue vs in doubt that it proceeded nor from him. Thus wee see nowe the meaning of Moses.

Hereupon wee haue a good lesson to gather: which is, that if GOD viter nor himselfe in such stately manner as our lyking could asfoorde: we must allure our felues that his fo doeing is for our profite and welfare. For if wee consider our owne infirmitie, it will pull downe our ouerlusting whereto our nature prouoketh vs continually. For wee woulde bee inquiring of Gods secretes without ende or measure. And why? Because wee feele not our own vnableitie. Wherefore let vs magnify the goodnesse of our GOD for that it pleaseth him to haue regard of vs and of our rudenesse, and to hide his glory from vs least wee shoulde be overwhelmed by it. For as I sayd afore, wee coule not abide it, being so fraile as wee bee. And herewithall let vs vnderstande, that there is no excuse for vs, if wee yeelde not to GOD his due honor when hee shall haue giuen vs any euident token of his presence.

Therefore let vs not looke that God should come to vs in his inestimable glorie, that the heauens should cleaue a sinder, and that all the Angels of paradise should appeare to vs: But when our Lord sheweth vs that it is hee that speaketh, let that suffice vs, and let vs humble our felues out of hand. For if wee will needes bee slothfull in that case: it shall bee cast in our teeth that wee turned our backs vpon him when hee shewed vs his face. In dee le it is sayd vnto vs in another place, that men cannot behold Gods face without perishing. In so much that although hee shewed himselfe in such wise to Moses as is spoken of in Numery, so that he was familiar with him as with his friend: yet it is sayd that hee sawe no more of him but onely his backe partes. But that is to shewe vs alwayes that wee must not presume to preace vnto GOD, so long as wee beare this flitthe about vs: wee must not think to attain so high. For if the very Angels of heauen vnder the shape of Seraphims, doe hide themselves when GOD sheweth himselfe: what shall wee doe, which doe but creepe heere on earth? But howsoeuer the case stand, yet will God condemne vs for our vnthankfulnessse, if we haue no lift to behold his face, and that the tokens of his presence which hee sheweth vs doe not suffice vs. About all things let vs beare this in minde, namely that the case concerneth our submitting of our felues as well to the lawe as to the Gospell. For it is there chiefly that God will be known of men to the ende they should worship him, simply receiuing whatsoeuer cometh out of his mouth. Whereupon then shall wee apply his saying of Moses: To this ende verily that whensoeuer the scripture is set afore vs, so as it is either preached or expounded vnto vs, or wee our felues reade it: this preface must serue to humble vs, that we may exalt God with all reuerence, and not adventure to reply against his worde, but tremble at it, as is sayde in the prophet Esay. For all that euer is contained in the holy scripture, is so thoroughly warranted vnto vs, as it may well be sayd that GOD hath talked with men, yea and euen shewed himselfe to them after a visible manner.

Nowe hereunto Moses addeth, that he himselfe had bin as a mediator betweene God and men, because the people were afrayde and durst not goe vp into the mountaine. Whereby Moses doth vs to wit, that the deliuering forth of the lawe by a mortal man, ought not to diminish the authoritie thereof. And why? Because the infirmitie of the people required it: that was their fault. And it is a text well worthe to bee marked. For wee doe alwayes seeke startingholes, that wee might despise Gods worde. In deede wee will not pretend it openly: but yet are all of vs so lowly disposed, that wee thinke our felues well at ease if wee can finde any color to say, Tuth I knowe not whether this bee Gods word or no, I cannot tell whether it speake to me or no, I wote not what condition is annexed to it. Thus wee see how the worlde striueth continually to exempt themselves from the obedience of Gods worde: and it is a very common excuse to say, yea, it is true that GOD ought to be obeyed, but yet for all that, they that preach are but men lyke our felues: and mult their doctrine bee hearkened to, as though they were men that came from heauen? Many men beare themselves in hand that this shoulde goe for payment, notwithstanding that they be rebels against GOD, or rather that they passe not at all to submit themselves to him and to his worde.

But wee haue an aunswere heere, wherewith to cut off the occasion of all this: which is, that whereas GOD sendeth his worde by the hand of men, hee doeth it in respect of mens default and infirmitie. Neuerthelesse hee ceaseth

Esa. 6. 3.

Esa. 66. 2. 5.

not to giue vs some marke of his glory, whereby his word is sufficiently known to be heauenly: insomuch that if the matter be ducly scanned; it appeareth that God hath warranted it thoroughly. So then, it is not onely for the auncient fathers, that Moses spake: but this warning is directed to vs also: that is to wit, that although men be appointed as messengers to preach Gods worde to vs, yet ought not that to diminish the maiestie thereof any whit at all. And in deede wee doe misconfider our owne frailetie, when wee desire that God should worke miracles dayly: nay verily wee cannot tell what is meete for vs. For as touching miracles, there haue bin enow wrought already for the warranting of the truth as well of the Lawe as of the Gospell, that wee might bee fully certified of them. Yet notwithstanding it is expedient for vs at this day, that God should send vs men like our selues, with commision from him to teach vs in his name and in his stead, as one that allureth vs to him with all gentleness and courtesie. Thinke we that wee were able to abide his presence, if hee should come to vs in such sort as hee is in deede? Alas no: there were no shift for vs but wee should bee all consumed. If God should speake in his strength: wee knowe how it is sayd that it would make the very rockes and mountaines to melt: and could we that are as feeble as any thing may bee, bee able to outstand such force, that it should not thunder downe vpon vs and destroy vs? Therefore let vs marke well that when God ordeined that his word should bee preached vnto vs, and that wee should haue it in writing, therein he applied himselfe to our weaknesse, dealing with vs as if himselfe were a mortal man, to the intent wee should not be afraide to come vnto him, but be drawn to him with all gentleness. Againe, how highly doth hee honor vs, in that it pleaseth him to choose men of no reputation among vs, to represent his person and to speake to vs in his name? For what could hee giue more to the Angels of heauen? Could hee giue them a more honorable charge or office? Seeing then that hee vouchsafeth to set men in so noble and excellent a room, as to beare abroad his word: therein hee sheweth how great his goodnesse is towards vs, namely that it is more than fatherly.

And on the other side, hee tryeth our humilitie. For if hee thundered from heauen, if hee appeared visibly vnto vs, if the Angels came downe vnto vs: it were no maruell though men beleued his worde. But when both great and small embrace the order that hee hath set in his Church, that is to wit, when they obey his worde that is preached vnto them: that is a good tryall of our faith. Neuertheless, let vs still come backe to this, that God hath shewed himselfe sufficiently to men, so as wee haue no cause to doubt of his worde, or to stande scanning from whence it came. For wee bee sure enough of his will, if wee bee not willfull in resisting the signes that hee hath giuen vs. Thus yee see what wee haue to gather vpon this sentence of Moses, where hee saith that the people durst not goe vp into the mount, by reason of the feare which they had conceived. And although wee in these dayes would not refuse that God should speake vnto vs: yet if all things bee well considered, it would not bee for our profite. And therefore let vs vnderstand, that Gods vsing of mens seruice in that wise, ought not to diminish the certentie of our faith.

It is sayd consequently, that God taught the people, saying: I am the Euerlasting, thy G O D which brought thee out of the lande of Egypt. Thou shalt not haue any other God in my sight. Here to keepe the people of Israel in awe, G O D telleth them that the knowledge which they haue of him, ought to keepe them aloofe from all superstitions. For it was not to bee maruelled at, that the heathenfolke had idols, and went wandering after their owne errors and fancies. Wee must vnderstand that it is mans propertie of himselfe, to doe so. It is pitie to see howe much wee be inclined to vanitie. Wee neede not to goe to schoole to learne to bee deceiued: for euery of vs is clearely great enough in that case. To bee shorte, wee goe alwayes forward to eull, yea euen vnder colour of good: insomuch that in stead of seruing GOD, there is nothing in vs but corruption and idolatrie. Therefore the Heathen had their diuertities of superstitions: for euery man might forge what hee would of his own braine, and in the meane while the liuing GOD was let alone of all men. And why? For hee was not so gracious to the whole worlde, as to shewe himselfe to all men. And so, men became brutish, but that was for want of teaching. Neuertheless, that excited them not for they bee still guiltie before G O D. Moreouer, the fountaine from whence idolatrie springes, is the vnthankfulnessse and lewdnesse of men in that they forsooke the liuing GOD of their owne accord.

And when the worlde was once grown out of kinde (as I haue sayd afore,) the wretched Paynims ran astray lyke blinde folkes: for they had no light to shew them the way of saluation. Now here GOD chargeth the people of Israel with rebellion, if they helde not themselves to the lawe that hee gaue them. And why? For I am the Euerlasting, thy God. When as he sayth, I am the Euerlasting: it is an excluding of all the Gods that haue bin inuented by men. As if hee should say, there is but onely one Godhead, and that is in mee. Therefore it is to bee concluded, that such as knowe mee and yet doe turne away to idols, cannot excuse themselves, but y they haue wilfully forsaken y liuing God.

And whereas hee addeth that hee is the God of that people: it is to shewe that hee had declared himselfe sufficiently. As if hee should say, I haue should you out from all other men: You see how all other men goe wandering astray, and that is for want of guiding and direction. But I haue chosen you for my people, and giuen my selfe vnto you.

Seeing then that I am your G O D: holde your selues henceforth to mee, or else ye shall be left

lesse excusable than the Heathen. Your punishment must needs be double, yea and a hundred fold grievouser than theirs, because ye shall have falsified your faith which ye have plighted vnto me, and broken the Couenant that I haue made with you.

He alledgeth yet furthermore the fauour that he had shewed to the people, saying That he had brought them out of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Whereby he meaneth that he hath bounde the people in such wise vnto him, as they can not start away, but they must deserue to bee still punished. For inasmuch as they shall haue forgotten their deliuerance: their vnthankfulness shall bee double. Seeing they had bene redeemed by the hand of God: it behoued them to giue ouer themselves wholly to the seruice of him that was their Redeemer. And he termeth Egypt the house of bondage purposely, to make the people consider thoroughly in what plight they had bene there. For we see that they which sighed and cried out when they were oppressed with such violence and tyranny as wee reade of in Exodus: desired to returne thither againe as soone as God had deliuered them. And whereof came that, but that they remembered not their oppression any more, and the diuel stopped their eyes, that Gods grace might not bee esteemed among them as it deserued? This is the cause why Moses termeth Egypt the house of bondage. In the end the commaundement is added, that the people should not haue any other gods before his face, whom they ought to account for their God.

Now let vs apply all this doctrine to our own vse. First of all whereas he saith, I am the Euerlasting: let vs learne to weigh this saying in such sort, that seeing Gods Maiestie is appeared vnto vs, wee imagine not any other Godhead. For God cannot abide any companion. If the Sunne doe darken the light of all the Starres: is it not reason that when God sheweth himselfe, all men should worship him, and that all the glorie that was before should be then as it were vtterly defaced? Yes: and therefore is it said by the Prophets, that when the Lord reigneth, there shall bee none other light but his: inasmuch that euen the Sunne shall be dimmed, and the Moone bee turned into darknesse. This serueth to shew vs, that if wee mingle any of the fantasies of our owne heads with God: it is a diminishing of the right that belongeth vnto him. For he can not away with any companion. Therefore this word Euerlasting must driue all fantasticalnesse from vs, that wee take not leaue to imagine one thing or other. Let vs be contented to haue the onely one God, & let him suffice vs. And for the same cause also is it said, that when our Lord Iesus setteth vp his seate in the world, then shall the idols of Egypt fall downe. Now this text belongeth to vs. For like as Moses saide to the people of olde time, The euerlasting hath appeared vnto you, and therefore you must driue away all idols frō among you: so now, seeing that God hath declared himselfe vnto vs in the person of his onely sonne, it is meete that all idoles should downe. Wee knowe that the Countrie of Egypt was full fraught with them aboute all the rest of y world. Now then whereas we were plunged in lyes & darknesse before, & had an infinite number of idols: all those things must melt & vanish away, when as God telleth vs that hee is the Euerlasting. And whereas moreouer he termeth himselfe our God: it is to acquaint vs with him, that wee may knowe his Maiestie after a louing fashion. For if God should speake but onely of his euerlastingnes and of his being: we should for y most part be vtterly abashed. True it is, y this were sufficient to condemne all our dotages: But yet for all that, so it falleth out, that wee can not be properly instructed thereby to our owne vse and profite. Therefore when God hath once shewed vs that he onely is to be worshipped and honoured: then must he also come to vs after a gentle and familiar maner, that wee may feele him to bee our father and maister, and knowe that his will is to make a couenaut with vs, to the intent that wee should sticke to him. This is the thing that is meant by the title that is attributed to him in this text, as if he should say, I come not onely as the euerlasting to make thee afraide: but therewithall I am also thy God, I haue chosen thee to my selfe, I intend to haue thee for mine heritage. Now then wee see howe G O D authorizeth his Lawe, to the intent wee should receiue it with all reuerence and lowliness: and yet therewithal vouchsafeth to make it amiable, to the end wee should taste of it, and take pleasure to submit our selues to it, and suffer our selues to bee ruled by the doctrine therein contained. And so to bee short all excuse is bereft vs, if wee honour not our God nowe adayes by renouncing all superstitions, and all things that are contrarie to his seruice. Why so? Because the titles which he attributeth here to him selfe to holde vs in awe, ought to drawe vs vnto him. When as he speaketh of his soueraintie ouer vs, and saith he is our God: that ought to make vs to taste of his fatherly goodnesse. And both of them are contained here. Wee see then that there remaineth no more to doe, but to hearken to the things that are tolde vs in Gods Lawe, and to hold our selues simply to the same. And that is y cause why he vprayded the people of Israell, that they neither loued him nor feared him. If I bee thy God and maister, where is thy feare? And if I bee thy father, where is thy loue, saith hee by his Prophet Malachie? No doubt but the Prophet hath an eye to the thing that Moses toucheth briefly here. For when God nameth himselfe the euerlasting: it is to the end we should yeeld him the reuerence that is due to him. And whereas he nameth himselfe the God of that people: it is to the end to winne them by friendlinesse, and to shewe them that seeing he had chosen them, it was good reason that they should put themselves wholly into his handes. Nowe if it were so vnder the lawe: it agreeth much more to vs nowe adayes. For although God haue vouchsafed to bee as it were abased in the person of his onely sonne: yet notwithstanding he continued still in his glorie, and it was no abatement of the highnesse whereof mention is made here. The abusing of our Lord Iesus Christ, was an infallible euident of the mercie of our God: but yet howsoeuer it were, it ought not to make vs to despise him. For it was Gods wil to draw vs to his infinite glory by that means, to the intent y<sup>e</sup> we should worship him seeing he came down after y<sup>e</sup> fashion vnto vs. Iustly then may he vpbraid vs now adays, that we be vtterly vnexcusable, if we doe not both feare him and loue him. For he sheweth himselfe to be both our God and our maister. Where then is our feare, if we make none account of his commandements, but see so hard heard at his threatenings, as to flight by them, and to goe on stil in euill deedes, & to make but a mocke of it though he shew himselfe to be our iudge and call vs to a reckening? Where is the reuerence that we owe to our God? For if it were a mortall creature, we would stand in more awe of him than we do of the liuing God, who hath all superioritie over vs. Again, it is not ynough for vs to feare God after a silluith manner, as by constraint: but our feare must be matched with loue. And for the same cause he nameth himselfe our father. Yea and wee haue to note, that in shewing himselfe to be the GOD of Israel, vnder that saying he meane to be our Saviour also. Thou art our GOD (sayeth the Prophet Abacuc) and wee can not perish. Nowe then, let vs beare these titles well in minde, for they belong to vs, that is to say, they ought to serue for our instruction at this day, when the Maiestic of Gods appeared in our Lord Iesus Christ.

Abac. 1. 12.

And herewithall wee must also note what he addeth concerning the fauour that he shewed to his people. I haue brought thee (saith he) out of the land of Egypt. Of a truth God meane hereby to bind the people of Israel to him most specially about al other nationes. And that is the cause why hee maketh expresse mention of their deliuerance. Neuertheless, when God speaketh, we must bethinke vs of all the benefites whereby he hath bound vs to himselfe, which are infinite & inestimable. But yet must we taste of them after our abilitie, and apply all our vnderstanding to them, and foras much as wee see that wee come short, we must straine our selues the more, to know at leastwise so much by them, as may teach vs to feare and loue our God. Doeth God then speake? We must first consider, that it is he which hath created and fashioned vs: and therefore wee be his. Loe here a benefite that is singular ynough already. Were there no more but his setting of vs in this worlde and his maintaining of vs here: could wee recompence it as wee be bound to do, though euery of vs employed himselfe to serue him to the vttermost of our power? No: But yet further when we behold y<sup>e</sup> recordes of his loue which hee giueth vs both aboue and beneath, as that he hath made the world for our sakes, that he hath ordained and appointed all things to our vse, that he hath printed his image in vs to the intent wee should be immortal: and that he hath prepared a better inheritance for vs than this transitorie life: when we see al these things, must it not needes be that wee be worse than blockish, if we be not rauished with earnest affection to worship our God, and to vowe and dedicate our selues wholly to him? Yes: but besides this, we must bethinke vs of all the good turnes which God hath done vs, as well in general as in particular: and then must we confesse with Dauid, Lord, when I thinke vpon thy benefites, behold, my wit is plundged as it were into a bottonlesse pit: yea they hee moe in number than the haire of my head, as it is said in the fourth Psalm. Again, when wee haue acknowledged how much we be beholden to our God generally: let vs also consider the benefites that euery of vs haue receiued at Gods hand particularly. And whereas it was saide to the people of Israel in olde time, I brought thee out of the land of Egypt: let vs consider whence our Lorde deliuered vs, when he vouchsafed to admit vs into his household and Church. For we are Adams childre, by nature curst, heires of death, altogether sinfull, and consequently must needes be lothsome to our God. Let men like of themselves and glorie of thomselues as much as they list: yet notwithstanding this is their pedigree, this is al their nobilitie, namely y<sup>e</sup> hee Satans bondslauces, that they haue a sinke of sinne and corruption in them, and that they haue nothing but Gods wrath and curse hanging ouer their heads: and to bee short, that being banished from the kingdome of heauen, they be deliuered vp to all mischiefe and woe. But our Lord hath deliuered vs from these things by the hand of his sonne, he hath not sent vs a Moses as hee did to the people of olde time: nay he hath not spared his only sonne, but hath deliuered him to death for vs. Seeing then that we be rauished with so deare and inestimable a price, as is the holy blood of the sonne of God: ought wee not to giue our selues wholly vnto him? Fu.thermore if Egypt were termed a house of bondage: I praye you what is it when y<sup>e</sup> diuell holdeth vs in his bondes and vnder his tyrannie, so as we haue no meanes to scape death, but are that out from all hope of saluation, and God is vtterly against vs? Seeing wee bee deliuered from all these things, is it not a much more excellent deliuerance, than that which Moses here speaketh of? Yes: and therefore wheras it was saide to the people of olde time, that GOD hath brought thee out of the lande of Egypt: nowe it is saide that we be not our owne, as saith Saint Paul in the fourteenth of the Romances, and also in the seventh of the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Wee be not our owne: the faithfull must not take leaue to doe what they list, nor to liue euerie man after his owne liking. And why? Bicause our Lorde Iesus Christ dyed, and is risen againe to raigne both ouer quicke and dead. Then is it good reason that Iesus Christ shoulde be Lord of life and death, seeing he spared not himselfe when our redemption & saluation were to be wrought.

should bee of his flocke. True it is that hee is the Lambe without spot which wypeth away the sinnes of the world, and that he hath offered himselfe vp to reconcile men vnto God. But yet for all that, we see a great number of people that are let alone, against whome the gate is shut, and G O D doeth not graunt them the grace to bee enlightened by faith as wee bee. And therefore let vs marke well that seeing the Gospell is preached vnto vs, and wee haue there a warrant that the sonne of God will make the redemption auailable in vs which he hath once wrought, and cause vs to inioye the benefite thereof: wee must learne that our thankes-lesse will bee the shamefuller, if wee doe not our indeour to giue our selues to our God, who hath bounde vs to himselfe after that sorte. If the vnbeleeuers play the loose Coltes, and overshoot themselves in their superstitions, and in wantonnesse of life: well, it is because they haue no bridle, he hath not reyned them backe as he doeth his household folke. Wee see the horrible confusion that is in Poperie: but yet there is not any doctrine to plucke men backe to God: nay rather, that doctrine which is there, doeth drawe them quite and cleane from him. And we see that the duell hath gotten such footing there, that all is full of trumpet and illusions, and the living God is quite forsaken. And so ye see that there is a horrible confusion. But as for our part, seeing that God draweth vs to himselfe, is it not a straiter bond to make vs to linke in thoroughly with him, and to holde our selues vnder obedience of the doctrine that is set forth to vs in his name? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to stickelike so to our God as wee may renounce all that euer wee can imagine of our owne head: and let vs consider that it is not for vs to swaue one way or other any more, or to be tolled too and fro in any wise, abusing our selues that there is but onely one God, who will possesse vs, yea and possesse vs in such wise, as his honour bee not taken from him and bestowed vpon creatures, and that he watcheth ouer vs to the end wee should knowe that it is onely he on whom wee ought to call, and to whose grace wee ought to repaire for succour. And finally forasmuch as it is his will to haue and accept vs to bee of his household: let vs walke as in his presence and in his sight, and that in such wise as wee worshipping him as our onely God, not onely with Ceremonies and outward protestation, but also in our hearts, as they that knowe that his seruice is spirituall, and to be short, let him possesse both our bodies and our soules, that he may bee thoroughly glorified in all respects.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs feeble them better, that it may leade vs to true repentance to be mortified more and more, so as our wicked lustes may be cut off, and wee be wholly giuen to feare and honour him: & that forasmuch as wee can not serue him thoroughly as he deserueth, so long as we be hild downe vnder the infirmities of our flesh: it may please him to vphold vs, vntill hee haue clothed vs with his own rightousnes. And so let vs all say, Almighty God, &c.

The xxxij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the fifth Chapter.

8 Thou shalt not make thee any grauen image nor the likenesse of anye thing that is in heauen aboue, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters vnder the earth.

9 Thou shalt not bow downe to them nor worship them. For I am the Lord thy God, a ielous God, visiting the sinnes of the fathers vpon the children, euen vpon the third and fourth generation of them that hate mee:

10 And shewing mercie in a thousand generations, to them that loue mee and keepe my commandementes.

As much as men are so inclined to corrupt Gods seruice with wicked superstitions: God is faine to threaten them, that they may bee helde vnder as it were by force, or els their fondnesse would carie them away to surmise of God, contrarie to that which may beseeeme his Maiestie. And this is a verie notable point, as I haue touched heretofore. For in as much as the people of Israel knew the living God: it may seeme to bee as it were needlesse to forbid them to make any image. Howbeit by reason of our cursed inclination, it was behoofefull that this forbidding should bee added as strait as wee see it here. And it is well for vs that it is so. For this sinne is rooted as it were in our verie bones: in so much that if God wolde vs not that he cannot away with idolatrie, and that he wounded vs not with that threat: there is none of vs all which would not forge infinite idols to himselfe, and by that meanes the honour of y<sup>e</sup> liuing God should be conuiced ouer vnto our own imaginations. Wherefore let vs marke well, that here wee be conuincid to haue a froward and curf'd nature which draweth alwaies to superstition, and that it is requisite for vs to bee restrained after a violent maner. For of our owne will wee can neuer serue GOD so purely, as to imagine nothing of him but as may befecme him. And herewithall wee see also wherunto our good intentes serue vs. For if there bee any thing wherein men may excuse themselues, by imagining that they doe well: it is in forging of idols. For to what end do they make them, but to serue GOD, that they may bee stirred vp to the greater deuotion, and be the surer that God will graunt their requests? Therefore by this meanes men might shroude themselues vnder colour of good intent. But we see on the contrarie part, that God abhorreth it: we see howe he vttereth the grieuous sentence of condemnation, against all such as proceede to behaue themselues so after their owne imagination. They may well ynough say, (and so it is in deede) that their meaning is, to serue God. But what for that? He accepteth no such seruice, but rather curseth it and vtterly misliketh it, & that iustly. For (as I haue shewed afore) it is a disguising of his Maiestie, to make any visible image vnto him. Therefore this text teacheth vs to forbear to doe the things that seeme good to our selues, and specially that when Gods seruice cometh in question, we must not attempt any thing vpon our owne head, but in all simplicitie followe that which he ordaineth by his woord, wout putting any thing at all thereto. For looke how soone wee sware neuer so little from that: alledge wee what wee can, and set wee neuer so good countenance vpon our case: God will not faile to punish vs. For this threatening of his is not in vaine where he saith, That he is a ielous & angrie God, which visiteth the wickednesse of the fathers vpon the Children.

Ye see then how there are two pointes for vs to remember in this text. The one is, that forasmuch as we be naturally too much giuen to idolatrie, wee must alwayes set this threaten of God before our eyes, that wee take not vpon vs to mingle any thing with his woord, or to deuise any worshipping of images, but serue God purly according to his owne nature, and not after our owne fantasie. Let that serue for one point. The other is, that we must consider, that we must not pretend our owne good intentes, to iustifie the things that we our selues haue inuēted: but contrariwise beare in minde, that the chiefe seruice which God requireth, is obedience.

But now let vs come to the wordes that are set downe here. First God saith, I am thine everlasting God, yea euen the strong or rather mightie God. Here againe he setteth himselfe against idols. For we haue seene heretofore, that to correct superstition, he did set himselfe forth in his Maiestie. And surely Gods manifesting of himselfe, is to bereaue men of all excuse. So long as we knowe not the true Religion, no nor can discerne which is the true God: it is no maruaile though our wits runne at rouers, and we gad vp and downe without any certaine stay, so as we be euer straying. But contrariwise, when God hath once shewed himself vnto vs, & giue vs knowledge of his trueth: it is good reason that all our owne dotages should sinke, and that wee should stiecke to the thing that wee knowe. For this cause God repeateth the matter, how he had declared himselfe to the people of Israel, and chosen them to himselfe of purpose to gouerne them, euen by his Lawe which is now published. And he termeth himselfe expressly a ielous or angrie God: for the Hebrew word that is placed here, betokeneth both twaine. And although he call himselfe God here: yet the word that he vseth cometh of strength. Now then whereas he termeth himselfe ielous: no doubt but his meaning is, that he cannot abide the violating of his honour, or that men should rob him of that which is his owne, to giue it vnto creatures: he is not so patient as to suffer such treacherie. And therefore although Gods honour be not so greatly regarded of vs as it deserueth: this argueth not y<sup>e</sup> he neglecteth it: for in the ende we shall finde that he hath not forgotten himselfe; but that he will maintaine his glory, accordingly also as he declareth thorough out the whole holy scripture.

Truely, if we had but one drop of good reason, we would be ielous ouer the honour of our God, so as we should neede no incouragement thereto, but rather should in deuour to performe this saying of the Psalme, that the zeale of him should euen consume vs, and we should be so set on fire within, that whensoever we sawe his Maiestie dishonored or lightly esteemed, we should feele as it were a burning fire within vs. But what? We be nice in maintaining our own honor but in the meane while we suffer Gods honour to be trode vnder foote, and to be scoffed at, and to be made sport of, or rather to be rent in peeces, when the world giueth it selfe to idolatrie. Howbeit, for as much as we doe not our dutie: our Lorde hauing cast vs in the teeth with our lewdnesse and vnthankfulnesse, must be faine to shewe vs, that although we haue bin lasie & negligent, yet will not he faile to haue such a zeale as is requisite for the maintenance of his honour, so as he will be reuenged of men for defacing of it after that maner.

And to the end we should know that God being ielous of his honour, is also well able to punish idolaters: he vseth that name of his which betokeneth strength or mightinesse, as I haue declared already. And it behoueth vs to ioiync those two wordes together. For Moses meaneth the same thing that is better expressed in the Prophet Nahum where he saith, The Lord is a ielous God, a God of vengeance, a God that punisheth such as haue offended him, a God that watcheth ouer his enemies, a God that wil come with whirlwind and tempest. The Prophet vseth this manner of speache, that God is ielous, that is to say that he forgetteth not himselfe, ne shutteth his eyes when men despise him, but marketh euery whit of it, and inregretteth it before him, and they must come to account for it. And having spoken of the saide disposition, that is to saye, that God will maintaine his honour: hee sheweth immediatly that hee hath wherewith to doe it, and that he is armed with power to punish his foes, so as they cannot scape his hande. That is the cause why hee speaketh of whirlwind and tempest: that is the cause why he speaketh of vengeance: in so much that if God seeme to dissemble things for a time, yet hee hath an eye to his enemies, and will in convenient season make them to feele with whom they had to doe, and that they prouoked the liuing God. Nowe we see what Moses meant here: that is to wit, that God setteth great store by his own honour: and y although we beare our selues in hande that wee shall scape vnpunished when wee haue violated his seruice, or by any meanes corrupted it: yet notwithstanding hee will shewe that hee hath not forgotten himselfe, and that he will maintaine himselfe. Marke that for one point.

Besides this, hee is also mightie to put the same ielousie in execution. He is not like mortall men, which are angrie and colerike when dishonor, dishonestie, or wrong is offered them, but yet are notable to doe as they woulde. God is no such a one: for hee is armed with power to confounde all his enemies. In deede we must not imagine any humane affections in God, that hee shoulde bee moued as wee see that men bee. There is no wrathfulnesse in God. But forasmuch as wee cannot conceiue him as hee is: hee is faine to apply himselfe to our rudenesse. Therefore when soeuer the scripture speaketh of anger, of wrath, or of indignation: it is not for that God is inclinable, or for that hee resembleth vs, or for that hee is moued thereto: [no,] he standeth alwayes at one stay, and there is not so much as any litle ouershadowing in him, as saith S. Iames, who vseth the same similitude to shewe that there can bee no change in his being. Howbeit forasmuch as wee conceiue not Gods iudgements and threatenings, but by the termes of yre, anger, wrath, and indignation: therefore doth the holy scripture speake so of him. Wherefore let vs marke first of all, howe GOD hath shewed vs in this text, that it is a dreadfull thing to fall into his handes. And specially that if we corrupt the purenesse of his seruice with our wicked inuentions, and will needes attempt what soeuer our owne braine deuyseth: we shall feele with whom we haue to doe, and that he is too great a Lorde for vs to dally with after that fashion.

Moreouer God thinketh it not ynough to threaten the parties themselues that turne away from this Lawe through their idolatrousnesse: hee thinks it not ynough to tell them that hee will punish the persons themselues: but hee extendeth his vengeance euen to their issue also. I am (saith hee) a zealous God which visiteth the sinnes of the fathers vpon the children, vnto the third and fourth generation. It shoulde seeme at the first blush to bee vnseemely for Gods Iustice, that hee shoulde punish the children for the offences of their fathers and mothers. And besides that it is vtterly against naturall reason: wee see what is saide of it in the prophetic of Ezechiel: namely that the partie which sinneth shall beare his owne burthen: so as the sonne shall no more beare the sinne of his father, than the father shall beare the sinne of his sonne. This text then may seeme somewhat rough and sharpe, yea and to deface the vprightnesse and equitie that is in God: for sinne craueth his wages, that is to say the death of him that committeth it. Why then shoulde hee dye which is guiltlesse? Again, although this reason were not so euident: yet doeth the holy scripture auowe, that God telleth vs hee will not punish the guiltlesse children for the sinnes of their parentes. Yea and hee rebuketh the Iewes for this blasphemie which ranne in their mouthes, whereof they had made a common prouerb: Our fathers haue eaten sower grapes, and our teeth are set on edge with it: Gods handling of vs thus rigorously is not for any fault of our owne committing, for wee haue liued as wee ought to do: but he ouer reacheth vs with the sinnes of our fathers. After that manner did the Iewes grudge against GOD. But hee sweareth that such blasphemie shall take place no more.

Nowe if all bee well considered, there is no contrarietie at all. For in the saide texte of Ezechiels, GOD meant nothing else but that those whome hee punished coulde not alledge innocencie, nor saye hee did them wrong in vsing rigour against them, but that euery one of them shoulde finde themselves guiltie, so as hee himselfe shoulde bee iustificed, and they well perceiue that hee went not beyonde measure and reason. And this is verie certeine. For although GOD punisheth the children for their fathers sakes: yet ceaseth hee not to bee righteous in such chastisements. For if the children bee well examined, they shall finde themselves guiltie on their owne behalfe: yea (say I), euen though they were but newly borne, and had neuer done any open fault that were knowne to the worlde. For what manner of offspring are wee? What bring wee with vs by nature but vtter naughtinesse? Yee see then that euen infantes are sinners aforehande: they bee condemned before GOD being yet in their mothers wombes. The euill is not yet perceiued: but yet for all that their nature is sinfull and forwarde, they haue a secret seede within them, and they bee already in condemnation, because of the originall sinne that is come from Adam vpon all mankinde.

Nowe seeing that the litle babes are not exempted from the wrath and curse of GOD, in so much that if hee punisheth them it is not without cause, neither can men saye but that hee proceedeth alwayes vprightly as a good Iudge: much lesse canne they that are men men growen auowe themselves to be innocent, but they shall much rather be founde guiltie. And so as concerning Ezechiels purpose, it is an euident matter that God punisheth not the guiltlesse children for their fathers sakes: for there is fault to be founde euen in them also.

Furthermore where as hee saith that hee punisheth the sinnes of the fathers vpon the children: let vs marke howe that is done, and then will this doubt be yet better discouered. First of all we knowe that God is not any thing indetted vnto vs, and that if hee doe vs any good, it is of his owne free goodnesse, and not for that hee is bounde vnto vs. Nowe if he list to vse rigour towards vs, hee may leaue vs all in condemnation as those that are there already. Let God but onely withhold his mercie, and stewe himselfe as a iudge to the whole worlde, and what will become of it? Wee see all forlorne, there is no remedie for vs, both great and small, fathers and children, I say all of vs without exception are damned euerychone, if God drawe vs not out of the cursed case wherein wee be, yea and that hee do it not of his owne free bestowed goodnesse, without being bound therevnto. Now then seeing that God might destroy vs and cast vs all away: is he to be blamed, is there any fault to be founde with him, if it please him to vse his goodnesse and mercie towards some, and to call them to him, and to deliuer them out of the bottomlesse pitte wherein they bee? No. For our eye must not bee spitefull because hee hath pittie vpon his creatures. And although hee vse not like courtlesse towards all men: yet doth it become vs to keepe our mouths shutte: yea and sometimes againe wee ought to open them wide to confesse that all his doings are in vprightnesse and equitie, though they surmount our capacite. For wee cannot alwayes perceiue why God dispofeth so of men: but our prating must bee put downe, and wee must learne to reuerence God in his iudgements when they bee too high and too secret for vs to attaine to. How soeuer the case stand, let this stand for a generall rule, that God might let vs alone in the destruction wherein wee be if he thought good, and that by that meanes all the worlde might perish: but forasmuch as it pleaseth him to shewe himselfe pittifull and gentle, not towards all, but towards one part of them, therefore putteth he a difference betweene the one and the other. And there vpon hee leaueth whom he listeth in their owne cursednes wherein they were borne.

Nowe if it bee demanded why GOD vsfeth mercie after that manner towards the one sorte and rigour towards the other: truly the first cause thereof is vnknowne to vs, and wee ought not to bee inquisitive of it. And why? for it becommeth our wites to be locked vp and imprisoned in that behalfe, and wee ought to confesse that God hath free power to choose whom he listeth and to cast away the rest. But howsoeuer the case stande, hee maketh this promise to the faithfull, that hee will haue mercie vpon their children: and that as hee hath begunne his mercie vpon the parentes themselves, so hee will holde out with it continually vnto a thousande generations. Wee see nowe that there is some cause why God hath pittie vpon the one sort rather th. vpon the other. Againe on the contrarie part, he threateneth the vnbeleueers that he will curse them, not onely in themselves, but also in their rase, and in those that shall spring of them.

But nowe let vs come to the mercie that God graunteth, and to the punishment that hee extendeth. His blessing of the faithfull folkes children, is not in riches, in health, and in all other such things, or in making them to prosper to the worlde ward: Those are not the greatest blessings which God graunteth: that is not the ende which hee begetteth at: but rather the mercie that hee sheweth them, is that hee gouerneth them by his holy spirite, that hee giueth them the badge of his adopted children, and that he correcteth them and purgeth them from their sinnes, to fashion them againe after his owne image. Yee see then that the mercie which God extendeth towards the children of the faithfull, is that hee suffereth them not to abide in their owne corruption and naughtinesse, but reformeth and ruleth them by his holy spirite. This done, hee proceedeth yet further, and maketh them to prosper, euen in this worlde, vntill the full measure of his mercie bee heaped vpon them, that is to wit, till he haue taken them vp into his heauenly kingdome, and there giuen them euermourning life.

On the contrarie parte, whereas hee punisheth the sinnes of the fathers vpon the children: it is as much to say, as hee letteth their offspring alone in the lame plight that they bee in. There is a wicked man, there is a despiser of GOD, there is an hypocrite, there is an vnbeleuer: well may hee haue children, but God careth not for them (as yee woulde saye) and taketh them as straungers: and forasmuch as hee acknowledgeth them not to bee of the number of his, hee touchsafeth not to shewe himselfe fatherlike towards them, but letteth them runne at rouers, so as Sachan must needs possesse them. And when they bee so destitute of Gods spirite, what can be tide them but vtter mischefe, so as they must prouoke him to wrath more and more? Nowe then doeth our Lorde punishe them without cause? Can they say that they be guiltlesse? No: for there is fault ynough in them beforehande. Wee see then much better, that the thing which God hath spoken by Ezechiel is true: that is to wit, that the partie which hath sinned shall receiue his owne hyre as hee deserueth: and that the guiltlesse shall not be punished for the guiltie and for the offenders sake. Neuerthelesse wee see also, that his saying that hee will punish the sinne of the fathers vpon their children, is not without cause. For why? It is in him to withhold his grace from the children of the wicked and faithlesse, or of the despisers of his

worde, or of hypocrites that abuse his name: God is at free libertie to withdrawe his spirite from all the whole race of them. And when their children are so alienated from God: what haue they, but the corruption of Adam? There is nothing in them but sinne and corruption, and therefore they must needs be enemies vnto God. Yee see then how he punisheth them iustly, and that they cannot shift themselves from his hande, to say that hee doeth them wrong, or that he is cruell to them. All mouths must be stopped in that behalfe. True it is that the rebellious sorte will neuer bee contented: for we see howe there are some, which aduance themselves against God with such boldnesse, as all modest and sober folke may be ashamed of them. But let vs suffer those dogges to bark their fill, and let vs in the meane while glorifie our God with all lowlinesse, acknowledging neuertheless that hee hath authority and good right to be gracious and fauourable to whome hee listeth. By reason whereof wee must conclude, that if God withhold his spirite from the linage of the wicked, hee cannot be blamed of crueltie for it: for yee see they be punishable when they bee so forsaken of him, and are not governed by his holy spirite. Wherefore let vs marke well, that this laying impugneeth not the saying of Ezechiel.

But let vs come backe againe to the intent of Moses. It is not to be doubted but hee ment to imprint a greater feare of God in vs, than if he had said but singly, God will punish you when yee shall haue corrupted his seruice, by chaunging anything in Religion: and thinke not to scape his vengeance, if yee deuide any shape of him: for hee cannot abide to haue his honour defaced after that fashion. Had Moses spoken after that manner, men are so stubborn and hardhearted, y they would not haue beene sufficiently touched with feare. But heere hee proceedeth further. God (saith hee) will not onely punish you in your owne persons, but also extend his vengeance to your issue, and not onely to your children, but also to the vttermost of your offspring, so as you shall alwayes feele his wrath as a burning fire, and the markes of your wickednesse shall appeare still after your decease. God will put you to open shame: so as yee shall needes bee a gazing stocke. Although yee be rotten in the earth: yet shall Gods vengeance pursue you in such sort, as your sinnes shall be remembered from age to age, and the world shall know that yee haue beene disobedient, vnto him that had bestowed so many benefites vpon you, as yee ought at leastwise to haue beene as sheepe of his flocke, to be ruled by him according to his worde.

Nowe therefore let vs learne to bee no more so browne when God wakeneth vs after that fashion. Surely if hee gaue vs but some inching of his displeasure by some worde or outward signe: it ought to touch vs with feare and terrour. But wee bee dull vpon the spurre: and therefore seeing G O D telleth vs, that besides his punishing of vs in our selues, hee will continue his vengeance still vpon all our linage, and that those which are begotten of vs must be condemned after our death: his speaking after that manner ought at leastwise to make vs more ware, to lue in awe of him and to call our selues home to him, least we should prouoke his wrath, seeing it is so terrible. Thus yee see howe we may profite our selues by this text.

Nowe he saith, of them that hate him. By this terme hee meaneth all such as breake his Lawe. If it bee demanded whether all such as swaue from their obedience to God warde doe therefore hate him: this text sheweth that they do so. [Howbeit] not to their owne seeming, but yet in verie deede. And in this case we must not rest vpon our owne iudgement: for onely God is competent iudge to determine of that matter. And forasmuch as men when they giue themselves to naughtinesse, will not say, no nor think in their hearts y they hate God in doing amisses: it is requisite that that fault should be discouered. True it is that the hypocrites will indeede pretende, that the loue of God causeth them to shew some good countenance, and in verie deed they may well haue some seede of it: howbeit, that is but a bastardly and sinful seede, inso much that this hatred of God appeareth not in the hypocrites, no nor euen in those that leade a disordered and loose life: but yet is it in them though wee perceiue it not. For like as malefactors coulde finde in their hartes, that there were no iudge nor order nor government in the worlde: so all such as acknowledge not themselves subiect to God (at leastwise willingly) are contemptuous against him, and coulde bee contented to haue him plucked out of heauen. This is apparent ynough in such as are vtterly giuen to wilfulnesse. When men haue once let themselves loose to all wickednesse: they can no more away with any correction, and therevpon they become so much the lesse reachable. If a man threaten them, they gnash their teeth at him, they storme at him, and they become as good as made against God. Nowe then, this hatred of God is apparent ynough in such as haue taken lawlesse leaue to doe euill, and are caried away with their owne leawdnesse, and as it were saped in their sinnes. Again, it is true that this appeareth not in such as haue yet any feare of God in them, & feele some remorse when a man speaks to them of God and of his iustice: but yet is there some hate of God in them. Indee they thinke it not: but God seeth much more clearly than wee, and whereas we perceiue no things, he noteth them. Wee must alwayes remember how saint Iohn saith, that God is greater than our consciences, that is to say, that if our consciences beare recorde of our offences, God will not sleepe in the meane while. And so let vs briefely beare in minde, that all such as submit not themselves obediently vnto God, ne humble themselves vnder his maiestie to serue him and to honour him: do euerie one of them hate him, although they shewe it not at the first by their deedes, nor can be deemed of the worlde so to doe. And for the same cause doeth God begin

He saith that hee will shewe mercie in a thousand descentes to such as loue him. And why? For it is vnpossible that wee shoulde bee desirous to honour God and to bee obedient vnto him, vnlesse wee haue felt the loue that is spoken of heere. And this may serue vs for a good lesson: according as we shall see hereafter, howe Moses intending to giue vs a brieue summe of the Lawe, saith: What doeth the Lordy thy God require of thee O Israell, but that thou shouldest loue him with all thy hart, & that thou shouldest sticke vnto him? Neuer (say I) doe we knowe what it is to keepe Gods Law, and to behaue our selues thereafter, vnlesse wee beginne at the faide loue. And why? For God requireth willing seruice. Hee will not haue vs to serue him, onely vpon a slavish feare: but hee will haue vs to goe to it with a free and cheerefull courage, that wee may cuen take pleasure in honouring him: and that cannot be done without we loue him. Wherefore let vs marke, that the beginning and as it were the wellspring, foundation, and roote of obedience, is the faide loue of God, so as wee be not forced to come vnto him, but haue a singular pleasure in doing it, assuring our selues that our true blessednesse is to desire to bee governed altogether according to his will, and to frame our selues wholly thereto.

Moreouer let vs marke also, that this loue cannot be in vs, vntill we haue tasted of the goodnesse of our God. For so long as wee imagine God to be against vs, wee must needs shunne him. Will wee then loue him? will wee frame our selues to the obeying of him, to take all our delight in seruing of him? Wee must first knowe that hee is our father and sauour, and that hee seeketh nothing but to bee fauourable vnto vs. When we haue so tasted his loue towards vs: the shal wee bee provoked to loue him as our father. Inasmuch that if that loue be in vs, no doubt but we will obey him, and his lawe shall reigne in our myndes, in our affections, and in all our members. For what is the cause why we be so disobedient vnto God, but for that wee hate him, as I faide afore? So on the contrarie part the loue of God will drawe vs to serue him, and to submit our selues to his righteoufnesse, so as men shall see a certaine conformitie and agreeablenesse betwixt Gods lawe and all our desires and affections. But yet for the better vnderstanding hereof, let vs consider what God is: For hee will not be known according to our nature. And when we heare him spoken of, it is not ynough for vs to giue him the title of God; but he will be known as hee is in dedde: that is to wit, to bee righteous and good, as the perfection and fountaine of all wisdome, of all power, of all right, and of all equite. Nowe then let vs conceiue God as he is: that is to wit, with his iustice, righteoufnesse and equite: and then shall wee not desire any thing else than to fashion our selues like to him. Contrariwise if we loue naughtinesse and be wrapped in it, we must needs hate God. For why? Heere is no talke of a naked being:

wee must not imagine God to bee as an ydoll: wee must conceiue him with his righteoufnesse and equite. Therefore when wee haue the thinges that are in God, that is to say his iustice and righteoufnesse: wee must needs hate his owne selfe: for hee cannot forsake himselfe, hee cannot disguise himselfe, hee cannot transforme himselfe after our fashion: hee continueth euermore like himselfe. So then, (as I faide afore) all such as loue God, neede not bee afraid that they shall not obey his Lawe and keepe his commandementes: for they bee thinges vnited and vnseparable. That is the thing whiche wee haue to marke vpon this place.

And heereby wee bee warned to shunne all stubbornnesse and all offending, more than we haue done: for it is no small matter for vs to bee declared to bee Gods enemies, and as makers of warre against him. And yet the case standeth so, as we cannot aduance our selues about him, nor turne away from him, nor shake off his yoke: but wee be conuicted to haue bene his enemies, and to haue made open warre against him. And is not that a cursed thing? So then let vs learne to abhorre our owne sinnes and vices, because they attaine vs as traitors to God, and hee must needs thewe himselfe to be our aduersarie partie. Also herewithall we be warned to resort vnto God with a pure and right meaning minde. For it is not ynough for vs to haue with helde our feete, hands and eyes from euill doing: but the heart must goe before, and wee must serue God with a true affection: and this affection must not be enforced, but it must proceede of verie loue to Godwarde. Therefore if wee minde to keepe the Lawe well: wee must first knowe that God is a good and kindeharted father towards vs, to the ende we may be fully perswaded of his loue towards vs. And therewithall let it neuer sinke in our hartes to dally in protesting that wee loue God, except the same may appere by our whole life. For when as Moses speaketh heere of the louing of GOD: hee addeth, That those which loue him doe also keepe his commandementes. Therefore our life must bee answerable in that behalfe, and bee as a certificate whether we loue him or hate him.

Furthermore it is not without cause that God comparing here his wrath and vengeance with his mercie, saith that hee will punish those that hate him, euen in thre or foure descentes: and shewe mercie in a thousand descentes to them that loue him. For thereby hee sheweth the thing which is yet better expressed in other sentences of the scripture: which is, that hee is slowe to wrath and forwarde to mercie, and therewithall long suffering, so that where as his anger lasteth but a verie short time, his mercie is everlasting all the life long. Yee see then that the verie nature of God is such, as hee seeketh nothing but to drawe men to him by all manner of gentlenesse, and to vse his goodnesse towards them. When hee punisheth them, it is (as yee woulde say) against his nature. Not that it is not meete for God

God to punish as well as to shewe mercie: but his meaning is to thewe vs that his goodnesse is farre the greater: and to be thort, that he is not rigorous, but that his onely desire is to vtter his good will to vs, if we woulde suffer him: for in very deede hee woulde faine bee knowne to be good and pitifull, and it is the thing wherein his glorie doeth chiefly shine forth. Therefore let vs marke well how it is not for nought that Moses hath assigned heere a thousande generations to Gods mercie: and restrained his wrath and vengeance to a three or foure generations. As if hee should saye: It is true that our Lorde will not suffer superstition vnpunished. When yee shall haue corrupted his seruice and defaced his honour by gadding after your owne dotages, yee shall feele the punishment thereof, yea and euen your children after you must bee faine to feele it to: insomuch that when the fire of his wrath is once kindled vpon you, it shall not bee quenched againe so soone as yee weene for: but yet for all that hee will not faile to be pitifull still, and his mercie shall alwayes bee greater than his wrath. And in deede, like as by the threate which wee haue hearde, G O D intended to holde the world in the true religion, to the ende they should not make ydols and puppets to themselues: so was it his will also, that the promise which is contained heere should allure vs to him, if we beare him the loue and reuerence which wee ought to doe: and hee had leuer to winne vs by his goodnesse, than to restraine vs by his threatnings. And therefore hee saith, My children, looke not that I should punish you. Truly if yee prouoke mee, I will not suffer my selfe to bee so mocked at your hands: but yet for all that, when I haue told you of my displeasure, I had much leuer to traine you and to winne you to me by mercie. Therefore I tell you that if you abide pure and sounde in my obedience: I also will continue in doing good vnto you euen vnto a thousande generations, so as your children after you shall finde me the same still. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon that sentence.

Moreouer for a conclusion, it is not for nought that God vseth the terme Mercie, notwithstanding that it bee as a rewarde for the seruice that is done vnto him. Hee might well haue saide, I will consider the seruice of such as shall haue honoured and serued mee: and when men shall haue loued mee by keeping my commaundementes, I will shewe them that they haue not lost their labour in taking paines to honour me. God might haue spoken so: but hee saith, I will shewe mercie. And howe may that bee? Doeth it not seeme that if we serue God, hee oweth vs recompence? No: but hee sheweth that his doing of good to such as honour him and followe his commaundementes, is not of bounde duetie nor for any desert of theirs: for euen in so doing hee vseth mercie still. And the terme Mercie serueth to beate down all pride of mens, so as they may not boast of their owne workes, as though they were worthy of recompence: but rather consider that thereby God ment to declare, that when we serue him the best that we can, we haue still neede to be borne withall at his hande, and to haue our fautes and infirmities forgiven vs. Thus are there two things for vs to maie in this place. The one is that although wee serue God neuer so purely, yet his recompensing of vs is not vpon any duetie that hee oweth vnto vs. For in deede whence cometh our seruing of him, but of his meere grace? And what can hee then owe vnto vs? Nay, there is yet a further matter: namely that we should all of vs be found faultie in his sight, if he list to examine vs rigorously. So then, whereas God recompenseth vs for our seruing of him: hee doeth it for his owne meere goodnesse, and therefore not of any bounde duetie: but (which more is) hee is faine to pardon our finnes and to beare with vs, yea euen in the good that wee doe. Wherefore let vs consider that God sheweth himselfe so gracious and freharted towards vs, that where as he might make vs to feele his rigour, hee is contented to make vs tast of his mercie by bearing with vs in our infirmities. For let vs not think but that without his mercie we were all vndone: and that although we stroue neuer so much to obey him, yet wee should be found faultie, if he ved not y forefaid gracious goodnes wherof he speaketh. So then, that is the thing wherunto we must flee for refuge, if we intend to be sure of our saluation.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our finnes, praying him to make vs feele them better than wee haue done, that it may leade vs to true repentance, so as being taught to feare him, wee may stande in such awe, that as soone as he threateneth vs with his wrath, wee may conceiue the power that is in him, to the ende that being humbled in our selues, wee may haue recourse to his fatherly goodnesse, not doubting but that when hee hath once begunne to shewe himselfe a father and Saviour towards vs, he will continue so stil yea euen after our decease, so that wee shrinke not from him through our owne naughtinesse and disobedience. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

11 Thou shalt not take the name of the Lorde thy God in vaine: for the Lorde will

will not holde him guiltlesse which taketh his name in vaine.

If we were well aduised, we needed not to bee taught, we needed reuerence to our God: for nature ought to leade vs thereto.

To what ende are we created in this worlde? To what ende liue we here, but to honour him to whom wee be beholden for all good things, and to giue our felues to the glorifying of his maiestie? That then is the end and whole summe of our life. But in the meane season, in steede of honouring our God, and of applying our felues that way: we seeme to haue conspyred the cleane contrarie. For some of vs woulde haue all remembrance of God buried: some despise him and mocke him: and other some blaspheme him with open mouth: so as we shewe sufficiently, that we knowe not to what end we liue or should liue. Now forasmuch as there is this vice in vs: God intending to redresse the same, telleth vs that we ought at leastwise to refraine from abusing his holy name: for that is as an vnhallowing thereof. And therefore hath hee forbidden men to take his name in vaine.

By these wordes he meaneth, that wee must consider well which is the right and lawfull vse of his name. Of a truth wee be not worthe to take Gods name in our mouth after any manner at all, for wee must remember what the Prophet Esay saide in his sixt Chapter: Lorde (quoth he) I haue vnclene lippes, and dwell among a people that is altogether defiled. Seeing then that we haue nothing but infection and filthinesse in vs: it is certain that we may not take Gods name [in our mouth,] at leastwise if it were not that God of his goodnes were willing that we should vse his name, so it bee to glorifie him withall.

Therefore let vs marke well, that when as it is saide that we shall not take the name of God in vaine: our Lord rebuketh vs for our vnthankfulnesse, if we haue not the skill to vse his name as he hath giuen vs leaue, by following the rule that is set downe in his worde: for that is the lawfull meane whereby wee may rightly vse the name of God.

Neuerthelesse to the end that this may be yet plainyer vnderstood: wee must marke, that vnder one particular, God meant to shewe vs here what a maiestie is in his name, to the intent we shoulde not speake of it, but with all reuerence and honour. Therefore he taketh one particular kinde, to wit, of an othe, specially when occasion serueth to sweare: and vseth it for all prophaning of Gods his name whatsoever. We see howe our Lorde loneth vs, seeing he lendeth vs his name whereby to communicate with our neighbours, so as if there happen any doubt or variance among vs, it may bee dispatched by that meane: that is to wit, if we be not beleued, and a matter hang in doubt, the name of GOD may come in as an imper, to dispatch all controuersie, so as the matter may bee certaine and sure by such confirmation. Is it not an admirable goodnesse, that our God humbleth himselfe in such sort, as to giue vs leaue to vse his name? Yes. And why? for it is certaine that Gods maiestie is so precious, as it ought not to bee abased to lowe: but yet hee vouchsafeth to apply himselfe vnto vs, and therefore so much the greater is the viliacie, if wee vnhallowe Gods name in our othes. And that is done, not onely by forswearing our felues: but also by taking Gods name at aduenture, without regarding to speake with good discretion, or whether the thing that wee haue in hande, is worthe to bee so confirmed or no. Therefore when men goe to it so at aladuenture, Gods name is as it were vnhallowed. It is true that GOD taketh it as a kinde of his seruice, when men sweare by his name: not that hee is beholden to vs for it, but cleane contrariwise. For as I haue touched already, we must in this case consider howe GOD beareth with vs, in that he giueth vs leaue to vse his name. But yet doe wee by our swearing acknowledge that God hath all superiouritie ouer vs. The inferiour sweareth by his superior, faith the Apostle to the Hebrewes. And surely if wee wist to what ende an othe serueth, it cannot agree but onely to the maiestie of GOD. For our meaning is to warrant such things as are secret and haue no prooff among men. But that cannot bee done by any creature: God must bee faine to shewe himselfe in that behalfe, as hee that sercheth mens hearts to the verie bottoome. And againe it is not for nought that hee challengeth to himselfe the title of trueth. We see then that in swearing, wee do homage vnto GOD by protesting him to bee our iudge, and the onely partie to whome wee haue recourse in all doubtfull and secret cases, because it is his office to bring them to light, and againe hee will maintaine the trueth, with the same belongeth to his honour. That is the cause why God taketh it to bee a kinde of seruing of him, when men doe sweare by his name, howe be it so as the othes bee not needefulle. And hereby wee see that the fault of such as forswear them felues, or as sweare rashly, is so much the grieuoufer: for it is as a violating of Gods seruice, and as an abolishing of it, as much as in vslyeth.

As touching them that commit perurie: they bee not onely guiltie of taking Gods name in vaine, and of abusing the same falsly: but also they bee traitors and wicked cautes. Can wee deuise to doe a greater outrage to our GOD, than to abolish or deface his trueth? No: for there is nothing more peculiar vnto him. And therefore it is all one as if wee woulde plucke him out of his seate, yea and vtterly bereaue him of all diuine honour and glorie: which thing is done when men turne his trueth into a lie. Therefore whoeuer forswearth himselfe, that is to saye, whoeuer taketh Gods name with an euill conscience, whether it bee to colour lies, or to beguile, or to disguise matters: surely hee blasphemeth in so doing. And I say expressly, if wee goe about to disguise matters. Why so? For many doe dispenwith themselves, vnder colour that they cannot be convicted of perurie before men. And why is that? Because they turne the ear in the pan, and set such a face vpon their matters, as it may seeme that they forswaie not themselves at all. But God liketh not any such subtleties. Wherefore let vs not imagine that wee shalbee quite and scape scotfree before him, when wee shall haue vsed such ferches and startingholes. Thus wee see in effect, that all such as take Gods name otherwise than soundly and simply, doe commit blaspheemie. Let that serue for one point.

Nowe as for them that sweare to no purpose and vnadvisedly; they shewe well ynough that they make none account of God, and that they doe but dally with him. In deede they protest the contrarie; they can wel ynough say that their intent is nothing so; but that is but hypocrisie: for the deede it selfe sheweth sufficiently that they beare no reuerence vnto GOD. If wee haue a mortall man in estimation, wee will not take his name in vaine, wee woulde not that men shoulde make a babling of it, or intermeddle it with scornfull and scoffing words. Nay wee woulde take that in reproch. And would wee haue more priuiledge than the liuing God? We beee wretched carions and dung; and yet would wee be had in honour and estimation, and that our God shoulde be our vnderling? We see then that there are verie fewe of good religion nowadays in the world. Although a great number pretende to be Christians; yet they neuer wist what it is to worshippe God, or to doe him homage, or to yeelde him the seruice that belongs vnto him. For howe doeth Gods name trotte about? Men cannot bargain for a quart [of wine,] but some othe must bee rapt out with it. If Gods honour were esteemed among vs; surely we would abstaine from such needlesse othes: nay rather wee woulde abhorre them. And yet nowadays men make but a sport of them, and if a man be rebuked for his swearing, hee thinkes he hath great wrong done him. If there be any talke that is not for a mans profite, he will be wearie of it and grieued at it, yea and finde fault with it: but if any of vs bee so zealous to Godward, as to be grieued at the abusing of his name: by and by a quarell is picked to him, they despite him, and gnash their teeth at him. But seeing that the worlde taketh so fast holde of the despising of GOD, and is so hardened in it: it is a signe that there is no more knowledge of his maiestie.

Againe although men take so lawlesse leaue vnder colour that it is an ordinarie matter, and haue made custome a Lawe: yet will God shew in the end, that hee maketh more account of his name than men haue done, and that if we make hauoocke of it, wee shall paye deereley for it, and wee shall bee driuen in the ende, to knowe that wee haue defiled the lande where wee dwelt, and wee must bee called to a reckoning for al the benefits that we receiued there, and which GOD bestowed vpon vs with his hande, because wee acknowledged not the author of them, to yeelde him his due honour for them. Yee see then that the first thing which we haue to marke in this text, is that God beareth with vs and vseth such gentlenesse towards vs, as hee is well contented that wee shall vse his name in all lawfull cases: by the which grant of his wee may well perceiue, that hee is more than fatherly towards vs. Neuerthelesse hee warneth vs therewithall, to bee more ware in abstaining from all wicked othes. For as for perurie, (as I said afore) it is an offtending of too outrageous and cursed vilanie vnto him, because his truth is turned into lying, and wee bee false-dealers to the vttermost of our power. And so ye see that that is a passing deadly crime.

But it is not ynough for vs to refrain from perurie: it behoueth vs also to looke that our othes be sober, and that Gods name be not trofused among vs like a tennisball: but that necessitie may excuse vs in our vsing thereof. And forasmuch as by our swearing we giue to vnderstande that GOD hath all superiouritie ouer vs: therein wee see that the othes which are made by creatures are wicked and proceede of superstition. As for example, whereas in the Popedome men sweare by S. Antonie or by S. Iohn: it is all one as if they made ydols of them. And why so? For we must alwayes bethinke vs of this saying of the Apostle which I alledged afore, namely that by our swearing by the name of God, wee giue him to bee our superiour, yea and our soueraigne Lord. And that is the cause also why God sweareth to confirme vs in his promises, or rather to waken vs when hee seeth vs wilfull and hardened in our sinnes, so as we be not afraid of his iustice. He sweareth: and by whom? Euen by himselfe, He referueth that honor to himselfe, as shall be declared more at large in the 6. Chapter of his booke. And therefore they that sweare by creatures are ydolaters. By reason whereof, in speaking of superstitions, the othe is set downe as a record to proue that men are turned away from the purenes of the Law. The shepherds (saith Ieremie) which haue the charge of leading Gods people, must teach them to sweare by the name of God: that is to say, to lay away all other othes, and to intermingle no creatures in that behalfe.

Furthermore whereas the name of GOD is mentioned: let vs marke that it is not the onely speaking of that word, that is forbidden vs: but that we must haue a regarde to the substance of it, as I haue said already. God is not a sophister to vse trifling subtleties towards vs: but hee hath an eye to the deede it selfe. There are that will not sweare expressly by the name of GOD: but yet they cease not to bee faultie and offenders. For wee must refer our selues to that which our Lord Iesus Christ speaketh in the fist of saint Mathew. When yee sweare by heauen (saith he) it is not the feate of the liuing God? If yee sweare by his temple: is it not the place where his maiestie resteth? Then if wee thinke wee shall not bee condemned, so wee expresse not the name of God: it is a fondnesse. Let vs not beguile our selues therewithall: for it is too childish an excuse. For why? Doeth not the heauen beare a representation of Gods Maiestie?

Yee see then that his glorie is thereby diminished. As much is to be faide of the earth. For it is his footstool, as Iesus Christ auoucheth in the forealledged text. Wherefore let vs learne in fewe wordes, that we must yeelde such reuerence to the name of God, as to put away all othes from among vs, sauing so farre forth as necessitie requireth, and as God giueth vs leaue to bortowe his name. And moreover, let vs alwayes followe this, to keepe this simplicitie in our talke, to say it is so: assuring our selues that whatsoeuer is more, is euil and condemned by the lawe, that is to wit, if wee take the name of God in vaine. And indeede there is a duble mischief to be seene in all needlesse othes, and wherein Gods name is not honoured as it ought to be. For when men let them flie so at all aduerture: it is a token that they passe not what they saye. Againe, whereof cometh it, but onely of this, that folke are so full of lying and deceit, as no man can beleue that which is faide to him, when one speakes to another? Needes must there be great frowardnesse and naughtinesse among them. Whereas God hath giuen vs a tongue, it is partly to the intent wee shoulde common one with another thereby: for it is as yee woulde saye the messenger of the hearte, so as thereby wee expresse the things that we haue concieued in our minde. Wee see then that needelesse othes spring of the vntrustinesse of men. And there needes no inquisition or long trial of the matter: for euerie man hath his owne witnesse in that behalfe. Howe so euer the case stande let vs learne to vse such modestie in this respect, as God commaundeth that we sweare not without cause nor vnrequired.

Howbeit to make this matter the easier to be vnderstoode, many do beare themselves in hand that when they sweare by their faith, it is not materiall. Indeeede the most part of them sweare by nothing at all: for they haue no more faith thā doges: they haue neither conscience nor Religion. But yet shall not the name of Faith faile therefore to be esteemed afore God: for hee fettereth much store by it, and counteth it as a holy thing, which cannot nor ought not to be so vnhalloved, except we will needs make our selues guiltie, and ruine in daunger of the threat that is vttered here, as we see. Now then let vs mark wel that it is not ynough for vs to haue forborne to sweare expressly By God: but also that if a man sweare by his faith, or vse any confirmation wherein there is any marke of Gods maiestie: his name is vnhalloved in so doing. And what shall then become of such as not onely vse falsie othes to countenance their matters withall, and sweare at all aduerture and as it were in scorne and mockerie: but doe also spite God with horrible blasphemies, so as they spare neither fleshe, bloude, nor death nor any thing else? Are such men to be helde as onely guiltie of simple abusing of Gods name? No: but as guiltie of the heynoufist vilanie that can be doone. Beholde our Lorde Iesus Christe the Lorde of glorie, abased himselfe for a time, as saith S. Paul. Now if there were no more but this, that he being the fountain of life, became a mortall man, and that he hauing dominion ouer the Angels of heauen, tooke vpon him the shape of a seruant, yea euen to shed his bloud for our redemption, and in the end to suffer the curse that was due vnto vs: were it conuenient that notwithstanding all this, he should now adayes in recompence thereof be torne in peeces, by the stinking mouthes of such as name themselves Christians? For when they sweare by his bloud, by his death, by his woundes and by whatsoeuer else: is it not a crucifying of Gods sonne againe as much as in them lying, and as a rending of him in peeces? And are not such folk worthie to be cut off from Gods Church, yea and euen from the worlde, and to be no more numbered in the aray of creatures? Should our Lord Iesus haue such reward at our handes, for his abacing and humbling of himselfe after that manner? God in vpbraying his people saith thus: My people, what haue I doone to thee? I haue brought thee out of Egypt, I haue ledde thee through the wildernesse, I haue brought thee vp with all gentlenesse and louingkindnesse, I haue planted thee as it were in mine owne inheritance, to the intent thou shouldest haue beene a vine that should haue brought me forth good fruite, and I haue tilled thee and manured thee: and must thou now be bitter to me, and bring forth sower fruite to choke mee withall? The same belongeth to vs at this day. For when the sonne of God, who is ordeined to be iudge of the worlde, shall come at the last day: hee may well say to vs: howe now syrs? Ye haue borne my name, yee haue bene baptised in remembrance and recorde that I was your redeemer, I haue drawn yee out of the dungeons where into yee were plunged, I deliuered you from endlesse death by suffering moste cruell death my selfe, and for the same cause I became man, and submitted my selfe euen to the curse of GOD my father, that you might be blessed by my grace and by my meane: and beholde, the reward that you haue yeilded mee for all this, is that yee haue (after a sorte) torne mee in peeces and made a iestingstocke of mee, and the death that I suffered for you hath beene made a mockerie among you, the blood whiche is the washing and cleansing of your soules hath beene as good as trampled vnder your feete, and to be short, you haue taken occasion to banne and blaspheme mee, as though I had bene some wretched and cursed creature. When the soueraine Iudge shall charge vs with these thinges, I praye you will it not be as thundering vpon vs, to ding vs downe to the bottome of hell? Yes: and yet are there verie fewe that thinke vpon it. For if needeles othes were as greatly abhorred nowadayes among men as they ought to be: they woulde not by & by after take such leaue and boldnesse as they doe to stich themselves in periuie and forswearing.

As touching blasphemie, doth not y world see what what commeth of it? And yet would wee be ielous of our owne honestie and reputation, when in the meane season Gods name is troden vnder foote among vs. If a man haue spoken amisse of ones father, hee coulde finde in his heart to make a quarrell of it, and eyther to seue him at the Lawe, or else much rather to be reuenged of him with his owne handes, and men beare themselves in hande that they may with honestie maintayne the quarrels of their parentes. Beholde, our soueraigne Father is injured after the same manner, euen the same father who not without cause is named the Lorde of glorie, before whose sonne all knees ought to bow, as Saint Paule reporteth to the Philippians, euen hee shall bee mocked as a man that doeth doo no worfe to him, except he shoulde spitte in his face: and yet notwithstanding euen they that name themselves Christians, and which pretend in deede to seeke his honour, shall bee the greatest and horriblest blasphemers of him. But yet for all that, as I said afore, our Lorde will not cease to maintayne his owne honour, (as hee himselfe auoweth.) When hee seeth men so heathenish as to deface his Maie-stie after that fashion, to the vttermost of their power: He maketh a solemne othe that he will be reuenged of it. As truly as I liue (sayeth the Lorde) I will not giue myne honour to another. And like as hee will not haue his honour conueyed ouer vnto idols: so is it certaine that the same saying hath a further reache, that is to wit, that if men doe falsely abuse his holy name, they shall feele in what estimation hee had it.

 And therefore let vs not looke till this bee accomplished vpon our selues: but let vs learne to yeelde reuerence to our G O D, and to him that hath all soueraigne Maiestie, that is to wit, to our Lorde Iesus Christ: and let vs learne therewithall, to sweare in such wise, as it may alwayes bee a warrant vnto vs, that it is he to whom wee belong, and that hee is our Father, our Maker, and our Iudge. Thus yee see what wee haue in effect to gather vpon this text.

But withall there is a threatening added: whereby wee see mens dulnesse, and howe Satan hath as yee woulde say bewitched them, so as they conceyue not Gods wrath, when it is set afore them. I will not holde him guiltlesse that taketh my name in vaine. Loe it is G O D that speaketh.
 I pray you ought not the haire of them to stande vp stiff vpon their heades, which sweare so vilanously as I haue mentioned afore? If a man sweare by his faith vnadvisedly: beholde, God armeth himselfe and sayeth: no sir, seeing thou hast not honoured mee, thou must yeelde an account of such treacherie. God can not away with a simple lye: and if periurie be added thereto, it is yet worse. If a third fall to blaspheming, it is the vttermost poynt of all leudnesse, and as bad as an open desying of G O D, as though we would runne vpon him and wounde him. Now if in this case a man thinke not vpon the punishment that is prepared for all such as doe so falsely misse the name of G O D: or haue dis-honoured it, may it not bee said that he is beastly drunken, and as it were out of his wittes, and that Satan hath made him starke blinde? Alas yes: and yet neuertheless, it is as common a thing as may bee. If a maister shoulde saye in his house, I will be obeyed in all things: but yet there is one thing aboue all the rest which I am desirous to haue done, and I can not abide that any man shall transgresse it, but that hee shall by and by bee thrust out of the doores, and bee punished for it as he deserueth: if a Maister haue a thing in such estimation, although his men be not so circumspect in all the rest, yet will they stand in some feare of this.

Nowe then, beholde, God curseth all such as shall haue transgressed his Lawe in any point.
 Cursed bee he that honoureth not his Father and mother: Cursed bee he that stealeth: Cursed bee he that committeth adulterie: Cursed bee he that perfourmeth not all things contained in the Lawe. And here specially, there is a threate vpon all such as shal haue abused Gods name. Hereby he sheweth vs that although he will haue vs to keepe his Lawe in all pointes, and to direct our liues thereby: yet notwithstanding he reserueth still this point to himselfe, and will haue his name to bee priuiledged. Nowe if this threatening slippe away for all that, so as it sinketh not in our mindes, nor restraineth vs at all from presuming to dally so with God and his Maiestie: must it not needes bee said (as I haue touched already) that the diuell hath carryed vs away, and that wee bee bereft of all witte and reason? Yes: but if this threate doe not waken vs nowe: wee must finde in the ende that Gods publishing of it was no false alarum. And therefore let vs learne to bee touched to the quicke, sith wee see that our Lorde setteth himselfe so expressly against vs, and sheweth himselfe to bee an aduersarie to all such as abuse his name.
 For what cost is it to vs to abstaine, as well from all false othes, as from all vnadvised othes, and specially from all blasphemies? The greatest excuse that they haue which would lessen their fault, is that they cannot reframe because they bee inured to it by custome. Yea, but if euery man woulde set before his eyes that God is his Iudge: surely he might soon forget his swearing: and when the name of G O D were to bee used, men would not doe it but with great singleness of heart. In so much that if men went to lawe, they shoulde haue as it were Gods Maiestie present there, so as hee myght bee behelde sitting there as Iudge when he were called to winnesse, and men shoulde not vse his name but in such wise, as Saint Paul speakes of, where he saith that wee must not take Gods name but in all holincesse.

This therefore might well be done. But what?
 Our tongue runnes ryor euen so farre as to the foresaid despying of Gods name: so that erie what men can, yea and (as yee would say) beate they it into vs with beetles: (for the things that the holy Scripture telleth vs concerning the abuse of Gods name, are like mightie blowes with a beetle wherewith G O D smiteth vpon vs.)

and yet for all that, wee continue still the same wee were afore, and Gods name hath neyther honour nor Maieſtie more than it had before. Yet notwithstanding, all ſuch as haue any vnderſtanding and feeling of Gods name, ought to thinke well vpon that which is ſaide here. And moreover (as I haue declared already) when wee bee once warned of that which wee haue ſcene heretofore, that is to wit, that hee which ſpeaketh is the Euerlaſting, and our Creator and Redeemer, which hath ſhewed himſelfe more than a Father and Sauour towards vs: if this bee well printed in our minde, ſurely all othes wil eaſily be forgotten. But if we keepe on our way ſtil: the ſaying of the Prophet Zacharie ſhall be fulfilled vpon vs: which is, they ſhall ſee him whom they haue perced, that is to ſay, who they haue wounded. For although men flatter one another, and make but a laughing at their othes, and imagine that their ſwearing ſhall eaſily bee forgiven them: yet is God wounded by it, and hee wil thewe in the end, that it is not for men to ruſh againſt him after that faſhion.

Zach. 1. 13, 10.

Herewithall wee haue to marke, that vnder one kinde, GOD meant to ſhewe what reuerence wee ought to yeelde in effect to his name. In deepe he ſpeaketh here expreſſely of Othes: but yet this doctrine ought to bee ſtretched further: namely that when wee thinke of God, or heare any ſpeaking of him, it muſt be done with all reuerence, ſo as wee may bee wakened vp, not onely to honour and praiſe him aboue all, but alſo to conſider, that euen the Angels doe tremble at the ſight of his ineffimable glorie, and therefore that we which are wretched creatures and as tranſitorie as maye bee, ought at leaſt wiſe to doe homage to the ſoueraigne Maieſtie of our GOD, whenſoeuer hee is ſpoken of. That is a principall point which we ought to marke well in this text.

Iob. 4. 16.

Truely this doctrine is eaſie ynough of it ſelf: but it is darke to vs, becauſe it is ſo ill put in praſtiſe. What a ſort of vaine thoughtes come in our heades when wee thinke vpon GOD? In deepe our nature is inclined therunto, as of folk that are fraughted with all vntrueth, ſo as there is nothing but darkeneſſe in vs. But yet for all that, if a man ſeede his owne humour with lewd and wicked imaginations conceiued againſt the honour of GOD: he ſheweth ſufficiently that he hath conſpired and conſiderate himſelfe with the diuell. Neuer the later howe many are there that be thinke themſelues, when any leawd fanſie commeth in their minde, or which labour to ſuppreſſe and beate downe the things by force, which their owne conſcience telleth them to be wicked and againſt the glorie of GOD? Nay, they rather take pleaſure in them, and welter in them. Nowe when mens ſpirite, that is to ſay, their vnderſtanding is ſo deſyled, the reſidue is eaſily corrupted. And for prooſe thereof: howe doe men moſt commonly ſpeake of God? What manner of talke haue they of him? It ſhoulde ſeeme that their whole ſeeking is to be corrupted: there needeth but a little leauen to ſowe the whole lump of Dowe, as ſayeth Saint Paule

1. Cor. 5. 6.

treating of this naughtie talke which marreth and infecteth vs with wicked vices. But the worſt is when men ſpeake of GOD in way of mockage. For what a thing is it that he ſhoulde bee ſcoffed at, and that he ſhoulde bee ſcorned in wordes, not onely vayne and fond, but alſo ſhamefull and horrible? Is it not a wilfull violating of his Maieſtie? And yet men doe ſo, yea euen ouer commonly, in ſo much as yee ſhall hardly haue long talke in any companie, but ſomewhat ſhall be intermingled that may found to the contempt of GOD. And doe wee not ſhewe thereby, that wee neuer wiſt what it is to worſhippe GOD? Wee can well ynough ſay daily, Hallowed bee thy name: and yet wee doe the cleane contrarie. Needeth there any other ſentence of condemnation againſt vs than that? When wee come here to Church, wee proceſt with our mouthes that wee deſire that Gods name ſhoulde bee maintayned in due honour: wee ſay as much at the table: and likewiſe doe th euerie man both at his riſing and at his going to bedde, (I meane ſuch as are not vterly brutiſh: for there are which wote not what praying to God meaneth.) But as for thoſe which haue yet ſo much honeſtie as to pray vnto God, they will well ynough ſay with their mouth, hallowed be thy name: but it is no ſooner from their tongue end, but by and by a falſe othe is in their mouth, and they make Gods name to runne too and fro. And what elſe is ſuch falſhood, than a violating of Gods Maieſtie, and as a ſtriking of him with a Dagger, or as a ſpitting in the face of him? Therefore as I haue tolde you already, there needs none other Iudge to condemne vs for our fooliſh othes, than the proteſtation that wee our ſelues make when we deſire GOD to maintaine the holeneſſe of his name, and yet in the meane whyle indeuour to deſace it as much as wee can.

But nowe remaineth that we ſpeake of God in al reuerence, ſpecially when his workes come in talke. As howe? In ſpeaking of the weather, bee it faire or bee it raine, they bee markes of his Maieſtie. If he ſende vs ſadde weather, hee ſheweth himſelfe a Iudge to make vs perceiue his diſpleaſure, to the intent to make vs enter into the examination of our ſinnes, that wee might bee ſorie for them and bee ledde to amendment. But in ſtead of humbling our ſelues before GOD, and of being ſorie that wee haue offended: wee become wayward as wee ſee men commonly bee, who fall to repynning, and ſaye, muſt this weather laſt euer? and ſo wee flee not to our GOD, ne aſke him forgiueneſſe of our ſinnes. And after the ſame maner deale wee in all other things: for I alledge but onely one example, to ſhewe that when wee ſpeake of Gods workes, wee muſt eather perceiue him to be a Father by his goodneſſe, or feele him to be a Iudge by his rigour. Therefore whenſoeuer God doeth any thing that miſliketh vs, and is contrary to our deſire and wiſhing: let vs vnderſtand that hee chaſtiſeth and tameth vs, to the end wee ſhould enter into the examination of our ſinnes to condemne them and to bee ſorie for them. If we glorifie not God in that behalfe, wee vnhalowe his holy name. Againe on the contrarie part, when God draweth vs to him by gendeneffe as a louing and pitifull father: it is to the intent wee should bee brought vnto him, and honour him the more. And if our vnthankfulnesse bee to bee condemned for not honouring of him at the first worde that he speaketh to vs: howe shall wee doe when all things vpbraide vs, so as God hauing layd hold on vs on all sides, can by no means win vs to him, whereby hee sheweth that wee bee vtter despisers of his Maiestie, and that wee haue trampled his woorkes vnder our feete, or ouerturned them with our snoutes like swine? I pray you shall it not redol to our dreadfull condemnation, if this may bee laid to our charge?

Nowe although God haue set his marke vpon all his woorkes, so as wee ought to know him both in fayre weather and in fowle, in heate and in colde, and (to bee short,) in all the order of nature: yet hath he set his marke chiefly vpon his woord. Of a truth it is an vnexcusable crime, when wee acknowledge him not in the good things that he hath made and done for vs. Wee holde our life of him: it is in him that

Act. 17. 28. wee liue, as speaketh Saint Paul. If all these benefites make vs not to bee mindefull of God: it is too vnmeasurable a churlishnesse already: but yet (as I saide afore) it hath bene his will that his marke should bee printed about all things in his woord. Let vs looke vpon Heauen and earth, and wee shall see G O D eueriwhere. For

Rom. 1. 20. what else is the worlde than (as sayeth S. Paul) a luely image wherein God setteth foorth himselfe? Although hee bee vnvisible in his owne being: yet doeth he shewe himselfe there, to the intent that wee should worship him. But come wee once to the holy Scripture: there is an image wherein God theweth himselfe much more

1. Cor. 3. 18. familiarly vnto vs, than he doeth either in the skies or in the earth. Neither Sun nor Moone, (though they giue light to the worlde,) doe so set foorth the Maiestie of God, as the Lawe, the Prophetes and the Gospell doe. And yet for all that, after what manner doe men speake of them? Howe boldly doe they deale with them? I pray you doe not men take leaue nowe adayes to speake of Gods name after their owne fancies?

And when they fall to reasoning vpon the holy Scripture among Cuppes, in Tauernes and at Tables, doeth their talke tend to the humbling of themselves, that they may all knowe their owne rudenesse and infirmite, and aske of God the gift of his holy spirit, to the end that we may handle his mysteries as becommeth vs? No: but those disputations are made as it were in way of mockerie, and thereby it appeareth well, yea much more than were requisite, that there are verie fewe true Christians nowe adayes in the worlde. It is apparant that some dally with the holy scripture, and wrest it to prouerbs of laughter, making it a matter to sport and play withal, as though it were but as a nose of waxe for euery man to fashion and vnfashion at his owne pleasure. Other some holde sond discourses on it, demaunding, why is this, and why is that? And againe, when wee come to Gods high mysteries: if any thing mislike vs, wee would haue it euerie whit wyped out, And that is all one as if wee would pull God out of heauen.

Nowe then let vs learne that God commiendeth the honour and autoritie of his woord vnto vs about all things: as if he should tell vs that looke whatsoeuer is contained in the holy scripture, wee must receiue it with all lowelnesse, and yeelde our selues playable to that which is contained therein. Yea and although the same bee contrarie to our vnderstanding, and wee could finde in our heartes that God had spoken after our maner: yet let vs doe him the honour to imprison all our owne wittes, and to say: Lord, wee be thy schollers, and therefore wee receiue quietly whatsoeuer thou hast vouchsafed to teach vs, assuring our selues that the same is for our benefite and welfare. Therefore whatsoeuer is contained in the holy Scripture, let it bee receiued reuerently without exception. And when Gods holy mysteries come in question: let vs not iudge of them according to our owne vnderstanding: but if it happen that any thing seme not good and conuenient vnto vs, let vs bridle our selues, and let God haue his full scope, so as his woord may haue all the libertie that may be. Also therewithall, when wee reade the holy Scriptures or come to a Sermon, let vs alwayes beare in minde to thinke thus with our selues: behold, our God sheweth himselfe here, and he is set down as our iudge: and therefore it is not for vs to kicke and spurne against him, as wee see a great sorte doe when they come to Sermons. But what? They haue conceiued rancour in their heart against God and his woord, and therefore they can reape nothing by it but vtter naughtinesse: in so much that they gather venom more and more, to belk out their blasphemies at tables when me speake not to their liking. And is that (thinke you) a good honouring of Gods name? Now therefore, whether it be that wee reade the holy Scripture, or that it be treated of in Sermons: let vs learne to haue Gods name alwayes in such reuerence, as to quake at it when we heare it spoken of, specially whē his woord is preached, as is said by the Prophet Elay. For so shall wee shewe, not onely in wordes but also in deede, that wee be true belecuers: and God also wil auowe vs for his people, and in the end gather vs into the heritage of the kingdome of heauen.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him, not to impute those vnto vs which we haue committed heretofore: but that it may please him so to reforme vs to himselfe, as our whole seeking may bee to honour him, and to giue our selues to his seruice, y he may dwell among vs, and our Lorde Iesus raigne ouer vs, both by his holy spirit and by his woord. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

Esa. 66. 2. 5.

On Thursday the xx. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxiiij. Sermon, which is the fifth vpon the fifth Chapter.

12 Keepe the day of rest, to hallowe it as the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee.

13 Sixe dayes shalt thou labour, and doe all thy businesse:

14 But the seuenth day is the rest of the Lorde thy God, Thou shalt not doe any worke therein.

After that he had spoken of the pure worshipping and seruing of GOD, to the glorifying of his name, without taking of it either in othes or in other things, otherwise than in way of honour, nowe mention is made of Gods seruice accordingly as he hath required it in his lawe, and of the order which he hath set downe for the faithfull to exercise themselves in. As for example, the Sabaoth or day of rest was a figure, partly to shewe that men could not serue God dutifully, but by mortifying all that euer is of our owne nature, and by dedicating themselves therewithall in such fort vnto him, as they may be as it were quite separated from the world. Secondly the day of rest was a Ceremonie to bring the people together, that they might heare the Lawe, and call vpon the name of GOD, and offer the sacrifices, and all other things that concerne the spiritual government. Thus then wee seee nowe after what sorte the Sabaoth day was spoken of: but yet would it not be well vnderstoode without distinction, and without laying forth of the said two partes by peece againe. Therefore we haue to note, that the Sabaoth or day of rest, was a shadow vnder the Law till the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ, to doe me to vnderstand that God requireth that they should vtterly ceasse from their owne workes: and that is it which I meant in one word, when I said y<sup>e</sup> we must mortifie all that euer is of our owne nature, if wee will conforme our selues to our God. And that it is so, Saint Paule declareth: and besides that, wee haue recordes ynow thereof in the newe Testament. But it shall suffice to haue alleged that which is most apparant, namely to the Colossians, where it is saide that wee haue the substance and the body of the things that were vnder the Lawe, wee haue it (sayeth he) in Iesus Christ. And therefore it was requisite for the fathers of old time to be trained in this hope, as well by the day of rest, as by some other Ceremonies. But nowe that the thing it selfe is giuen vnto vs, wee must no more stay vpon the shadowes. In dede the lawe is not so abolished, but that we ought to holde still the substance and truth of it: but yet is the shadowe of it done away by the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ. If it bee demanded how the fathers of olde time knewe that: Moses hath giuen vs vnderstanding thereof, as is shewed sufficiently in the Booke of Exodus, For God hauing set forth his Lawe in the twentieth of Exodus, 17.

which hee vttered vnto Moses, telleth him to what ende it tended, saying that he had ordeyned the Sabaoth daye, to bee as a warrant of the sanctifying of the people of Israel vnto him. It is (sayeth he) a badge of my holynesse which I haue ordeyned among you. Now when as the scripture speaketh to vs of being made holy vnto GOD: it is to separate vs from all things that are contrarie to his seruice. But where is such purenesse to bee founde? Wee bee in the world, and wee knowe that in the worlde there is nothing but vtter frowardnesse and naughtinesse as sayeth Saint Iohn in his Canonick Epistle. But men neede not to goe out of themselves to haue battell against God and his righteousnesse: for all our senses and all our affections (sayeth Saint Paule in the eyght to the Romanes) are enemies vnto God. When men giue heede to their owne thoughts, desires, likings, and lustes: they make open warre against God. Wee knowe howe it is tolde vs in the sixth of Genesis, that all that euer man can imagine is alwayes euill, and that all that euer man deuiseeth in himselfe and hath of his owne store, is vtterly vtowarde and corrupt afore God. So then, wee seee well that wee cannot be sanctified to our God, that is to say, wee cannot serue him vndeifiedly, except wee bee separated from the defylings that are contrarie to him, and that the things which are of our owne nature bee abolished. Nowe it was requisite that all these things should bee figured to the aunient fathers, bicause Iesus Christ was not yet fully reuealed vnto them. But wee in these dayes haue the full accomplishment and performance of all things in Iesus Christ. And for prooffe thereof, Saint Paule saith that the olde man is crucified with him. Whereas Saint Paule speaks after that sort of the olde man, he meaneth the things that wee haue from Adams, all which must be ryepened and done away. Not as touching the substance of our bodie or of our soule, but as touching y<sup>e</sup> naughtines that is in vs. The blindness that maketh vs to go astray, and the wicked lustes & likings which are vtterly disobedient to Gods righteousness, must be beaten downe, bicause they be drawn fro Adams. And how is that done? Not by our owne power or policie: but by our Lorde Iesus Christ: who by dying for vs, to wipe away our sinnes y<sup>e</sup> they might no more bee imputed

1. Cor. 15. 3.

Rom. 6. 4. 5.

imputed vnto vs, hath also purchased vs this prerogative, y by y power of his holy spirit we be able to forsake the world & our felues, so as our fleshly affectiōs shall not ouermaster vs. And although we be full of disobedience, yet shall Gods spirit ouerrule vs, to hold them downe & to keep the in awe. And therefore it is sayd y wee be risen againe with him, as S. Paul declarth lykewise in y forealleged text to y Colossians. But this was not yet manifested vnder y Law. Therefore it was requir<sup>t</sup> y the fathers which liued at y time, should haue some help, such as y sacrifices were, to feed the in the hope of the death of our Lorde Iesus Christ, so as they might know y their sinnes were cleansed away by y bloud of y mediator. Likewise they had y Saboth day as a warrāt of the grace y was purchased vs to mortify our thoughtes & affectiōs, that God might liue in vs by y power of his holy spirit.

Col. 2. 12.

Gal. 2. 9, 20

Now we haue som entrance to cōceiue y which was touched briefly before: y is to wit, y the Saboth day was as a figure, to represent y thing y was fulfilled in dede at y coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And therefore let vs marke wel, y the Saboth day extēded to y whole seruice of God, to shewe that men could not honor him purely, but by renouncing the felues, & by being separated from the defilemēt of y world & of their owne flesh. And for the same cause were the Iewes rebuked lykewise by the prophet Ezechiel for not keeping the Saboth day. And it is tolde them in such wise as if they had broken the whole lawe generally. And not without cause: for he y despiseth the Saboth day, hath (as much as in him lyeth) thrust the whole seruice of God vnder foot. And if the day of rest be not keppall the residue is nothing woorth, according to this saying of y Prophet Esay, y men must bereaue themselves of their owne vertues, and be contented to forgoe them: or else it is not the Lordes Saboth, neither doth he lyke or allowe of it. Herby we see y it is to no purpose to obserue the ceremonie alone. For had the Iewes kept the ceremonie neuer so straitly in assembling together on the Saboth day, without stirring one finger in their housholde businesse, & yet in the meane while nourish their own wicked affectiōs, & afterward put them in effect: it had bin but a mocking of God, by abusing of his name, and by defacing and falsifying the whole order that he had ordeined accordingly also as he vpbraideth them. But the chiefe thing was to haue an eye to the true meaning of the figure: that is to wit, to the spirituall seruing of God. And yet therewithal it behooued the Iewes to keepe the ceremonie also that was commaunded them. For God did so biddeth them, as he vouchsafed not to let them haue the substance of things [alone by it selfe,] but he would that they should also haue the shadowes of them therewithal, vntil the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ.

Eze. 20. 21. & 22. 8. & 32. 38.

Isa. 58. 1. 3.

Col. 2. 20.

And hereby we see the thing that S. Paul speaketh; namely that as now we be no more tyed to the old bondage of keeping the Saboth day. For we must doe so much honor to Iesus Christ, as to holde our felues contented with that which hee hath brought vs in his owne person, without the hauing of the outward things any more y were vnder the law. Now we see how this obseruation concerneth vs at this day. As touching the ceremonie it selfe, it is past as I sayde, and therefore wee must come to the substance: which is, y to serue God wel, wee must learne to forbear all our own wils, & all our own thoughtes & affectiōs. And why? Because y when we will needes be wise in our owne conceites to imagine thus or y to serue God withal, we marre all. Therefore our own wisdom must be layd downe, & we must heare God speake, without following our own wil or fancie. Thus the first entrance to keepe the Saboth day as we ought to doe, is, not to beleue the thing y seemeth good to our felues: for wee must rest. And how must we rest? Wee must stand at a stay, so as our thoughtes runne not roving abroade, to inuent one thing or other. We must (say I) continue quietly at one stay in the obedience of our God. And when we be tempted by our own lustes, we must consider that all our lewde and disobedient affectiōs, are enemies to God euerichone of them. Therefore we must rest stid in that behalfe, and referre our felues vnto God, that he onely may worke in vs, and guide and gouerne vs by his holy spirit.

Rom. 8. 7.

Matt. 6. 14. Luk. 9. 23.

Herby we see God ouerslipped not any thing, when he ordeined the Saboth day. And sith it hath so large a scope: what want wee more to teach vs a perfect doctrine of holynesse, when we haue the things which the holy Ghost hath set before vs? The matter is that we should liue holily in the obedience of our God. And how is that to be done? Euen by receiving his single worde, and by fashioning our felues according to his rightcoufnesse. Now forasmuch as the things which we haue of our owne nature, are contrary therunto: we must begin at this end of renoucing our felues. That being done, we haue all that is requisite to the seruing of God. But y is very hard to be done. And therefore when we heare y God commaundeth vs to keepe the Saboth day, let vs looke that we marke, and consider that it wil not be done with playing, but y we must inforce our felues: & we shall haue profited greatly all our lyfe, if we keepe it well, that is to wit by renoucing whatsoever wee haue of our owne, and by dedicating our felues wholly vnto our God. And we ought to bee the more inflamed to the spirituall keeping of the Saboth of the Lord, seing we be set free fro the slavish subiection of the law, and God hath graunted greater priuledge to vs, than he did to the fathers of olde time: insomuch that hee is contented with our mortifying of the old man, to be renewed again by the power of his holy spirit, & we be no more bound to the ceremonie that was kept so straitly vnder the law. Seing y God handeth vs so Ioungly: it bindeth vs the more to haue an eye to the principal, y we may obtente it duely. Yea & we must not alledge y the ancient fathers shad y ceremonie to quicke the vp, which seruēd the as a spurre: for inasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ is come, we haue much more than the outward and vñsible signe. And forasmuch as al the things that that were figured in those shadowes, are accomplished in him: we must not craue still the things that were vnder the lawe. Thus ye see how the thing that is ordeined here concerning the Sa-both day, is nowe fulfilled, at least w<sup>ch</sup> as in respect of the truth of the figure, which the fathers had but in shadowe. And in very deepe looke what was commaunded concerning the day of rest, must needs belong to vs as well as to the.

 For let vs take Gods lawe in it selfe, and we shall haue an euerlasting rule of frightousnesse. And it is certaine that vnder the tenne commaundements, God intended to geue a rule that should indure for euer. Therefore let vs not thinke that the things which Moses speaketh of the Saboth day, are needlesse for vs: not for that the figure remaineth still in force, but because we haue the truth thereof. And for the same cause the Apostle in the fourth to the Hebrewes, applyeth the things that were spoken of the Saboth day, to the instruction of the Christians and of the new Church. For hee sheweth vs that we must fashion our selues lyke to our G O D, and that this is our full felicitie and perfection, because the whole soueraigne welfare of man consisteth in being created after the image of God. What is to be done now, seeing that the said image is defaced by sin, but that it may bee repaire d againe?
 Ye see then that the way for vs to atteine to perfection, is to fashion our selues lyke to our God and to yeelde to his will, and to inquire of his workes: that wee may doe the lyke. Wherefore let vs vnderstand that to serue God well, we at this day be commaunded to streine our selues to the vttermost of our power, to subdew our owne thoughtes, affections and desires, that God may reigne in vs and rule vs by his holy spirit. And therefore it is in vaine for all hypocrites to glose, & to set a faire countenance vpon their doings.
 For so long as wicked couetousnesse lyeth lurking in their heartes: so long as they bee full of enuie, rancor, ambition, crueltie, or guile: it is certaine that they do nothing else but breake the Saboth day. And therefore we may conclude that they ouerthrow the whole seruice of God, according to that which I alledged afore out of Ezechiel.
 As much is sayd thereof in Jeremy. And in deed that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why the ceremonie was so straily looked vnder y<sup>e</sup> lawe. Thinke we that God did euer take pleasure in mens idleness? no surely. But he punished the partie as for: y<sup>e</sup> wrought vpon the Saboth day, as him that had murdered a man. And why so? It seemeth to be a cruel-tie, that a man should bee put to death for cleaning of a hild wood vpon y<sup>e</sup> Saboth day, as if he had committed a murder. But yet doth God condemn: him to death y<sup>e</sup> cleaued wood vpon y<sup>e</sup> Sa-both day. And why? Because y<sup>e</sup> vnder that figure was comprehended y<sup>e</sup> whole seruice of God. And for y<sup>e</sup> same cause it is sayd in Jeremy, y<sup>e</sup> bare burthens, and went to cart vpon the Saboth day.
 And why? It should seeme that God standeth too much vpon a trifling and childish matter: but he had an eye to the thing that was betokened by the Saboth day: and when that was so despised by the Iewes, it was a traytorousnesse, whereby they shewed that they made no reckoning of the lawe at all. So then, to come againe to our selues, seeing that wee haue not this figure so straily nowadayes, but God hath giuen vs a greater libertie, which was purchased for vs by the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ:

 let vs learne to giue our selues earnestly vnto him, and to vnderstand (as I sayd afore) that we may all traueil in all the residue, and yet it shall be to no purpose vnlesse our affections be brideled, so as wee strue to renounce all our owne thoughtes and desires, in such sort as God may haue the whole gouerning of vs, and we proceed that we desire nothing else than to rest in him.
 And for the same cause also doth God set forth himselfe to vs for an example. For hee thinke it not enough to commaund men to rest: but also sheweth them the way. For after he had created the worlde and all that is therein, hee himselfe rested. Not that he was weary or had any neede of rest: but to allure vs to behold his workes, that we might rest in them, and therewithall fashion our selues lyke vnto him. Wil we then keepe the spiritual rest: lyke as it is said that God rested fro his workes: so must we rest also, ceasing to doe what seemeth good to our selues, and what soeuer our owne nature couereth. If this example of God prouoke vs not: see shewe will thereby that we neither seeke nor in any wise couet our owne welfare, but that we will needs continue wilfully in our wretched and cursed state. The soueraigne welfare of men (as I sayd afore) is to sticke vnto God & to be knit vnto him. Beholde, our Lord calleth vs to him, & telleth vs that wee can haue no true holynesse nor vnion with him, but by resting from our owne workes. Now if we be so vnruely, that we will alwayes be occupying of our armes & legges, & be still doing what wee thinke good: surely it is as a breaking of y<sup>e</sup> band that is betwene God and vs, & a separating and estranging of our selues from him as much as in vs lyeth. And doth it not appeare thereby, y<sup>e</sup> we seeke to be leif vp as pray to Satan, to be carry-ed & haried away by him, for want of being any more vnder the protection of our God? Yes: but what for that? There are very fewe y<sup>e</sup> thinke of y<sup>e</sup>.
 The world sees what libertie al men take to the selues. If one come & tel a man that he must not walke after his owne fancie. Truth (saith hee) I knowe how to behaue my selfe. But a man could not deuise to spite God more manifestly, than by such rebelliousnesse. It is all one as if we would needes shewe that wee will not y<sup>e</sup> he should haue any superioritye ouer vs. In deepe men will not be acknowe y<sup>e</sup> it is so: but yet it is so in very deepe.
 For (as I haue sayd already) it is no seruing of God, vnlesse we begin at the absteinyng fro our owne thoughtes & affections. Therefore when men will needes be selfwise & trust to their owne wit, so as they take leaue to doe what they list, & to follow their owne affections & fancies, & labor not to repress the, but are offended whē others goe about to reclaime them: it is a signe y<sup>e</sup> they neuer wist what it is to serue God, nor y<sup>e</sup> it is the chiefest poynt of the lawe. And therefore let vs marke wel, y<sup>e</sup> whereas God alledgeth his owne

Col. 2. 14.

example: it is to allure vs gently to y<sup>e</sup> keeping of y<sup>e</sup> spiritual Saboth or rest, y<sup>e</sup> might thinke our felues ynhappy to be separated fro him, as I touched afore. And behold, y<sup>e</sup> band of this cōiunctō is y<sup>e</sup> we withdraw not our felues from his religion & truth, but suffer our felues to be ruled by him.

But now it may be demaunded, why y<sup>e</sup> Lewes were commauended to rest but onely the seuenth day: for our renoucing of our owne thoughtes & affectiōs, must not be for one day in a weeke: but we must continue in y<sup>e</sup> minde al y<sup>e</sup> time of our lyfe. To be short, the rest y<sup>e</sup> God comandeth vs is cuerlasting, and not by pangs or fittes as they say. And why then choise he but one day of the weeke: it was to shew vs, that when we haue done what we can to renounce our wicked lustes, our false pretences, and whatsoever elsis of our own nature: yet shall we neuer be able to attein fully thereunto, till we be quite & cleane bereft of our fleithe. True it is y<sup>e</sup> faithful ought to keepe a continual Saboth all th<sup>er</sup> life long, by forbearing their own wils and workes, & by indeuoring to giue themselves ouer vnto God w<sup>ith</sup> all humilitie & submission, so as they may obey him quietly: I say we must doe so, or else al y<sup>e</sup> seruice y<sup>e</sup> we be desirous to doe vnto God, shall be but a feining, & he wil disalowe it & reiect it. Neuertheless we cannot so discharge our felues in renoucing our affectiōs, but y<sup>e</sup> there will alwayes be somewhat worthe of blame in vs. S. Paul doth in deed glory y<sup>e</sup> the world was crucified vnto him, & he vnto y<sup>e</sup> world: but yet for al y<sup>e</sup> he ceaseth not to say, y<sup>e</sup> his fleithe fighteth againt his spirit, so as there is neuer any agreemēt betwixt thē. Yea and hee confesseth in y<sup>e</sup> seuenth of y<sup>e</sup> Romans, that he felt such strife continually in himselfe, as he did not y<sup>e</sup> good y<sup>e</sup> he would haue done, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, he performed it not w<sup>ith</sup> so earnest affection, nor was so fully determined to walke according to y<sup>e</sup> will of God, but y<sup>e</sup> he had alwayes some lets to hinder him, so as to his owne seing, in sted of running strongly, he did but go limpingly. Sith it is solet vs marke y<sup>e</sup> Gods ordaining of y<sup>e</sup> seuenth day to rest in, was not w<sup>ith</sup>out cause: for thereby he doth vs to vnderstand, y<sup>e</sup> we cannot atteyne to y<sup>e</sup> perfect holinesse which he requireth at our hands, neither in one day, nor in one month. Why so? Because y<sup>e</sup> when we haue fought neuer so lustily againt the affectiōs of our fleithe, & againt our wicked thoughtes: there will alwayes remaine some dregges stil, till we be fully vnited to our God, & that he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly kingome. Vntill y<sup>e</sup> time, we shall alwayes haue some temptations, trouble, & vnquietnesse in vs, so as wee shall well perceiue (I meane such of vs as indeuer to serue God) that we be stil subiect to many tēptations, & to the feeling of a number of things whereby we be prouoked to this or that. And are not all those things as many hinderances to holde vs backe fro the spiritual rest? If a man rested himselfe in God as he should doe: he should not conceiue any thing at all in his minde, that might turne him aside from the right way. He should not haue any wicked lustes or lykinges. All such things should be farre from him. Now then when as we conceiue a number of lewde imaginations: then doth Satan step in to assaile vs, & to vexe vs w<sup>ith</sup> vnquietnesse. And when our minde is once inclined to doe euill: there are a number of things in vs, y<sup>e</sup> tickle vs & set vs full forward. And although we hate y<sup>e</sup> euil, yett foit is, y<sup>e</sup> by such tēptations we are prouoked to goe through w<sup>ith</sup> it. And thereby it appeareth y<sup>e</sup> it is not an easie matter to winde our felues fro our wicked lustes, & to bring to passe y<sup>e</sup> they may no more reigne in vs. So then let vs goe forward with this indeuor of keeping Gods spiritual Saboth, for we shall neuer attein fully to it, vntill y<sup>e</sup> end of our lyfe.

But hereby we be put in minde of two things. The one is to mylke of our fleshes, & to mourne continually, & to consider that although to our owne seing we haue takē neuer so great pain to obey our G O D, yet notwithstanding we be but yet on our way stil, and we come far short of fulfilling the things that are required and commauended in the lawe. Thus haue we a cause to humble our felues, because God hath alwayes find enough and too much to condemne in vs as concerning our feeling of him, and also because that the spiritual rest is not yet such as he hath commauended, nothing neere. And lyke as wee haue occasion to humble our felues & to be sorie with true repentance: so ought we on the other side to be y<sup>e</sup> more moued & quickened vp to goe forward, sith we see our owne wants as thus: True it is that God hath giuen me the grace to bee desirous to serue him: but how doe I behaue my selfe therein: alas I am yett far off fro doing it. Sith we see it is so: what should we do but inforce our felues? Therefore w<sup>ith</sup> our abhorring of y<sup>e</sup> euil which is in vs, let vs also be the more earnest to profitt stil in this rest, & to goe forward in it, & let euery of vs dayly call himselve to account. Ye see then that God hauing giuen vs occasiō to humble our felues all the time of our life, sheweth vs that we must be earnest in correcting our vices, & in mortifying our flesh dayly more & more, & consider y<sup>e</sup> it is not enough for vs to haue our olde man crucified in part, vnlesse we be also quite buried w<sup>ith</sup> Iesus Christ, as saith S. Paul in y<sup>e</sup> seuenth to the Romans before alledged. Thus much concerning y<sup>e</sup> seuenth day, wherof mētiō is made in this place.

Now must we come to the second point: which is, y<sup>e</sup> (as I haue sayd already) y<sup>e</sup> Saboth day was a policy or order whereby to exercise the faithfull in the seruice of God. For that day was ordemed for men to assemble in, to heare the doctrine of the lawe preached, to communicate together w<sup>ith</sup> sacrifices, and to call vpon the name of God. As touching these poyntes, it belongeth as well to vs as to the people of olde time. For albeit y<sup>e</sup> the figure be ceased, (I meane the same that S. Paul speaketh of in the epistle to the Colossians:) yet notwithstanding, so much as cōcerneth the order, continueth still and hath his vse. And to what end serueth this order? To assemble our felues in the name of God. True it is that this ought to be done continually: howbeit for our infirmities sake, or rather by reason of our slothfulness, it is requisite that some one day should be chosen out. If we were as earnest in seruing of God as we ought to bee: wee should not appoyne

Gal. 6. 14. &amp; 5. 17.

Ro. 7. 15. 19.

Rom. 7. 4.

one day in a weeke, onely but every man ought to meeete both morning and evening without lawe written, to be edified more and more by Gods worde. And truly this exercise is more than needefull for vs, considering that wee bee so inclined to euill, as there needeth not any thing to thrust vs out of the way: and therefore it were expedient for vs to come together daily in the name of God. But what? Wee see that men wil scarce meeete vpon the Lord his day, and that moſte of them muſt bee held to it as it were by force. Considering then that there is ſuch infirmity in vs: let vs vnderſtand that this order was not made all onely for the Iewes, that they might haue ſome day wherein to come together: but alſo for vs, ſo as it belongeth to vs as well as to the.

But yet herewithall we haue to marke, that this is not all: for it were a very ſlender order to haue a reſt of our handes and feete, and to go no further than ſo. What then? we muſt apply this reſt to a higher purpoſe: we muſt refrain from our owne buſineſſe which might hinder vs from the minding of Gods workes: and wee muſt call vpon his name and exerciſe our ſelues in his worde. If wee ſpende the Lordes day in making good cheere, and in playing and gaming: is that a good honoring of God? Nay, is it not a mockerie, yea and a very vnhalowing of his name? Yes. But when the Shopwindowes are ſhut in on the Lordes day, and men trauele not as they doo on other dayes: it is to the ende wee ſhoulde haue the more leaſure and libertie, to intend to the thinges that God commaundeth: that is to wit, to be taught by his worde, to meeete together to make confeſſion of our faith, to call vpon his name, & to exerciſe our ſelues in y<sup>e</sup> vſe of his Sacramentes. That is the purpoſe whereunto this order ought to ſerue vs. But now let vs ſee if thoſe which name themſelues Chriſtians, diſcharge themſelues as they ought to do. Behold, a great number thinke to haue y<sup>e</sup> Lordes day moſt free to followe their owne buſineſſe, & reſerue that day for the ſame purpoſe, as though there were none other day for them to appoint vpon of all the weeke long. And though the bell tole to bring them to the ſermon, yet it ſeemeth vnto them, that they haue nothing elſe to doe, but to thinke vpon their buſineſſe, and to caſt vp their accounts concerning this and that matter. Other ſome fall to gluttonie, and ſhut vp the ſelues in their houſes, becauſe they dare not ſhewe a manifeſt contempt in the open ſtreetes: but yet the Lord his day is to them but as a couert to ſhrinke aſide in from the Church of God. And hereby it appeareth what affection we haue towardes all Chriſtianitie, & towardes y<sup>e</sup> ſeruing of God, ſeing we make that thing an occaſion of withdrawing our ſelues further off from God, which is giuen vs for a helpe to bring vs neerer vnto him. And againe, be we once gone aſtray: it ſerueth to pul vs quite and cleane away. And is not y<sup>e</sup> a diueliſh ſpite of men? yet notwithstanding it is ſo comon a thing, as is pitie to ſee: and would God that examples were more rare and further of to be found. But y<sup>e</sup> worlde ſees how all thinges are vnhalowed, in ſomuch that moſt folke haue no regard at all of y<sup>e</sup> vſing of that day, which was ordayned to withdraw vs from all earthly cares and affaires, that wee might giue our ſelues wholly vnto God.

Furthermore wee muſt vnderſtand, that the Lord his day was not appointed all onely to the hearing of Sermons: but to the ende wee ſhould apply the reſt of the time to y<sup>e</sup> praying of God. Yea verily. For although he ſeede vs every day: yet doe wee not minde his gracious benefites ſufficiently to magnify them. In deece it were a poore thing if wee minded not Gods benefites but vpon the Lordes day: But becauſe we be occupied too much about our owne affaires on the other dayes, therefore wee bee not ſo much giuen to ſerue God in them, as vpon the day which is assigned wholly therunto. The Lord his day then muſt ſerue vs for a tower to mount vp into, to vewe Gods workes a farre off, as a time wherein wee haue nothing to let vs or to keepe vs occupied, but that we may employ all our wits to conſider the benefites and gracious gifts that he hath beſtowed vpon vs. And if wee can put this thing wel in v<sup>r</sup>e; that is to ſay, if we can conſider Gods workes, vpon the Lordes day, ſurely we ſhall be the more giuen vnto it all the reſte of the weeke after, and the minding thereof wil as it were faſhion and poliſh vs aforehand, ſo as our muſing vpon his workes long afore to the intent wee may knowe how to fare the better by them, wil leade vs to yeeld thanks vnto our God vpon the Sunday and all the weeke after. But if the Lordes day be ſpent not onely in games & paſtimes full of vanitie, but alſo in thinges quite contrarie to God, ſo as men thinke they haue not kept holy the Lordes day, except God be offended diuers wayes: if the holy order which God ordeyned to bring vs to him, be broken after that faſhion: is it any wonder though men play the beaſtes all the weeke after? What is to be done then? Let vs assure our ſelues that it is not enough for vs to goe to ſome Sermon vpon the Lordes day, to receiue ſome good inſtruction & to cal vpon the name of God: but we muſt alſo digeſt the ſame thinges, and bende all our wittes to conſider the gracious thinges that God hath done for vs: and by that meanes wee muſt frame our ſelues to the thinges that may leade vs to our God, without further trauele on y<sup>e</sup> Monday or of all the weeke after. And to the intent we may not doe aught elſe than record y<sup>e</sup> thinges by good leaſure, which we had learned afore: let our mindes be diſcharged of all things that may hinder vs, or plucke vs backe from the conſidering of Gods workes. Thus ye ſee what the order is which we muſt keepe at this day. It is not to keepe the ceremonie ſo ſtraite as it was vnder the bondage of y<sup>e</sup> lawe: for we haue not the figure or ſhadowe any more. But it ſerueth to cal vs together, that we may be inured according to our infirmity, to apply our ſelues the better to y<sup>e</sup> ſeruing of God, and to dedicate that day wholly vnto him, ſo as we may bee vtterly withdrawn from the worlde, and the ſame may ſtand vs in ſtead all the reſt of the weeke, as I ſayd afore.

Yea and wee haue to marke alſo, that it is not enough for vs to thinke vpon God and his workes vpon the Lordes day euery man alone by himselfe: but that wee must meete together vpon some day certaine to make open confession of our faith. In deede this ought to be done euery day as I haue sayd afore. But yet in respect of mens rawnesse, and by reason of their slothful-nesse, it is necessarie to haue one speciall day dedicated wholly thereto. It is true that wee be not bound to the seventh day: neither doe wee (in deede) keepe the same day that was appointed to the Iewes: for that was the Saturday. But to the intent to shewe the libertie of Christians, the day was chaunged because Iesus Christ in his resurrection did set vs free from the bondage of the law, & cancelled the obligation ther-of. That was the cause why the day was shifted. But yett must wee obserue the same order of hauing some day in the weeke, be it one or be it two, for that is left to the free choyce of Christians. Neuertheless, if a people assemble to haue the Sacramentes ministred, and to make common prayer vnto G O D, and to shewe one agreement and vnion of faith: it is conuenient to haue some one day certaine for that purpose.

 Then is it not enough for euery man to with-drawe himselfe into his owne house, whether it bee to reade the holy scripture or to pray vnto G O D: but it is meete that wee shoulde come into the companie of the faithfull, and there shewe the agreement which wee haue with all the whole body of the Church, by keeping this order which our Lord hath so commanded. But what? There a man may see too apparant vnhallowing of Gods seruice. For (as I haue touched afore) are there not a great sorte which could well finde in their heartes to shewe that they doe but mocke God, and that they would faine be exempted from the common lawe? It is true that they wil come to a sermon a fiew or fixe times a yecere. And what to doe there? Forsooth euen to mocke at God & at all his doctrine. In deede they be very swine, which come to defile Gods temple, and are worthier to be in stables than there, and they were better to keepe themselues at home in their stinking cabans. To bee short, it were better that such rascals and filthie vilaines were quite cut off from the Church of God, than that they should come and intermingle themselves after that sort in companie with the faithfull. But yet how many times come they thither: The bel may ring wel enough: for looke where a man lefthem, there shall he finde the.
 So then we ought to bee the more diligent and careful, in quickening vpon our selues to make such confession of our faith, as God may be honored with one common consent among vs. And besides that, all superstitions must bee banished.
 For we see how it is an opinion in poperie, that God is serued with idlenesse. It is not after that sorte that we must keepe holy the Saboth day.
 But to the intent it may bee applied to the right and lawfull vse, we must consider (as I sayd afore)

how our Lord requireth to haue this day bestowed in nothing else, but in hearing of his worde, in making common prayer, in making confession of our faith, and in hauing the vse of the Sacramentes. Those are the things that wee bee called to. Howbeit, we see how all things haue bin corrupted & confounded in the popes dome. For lyke as they haue allotted dayes to honoring of their hee Saunts and three Saunts, and set vp images of the: so haue they furnished that they were to be worshipped with idlenesse. But seeing that world is so giuen to corruption: it standeth vs so much the more in hand to marke well this discourse concerning the Saboth day, as it is set downe here by Moses. And let vs consider to what ende our Lorde commanded the people of olde time, to haue one day in the weeke to rest in: to the intent that wee knowing how the same is abolished by the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, may take our selues to the spiritual rest, that is to say, dedicate our selues wholly vnto God, forsaking all our owne reason and affections. Againe let vs retaine still the outward order, so farre as it meete for vs, that is to wit, of forbearing our owne affaires and worldly busineses, that we may intend wholly to the min-ding of Gods workes, and occupy our selues in the consideration of the good thinges that hee hath done for vs. And about all thinges let vs streine our selues to acknowledge the grace that hee offereth vs dayly in his Gospel that we may be strengthened in it still more and more. And when wee haue bestowed the Lord his day in praying and magnifying Gods name, and in minding his workes: let vs shewe all the weeke after, that wee haue profited in the same.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good G O D with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble better than we haue done. And foras much as we can by no meanes serue him, vntill his froward-nesse that is in vs be done away, and inasmuch as he hath tolde vs that wee shall not cease to fight against his righteousnesse, so long as we giue heade to our owne lusts and imaginations: it may please our good God to graunt vs such grace by the power of his holy spirit, as wee may be fully fashioned lyke vnto him that dyed and rose again for vs to mortify vs and to quicken vs.
 So then let vs beare the marke of our Lorde Ie-sus Christ euen in renouncing our selues, and let vs so submit vs to his will, as our whole seeking may bee to be fashioned lyke to his righteou-nesse, that his lawe may bee fulfilled in vs euen as it is spirituall, and wee be changed from flesh to spirit, to liue vnder his obedience. And because there is alwayes so much in vs to be mistyked: it may please the same good G O D to beare with our infirmities, vntill his reft be fully brought to passe in vs, and that he haue taken vs vp into his heauenly kingdome. That it may please him to graunt this grace not only. &c.

On Friday the xxj. of Iune. 1555.

The xxxv Sermon which is the sixth upon the fifth Chapter.

13 Six dayes shalt thou labour &c.

14 Thou shalt not doe anie worke therein, thy selfe, thy Sonne, thy daughter, thy manseruaunt, thy womanseruaunt, thyne Ox, thyne Ass, and thy cattie, and thy Straunger which is within thy gates, that thy manseruaunt and thy womanseruaunt may haue rest as well as thy selfe.

15 Remember that thou wast a seruaunt in the land of Egypt, and that the Lorde thy God brought thee thence with strong hande and arme stretched out. And therefore the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee to keepe holie the Saboth day.

Declared yesterday how and why the commaundement of keeping the Saboth day was giuen to the Iewes. I told you briefly how it was a figure of the spirituall rest which the faithfull ought to obserue, to serue God in. Howbeit our Lorde Iesus Christ hath brought vs the performance thereof, so as we must no more stay vpon the shadowe of the Lawe, but content our selues with the crucifying of our olde man by the power of his death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ, that we may bee renewed to serue our G O D throughly. But yet in the mean while we haue need of some policie and order among vs. Therefore it is expedient that there bee a day of rest for vs to meete together, that we be confirmed in the doctrine of God, and profite daily therein, that is to say, all the time of our life, and also bee occupied in calling vpon his name, and in making confession of our faith: and that therewithall the residue of the day be spent in considering the benefits that wee receiue from time to time at Gods hand, that he may be the better glorified for them.

And now we haue to marke what is sayd in Moseses text. Six dayes shalt thou labour, sayeth the Lorde. This must not be taken as though God commaunded vs to labor. It is true that wee be borne thereto, and wee knowe that God intendeth not that wee should be idle, while we liue in this world: for hee hath giuen men handes and feete and cunning and wit. Yea and euen before there was any sin, it is sayd that Adam was put into the garden to dresse it. But the labor that men take now, is a chastisement for sin. For it is sayd vnto them, Thou shalt eate thy bread in the sweate of thy browes: that is a curse which is layd vpon all mankind. For wee be not worchie to inioy the itate that was giuen to our first father, which was to liue in pleasure without much troubling of himselfe. Notwithstanding, euen before sin came into the world, and before we were condemned of God to this payntful and constreyned labor, it behoued men to occupy themselves in some exercise. And why? For it is against our nature to be as vnprofitable blockes of wood. So then it is very certeine that we must apply the whole time of our lyfe to some labor. Neuertheless here is no precise commaundement giuen of laboring six dayes. For in very deepe there were other solemnities besides the Saboth day, vnder the Lawe: There were other feastes which might fall in the midst of the weeke. But for as much as the number of them was small, (for they were but fewer dayes in the yeere:) here is no mention made of them: hee speaketh but only of the Saboth day. And wheras it is sayd, thou shalt labor sixe dayes: our Lord sheweth vs that wee haue no cause to grudge of the giuing and bestowing of one day vpon him, seeing he leaueth vs sixe for one. As if he should say, is it a great matter to you that I should chose out one day to be reserued wholly to my seruice, so as ye shall doe nothing therein but reade and exercise your selues in my lawe, or heare the doctrine that shalbe preached vnto you, and come to the temple to be there confirmed by the sacrifices that shall be offered, and to call vpon my name, and to protest that you bee of the fellowship of my people: Shold this grieue you seeing you haue sixe dayes free and whole to doe your businesse and affaires in? Seeing then that I deale so courteously with you: as to require but one day of seuen: is it not too great an vnthankfulness, if yee complaine of that time as though it were misbestowed, as who should say yee were so churlish and niggardly, as to grudge mee the seuenth part of your time? I giue you your whole life: y Iunne neuer shineth vpon you, but you ought to consider my goodness, & that I am a freehearted father towards you. For I make my name to shine, to give you light to goe by; that euery of you might doe his businesse. And why then should not I haue one day of feuen, wherein euery man shall surcease from his owne businesse; so as ye shall not be intangled in any worldly care, but that ye may haue leasure to thinke vpon me? We see then that this saying of laboring sixe dayes, is not set downe as a commaundment, but rather as a graunt that God maketh euen in way of vbraiding, men with their vnthankfulness, if they doe not obserue the Saboth day and keepe it holy as is spoken of it here.

But hereof we may gather a good and profitable lesson: which is that when we be slow to obey God, we must consider his benefits. For what should more sharpen our desire to followe Gods commaundements, than to consider that hee dealeth not roughly with vs, ne ouerpresth vs not; behold God coulde reine vs with a streite bit if it pleased him: he coulde driue vs to so hard things as there should be no meanes to get out of them; but hee hath a consideration to guide vs as a father doth his children. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> he doth so beare with vs; ought wee not to be the more prouoked to doe as he appointeth vs? yes. So then, as oft as Gods commaundements are hard vnto vs, or at leastwise seeme to bee so: let vs assure our selues that hee doth not presse vs so much as hee coulde, nothing neere. For if God listeth to vie his right with extremitie; we should be tormented out of all measure. Therefore let vs vnderstand that he beareth with vs, and that hee vseth more than fatherly goodnesse in that behalfe. It is true that the lawe of G O D is vnpossible vnto vs, inasmuch that wee bee not onely vnable to obserue it throughout; but alio if a man would of his owne naturall power discharge himselfe to Godward, he could not stirre one finger, nor haue one good thought, to know which way to begin. And so farre off are wee from being able to obey G O D, and to execute the things that are contained in his lawe: that all our thoughts and affections are enemies against God. If men could through their owne power performe the Lawe: it should bee sayd to them, Labor thou. But contrariwise it is sayd, Rest yee, to the end that God may worke. The lawe then may well be vnpossible as in respect of vs, but yet is it possible for G O D to printe it in our heartes, and to gouerne vs by his holy spirit, yea euen in such wise as it shall bee a sweete and light yoke vnto vs, and there shall bee no hardnesse in it that may weary vs. Therefore when men haue looked well about them: they shall finde that God beareth with them, as a father that pitieth his children. And therefore let vs learne to bee thankfull, and to be the more forward to serue our God, seeing hee commaundeth vs no such things as ought to seeme ouer bitter or paynesfull to vs, but hath a regarde of our abilitie.

Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vpon this text, where our Lord sheweth that he leaueth men their commoditie. True it is (as was touched yesterday) that wee ought to bee so spirituall, as to assemble euery day to call vpo the name of God, and that we ought to mount vp to the heavenly lyfe, leauing all our worldly busineses. But what? God seeth that wee be compassed about with our flesh, that wee creep vpon the earth, and that our infirmities cary vs away in such sorte, as we cannot leade the life of Angels. God therefore beholding such rawnes & weakenes in vs, and reuiewing our vnabilitie to discharge our selues fully of our dutie: releaseth vs, and uttereth not his vttermost rigor, but sayth hee is contented if wee allowe him one day: or rather if that day serue vs for all the rest of the weeke, God is contented with it. And why? For (as I sayd) hee goeth not to extremitie: becaule hee knoweth that wee bee too feeble. Seeing then that hee beareth so with vs, and leaueth our commodities to vs: we be so much the more lewde, vnhonest and vnexcusable, if wee bee not inflamed to giue our selues ouer vnto him.

Now it is sayd therewithall, that neither manservant, nor woman servant, nor Ox, nor Ass, nor any other Cattell must labour on the Saboth day, nor any stranger within thy gates. As concerning cattel, it might bee thought strange that God shoulde comprehend them vnder the keeping of the Saboth or day of rest, seeing it is a high and heavenly mysterie, as was declared yesterday. Doeth such geere belong to Oxen and Asses? G O D sayth, I haue giuen you the Saboth day, to be as a signe that I make you holy, and that I am your G O D which reigneth among you. This is not common to all mortall men. For God graunteth not such grace and priuledge to the paynims and infidels, as to make them holy: Hee speaketh but onely to the people whom hee adopted and chose to bee his heritage. But nowe seeing that the Saboth day is a signe of Gods separating of his faithfull Church from all the rest of the worlde: wherefore is it extended vnto Oxen and Asses? Let vs marke that it is not done for the brute bestes sake: but to the intent that men should haue a monument before their eyes, to be the more touched therewith. This Sacrament then concerneth not the bestes, which haue no vnderstanding nor reason: but it concerneth men, who ought to make their profit of it. Wee see that the Sacrifices were made of the brute bestes: wee see there was great preparation in that behalfe: there were vessels of gold and silver & such other lyke thinges; and whereas all these things were hallowed, it is meant that God did put his spirit into the corruptible mettals, and into the other thinges that haue no feeling? No: but all this is referred to the men, for whose vse and commoditie they are made. God doth not onely serue his owne turne with them in this present and brittle lyfe: but also giue them to vs as tokens of his fauour, to be as meanes and helpes to drawe vs vp to heauen. Now then, whereas God would haue the Oxen and Asses to rest the seventh day: it is not meant thereby that hee maketh them partakers of the spiritual rest that wee speake of before; but it was done to y end that y Iewes beholding their Stables and stalles shut vp, shoulde consider thus with themselues: Lo: God setteth vs downe this signe and visiole Sacrament before our eyes, and extendeth it euen to the brute beastes: and that is to the end that wee on our part shoulde be held the better to his seruice, and consider that it were a breaking of the whole lawe, if wee should not thinke vpon the thing that is chiefest in all our whole life: namely if wee shoulde not learne to forsake our selues, and no more followe our owne lykings, reason, and wisdom, but suffer our God to rule vs, and become as dead creatures, that hee may liue in vs, and not followe our own swinidge any more, which is vtterly corrupted. After this maner should the Iewes haue looked vpon the visiole signe that extended euen to the beastes, to the end it might haue restrained them so much the more, and they by that meane haue bin put in minde to haue kept the Saboth day with all reuerence.

Also wee see how God at all times handleth men according to their hardnesse, and how he hath prouided conuenient remedies for them, because they bee not ouerhastie to come vnto him, vtill they bee drawn thither after that fashion. And this serueth not onely for the Iewes, but also for vs. Then let vs consider the goodnesse of our God, sith wee see hee is not vnmindefull of vs, nor ouerslippeth any thing at all that may remedy our vices. And therewithall let vs also consider the vntowardnesse that is in our selues, to the end that wee flatter not our selues ne giue head to our affections, seeing it is so that wee haue neede to bee constrained, and that God should giue vs strokes with the spurre, as it were to reſtite horses. Seeing then that God quickeneth vs vp after that fashion, let vs assure our selues hee doth it not causelesse, but because wee be froward and stubborn. And therefore let vs mislike of all our affections, and learne to imprison our selues, so as nothing may withhold vs from following the trace that God commandeth vs. And although our nature striue against it, yet let vs fo bridle the same, as wee may goe through without ceasing, euen til wee be fully obedient to our God.

This ye see what wee haue to remember vpon this place, besides that which shall be spoken anon concerning mens seruants and women seruants, whereby God putteth the Iewes in mind, that they had bin seruants in the land of Egypt, and therefore that they ought to deale gently with such as were vnder their power. Thy manseruants (sayth hee) and thy womanseruants shall rest themselves. And why? for thou thy selfe hast bin in bondage. [The time hath bin that] thou wouldest faine haue had some rest and refreshing giuen thee. Therefore now thou must vse the lyke gentlenesse towards such as are vnder thy hand. Here it shoulde seeme that God ordeined not the Saboth day for a spirituall order onely, as is sayd afore: but also for charities sake. For hee sayth, if thou thy selfe wast in bondage, wouldest thou not that other men should giue thee some release? couldst thou finde in thy heart to be alwayes toying? No surely. Therefore must thou also beare with others. Now this is not done for the seruice of God, but rather for common charities sake which ought to be betwene neighbor and neighbor, how farre soeuer they bee vnderlings to vs in degre. Howbeit inasmuch as this commaundement is contayned in the first table of the Lawe: surely the thing that is toucht here, is but an accessorie, I say the first table. For not without cause hath God decreed his lawe in such sort, as that he wrote it in two stones. Coulede he not haue written it all in one stone if hee had list? Yes: Why then was it made in two partes? It was not without cause. For there are two principall poyntes in Gods Lawe. The one concerneth our dutie towards him, & the other concerneth our dutie towards our neighbours in being conuerſant with them. For the end wherunto our whole life ought to be referred, is first of all, that vpon knowledge that wee haue a God to whome wee belong, wee should walke in his obedience, and that forasmuch as wee holde our lyfe of him, wee should doe him homage for it: and that forasmuch as he hath created vs to a better hope, and adoped vs for his children, wee should glorify him for such goodnesse: and that forasmuch as hee hath redeemed vs with the blood of his sonne, wee should bee wholly his, in deuoring to withdrawe our selues from the defilements of this world, y we may be true sacrifices vnto him, calling vpon him alone, fleeing to him alone for succor, & yielding him thanks for all his benefites. Ye see then y the first poynt of our life, is the honour that we ought to yeeld to our God.

Another poynt is this: that forasmuch as it is his will to trye our obedientnesse by liuing vprightly among men: none of vs must bee giuen to his owne peculiar profit, but euery of vs must indeuour to serue other, and mainteine mutuall honestie among our selues, so as wee not onely absteine from deceite, violence, and crueltie: but also leade a sober and modest life, without loosenesse, lewdenesse, or beastlynesse. That is the second poynt of our lyfe.

Now sith it is so that the commaundement of the Saboth day is conteyned in the first table: it followeth that it belongeth to the spirituall seruice of God, and that it concerneth not the charitie which ought to be betwixt neighbor and neighbor. And why then is it treated of in that place? It is all one as if our Lord should say, This Saboth day shall serue you for an ouerplus, that your manseruants and womanseruants may haue some ease as well as your selues. Not that that was the drift of Gods purpose: his chief intent was not y there should be a day in y week wherein me should cease fro labor. y they might take breath & not be continually ouerhauled, so as they shoulde be tyred: y was not the cause which moued God to appoint the Saboth day: But his ordaining of it was to do y faithfull to vnderstand y they ought to liue after such a holy maner, as to rest from all their owne lites and desires, that God might worke wholly in them.

Also

Alſo here is a verie excellent benefite, as menterme it. Behold (ſaith our Lord) in as much as ye haue this warrant among you, that I do ſanctifie you: ſee that you alſo iudeuour to giue your ſelues vnto mee. For loe, this thing ſhal doc you ſeruite, and it is to your profite: that is to wit, your houſholde ſhall not bee alwaies ouerhald:
 for your menſeruaunts and your womenſeruaunts and your cattell muſt haue ſonie reſt. Therefore ye ſhall haue this as an ouerplus. Nowe wee ſee why here is expreſſe mention made, y the Lewes had bin bondſeruaunts in Egypt, and therefore y they ought to haue regard of ſuch as were held as priſoners vnder their hand. For whereas Moſes ſpeaketh of menſeruaunts & womenſeruaunts:
 he meaneth not y maner of ſeruite that is common among vs nowe adayes: for in thoſe dayes ſeruaunts were ſlaues, and they were held downe like Oxen & Allies: they were handled fo roughly and vnkindly, as was pitie to ſee. God therfore telleth y Iewiſh people, y in keeping the Saboth day, they ſhould euen benefite & proſper their owne houſhold. So little cauſe haue you (ſaith he) to repine at the tyme that I haue referred to my ſelfe, in taking one of Ieu: y if ye were not ouercruell and tyrannous to ſuch as are at your deuotion, [ye would ſee that] the ſame day is to your benefite. If ye had no further regard than to ciuill order, that is to wit that in that day your ſeruaunts ſhall haue ſome reſreſhing: it ought to perſwade you thereunto. But ye muſt vnderſtand that I haue not ordained it alonely for your houſholdes ſake: but to the intentye ſhould bethinke ye of the thing y I haue told you: namely that in as much as ye be ſhoed out from the Infidels, you muſt be to mee a kingly prieſthood, ſo as you muſt ſeek nothing but to ſerue mee in all ſoundneſſe and pureneſſe of conſcience. Haue yee once that regard, ye ſhall perceiue that the ſame day will yeelde ye moreouer ſome earthly commoditie, but yet is not that the thing which you muſt ſeek thereby. To bee ſhort, our Lorde ſheweth vs here y ſame thing which is auowed by Ieſus Chriſt: which is, that if wee ſeek the kingdome of heauen, all other things ſhall bee caſt vpon vs. For we beare our ſelues on hand, that if we ſeek the heavenly life, we ſhall ſtarue for hunger, & it will be a meane to turne vs out of all our comodities. To be ſhort, the deuil comes, & alwaies temptes vs to miſlike of Gods ſeruite, vnder this pretence & guile, that if wee giue our ſelues to the ſeruing of God, wee muſt ſtarue for hunger, ſo as we ſhall bee in uſfull caſe, & all the world will forſake vs. But ſurely we cannot ſerue God, vnleſſe we be bereft of our own affections, & ſhake off the worldly cares that preſſe vs too ſore. Neuertheleſſe wee muſt reſpoſe our ſelues vpon the bleſſing that is promiſed vs: which is, that if we ſeek the kingdome of God, we ſhall be bleſſed euen in theſe tranſitorie things, ſo as our Lord will pitie vs, & giue vs all things which he knoweth to be requiſite for this preſent life: only let vs but waite vpon him for the things which we cannot attaine to by our own power & policie.
 That is y thing which is ſhewed vs in this place.

Now this ſaying ought to ſerue vs continually for a ſpurte, to make vs goe forward with the things that God commandeth vs. For the chiefe thing that ſtaith vs from ruling and directing our life in the obedience of God, is that being too much wedded to our ſelues, we thinke y this thing or that thing will be more for our profite, and whatſoeuer come of it, we will needs lay for our own commoditie, & for the things that pertaine to the world. Wee ſee here y men cannot finde in their heartes to follow God: but rather ſhrink away fro him & drawe cleane backe from his law, bicauſe y to their ſeeming, if they ſhould ſerue God they ſhould neuer thraue. But that is ſuch a ſhamefull thankleſneſſe, as inhaunceth their rebellouſneſſe a hundredfold more. What is to be done then? Let vs marke well y we can neuer ſerue God wth a free & cheerful heart, except we be fully reſolued y he wil prouide for vs al our life long, & not forget vs as is ſaid in the perſon of Ioua. For in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, the Apoſtelle applyeth this doctrine to all the faithfull, euen of purpoſe to withdraw them fro ouergreat carefullneſſe: he ſaith, Thy God will not forſake thee, neither will he forget thee. Now if we could once be thoroughly perſwaded that God watcheth ouer vs, and that he will prouide for al our neceſſities: it is certaine that we ſhould not bee ſo ouerplunged in our earthly affections, wee ſhould not bee turned away fro the ſeruing of him, neither ſhould we be letted to minde the ſpirituall life: but wee ſhould paſſe through the world & vſe the creatures as though wee vſed them not, bicauſe wee would conſider that wee had yet further to goe.

 Thus ye ſee the effect that we haue to gather of this leſſon, is that where our Lorde ſheweth vs y his commanding of the Saboth day to bee kept, hath a ſpirituall meaning: yet notwithstanding men ſhal not faile to finde the ſame profitable to them, and that God will bleſſe them for it, if they looke rightforth to him, and be not too eagre in ſeeking their earthly commodities.

And by the way wee be warned, that if any haue authoritie ouer others, they muſt not deſpiſe their neighbors though they be their inferious. And this reacheth yetty ſaſe. For wee muſt not interprete it onely of menſeruaunts and womenſeruaunts: but alſo of the poore, of ſuch as are not of authoritie or eſtimation, of all vnder-lings & ſubiectes, & of all ſuch as (to our ſeeming) are not worthy to be compared or matched with vs in reſpect of the worlde. For wee ſee what the pride of men is. Although there be no cauſe why we ſhould aduaunce our ſelues: yet doth euery of vs couet ſome preheminance. Now then, if we be ſo high minded, that euery of vs could finde in his heart to ouerpeere his neighbour, yea eue though there be no reaſon why: what will we do if we be aduanced in deede? Looke vpon ſuch as ſit in fear of luſtice: they beare theſelues in hand y the whole world (as ye wold ſay) was made for none but the, except God bride the by his holy ſpirit, & ſhewe them y they ought to walke in all maner of mildnes, & not oppreſſe thoſe that are vnder their charge, but rather behaue theſelues as fathers, & account of them ſubiectes as of their children, yea & that bicauſe God honoreth the, therefore they ought to liue in the greater humilitie. As for those that preache Gods worde, and haue y charge to direct others: if they think they ought to bee exempted from the common sort, & despise other men: woe worth them. For it were better for them to breake their neckes in going vp into the Pulpit, than not to straine themselves to be the first y should leade a godly conuersion, & liue quietly with their neighbors, & shew themselves to be sheepe of the flocke of our Lord Iesus Christ. But yet for all this, it is true y rich men may well be serued by the poore. If a man haue menseruantes & womenseruantes for wages, he will not set his seruant about himselfe at the table, neither will he lay him in his owne bed: but yet, (notwithstanding all superiouritie,) we must come to this point, y we be knit together as one flesh, & that all of vs are created after the image of God. If we considered that as many as come of Adams race are our owne flesh & bone: 20 ought it not to moue vs vnto kindnes, though we were as wild beastes one to another? When the Prophet Esay ment to reprove men for their vnaturalnesse: he said, thou shalt not despise thine owne flesh. There ought I to behold my self as in a looking glasse: namely in as many men & women as are in the world. Marke y for one point.

But there is yet more: namely that the image of God is printed in all men. Therefore whensoever I goe about to oppresse any man, I not only despise mine owne flesh, but also hurte Gods image as much as in mee lyeth. So then let vs mark well, that by this text, God meant to shewe to all such as are in authoritie & estimation, and to all such as are richer than others, & to all such as are in any degree of honour: that they ought not to abuse those y are vnder their hand, nor to vex or torment the out of measure, but euermore to beare in minde how wee be all defended of Adams race, & are all of one kinde, yea & that all of vs haue Gods image printed in vs. That is the thing which we haue to note, specially now that our Lorde Iesus Christ is come downe to vs, and hath abased himselfe to condemne all pride, and to shew that there is none other meane to serue God than w lowelines, & morcouer hath made vs all members of his body, as well seruants (& vnderlings) as maisters & superiors, so as there is no distinction in y behalf. When we come to our Lord Iesus Christ, and haue an eye to him: wee must follow him. And seeing that all of vs both great and small are members of his bodie, and hee is our head: it is good reason that euerie of vs should fashion himselfe like to his neighbors. And besides that, seeing that God hath shewed himselfe a father more familiarly to vs, than he did to them that liued vnder the Lawe: let the same moue vs to maintaine brotherly loue among vs. Thus ye see further what we had to remember vpon this place.

Howbeit there is yet one poynt more, concerning Gods ordaining of this monument to put the Iewes in remembrance, That they had bene as wretched bondslaves in the land of Egypt: And wee knowe that they were naughtily and cruelly handled there. Now forasmuch as they would

faine haue bin borne withall in y case, and God hearkened to them whē they sighed and grieved: therefore doeth he tell the, that they also ought to doe the like to others. And this containeth a good lesson: which is, y if wee consider our felues, we may continually be induced to discharge our duties. On the contrarie part, if we be cruell towards our neighbors: it is because wee bee (as ye would say) belotted in our owne ease, & think not vpon our wretchednes & miserie. He y hath suffered hunger and thirst, because he hath longed to bee succoured at his neede, will thinke thus with himselfe when he sees a poore man: Go ro, I my selfe haue bene in the like necessitie, and I would haue bin glad to haue bin succored, & mee thought that other men ought to haue had pitie vpon me to releue me. Now (say I) if a man be thinke him of such things when he beheldeth a poore man in neede: will it not make his heart to relent? Yes verily: but what for that? When we be at our ease, we thinke no more vpon our humane wretchednes: but rather we imagina y we be exempted, and y, we be no more of the comon sort. And that causeth vs to forget our felues, so as we haue no more compassion of our neighbors, nor of any thing y they indure. Therefore haue we so much the more neede to mark this matter: namely, y because our Lord seeth vs blinded with selfeloue, so as it is ynough for vs to welter in pleasure, & wee neuer thinke vpon such as are in distresse & necessitie: therefore he sheweth vs our state, saying: Who be you? Were ye neuer in any aduersitie? Yea & though ye happen to ouerthooce your felues towards them: doe ye not bethinke your felues againe [and say.] Lo, these are creatures shaped after the image of God, & if we misuse the, God will haue no pitie vpon vs? And so let vs practise this doctrine all our life lōg. Therefore whensoever wee see any folke pinched with aduersitie, let vs call our felues to remembrance in this wise: Haue not I bin in neede as well as they? And if I were in like taking againe, would I not be glad to bee succoured? Seeing it is for why shoulde wee exempt our felues from such condition? We ought at leastwise to do to other folkes, as we our felues would be done vnto. Nature teacheth vs that, and wee neede not goe to schole to learne it. Then needeth there nor any other euidence to condemne vs, thā our Lordes teaching of vs aforehand by experience. If wee haue that: surely we shalbe touched with kindnes & compassion to succour such as haue neede and want, and we shalbe moued w pitie towards them that are in durance, so that if we haue the meane and power to releue them, euerie of vs will straine himselfe to doe it. That is the thing which wee haue to marke in this place, where it is said, Thou wast a stranger in the land of Egypt, & therefore thou must now haue a care to releue them that are vnder thy hand: for at that time when thou thy self wast a seruant, thou wouldest faine haue bin borne withall.

But let vs come now to such as were nor of the Iewish nation, but onely traffickers among them. God will haue them also to keepe the Sabbath day, & yet were they not sanctified of God, neither neither could this signe belong to the, as I haue said already. It seemeth then y<sup>e</sup> God vnhalloath the Sacrament, when he maketh it so common to the Infidels, & to such as were not circumcised to beare the mark of the couenant, & to such as had not the law & the promises. But we haue to marke, that Gods speaking of strangers in this place, is as hauing alwayes an eye to the people whom he had chosen and adopted. For we know y<sup>e</sup> if things should bee permitted which are contrarie to Gods seruice: although it might bee sayde that they bee no people of our bodie: wee might bee induced to followe them by their euill example. If strangers had bin suffered to trauell among the Iewes: what would haue come of it? The Iewes would haue dealt with the, & so haue defiled themselues, and there would haue bin no difference at that time. For when occasions offer themselues, wee bee easily inticed to euill. And although there be no great occasion: yet is our nature so much inclined to euill, that wee be altered to it: by and by. And what will become of vs then, when all shall bee out of order? So then the libertie that had bin giuen to strangers to labour & trauell among the people of Israel [on the Sabaoth day,] would haue led them to corruption. Euery man would haue dispenced with himselfe, and taken leaue to breake the Sabaoth day and not to keepe it. Therefore to cut off such occasion of euill, and to haue that day obserued with the greater reuerence: like as Gods will was that the cattell should rest, so ordained he the like also for strangers. And nowe must this serue for vs too. For it sheweth vs that vices may nor bee suffered among people that make profession of Christianitie, so as they should goe vnpunished, no not euen in such as are but trauellers or sojourners. As howe? Whereas blasphemie is condemned among vs, if a man heare one blasphemie in passing by, so as he scorneth God, and yet suffereth it and winketh at it: is not his bearing with such blasphemie, so as it hath full scope vnrepressed, as good as a defiling to make al other things stinke? Yes: and yet is it to bee seene. Surely so farre of is it that blasphemie is punished as it deserueth, among such as are not of our religion: that euen in those which are mingled with vs and professe Christianitie as we doe, men doe as it were harden themselues: and that is to our greater shame. But yet for all that, if any man, bee he Papisst or bee he of any other sect, as nowe adayes the world is fraught full of despisers of God:) I say if any man bee suffered to rayle against the doctrine of the Gospel, and to blasphemie Gods name: corruption will insue of it, so as it shall not bee easie to redresse it. If Whooremasters and Ruffians may bee suffered to bring in their lewde trickes, and to sowe more wickednesse among vs than we had afore: If wanton persons & vnthriftes may bee suffered to come and play their lewde prances here: must it not needes bee that wee shall play the vnthrifts with them, & bee vtterly corrupted? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that our Lord intendeth to keepe his people occupied in all cleanness, so as the professors of Christianitie shall not onely abstaine from euill themselues, but also not suffer any, so farre as in them lyeth. For wee must vnderstande that the earth is as it were vnhalloath, when Gods seruice is defyled, and his holye name dishonoured. The lande wherein hee will haue vs to dwell, is as it were defyled and accursed, or at leastwise it is not long of vs if it bee not so. But if GOD haue giuen his children prerogatiue, so as they bee able to ridde idolatrie out of the Countrey where they dwell: surely if they doe it not, they prouoke Gods wrath and vengeance against themselues. Nowe then if wee shoulde graunt the abhominations of the Popedome, to bee mingled here with the pure seruice of GOD, so as the wilfull Papisst that list to liue here, shoulde haue Masse graunted them by priuiledge, and they shoulde bee suffered to haue some corner to worke their idolatrie and superstition in: it were a drawing of Gods wrath vpon vs, and a kindling of the fyre of his vengeance against vs. And why? Bicause that in as much as God hath put the sword of Iustice into the hand of such as haue the rule of things in this life, and giuen them power to driue away idolatrie and all infections of Papistrie: surely if they maintayne them, it is as if they draue away GOD, that he: shoulde no more dwell among them nor raigene ouer them. So then let vs mark well, that it is not without cause that our Lord woulde that the strangers which dwelt among his people, (norwithstanding that they were of another faith and Religion,) should bee compelled to keepe the seuenth daye. Not for their owne sakes nor for their owne instruction, (for they were not capable therof;) but to the ende there shoulde bee no stumbling blocke to disorder his people, or to deface his seruice, but that the land which he had giuen to his seruauant Abraham to inherit, might bee wholly dedicated vnto him.

And hereby we bee warned, not onely to sanctifie our selues by Gods worde: but also not to suffer anye occasion of offence or disorder to bee committed among vs, but to see that all such things be cleane rid away. Moreouer seeing our Lord will haue vs to be so zealous in the maintenance of his seruice, as to contraine euen the that professe not the selues to be of his Church, to yeeld and frame themselues vnto vs as long as they be in our companie: I pray you how shall wee excuse our selues, if wee on our side bee not wholly giuen vnto him, nor let forth our selues as miirours to drawe wretched vnbeleeuers vnto vs, and to winne them to our GOD? For if we rebuke them when they doe amisse, & in the meane while they perceiue the like or greater faultes in vs: shall they not haue occasion to laugh all our sayings to scorn? Nowe then seeing it was forbidden to suffer strangers to doe things contrarie to Gods seruice: let vs assure our selues that wee be dubble commanded to walke warily and in such humilitie & sobernesse, as strangers may see by experience, y<sup>e</sup> our desiring that God should be honoured, in good earnest & without counterfetting, & that wee cannot abide that any man should worke reproche to his Maiestie and glorie. That is the thing which we haue to make vpon this place, if wee minde to obserue the thing nowe aduayes which was commaunded the Iewes, accordingly also as it belongeth to vs in truth and substance. For like as our Lord in olde time deliuered that people out of Egypt: so hath he nowe deliuered vs from the gulf of hell, and rid vs fro euerlasting death, and from the bottomlesse pit of hell wherein wee were plunged, of purpose to take vs vp into his heavenly kingdome, purchased for vs by the blood of his deare beloued sonne our Lord Iesus Christ.

Nowe let vs kneele down in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our finnes, praying him to make vs feeble them better than wee haue done, to the ende that wee endeavouring to reforme our selues more and more according to his righteousnesse, may fight dayly against the lustes of our flesh, and shunne al that is against the pure seruite of our God, holding out in the same incounter till he haue fully ridde vs of it, and fashioned vs againe after his owne image, according whereunto wee were created at the first. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

Heb. 2. 14.

On Wednesday the xxvj. of Iune. 1555.

16 Honor thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commaunded thee, that thy dayes may be prolonged, and that it may goe well with thee in the land which the Lord thy God giueth thee.

Owe wee bee come to the second table of the Lawe, where GOD sheweth vs howe wee ought to liue one with another. For as hath bene touched heretofore, there are two principall things in our life: first that wee serue God purely, and afterward that wee liue honestly and vprightly with other men, yeelding euerie man his due. Nowe like as the honour of God excellth all things that concerne man: so was it meete that the rule thereof should bee set downe in first and chiefe place, that wee might honour him as wee ought to doe: which thing is dispatched in the first table. Here therefore GOD beginneth to tell vs howe to direct our life, if wee intend to serue him as in respect of men. Also I haue shewed you that God requirith not any honour at our handes for that he hath neede of it or is euer the better for it: now then his intent is to trie our obedience, and the loue that wee beare him, by commaunding vs to behaue our selues vprightly and honestly towards our neighbours, and to liue together in such fellowship and concord, as none of vs bee giuen to himselfe, but all of vs communicate together, and euerie man staine and imploye himselfe to doe good, according to such power and abilitie as they haue. That (say I) is the prooffe to knowe if wee worshippe him with our heartes. For wee may well make many faire countenances and Ceremonies: but God will not take them for payment. And euen that is the cause why our Lorde Iesus Christ saith, that the chiefe pointes of the Law are Iustice, Iudgement, vprightnesse, and faith, that is to say faithfulness or trustinesse, for so doeth the worde

Faith betoken there. Then if wee liue vprightly among men, so as wee bee neither guilefull nor malicious, but desirous to serue euerie mannes turne, maintaining the good and resisting the euill as neere as wee can: it is the chiefe point of the Lawe. Not that the seruite of God ought to bee forgotten in the meane while, or that it is of lesse importance: but because it is vnpossible for men to discharge their duetie towards their neighbours, if they bee not liued the feare of God.

Now let vs treat of the sorerchearded commaundement, which is of the honouring of our father and mother. Although mention bee made here of father and mother by name: no doubt but he meant to deliuer a generall doctrine for the honouring of all Superiours. For prooffe whereof, wee knowe that the Lawe is a perfect rule wherein nothing is wanting. But if there were nothing included concerning other superiours, as Princes, Magistrates, and such as haue the sword of Iustice, and Masters: there were some want. Therefore it is to bee concluded, that here GOD hath commaunded the honouring and obeying of all such as are in degree of superioritie. Moreouer seeing it is so that all prehemincence cometh of GOD, and that it is an order set by him, without the which the worlde could not continue: what a thing were it that God shoulde haue made none account of it, in giuing vs the sure fourme of good and holy life? It is not to bee thought straunge, that he shoulde comprehend all vnder one particular: for I haue tolde you already, that that maner of dealing is to bee found in the Law, and wee shal see more of it againe hereafter. Neither was that doone because GOD could not haue spoken otherwise: but because it was best for our commoditie and instruction. For we know that although men couet to seeme firtle and sharpe-witted: yet they cease not to throud themselves vnder the couert of ignorance, when they see that Gods Lawe preffeth them: for then we woulde faine haue some excuse to exempt vs from the subiection thereof. Now if Gods Lawe were not meete to teach the rude & vnlearned: many would alledge that they be no clarkes, and that they neuer went to schoole, and so they woulde beare themselves in hande, that Gods Lawe bounde them not. But in almusch as we see that God hath stooped to our rudenesse, and spoken grossly according to our vnderstanding: it becaueth vs of all excuse, and cutteth off all occasion of quarelling, so as euery of vs must be faine to submit our felices, and to acknowledge that there is none other impediment, but that wee be stubborne against God, and loth to beare his yoke. Thus ye see that Gods comprehending of all vnder one particular, was to traine vs on as lirtle children, which are not of full capacite to be taught thoroughly and perfectly. Neuertheless, this is the truc and natural sense of the text, as we shall see hereafter. For like as God gaue the tenne Sentences, as hee remeth them: so added hee an exposition of them, to the ende that nothing shoulde bee darke, nor men call the things in question and disputation which they had hearde. Wee see then that God hath opened himselfe more fullie, and shewed howe his will is, that not onely fathers and mothers, but also all superiours without exception shoulde be obeyed.

Besides this, let vs marke that God speaketh here of the honouring of fathers and mothers, of purpose to drawe vs by meanes most conuenient and agreeable to our nature. Wee knowe there is such pride in men, as they bee loth to stoope one to another, and euerie man thinkes hee ought to be a master. And surely it is harde for men to yeelde and come downe so lowe, as simply to obey those that are in any authoritie ouer them: vntill GOD haue reclaimed them. GOD therefore perceiuing subiection to be a thing so fore against our nature: hath set vs downe the termes of Father and Mother, to drawe vs to it by a more louing manner. Nowe it is an owgly and vnaturall thing, that the childe shoulde not know those by whom he came into the world, and by whom he was nourished and brought vp. Therefore if the childe disdaine his father or his mother: he is a monster, & euerie man wil abhorre him. And why? For without Gods speaking, without hauing any holye scripture, without much preaching vnto vs, nature it selfe sheweth vs, that the dutie which the childe oweth to his father and mother, is such a one as cannot be broken off. Wee see then that the intent of our God is to winne vs to himselfe by letting downe the termes of father and mother, to the end we should not be stubborn, but come meekly to receiue the subiection that he layeth vpon vs. And because all the authoritie which men haue proceedeth from him, he speaketh according to the Lawe of ciuill order: meaning that we shoulde be diligent in doing him his due honour, and euery of vs on his owne behalfe obey those that haue superiouritie ouer vs, and euerie man haue an eye to his owne state and calling, so as the children honour their fathers and mothers, the people the Magistrates, and seruants likewise their masters: and to be short, that there be a good harmonie of concord among vs, according to the order that our Lorde hath set, which ought to be inuioiabile.

Furthermore whereas here is mention made of honour: it is not ment that children shoulde but onely speake fayre to their father and mother, or put off their Cappes or bow their knees to them: for God stateth not vpon such things: but Honouring importeth much more, that is to wit, that the children shoulde follow their fathers and mothers counsell, that they shoulde suiuer themselves to be ruled by them, that they shoulde straine themselves to doe their dutie to them, and to bee short, that they shoulde knowe that they be not at their owne libertie, so long as they haue father and mother. That is in effect the thing that God ment by the worde, Honour. And that it is so, we cannot haue a better or faithfuller interpreter of this law, than the holy Ghost which spake by the mouth of Moses, and of all the Prophets, and also of S. Paul. For we shall see hereafter, that God expoundeth the effect of this sentence, that is to witte, that it is not ynough for children to shewe some reuerence with the heade or with the knee to their parentes: but that they must bee subiect to them, and employ themselves in their seruice to the vttermost of their power. And Saint Pauls auoching thereof is not to exhort vs to obserue some ceremonie: but his meaning is that children shoulde bee subiecte to their Fathers and mothers. He setteth downe expressly the worde Subiection. So then we see now what this importeth, and what the natural meaning of this place is.

Nowe let vs returne to the thing that I touched briefly before, that wee may profite by it, by gathering some profitable lesion of it. First and foremost let children vnderstande, that seeing GOD hath giuen them fathers and mothers, it is good reason that they shoulde obey them, or else they shewe themselves to be despisers of God: and the stubbornnesse which they vse to their superiours, concerneth not men nor mortall creatures, but is all one as if Gods maiestie and glorie were troden vnder foote. It is saide that (to speake properly) wee haue but one father, which is in heauen: and that is ment, not onely in respect of our soules, but also in respect of our bodies. Nowe then this honor of bearing the name of Father, be longeth peculiarly to GOD alone, and cannot agree to men, furtherforth than it pleaseth him to make them partakers thereof. Seeing then that the title of father is as a marke which God hath set vpon men: wee see that when children make no account of their fathers and mothers, they doe wrong vnto God. As much is to be saide of all such as disobey their princes & magistrates: and likewise of seruants that would haue all degrees confounded, and raigne without order. And for the same cause also did the Heathen mé apply this worde Godlinesse to that honour that wee gve to fathers and mothers, and to all such as are in authoritie ouer vs. Godlinesse (to speak properly) is the reuerence that wee owe vnto God: and yet the heathen, (notwithstanding that they were blinde wretches) knew that God will be serued, not onely in his owne maiestic, but also by our obeying of such folke as haue authoritie ouer vs: To be thort his will is to trie our obedientnesse in that behalfe. And therefore in as much as fathers and mothers, magistrates and all such as haue superioritie, are Gods Liutenants and represent his person: surely if a man despise them and make light of them, it is all one as if he bewrayed that hee would not obey God. Hee may well protest the contrarie: but yet is it so in deede for all that. If the wretched infidels knew this, & that God left the such an affection: what excuse will there be for vs, if wee knowe it not yet better? Sith we heare that all fatherhood proceedeth of God, (as Saint Paul auoweth,) and that we be directed thither by the vnion of Iesus Christ: haue wee not a most expresse declaration of it? Must the heathen man bee faine to bee our teachers still? But if those which call themselves Christians, doe playe the blinde beetles in this behalfe, or stoppe their eares least they might vnderstande the thing that GOD hath tolde them by sillie ignorant soules: woe worth them, for their condemnation wil be the more horrible. Wherefore let vs well marke this: that wee cannot indeede liue heere belowe on the earth together, except this order that God hath established be holily and religiously kept, that is to say: Except those that bee in authoritie be honoured, esteemed, and obeyed: verily without that, there will be nothing but horrible confusion. They then that cannot finde in their hearts to be subiect to magistrates, they that disobey their fathers and mothers, they that will beare no yoke of masters and mistresses, doe well shewe that it is not long of themselves that the whole order of nature is not peruerted, and heauen and earth confounded together as they saye. For that is the onely meane whereby it is Gods will to preferue mankind. And of a trueth wee see that (as he himselfe saith) when he sendeth magistrates and princes, he striketh a feare of them, not onely into men, but also into beastes. After that maner is it spoken of in Daniel.

And therevpon wee may gather, that such a rise against the ciuill magistrate ordained of god, and labour to set things in a broile and to bring all things to confusion, are worse than brute beastes and worthe to be sent thither to schoole. For our Lorde, to shame men which are reasonable creatures, saith that the feare of princes and magistrates ought to extend euen to brute beastes. Is it not apparant then, that the diuill possesseth all such as cannot finde in their hearts to submit themselves meekely to the subjection which God hath ordeyned, and without the which all must needs perish and goe to haoucke in this worlde, as I haue declared afore? Yes: and therefore if wee finde our selues ouerhighminded, so as it greueth vs to be subiect-ler vs striue against pride, and let Gods authoritie suffice to bridle vs. For though wee were worse than wild: yet ought this to bee as a fetter vnto vs, that wee heare how God relecth vs: he is not honoured at our hande, except we honor him in the persons of those whome hee hath set in his place, and in whom hee hath printed his image. To be short, wee see that charitie beginneth at the humbling and meekening of our selues, so as none of vs aduance himselfe through pride and presumptio, nor make too great account of himselfe, but be willing to stoop and to yeeld to what soeuer pleaseth God. And for the same cause doeth Saint Paul bring vs back to charitie, when he setteth forth the commendement of obeying the Magistrate. For hee sheweth vs that if wee haue not the meekenesse in vs to bow down our neckes, when our Lorde layeth the yoke vpon vs: we haue no loue towards our neighbours. And if we couet disorder and turmoile, so as the superiors should no more be reuerenced: all must needs goe to haoucke and spoile. It were much better for euery man to liue alone by himselfe and without companie: than to seeke such confusion as would growe of it, if we should not keepe the ciuill order which GOD hath set. Wherefore let vs beare well in minde, that if we will liue among neighbours, euery of vs must pull downe this losiness and ouerweening, and not harbrough it in our hartes, but learne to be lowly and meeke, assuring our selues that it is our ducie to submit our selues euen to the meanness, as S. Paul saith. And that we may the better doe it, let vs consider what may enhaue vs thereto. For behold, the thing that makes vs ouerthoote our selues, is that euery man would haue greater prehemence than God alloweth him: for our blindness maketh vs to forget our selues. And besides this we knowe not our owne wretchednesse and sinfulness. By reason whereof euery of vs thinks himselfe a marueilous fellowe, whereas indeede he is nothing at all. Again, wee bee so inclined to make no reckening of our neighbours, that wee despise euen the vertues which God hath put into them. Then is it spitefulness and churlishnes that pronoke vs to pride, by meanes whereof euery man takes more vpon him than becommeth him. And that is the cause why wee cannot submit our selues as wee ought to do. But instead of doing so, let vs learne to do homage to our God, forasmuch as we see he hath commanded vs to obey our superiors, & againe we knowe that whatsoeuer they bee, it is he that hath giuen vs them. If a child haue a father or a mother, he must not say, Tush, my father is not altogether such a one as hee ought to be, I finde defaultes in him. But yet is hee thy father, and that ought to content thee: at least wife if thou minde not to bring all to naught, and vtterly to deface the order of nature. Either the thing that God hath ordained must be disanulled and and aduihilated: or else thou must honour thy father whatsoever he be. And why? Because that whatsoever father thou hast, hee is of his giuing which hath commaunded thee to honor thy father and thy mother. As much is to bee faide of Masters, Princes, and all superiors. For they come not by haphazard: but they bee of Gods sending, as S. Paul auoweth, and as all the scripture witnesseth. Yea and we beeled exprestly euen by experience, to knowe Gods prouidence and fatherly care towards vs, in ordeyning of Magistrates. Therefore let vs learne to behold Gods goodnesse, in all such as haue superiouritie ouer vs, to the ende to submit our selues obediently vnto them. Thus yee see what wee haue to remember.

Now seeing that so it is that God hath in one worde and in a brieue summe giuen vs heere the rule of obedience to all superiors: let vs marke that in so doing he resigneth not his owne right ne forgoeth that which belongeth to himselfe. Therefore God must holde still the highest degree. And indeede seeing that all fatherhoode proceedeth of him, (according to S. Pauls text afore alledged): let vs marke that when we obey father or mother, prince or magistrate, master or mistresse: it is done vnto them as officers of God. God then must be honoured aboute a), and that in such sort, as the honour which we yeelde vnto mortall men, hinder not the doing of the seruice and honour which wee owe vnto him, but that euery of vs indeuer to discharge our duties chiefly towards him. It were a goodly sight to see a man obey an vnderofficer, & therewithall to spire in the face of the iudge or of the Prince. What a dealing were that: But euen in like case is it with vs, when we disposseffe God of his preheminence, and obey men in such sort, as in the meane while wee make no reckening of him that is aboute all. For it is against nature, that the authoritie which men haue, should in any wise deface the glorie of God. Therefore let vs marke well, that whereas we be commaunded to obey our superiors: this exception is implied, that the same be no derogation or impeachmet to the right that belongeth to God, which hath bene treated of already in the firste table.

For we knowe that the seruice wherewith God is honored, ought to be preferred before all things. And for y<sup>e</sup> same cause S. Paul mindeth to giue vs an exposition of this text, addeth exprestly that children must obey their fathers and mothers, howbeit in the Lorde. And I told you also, that the foundation wherupon we ought to build, that wee may bee obedient lowly and subiect to our superiors: is to know that God is representred in their persons. Now take me away the foundation, and must not all the whole building fall and go downe to the ground: But all they y<sup>e</sup> regard not god, do take away the foundation of this doctrine: & so their proceeding is too faulty and froward.

Howbeit, this thing must as well warne them that are in autoritie, as them that are vnder subiection. Then if men and women haue children: they must vnderstand that there is no subiection due vnto them, except they themselues be ouerruled by God. No w then what is to be done: Let the father traine vp his childe diligently in the feare of God, and begin himselfe to shew him the way. Let the mother do the like, y<sup>e</sup> God may haue his honor both of great & (smal), old and yong. Let magistrates indeuer to haue God serued and honored, & (as much as in them lieth) maintaine all things that may make thereto: and seeing he hath done them y<sup>e</sup> honor to make them worthy to sit in the seat that is dedicated to his maiestie, & to beare the sword y<sup>e</sup> is consecrated vnto him: let them shewe themselues to bee his officers in deed. Seeing then that he hath aduanced them to such dignitie, whereof they were not worthy: let them at the least shew that they beare autoritie in his name, & let them refer the same vnto him. After this manner ought princes to discharge their duties. The like ought euery man to do in his owne houle and family. Let those to whom God hath granted the prerogative to haue mens seruants & women seruants, beare well in minde y<sup>e</sup> they themselues haue a Master aboute al, & that he must be so obeyed, as his whole right be referred to him vnmixed. Loe what instruction all Superiors (of what degree soeuer they be) ought to take of this that they are commaunded to obey God. Furthermore when fathers & mothers and magistrates will needs auance themselues against God with such tyranny, as to take vpon the that which belongeth only to god, & to turne vs away from the obeying of him: it is an exceptiō which I haue set downe before, for the which they ought not to be obeyed. God then must go foremost, & afterward the creatures must followe, euery one in his order of aray. And in very deed, oftentimes the cause why nrekenes & humility be so kept in the world, that children set themselues against their fathers and mothers, and become like mad beasts: that subiects are full of spitefulness and rebellion: that seruants are vnruly & stubborne: and that none of all these can by any meanes be reclaimed: is the iust punishment of God vpon superiors, for abusing of the dignitie which God hath giuen them. For oftentimes wee see that Princes reigne not to magnifie Gods name, and to cause him to be honored as he deserueth: but cleane contrariwise they would faine make themselues ydols, and as it were plucke God out of his seat to sit in it themselues. This is apparant: at leastwise a man may see that Princes reigne loosely: & therefore God must needs be reuenged of them. What zeale or minde haue fathers and mothers to bring vp their child: in the feare of God? They passe not for that, so they may aduance them to the worldwarde. Nay rather it should seeme that their intent is to traine them vp in all vngodlynesse, and in the contempt of God and his worde. If the fathers bee woolues, they would haue their children wooluish: if they be olde Foxes, they would haue them to be foxish: & if they be serpentes, they would haue their linage and offspring like themselues. This is to be seene. Therefore it is good reason that GOD should be reuenged of the creatures, when they forget themselues after that sort, specially when men consider not howe God hath reached them his hande to aduance them, and to make them partakers of his honour, one vnder another. This is alwayes to bee borne in remembrance. But is it not a shamefull vnthankfulnesse, when a man that is in authority of iustice, considereth not with himselfe: what am I? Beholde, I am a wretched worme of the earth, and yet GOD vouchsafeth me to beate his name as from him selfe, and withal to put the authoritie in practise which hee hath giuen me? Is not a man too vnthankfull when hee acknowledgeth not that? Againe, when fathers consider not: Beholde, God is the father of all mankinde, and yet hath hee giuen mee the same honorable title: Therefore it is good reason that I should looke to yelde him an account of it: When masters and mistresses acknowledg not: We be no better than other folkes, and yet hath God vouchsafed to in-honour vs, not onely by creating vs after his owne image, but also by giuing vs this moreouer, that others are subiect vnto vs: if men (say I) acknowledge not this: is it not to be said that they be become starke beastes?

1. Pet. 2. 18.

Then let vs marke well, that diuers times the ground of rebellion & disobedience is this, that they which are in authoritie knowe not their owne dutie, namely that aboue all things they should finde the meanes to haue God honored, serued, and obeyed. True it is that children, subiects and seruaunts shall not be excused by that: but yet we see it is the iust vengeance of God, & therefore so much the more ought we to be provoked to followe that which is told vs, as well in this text as in all the holie Scripture, where this commandement is declared vnto vs. Then to be short, let vs be wel aduised, that we discharge our duties euerie of vs in his owne calling and state. Let those to whom God hath done the honor to gue them the mace of iustice, & whom he hath set in his seate, be wel aduised that they reigne in his name, that they cause all men to serue and honour him, that they be as mirrours to gue good example to their people, and y they holde their subiects in such good awe and order, as Gods name bee blessed, and the mouthes of all euill speakers be stopped. Marke that for one point.

Againe let fathers and mothers haue a care to bring vp their children wel, and to make them knowe God for their onely father. And as touching their menseruaunts and women seruaunts, let them to vse their seruice, as God haue always the preheminance. Let them not followe the common trade: for men doe commonly passe for nothing else, so as they may bee serued to their owne profite and contentation. As for God, he is forgotten all the while. But let masters vnderstande, that God must reigne both ouer themselves and ouer those that are vnder them. Thus much concerning those that are in authoritie.

Rom. 13. 2.

Now for our part, let vs beare wel in minde, y when we haue Magistrates, if wee rebell against them, or rise against the State, induouring to overthrowe the order that God hath set: wee resist not mortall creatures, but it is God whom we assail. And what can we winne by making warre against him? Can we ouermaster him? No: but he will reuenge himselfe without hand strokes, so as men shall be vterly abashed, to see howe he maintaineth the thing that hee had spoken with his mouth, yea euen by wonderfull power. Thus much concerning the first point.

Againe let children beware that they bee not highminded, nor wiltheaded, nor willfull, but that they submit themselves quietly to their fathers and mothers, assuring themselves that they fight against God, when they cannot finde in their heartes to stoope to the yoke which our Lorde putteth vpon them. And let seruantes knowe that if they refuse the subiection of the men whom they serue, God is offended at it, and in the end they must be blamed for refusing to be gouerned by his hand.

Eph. 6. 5. 6.

But let vs marke herewithall, that God must be honoured first, and the subiectes must so obey their Princes and Magistrates, as the same may be no derogation to the right that God referueth to himselfe, as he is worthe. And if Princes will needs inforce vs to doe euill, and overthrowe the pure doctrine of God, (as we see too commonly in the worlde, inso much that a number are so in adde as they woulde faime wrest religion after their owne fancie, to make as it were an image of wax of it, that they might with it which way they list d, as all men may see): God will not like of it that they should be obeyed in that behalfe. For who bee they? When they once reuolt and climb aboue him that hath all soueraine Dominion: forthwith they forgoe all their authoritie. The verie duels must bow their knees before God and our Lorde Iesus Christ: and beholde, mortall men vsurpe such superiouritie, as the honour of God is defaced and all religion thrust downe. So then let vs learne to obey both princes and fathers and mothers in such wise, as God may holde it. If his right vni-payred, and wee not be letted to yelde him his due honour. Neuertheless we must obey them quietly, so farre forth as wee may without hurt of conscience. And although that such as haue authoritie ouer vs discharge not their duties: yet must not children misbehaue themselves when their parents are too sharpe and rigorous to them. True it is that the parentes are forbidden to vse any crueltie towards their children, & specially to discourage them: but yet for all that though the parentes bee not so well aduised as to gouerne their children with mildnesse: the children must beare it patiently. Finally wee must suffer at the handes of all such as haue authoritie ouer vs. And so yee see what God ment to set out in this commandement.

Eph. 4. 5. 2. 3. 1. Th. 2. 10.

Eph 6. 4. Col. 3. 21.

Nowe hee addeeth a promise. That thy dayes (saith hee) may bee prolonged, and that thou mayest prosper in the Lande which the Lorde thy God giueth thee. But there is yet one thing more: which is, that forasmuch as we be loth to yelde our selves to humilitie: God giueth vs here a strofe with the spurre, saying: thy God commaundeteth thee. And it serueth to confirme the doctrine that I haue touched alredie: that is to wit, that it is but a fond

a fond & trifling shift, to dispute whether such as are in state of honour about vs, doe deserue to haue that roome: Or whether they do discharge their dutie, as well as they are aduanced therto. All such geere must bee laide aside . And why? For wee must holde vs contented with Gods ordinance, and rest altogether vpon his good pleasure. And that is y<sup>e</sup> cause why Moses addeth here exprelly, according as the Euerlasting thy God hath commaunded thee. As if he should say, true it is that men doe alwayes kicke against it as much as they can . If one would bring them vnder awe, they will not abide it by their good will: Againe they haue such Iostinesse in them, as prouoketh them continually to bee desirous to exalt themselves too much. By meanes whereof there will neuer be any willing subiection, vntill God haue wrought it. But you be alwayes rebellious against God (saith hee) when yee once enter into such debates as this: Should hee such a one raigne ouer mee, and I obey him, seeing hee is no better than I? If yee beare such spere towards men: God himselfe steppeth forth, and desireth to knowe whether yee will serue him or no: And if yee will not receiue his leueuantantes when hee sendeth them vnto you: it is a certaine signe that yee refuse his yoke likewise, by meanes wherof his iustice is impeached, and hee feeleth himselfe to bee injured by you. Sith it is so then, knowe yee (saith Moses) that the children which are disobedient to their fathers and mothers, may well alledge this and that: and the folke that rebel against their superiors, may well make excuses: but none of those things shall stande them in any steede. The reason is, that God, who hath ordeined superiouritie in the worlde, will also haue it maintained: hee hath spoken the word, and it cannot be called backe. When God hath once giuen his definitive sentence, it is no for vs to call the matter in question any more: but we must stand to it, and holde our mouths shut. Yet notwithstanding, our Lorde vseth still his goodnesse in this commaundement: and he doeth it to winne vs and to drawe vs the better to him, that we might the willingly obey our superiors, seeing he addeth a promise. For (as saith S. Paul) it is the first commaundement of the lawe, that hath any special promise. In deede we haue seene hee etofore, how God sheweth mercie in a thousand generations, to such as loue him. And th<sup>t</sup> was added to the commaundement wherein God shewed vs, that he would haue his seruice maintained in al purenesse, without swaruing aside to idolatrie or superstition. But that promise extended to the whole Lawe, as wee saue there: whereas this is annexed onely to the commaundement of obeying our fathers and mothers. For as much then as wee seee it is an acceptable sacrifice to God: let such as are in subiection holde themselves to it, and not play the rebels and madde bedlems, but bowe downe their neckes and submit themselves, so as it may appeare in deede that they beewilling to obey GOD, because they refuse not to obey the mortall men whom he hath sent, and appointed in his name.

Thus yee see to what purpose this promise was giuen: namely, that God perceiuing vs to bee dull vpon the spurte, ment to soften our hearts, and to winne vs to him by mildnesse and gentlenesse, to the intent it should not grieue vs nor be yrkesome to vs to obey our superiors . But forasmuch as all cannot bee dispatched at this present: Let vs beare in minde at a worde, that to serue God wel, we must lay downe al pride and presumptuousnes. Although we haue naturally in vs the cursed roote of desirousnes to climbe, so as ambition reigneth both in great and final: yet must the same bee laide downe, if we meane to prepare our selues to Gods seruice . And why? For lowliness is the thing wherewith the true obedience must beginne . And as concerning men, let vs marke well that we shall neuer bee able to lue in peace and concord, except that those whom God hath set in place of authoritie and preheminance, bee obeyed and receiued for his sake, so as men submit themselves to them. For ell<sup>s</sup>: all must needs goe to wrecke, and wee shall bee worse than the wilde beastes that are abroad in the woods . Therefore al they y<sup>e</sup> are disobedient to lawful superiouritie, are as enemies to God and nature, and to all mankind: yea they be as monsters whom al men ought to abhorre.

But when wee haue shewed our obedientnes by being subiect to those whom God hath set ouer vs: let vs learne also, that it is good reason wee should be humbled vnder him, and that in such wise, as hee bee serued by vs: not in way of ceremonie, but in truth and purenesse of minde, so as wee doe him his due homage, and make account of his honor aboute al things. Yea and all the small orders of the worlde must leade vs therevnto: namely that God may haue his throne exalted aboute the heauens . And whereas children obey their fathers and mothers, and subiectes their Magistrates, and the like order is to be seene in euerie house according to Gods ordinance, who hath appointed that there should be some difference of degrees euerie where: Let the same drawe vs vp higher, to consider that God who holdeth the chiefe soueraintie of the worlde, ought to ouerrule all creatures, and to be Maier of our whole life in effect . And so wee see that all the obedience which is yellected to mortall creatures must tend to the pure worshipping of God . Whereby we peteeiue the more plainly howe much we ought to abhorre the cursed Popedome . For it is an ouerstatelinesse crept vp in the worlde, to none other end than to driue God out of his seate, & robercaue him of the honor y<sup>e</sup> belongeth to him. For the Pope will graunt well ynough that hee ought to bee subiect to his Superiors: But what thoe? Keepe hee any order either of God or of nature: No: but cotrarwise his meaning is to despise al that is cōteined in the holy Scripture, overthrowing all the order and policie that God hath commaunded vs . Hee termeth himselfe Christs Vicar: and yet notwithstanding the worlde seeth, that hee hath thrust Iesus Christ out of his seate, so as hee is no more the head of his Church. Therefore let vs learne to abhorre the thing, which the diuell hath so set vp on the contrarie part, quite and cleane against that which God hath ordeined in the worlde. And therewithall though wee see that sometimes things goe not as they ought to do, but that superiors abufe their power: let vs assure our selues they cannot ouerthrowe Gods ordinance as in respect of kingdomes and Em-pyres, and as in respect of the grounde of lu-stice: but that all those things must be maintened still. For they haue their foundation of God: and it is not with them as with this hellish Popedome which hath no foundation at all: but contrariwise wee knowe that God will haue kings and princes and magistrates of Iustice to continue still: and therefore those must needes bee maintained. And if the fathers doe not their duetie, but vse tyrannie towards their children: let vs bee sorie for it, and assure our selues the same springeth of our finnes. Also when God suffereth his ordinance to bee vn-obserued, so as all is out of order: let vs vnderstande that wee ought to runne vnto him the more carefully, and to beseech him to set those things in order againe, so as it may bee knowne that our whole desire is to be gouerned by him, as the onely meane whereby hee worketh our welfare.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to vouchsafe to make vs feele them better, that wee may with true repentance learn to mislike of our selues for them, and so returne vnto him as we may profite more & more, euen vntill wee be rid of al our finnes & through-ly fashioned againe like to him in righteousnes.
And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

The xxxviij Sermon which is the eight vpon the fift Chapter.

17 Thou shalt not be a murtherer.

WE haue seene already, howe that to liue well with men, wee must obey our superiors. For it is the first thing that God commaundeth vs in the second table of his lawe: because the meane in descending from him to men, is to honour those whom he hath set ouer vs. In deede when wee speake of men, there is some equall fellowship: for wee come all of Adams race: we be all of one kinde: and all this importeth an equalitie among men. Neuertheless forasmuch as it hath pleased God to set certaine degrees: wee must holde vs thereunto, and keepe that order, so as the partie which hath any preheminence and dignitie, may bee acknowledged for such a one as is to bee honoured. And in this case we must not alledge, why is he more esteemed than I? For that commeth not of any worthines that is in one more than in another: but of Gods will, who will haue them so honoured to whom hee hath giuen any preheminence. And it is not ynough for y children to honor their parents by yeelding them some reuerence: but they must also succour them, and spende themselves to the vttermoost for them, accordingly as our Lorde Iesus Christ sheweth howe it is but hypo-cristie, when children doe but make some countenance of honoring their fathers and mothers, and in the meane while let them alone in their necessitie, without regarde of discharging their duetie towards them at their neede. It is a defrauding of the parentes of that which is due to them, and a scorning of Gods Lawe, when men obserue it so by way of Ceremonie. In like case is it with all manner of subiection. For it is not ment that men shoulde but onely yeelde some signe of honour: but that they shoulde yeelde the partie his full right, which hath any preheminence, yea and that the same shoulde bee done willingly. True it is (as I haue declared heretofore) that men would faine be exempted from all bondage. Howebeit forasmuch as God hath set a contrarie order: wee must submit our selues to it with a good wil, and not by force. For to what purpose is it to obey God spite of our teeth, when our heart goeth cleane against? The most our will goe with it, and whatsoever our Lorde commaundeth vs wee must thinke it good and amiable. Thus the entrance into good conuersation among men, is to consider that our fathers and mothers and all our superiors are aduanced to that preheminence aboue others, to the intent they shoulde be honored: Otherwise, God is misused in their persons, and it is all one as if we refused to honour him and to be subiect to him.

Nowe after that Moses hath set downe this fift commaundement: he addeth, Thou shalt not be a murtherer. In deede it may seeme at the first blush, that God ledde not his people to great perfection in forbidding them to commur-murther. But wee must marke, that God intended to comprise (as it were in a short abridgment) all that is requisite for the well ruling of this our life: and therefore it was not for him to forget any thing, or to leaue any thing be-hinde. Nowe wee must vnderstande that the way for men to rule their liues well & orderly, is to abstaine from al euil doing, iniury, & violence, and therewithall to liue chastly and honestly with our hurting or hindering of any man, and on the other

other side, to keepe their tongues from harming any man by any manner of falshood and lying. All these good properties must be in vs, if wee wil frame our selues to Gods will and righteousnesse. So then, it is not to bee maruelled at, that God shoulde speake here of murderers. For it is done to holde vs in awe, that we shoulde not goe about to doe any outrage or harme to our neighbours. But yet for all this, we must come backe againe to that which I haue touched already: that is to wit, that God speaketh after a rude and grosse fashion, to apply himselfe both to great and small, and euen to the very ydotts. For wee see howe euery man excuseth himselfe by ignorance: and if a thing bee somewhat darke and hard, we thinke we haue wherewith to wash our hands of the matter. When wee haue done amisse, [wee thinke all is safe,] if wee can say, Oh, it was too high and too profounde for mee, I vnderstoode neuer a whit of it. To the end therefore that men should haue no such startingholes: Gods will was to speake after such a fashion, as euen little babes might vnderstande what hee saide. That is the cause why he saith in short wordes, Thou shalt not bee a murderer.

Let vs marke moreover, that God, to the intent to leade vs by little and little to liue well, setteth vs downe the things that are most hatefulfull that we might learn to keepe our selues from euill doing. As for example, hee coulde haue saide, yee shall doe no wrong nor violence to your neighbours: hee coulde well haue saide so: but he listeth to set downe the word Murther. And why? Because it is a thing against nature, when men goe about to wipe out Gods image after y fashion. Needes then must we abhorre murder, if we be not starke beastes. Howe be it, this teacheth vs that there is not a more heinous thing, nor a thing that wee ought to abhorre more, than murder. GOD therefore to tye vs the shorter and to withholde vs from all annoying, and from all wrong dealing, telleth vs that wee muste not defile our hands with the bloude of our neighbours. Well then: If a man abtaine from murder, is that all? No not by a great deale, as shall bee shewed anon, and as the matter aforesaid already at the first entrance into it. For Gods intent is to holde both our heartes and our thoughts in subiection, and he will be serued so purely at our hands, as we nourish not any ill will towards our neighbours. Why then speaketh he of murder? [It is all one] as if hee should say, although ye had no lawe written, but were as heathen men: yet ought yee to haue this printed in your heartes, that murder is a shameful and owgly thing. Nowe I tell you, that as many as doe any outrage to their neighbours, as manie as deuise any muchiefe against them, and as many as nourish

2. Ioh. 3. 15. any hatred and rancour in their heartes: I account and condemne them all for murderers. Thus yee see the cause why GOD vseth that terme.

And nowe let vs marke well, that it is not for nought that God forbiddeth murder. Why so? For wee can haue no fellowshipe with men: vnlesse we abstaine from all wrong and violence. And vnder one particular kind, God forbiddeth all. Why so? For had hee vsed long speech: a man might haue saide, I cannot well beare my lesion in minde, and it is too hard for me. Therefore hath God spoken here in one worde, to the intent that his doctrine might be soone learned, and his lawe bee easily borne in remembrance. There needes no great turning ouer of leaues: wee need not to haue many great volumes and registers: God hath comprehended the rule of good life in renne wordes, and that is ynough for vs. Who is hee nowe that can alledge, I haue forgotten such an article, I haue not borne it away? Howe so? Are wee not able to remember so much as half a score wordes? Nowe then wee see it was Gods will to holde men conuicted of shamelesnesse, if they vnderstande not what they ought to doe. And so yee see the cause why hee spake so briefly. Moreover he hath (as yee woulde say) chewed the rhinges to vs, that we might learne to submit our selues quietly to him, and that euen the veriest ydotts might knowe, that they neede not to bee great clearkes to vnderstande his Lawe, for as much as hee hath stooped so lowe, that there is not so ignorant a poore soule, but hee vnderstandeth what is conteined in the Lawe. That is the effect of the matter which wee haue to remember here.

Furthermore seeing God hath forbidden murder as an owgly and outrageous thing: let vs assure our selues that hee which riseth vp against his neighbour to murder him, is not worthy to liue vpon the earth: for he is worse than a wood beaste. Wee see howe Beares, Lyons, and other wilde beastes doe play together. And why is that? Because that although they haue no reason nor discretion, although they haue no Lawe nor equite: yet notwithstanding the common knowledge [or instinct] of nature holdeth them in order. Yee see then that the verie beastes haue skill to liue well together with the beastes of their owne kinde, without hurting one another. And shoulde not men bee restrained by some consideration, seeing that God hath imprinted it in their hearts that murder is a wicked thing? They see they bee all of one nature, and euery man beholdes the image of God in his neighbour. And shoulde not this serue them for a bridle, to withholde them from all violence? What a dealing were it else? So then, let vs beare well in minde, that although God had neuer spoken to vs, yet haue wee sufficient prooffe in our selues already, that if any man set himselfe against his neighbour, hee deseth nature, and is vnworthy to be reckened in y array of men. But nowe seeing that the auctoritie of God is matched with the knowledge which wee ought to haue had aforehande, and that hee sheweth vs that there shall no bloude of man bee shed, but the same shall come to account before him: let the hearing thereof teach vs to liue without doing any man wrong, or els let vs assure our selues hee will become our mortall enemy: for hee releth vs that men are in his protection.

In deede the threate is not expressed heere: but yet is it all one, for as much as it is spoken of in other places. Seeing it is said that man is created after the image of God: it is not lawfull to make any assault vpon him. For it were all one as if our Lorde should say, yee bidde mee battell when yee goe about to hurt one another after that fashion: for I haue printed mine image in you. If a man should but deface the armes of a Prince, it were so great an iniurie as should be punished as a murther. And why? Because it tendeth to the confusion of the state. Beholde; Gods image is printed in men, and it is despised: and should not such an outrage be punished dubble? Yes. Now then let vs mark, that God in telling vs that we assault him when we do any man wrong, intendeth to shew vs that that ought to restraine vs, or else we be too witlesse and madde. Yea and to the intent we should the better bethinke vs thereof: our Lord telleth vs that a murther cannot be committed, but the lande is defiled with it, as is declared in another texte, where it is saide that the shedding of mans bloude bringeth such a stayning and defiling with it, as can scarcely be wiped out. When there is any speaking of manslaughter, yea though it be done lawfully, as in warre, which is allowed: yet is it saide to be a defiling. And why? To the intent that we should learne to abhorre the shedding of blood the more. If an enimie be slaine in open warre, although GOD pardon it because the slaier hath iust and lawfull cause, and doeth it of necessitie: yet notwithstanding it is saide still to be a staine, and the doer thereof is saide to be defiled. And why is that? To the intent we should knowe that God hath created vs to liue quietly together, and that wee cannot giue a fillippe (as they say), but that it is streit wayes a spotte vpon vs, and wee be by and by defiled before God. Seeing then that the holy scripture vseth all these formes of speech, ought we not to be held the better in awe, to liue without doing of any wrong to our neighbours? Yes.

Howebeit forasmuch as God doeth so chawke things to vs heere, according to our rawenness and infirmitie: let vs marke further, that it is not ynough for vs to abstaine from bloodshed: but that we must also abstaine from all outrage and violence. To bee shott, mens persons must bee deare and precious vnto vs. For till we bee come to that point: God will take vs full for murtherers. If a man doe but strike his neighbour, although hee kill him not: yet is he a murtherer already in Gods sight. And why? I haue tolde you alreadye howe GOD vseth that worde of set purpose to shewe vs that although we take a quarrelling or the giuing of a blowe ouerthwartly, to bee small and light faulces: yet they bee not so before God. And why? Because there is alway a murtherous intent in it. And that is y cause why GOD calleth it murther. And besides that, if we be forbidden to commit murther, let vs vnderstande that we bee likewise forbidden to doe any wrong, or to make any af-fault vpon our neighbours. If we doe but liue vpon our fist against one, or touch him in anger: by and by there is murther committed before God. If we thought well on this: would we not be milder than we be? Wee see foue men so testie, that if a word doe but mislike them, by and by their fist is vp, to smite and beate the partie. For they thinke it is a small matter, so they shedde no bloude. But wee must not make God to cate his worde, in that he telleth vs that all quarrellers are murtherers. So then let vs learne to forbear our owne fancies when we intend to iudge of our faults, and let vs quietly inbrace the fence that god hath giuen, assuring our selues that all such as offer any violence to their neighbours, are alreadye guilty of murther before God. That is the thing in effect which we haue to remember here.

But haue wee abstained from all anyance? Haue we done no outrage to the persons of our neighbors? Then must we goe euen to the heart. For God hath not giuen a ciuill Lawe, onely to make vs to liue honestly: but he hath giuen a Lawe agreeable to his owne nature. We knowe he is a spirit, and he will haue vs to serue him in spirit and trueth. Seeing it is so, we must vnderstand y he hath giuen vs a rule, not only for our hands and teete, but also for our affections & thoughts.

True it is, that inasmuch as men are fleshy, when gods lawe is first vttered vnto them, they thinke they haue well discharged themselves, if they cannot be blamed before the world: and so on y other side they doe easily grant & take leaue to do euill. And for the same cause, euen y Iewes themselves, who ought to haue bin grounded in y lawe of God from their childhood, tooke this saying too grossly, Thou shalt not kill. For they vnderstood it, y they offered not god, so they made no open assault vpon the ir neighbour to wound him. And therefore if the fault were not apparant to the eye: they bare themselves in hand y they ought not to be charged with it before God. Which thing our Lorde Iesus Christ rebuketh, shewing that the law was too sodly expounded. Because it is said Thou shalt not kill: you beare your selues in hand (saith he) that yee shall quit before God, if men cannot bring yee to the bar for it. But whosoever calleth his neighbor foole, y is to say, whosoever doth but shew som tokē of displeasure against him, is forthwith worthy of hellice. Whosoever doth another man wrong: is in danger of iudgement from heauen, y God and all his Angels shal set themselves again h im. And whosoever doth but murmure against his neighbour, so as he doth but mislike somwhat betwix the teeth though he vtter nothing at all: he is already in danger of iudgement. Wee see whereto our Lord Iesus sendeth vs: namely that when we may protest that we haue not done any outrage, nor giuen any blow, and y we haue so litle ment to wounde our neighbour, that we haue not so much as once drawn our sworde at all: he is not al this ynough, but wee must consider that God wilouer rule both our cogues, our thoughts and all our affections, as god reason is hee shoulde. Sith it is so: whosoever misuseth his neighbour [in speeche,] sheweth himselfe already to be a murderer: for the tongue cutteth as a sworde. Although then that yee haue not your sworde in your fist to strike: yet if your tongue be armed to speake euill of your neighbour, so as yee haue railed vpon him: it is a kinde of murder, as in respect of God. And although yee haue not so misused him as all the worlde may bee priniue to it: yet thinke not that ye shall therefore goe cleare. For if ye doe but mumble betwixt the teeth it is ynough to make yee guiltie in the sight of G O D, and ye shall be condemned before the heauily throne, though ye bee quit before men, and though worldly Iustice take no holde of you. When wee heare this: we may well perceiue, that he which speaketh it is the same person whom God the father hath giuen to be the iudge of the world. Therefore wee must not giue our selues too large scope in this behalfe. For wee shall win nothing by our cauling and shifting. But let vs learne to looke at God, if wee will haue the right and naturall exposition of the Lawe. Who is he that speaketh? Euen hee that reigneth ouer our heartes and thoughtes: euen hee that can not abide to be serued with eyeseruice, nor that wee should abstaine from euill onely to the worldward, but which will be serued in spirit and truth. He will haue our consciences to be pure & cleane, so as wee bee clenfed from all naughtinesse. Seeing it is so: if wee consider the nature of G O D, wee must no more restraine his Lawe to the outward deedes: but wee must conclude that when God speaketh of murder, he speaketh likewise of all enmitie, displeasure, anger, and rancor that we haue against our neighbours. And in deede that is the verie cause why S. Iohn sayeth, that he which hateth his neighbour in his heart is a murderer. As if hee should say, yee maye well set a fayre countenance vpon the matter: but wee see the hatred neuer so feerly hidden in your hearte, and although yee dissemble neuer so much, so as ye vtter no signe of any malice: yet thinke not that Gods eyes are shut for all that. Men may well bee ignorant of the thing that yee haue not betrayed: but haue yee once hated your neighbours in your heartes, that is to say so secretly as no man may perceiue it: by and by ye bee murderers before God. And truly the reason hereof is too roo apparant. In deed when Princes and Magistrates make lawes, it is not after the maner of God. It is but onely to the end that men shoulde behaue themselves well as touching outward ciuill order, so as no man be misused, but euerie man haue his right, & peace and concord bee maintained among men. That is the intent of Magistrates in making of their lawes. And why? For they bee mortall men, and cannot reforme the inward & hidden affections. That belongeth to God. Againe they cannot search mens heartes, for y<sup>e</sup> is Gods peculiar office, and to doeth the holy scripture attribute it vnto him. Neuerthelesse, when a ciuill lawe is once made: although there be not one drop of blood shed: yer is the offender worthe to be caried to the gallowes, if he be knowen to haue done what he could to haue murdered one. If one draw his sword vpon a man, who notwithstanding doth so ward his blowes as they neuer touche any bare of him: the Lawes euen of the heathen doe neuerthelesse condemne such a one to the gibbet as he is worthe. For why? The Lawe respecteth not the successe, but the purpose and intent. Nowe seeing it is so that earthly Princes and Magistrates doe punish such as haue indeuoured themselves to doe amisse, though they haue bene disappointed of their purpose, and not brought their attempt to passe: what shall God doe? Shall he haue lesse auidoritie than a mortall creature? To that point (say I) must wee come, to knowe that G O D doeth iustly condemne all such for murderers, as haue their neighbours. Why so? As I said afore, let vs consider what his nature is. Will wee then keepe his commandement? Wee must in effect begin at murdering: And why? For God meant to strike a feare into vs aforehande, to the intent that whensoever wee went about to hurt our neyghbours, or to doe any extortion or wrong: wee might vnderstand that it is a detestable and horrible thing vnto them, and such a one as hee cannot abide. Why so? Because it is a kinde of murdering. Ye see then howe God meant to daunt vs at the first blowe: and that is the end that wee must begin at.

Moreouer if we thinke it straunge that God should condemne a blowe to be murder, yea or a wrong offered but in wordes, yea and euen a frowne though the tongue haue betrayed nothing at all, yea and euen the secret and vnespied hartburning that is deeply ouercouered with in: I say if we thinke it straunge that these things should be condemned for murder before God: let vs consider what his nature is, and howe he is worthe that wee should allow more to him than to mortall men. For if earthly Iudges haue power to punish a wicked intent when it bewrayeth it selfe: what shall G O D haue, from whom nothing is hidden? Againe wee must consider howe the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes sayeth, that the word of God resembleth him that is the author thereof, so as it must needs be as a two edged sword, pearcing in such wise to the verie marie of the bones, that there is not a thought within vs, which it elpieth not out. And why is that? Because nothing is hid in the presence of G O D. Nowe seeing that nothing is hidden before God: his woorde must needs searche and sife mennes heartes to the harde bottome. So then, the things that are vnknown to men, must needs come all to account before God: whereby wee must rake warning to lue in such sort, as wee beare no enmitie nor ill will to our neighbours.

But yet notwithstanding we must go yet further. For it is not ynough for men to abstaine fro euill dooing: but forasmuch as they bee created to helpe one another, they must seeke one anothers maintenance. God the<sup>e</sup> in forbidding vs to murder, sheweth vs on the contrarie part y<sup>e</sup> wee must set store by our neighbors lues, & inuour to maintaine & preserve them to y<sup>e</sup> vttermost of our power. But it was his will to begin at that end, to shewe vs what he commanded. And why? For we see howe finfull we bee. Looke how many thoughts wee haue, and so many briers and thornes wee haue. Looke howe many affections wee haue: and so many bushes, brambles, and such other things wee haue. Not without cause therefore intended God to weede out y<sup>e</sup> naughtinesse and vice out of our heartes, yea and to amend all the partes in vs that are finfull and corrupted. For without that, it were vnpossible to set so much as one finger to the dooing of any good, that wee should but so much as thinke one good thought. That is the cause why y<sup>e</sup> Prophet saith that men breake vp their layes & sowe not among bushes. As if he should say, I see howe the world goeth wth you: if a man tell ye y<sup>e</sup> haue offended God, ye wil make some faire countenance, & pretend as though ye were reformed, & yet in the meane while continue still the same ye were before. But it is not ynough to sowe corne in a field: but ye must also stub vp the bushes & cleanse the ground. So long as ye doe but endeavour to make some faire shewe: thornes, briers, thistles, and other euill weeds growe still within. Therefore there can bee no good sowing, & much lesse can ye bring forth good fruit before God. And for the same cause doth our Lord say here, Thou shalt not kill, in stead of saying, Looke that thou preserve thy neighbors life. Now we see by experience howe men would faire discharge themselves to Godward wth faire countenances, and yet retainie still their vices and corruptions, according to y<sup>e</sup> which I haue alledged out of the Prophet. For if a man speake to vs of doing good to our neighbours: in deede we dare not altogether gainesay him. So then wee would discharge our selues after a sort. But in the meane season our sores doe rancle within, & we doe but plaster them aboue, like vnto those that are loth to open their purses wh<sup>e</sup> their heauies decay: but what do they? They parget them ouer, & stop the holes and rifts, but yet in the meane while their house is still in decay. Euen so is it with vs: we doe but parget or plaster our selues ouer, of purpose to discharge our selues as lightly as might bee. But yet doeth nature reach vs the cleane contrarie. For if a mā be minded to sowe a field, will he cast his corne among the briers and thornes? No: but when he sees his field faire and cleane, then breaks he it vp & tills it: and so must we do. Let vs learne then that it is not without cause that God doeth first of all condemne the vices. For hee sees they be rooted so deeply in our nature: that it is hard to weede them out, yea and that he can neuer hold vs at such a stay, as to cause vs to lue in his righteousnesse, vnlesse he plucke vp the cursed rootes of this naughtinesse which he knoweth to be in vs. That is the cause why he saith, thou shalt not kill. As if he should say, will ye lue in good loue one with another? Euerie man must enter into himself, and examine well wh<sup>e</sup>ther he haue there any hatred, enmitie, or ill wil towards his neighbours. Ye must looke whether ye haue not some hartings & eagernes in you, which prouoketh you to threten your neighbors or to attempt somewhat against them. Ye must consider all these things. For when ye be cleare from all anger, hatred, and enmitie: then must ye come to this point, that it is not ynough for you to abstaine frō anyance, wrongfulnessse, & violence, so as yce haue not practised any thing against y<sup>e</sup> persons of your neighbors, nor nourished any rancor or malice against the in your heartes, nor bin infected with euill will: but you must also lue in charitie, and ye must bee as brethren one to another, worshipping God as your father. Vn to what point we must come.

So then let vs marke, that if we intend to profit well in Gods Law, we must haue an eye to the vices and imperfections that are in vs, and bee forie for them: and moreover straine our selues to weed them out. Haue we done so? that is not all that wee haue to doe. For God will not haue vs idle in this worlde. His creating of vs, is not onely to abstaine from euill: (for stones and trees and other senselesse things doe as much as that comes to:) but wee must giue and applye our selues to the doing of good. Then let vs vnderstand, that whereas our Lord will haue the life of our neighbours to bee deare and precious to vs: he sheweth therewithall y<sup>e</sup> he which helpeth nor his neighbor at his neede, doeth what he can to murder him: in so much y<sup>e</sup> we become murderers, not onely wh<sup>e</sup> we beare any ill will, or keepe any hatred priuily towards our neighbours: but also euen wh<sup>e</sup> wee succour them not in their necessitie. If we vouchsafe not to bestow our trauel for them when they haue neede of our helpe, we shall be blamed before God. Sith it is so, it is not for vs to flatter our selues any more in this case: for wee see howe strait the Law is: and yet not straiter than it ought to bee. For can wee refuse to bee knit together in charitie at Gods commandement, seeing he hath created vs after his owne image? Or to yeelde him such reuerence being our father, as to maintaine brotherhood among our selues, seeing he hath vouchsafed to vnite vs in such bond? Shall wee say that God is too strait to vs, and layeth too heauie a burthen vpon vs, because he leadeth vs to such indifferencie & vprightnes? No: but howsoeuer come of it, let vs beware we flatter not our selues, seeing we vnderstand y<sup>e</sup> our Lord will haue vs to do our indouour in helping one another, and that wee should set as much store by the life of our neighbour, as he himselfe doeth.

Nowe haue we the effect of this commandement, Of not killing. What remaineth then, but y<sup>e</sup> we pray God so to guide vs, as wee may frame our selues to his will? For it is to no purpose to alledge that his speeche is darke: Or to alledge that there be so many commandements, as wee cannot beare them in remembrance: (for God speaketh in a worde or twaine, and vterh briefenesse to take away all excuse.) Or to alledge that wee wote not whereto to begin: for he sheweth vs it: namely that in stead of taking leaue to doe euill as wee haue bin wont to doe, bearing our selues in hand that the thing which we doe is no great nor no deadly crime: wee must contrariwise thinke alwayes thus, if I doe my neighbour the

the least harme that is possible to be named, I am a murderer before God. When wee bee willing to doe euill, see howe the duell blindeth vs, to bee desirous at the first dash to kill one and to cut his throte. Thus(as I sayd) is an ougly thing. For euen nature resistayneth vs, that wee can not bee so madde as to say, I will kill. But if a man displeaseth vs, and wee be no more but angry with him: all is well, to passeth away as a smoke, and to our owne seeming, it is nothing. Againe, haue wee once conceyued any grudge, wee thinke it is to bee pardoned if wee requite like for like, so wee doe it not with ouergreat violence. Moreouer if a man doe but bend his fite to strike or to beate: rush, it is full but a blowe, it is no deadly offence. Loe howe men difence with themselves. And why? Because all their imagining is howe to lessen their faultes. But wee must keepe a contrarie way to this, as GOD telleth vs: namely that when wee goe aboute to strike and to beate, or when wee goe about to doe wrong, or when wee goe about to conceiue any hatred or hearteburning: wee must set murder before our faces, and thinke thus with our selues: Wretched creature, whither goest thou? whither throwest thou thy selfe? Wilt thou make thy selfe guilty of murder before God? So the let vs no more alledge that wee wote not whereto begin: for God sheweth it vs, and wee cannot be ignorant of any thing but through our owne wilfulness: & therefore in the end it must needs be known, y<sup>e</sup> we liste not to lift vp our eyes, to see the things which we ought to haue seene most manifestly. These are the things which wee haue to gather vpon this place.

Againe, there is this further, that God hath not without cause forbidden murder before he come to command charitie, & to shewe vs howe we be bound to succour one another, according as we neede requirerth. And why? For we be full of euill affections which had neede to be rooted out. Therefore like as a peece of ground that is full of thornes & briers, had neede to be clenched before it be sowed: so haue we neede to be clenched from the vices that are naturally in vs, or else we shall neuer bee disposed to lue in good loue one towards another. But yett must every man haue an eye to his owne abilitie, if I haue wherewith to helpe my neighbors: I must be fully resolu'd w<sup>ch</sup> my selfe, y<sup>e</sup> the things which God hath giuen mee are not mine own, y<sup>e</sup> is to say, that I must not loue my selfe so much, as to haue no regard of others: but if I be of abilitie to succour other folkes that haue want of my reliefe, I must bestowe it vpon them. For there is a comons fellowship amog all men, it was not Gods wil to make so many seuerall worldes, euery one by it selfe as there be seuerall me & women: but he hath knit vs all together. Seeing then y<sup>e</sup> God hath brought vs one neere another, we must keepe & maintaine y<sup>e</sup> fellowship that God hath set among vs, & we must alwayes come to this point, that it is against kind to hate our owne flesh. But yett there is a farrer other respect in this among y<sup>e</sup> faithfull. For they must not only consider themselves to be created after the image of God: but also remember y<sup>e</sup> they be members of our Lord Iesus Christ, so as there is a much straiter & holier bond, than the bond of nature which is common to all mankind. And therefore so much the more ought we to mislike of those, which do so forget the vnion that God hath set among his people, seeking nothing else but to pur the things asunder which God hath ioyned together, by disscuering the body of his Church, as we see these vnderlings of Satan do, who practise nothing but all manner of mischief, as though they were wilfully bent to desie God because he bindeth them to men, & therefore doe separate themselves fro such as are not for their profit (as it seemes to the), not yett for their fanfic. Now when fou brutish a disposition & so far out of square is entred into a mans mind, is it not a token that the duell dwelleth in him, and that y<sup>e</sup> spirit of God reigneth not there, no nor any drop of him is there? Yes: and therefore let vs learne to frame our selues in such wise to that which is spolen here, that being rid of all rancour and malice, we determine to imploy our selues in the seruice of our neighbours, & to discharge our dutie according to the abilitie that God giueth vs. Againe, if wicked affections, (notwithstanding that they bee hidden) bee taken for murder before God: what shall violence & outrage be, when men ouershoote themselves so farre, as to strike & slea one another as much as they can? Must it not needes bee that they be worse than all the Paynms in the world? Yes: but whatsoeuer come of it, let vs assure our selues that wee haue ill profited in Gods schole, if wee onely keepe our hands from dooing euill, and in the meane while leaue our heartes vntcorrected. Nowe then, to shew which is the true perfection of Christians, they must not onely retrace from bearing any priuie euill will in their heartes: but they must also be as true brothers, to spend themselves in their neighbours behalfe to the vtermost of their power. And if it bee not lawfull to nourish any fiercer ill will: much lesse is it lawfull for a man to ouershoote himselfe so faire, as to smite, to kill, and to doe outrage: and they that doe so, are worse than wild beastes, Yea and if that that disposition was condemned euen among the heathen, & by the lawes of men: much more shall it be condemned by the Lawe of God, And therefore let vs learne to submit our selues to him, not after our owne imagination, but according to his owne nature. But so farre as he is a spirit, he will haue vs to serue him with such soundnesse, that besides the restraining of our feete and hands, our heartes also must be submitted vnto him, and that with such subiection and obedience, as our whole indouour be to shew by our deedes, that we be his true children, in as much as we maintaine brotherlinesse with all those whom he hath called to the same aliance with vs.

Nowe let vs kneele down in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them better, and that wee considering howe hee hath bounde vs to our neighbours, and will haue vs to shewe the reuerence y<sup>e</sup> that wee beare towards him by ab-staining from all euill & wrongfull dealing: may liue in such brotherly loue one with another, as the chiefe marke that we shooote at, may bee to honour him as our father, and to suffer our selues to bee governed by him and by his holy spirit according to his word, so as we may bee strengthened more and more in it, knowing that his reaching of his hand to vs, is to the end to guide vs and to hold vs vnder his protection. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

On Tewfday the ij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xxxviij. Sermon, which is the ninth vpon the fifth Chapter.

18 Thou shalt not bee an Aduouterer.

Aint Paul speaking of the life of Christians, and having exhorted them to the feare of God, addeth y they must walk vprightly and soberly. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the same is to be referred to the second table of the law. Will we then obserue the things that our Lord hath commaunded vs in the second table? It is not ynough for vs to hurt no mā either in his person or in his goods: but besides this rightfulnessse, it is required that we should liue stayedly and honestly, as is declared in another place. And in the former text of the Epistle to Titus which I haue touched, hee saith that we were redeemed by the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, to the intent we should liue in the feare of God in this world, and also in sobernessse and vprightnessse. In another place to Timothy he saith, that if there be good government, so as the Magistrates doe their duetie, we shall liue vprightly and honestly in godlinesse. And as touching the feare of God, it is the same spirituall seruice that we haue spoken of before, which consisteth of our pure worshipping of him, by indeuouring to trust in him, by calling vpon him, and by yeelding him his deserued reuerence: and in respect of our neighbors, [it consisteth] of knowing howe we ought to behaue our selues one towards another. These are the two pointes that he setteth downe heare. The first, which is vprightnesse, is that wee offer no man any violence, extortion or deceite as in respect of his goods: and the other, which hee setteth downe by the name of honestie, sobriety, or stayednesse, is that there be no loosenesse, wantonnesse, leawdnesse, or vnrulinesse in our lyfe. Wee haue seene that in expounding the commaundement where GOD forbadd to kill, I told you how he meant that we should abstaine from all outrage and iniurie: and not onely that: but also that wee shoulde indeuour to liue quietly with our neighbours, and not suffer any man to be troubled. And is it so? When wee come to treating of goods, it shall bee declared that wee must not play the theecues, nor beare false witness against our neighbours: which things pertaine to iustice or vprightnesse. Nowe if wee will yeelde curie man his right:

we shal doe no hurt nor wrong to any bodie: and as touching goods also, wee shall not attempt to rob any of their substance.

But here God interlaceth a lawe that forbiddeth to commit adulterie: & that is comprehended vnder the terme of sobriety or stayednesse. For although we steale away no mans goods, nor be murderers and barreters: yet if wee be vnchast, wanton, or of beastly conuersation: we must not thinke that God is contented with vs. Vprightnes & Sobernes are things inseparable: for God hath ioyned them together in his lawe, and wee see that he confirmeth it by his Apostle, who largely expoundeth the thing y is here touched in fewe words. And therefore if we will haue the true meaning of this text: we must vnderstand that God commaundeth vs here to leade an honest and chaste life, so as there be no dishonestie nor loosenesse in vs. That is the effect of this commaundement. True it is that here we be expressly forbidden to commit Adulterie, that is to say, to breake the faith of mariage by inticing o-ther mens wiues to naughtinesse. But let vs also weigh y thing that I haue touched here: namely how that vnder one particular, God comprehendeth the whole, and setteth vs downe the thing that ought to mislike vs euen of nature, to the end we should abhorre all manner of whoredome the more. I told you yesterday, that when men are tempted to doe euill, they beguile them selues, weening that the fault is but small, and so from the lesser they proceede to the greater. Contrariwise, to hold vs in awe, God setteth before vs the sins that are heynouesest, to y end we should be stricken with feare aforehand, and not bee ledde so easily to commit any fault. As if he should say, beware ye fall not: for it will make ye to breake your necke: beare not your selfe in hand that you shall but slide, for the fall will be deadly: and therefore take heede of it. Thus ye see in effect why God proceeded in such order in his law: & why he speaketh not now generally of all whoredome, but of Adulterie, which is the breaking of Marriage. Nowe we knowe that if any thing ought to be taken for holye in the whole life of man: it is the faith which the husbande plyghtheth to his wife, and the wife to her husbande. In deede all the couenants and promises y we make, ought to be kept faithfully.

But if wee compare them together: it is not without cause that marriage is called the covenant of God. For in so saying, Salomon sheweth that God is the Lord of marriage, and therefore that if the husband breake the promise which hee hath made to his wife, hee is forsworne, not onely towards her, but also towards God. In lyke case is it on the womans behalfe. Shee doth wrong, not onely to her husband, but also to the luing God. For it is he to whom she bindeth her selfe: & like as he hath ordeined wedlocke and is the author thereof, so will hee haue a care for the maintaining thereof. Therefore whē we heare the word Aduowtrie: we ought to lothe it, as an expresse defying of God, by wilfull breaking of the holy bond which he hath set in marriage, like mad beastes. And hereby wee see in what estimation he hath honettie. Why so? When hee will haue vs sober, chaste, and modest: he sayth, If ye be not honest and well stayed, yee bee no better than Aduowterers. That is to say, whatsoeuer you excuse ye pretend before men, and make ye our faults neuer so small and light: I hate ye, for yee stinke, & your whole life is infected in my sight. We see thē as I sayde afore, that here is a frait commaundement to keepe our selues honest & chaste. And hereby it appeareth how fond their excuse is, which say they do no man wrong, whē they be full of disorder and vnruleinesse. For our Lord knoweth well enough to what end he vsed such speech. It was not for y<sup>e</sup> he was toungtied & wist not how to vter things in order: but because he intended to shew, that if men made but a smal matter of wantonneffe and vnchastitie: there is another balance [for thē to be tryed by:] namely that he condemneth & accurseth all those for aduowterers, which beaue theselues vnchastly or vnchastely. Therefore we haue so much the more neede to wey well y<sup>e</sup> words y<sup>e</sup> are set downe here, where he sayth Thou shalt not be an Aduowterer. But yet herewithall we must follow the degrees y<sup>e</sup> are contained vnder this cōmandement.

First (as I sayd afore) let vs consider y<sup>e</sup> God will haue wedlocke to be kept holy. For as our persons & liues are deere vnto him: so will hee haue y<sup>e</sup> faith and troth that is plighted betwene man & wife, to be maintained in their price and estimation, that so holy a thing as marriage, be not giuen vp to shame & reproch. This ought to bring to passe, that no man should looke vpon his neighbors wife with vnchaste eye. And why? For God hath matched her to a husband already, & he wil haue her husband to shadow her. And whē we thinke any euill, or feele any vnchast lust: he will haue vs to shun it for feare of that which is tolde vs, namely that God himselfe taketh vengeance of them that breake the holy fellowship which was knit in his name. In lyke case is it with women in respect of their husbandes: so as a wife may not yeele to wicked lustes when she beholdeth a married man. Why so? For God hath assigned her, her make. If we wil not make warre against our maker, we must lue every one in his own house, wth such match as he hath: & y<sup>e</sup> order must be maintained wthout breach, because god is y<sup>e</sup> author of it. That is one principal point.

But besides this, we must alwayes come backe to the nature of God: & remember that he is not an earthly lawemaker, which forbiddeth but onely the outward deede, and in the meane while letteth the leyw affections alone: for God will admit no excuse, neither is he lyke to vs. Men are contented if they perceiue no fault: but God who searcheth mens heartes, respecteth the truth as it is sayd in Ieremie. Therefore hee in his lawe meant not to restraine our bodies onely: but also had a speciall regarde to our soules. So then let vs marke, that God not onely forbiddeth the act, so as wedlocke be not broken by any actuall deede: but also hee forbiddeth all wicked lustes and lykings. And therefore doth our Lord Iesus Christ say, that he which looketh vpon another mans wife with a wicked eye, is an Aduowter already before God. Though he cannot be blamed by the lawes of men, nor punished as an aduowterer: yet is hee condemned already before God, as hauing transgressed this cōmaundement. Therefore when we heare this word Aduowtrie, which is so greatly condemned: let vs learne, not onely to abstaine from all whoredome as touching the actuall deede, but also to keepe our thoughts and conceits chaste, so as we be vndefiled both of eye and heart. For after that manner doth S. Paul define true chastitie, when he sayth that such as are vnmarried ought to haue a care how to please G O D, by keeping themselues pure and cleane both in body and minde. He sayth not that those continue chaste which haue not defiled their bodies with whoredome: but which haue endeoured to keepe themselues vndefiled both in body and minde.

And when we haue thus considered how God curseth and abhorreth all aduowtries: we must proceede further, and reache out and apply the same to all manner of whoredome. True it is that he which breaketh the faith of wedlocke committeth a double offence, and it is much more haynous as I haue sayd already. But yet must we alwayes come backe to this point, that Gods meaning is that men shal not only not commit any thing against marriage, but also that they shall not leade a beastly lyfe, so as whoredome may haue full scope, and vnmarried folke runne loose to giue ouer themselues to lewdenesse with euery one whom they meete with, lyke brute beastes: but that we shoulde be pure and cleane both in body and minde. For it is sayd, that not onely our soules, but also our bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost, as was declared euen now. And they be Saint Pauls owne wordes, where he telleth the Corinthians that it was too too much to their reproche and shame, to suffer fornication and whoredome among them as they did. Knowe ye not (sayth he) that your bodies are the temples of the holy Ghost? Beholde, God hath done vs the honor to choose these wretched bodies of ours which not onely are fraile vessels but also rotten carcasses and earth. G O D ( I say) notwithstanding this, hath so honored them, as to vouchsafe to make them the temples of his holy spirit, that he may dwell there: & shall we goc welter them in all filthinesse, and make hoggefcotes or swines ftyes of them? What a treacherie is that? Again, that is not all. Let vs haue an eye whereunto S.

 Paule leadeth vs. Our bodies are members of Iesus Christ: therefore if a man giue ouer his body to whoredome, it is all one as if he tore Christs body asunder. For it is certaine that wee cannot mingle Gods sonne the fountaine of all cleane-nesse, with our filth and loshomnesse. Now then if a man cast himselfe into whoredome: it is as much as a rending of the body of our Lorde Ie-sus Christ in pecces, as much as in vs lyeth.
 Not that wee can doe it in dede: for the sonne of God is not subiect to vs to be so dishonored at our handes: but yet are wee guiltie of such tray-terousnesse, forasmuch as wee would haue committed such iniurie against him. Now then let vs learne that God will haue euery of vs not only to keepe our faith and troth in mariage for his own parte: but also generally to bee chaste, to walke in purenesse of lyfe, and not to giue our selues the bridle to any vnclenenesse or dishonestie.
 And why? The reasons that I haue alledged, ought much to moue vs therunto. And therefore looke what hath bin sayd already concerning aduowtrie: let vs apply it lykewise to this present case: Namely that we hold al our senses in awe with such stayednesse, as the diuell may alwayes bee driuen backe when he tempteth vs to any vnchastnesse, and not get any ente-rance into vs. There was a certaine heathen man that coulede wel skil to say, that it was not enough for a mā to haue stay of his handes, (that is to say, that hee coulede refraine from rauine, outrage, and doing of wrong:) but also that he ought to haue stay of his eyes, that is to say, that hee ought not to caste any vnchaste looke. If the blinde and ignorant wretches were able to teach vs thus much: what shall become of vs when it is tolde vs (as I sayd afore,) that God hath done vs so much honour, as to repayre for himselfe, not onely our foules but also our bodies, notwithstanding that they be corruptible, and that (as wee see) there is nothing but rottennesse in them? Seeing then that God taketh his pleasure in his owne, and voutsaforth to dwell in them: ought we not to learne to lue warily, that no vnclenenesse or filthinesse bee committed that may driue God away from vs, when as he would haue vs to be his dwelling place and holy temple? Yea and we must call to minde how S.
 Paule sayth, that all other finnes are committed outwardly of mans body: but whoredome is committed in the body it selfe. For it is right certaine that wee defile our handes by robberie and stealth (as is auowed in the holy scripture): inso-much that when we do any man wrong, we haue bloody handes, as sayth the prophet Esay. But Saint Paule very well perceiuing whoredome to bee yet more shamefull, and that men haue so much the more neede to beware of it: telleth them that there remaineth some scarre thereof still printed in the bodie of the whoremonger, so that his body is put to reproch by it. Surely wee would be very chare of the prefering of our hon-nestie, and it would greatly greue vs if it should be steyned or blemished by any man: & why the doe we make so light account of it, as to steyne and imbrew it with infamie, before God, before his Angels, & before men? So then let vs beare this in minde, and we shall be bridled. Although wee finde such frailtie in our selues, and the di-uell doe continually tempt vs: yet must this serue vs as a bridle to pul vs back to the foresaid cleane-nesse, not onely of body, but also of minde.

Furthermore we must marke lykewise how it is sayd, that no man must deceiue himselfe through vaine words: for by reaso of such things Gods wrath cometh vpon the vnbeleeuers. It is not now of late that men begin to flatter the selues, and to beare themselves in hand that it is not so great and deadly a sin, to commit whor-dome. Nay wee see howe these scoffers doe skorne God, terming whoredome a naturall sin, and a matter of small importance. There are some such filthy swine which speake after that fashion. Now for that cause S. Paul sayth, let no man deceiue you. Such skoffes flew abroad in the mouthes of the dispisers of God euen at that time, and many were blinded with them, after the maner of the world, which is to be giuen to selfsoothing. Let no man beguile yee with such lyes, sayth S. Paul. Why so? For whoredome is a detestable thing before God, as he sheweth by the punishments which he hath sent for it, as
 S. Paul noteth in y tenth chapter of the first Epistle to y Corinthians. There he alledgeth this example, that a great nuber of men were slayne for whoredome: whereby it appeareth that God cannot abide it. For y life of man is precious in Gods sight, as was shewed yesterday: they bee creatures fashioned after his owne image. Seeing then that a two or three and twentie thousand men were so dispatched, & God destroyed such a number of his owne images, that is to say of y creatures y he had made: is it not to be sayd that there was a terrible fire of his vengeance kindled?
 Yes: and wherefore? Euen for whoredome. Then let vs conclude that it is not for vs to deceiue our selues, as though it were a light fault and easie to be pardoned, seeing y our Lord, who is not ouer-rigorous, did punish it so fore: but rather let vs assure our selues, that we must come to account for it before the heavenly Iudge. Whe men haue pardoned vs neuer so much, and we be of opinion that such maner of vnclenenesse and filthines is but a sporte: then must God set to his hand.
 Therefore let vs haue an eye to him and to the examples that he giueth vs, that we may continue vnder his feare, and indeuer the earnestly to keepe our selues from all spots. And so ye see in effect how this seuenth commaundement of the lawe is to be vnderstood: namely that we must not defile our selues with any vnchastitie or vnstayednesse.

Now if it behoue vs to keepe both our bodies and our foules vndefiled: ought wee not also to eschewe the occasions y may intise vs to whor-dome? Yes surely. Let vs marke then, that who-focuer doe giue themselves to any loosenes, doe seeke nothing else than to cast themselves into Satans snares. And although they be not reproduced

ued for it to the worldward: yet are they whoremaisters already before God. Were this wel cō-sidered: we should see no more of the wantonnes in apparel, gesture and wordes, that is commonly in the world, which taketh too much libetie in that behalfe. And when men and women attire themselues of purpose to intice one another and as it were to lay baytes of lewdnesse: are not such doings very trickes of baurdie? In deede their excuse shalbe, as for me, I haue committed no whoredome: but yet they set themselues forth as a pray to Satan, & are willing to drawe others with them, as much as they can. Then are they kindes of whoredome before God: and all the loofnesse and superfluitie that is vsed in apparell and attire, is nothing else but a laying of snares for men. Lykewise againe there are gestures and wordes. When a man and a woman haunt one anothers companie, to open a gap to Satan by acquainting theselues together, so as they may bee caught in his nette, and giue themselues ou-er vnto him in bondage: it is whoredome before God. And although there be no deed done, nor any thing fully agreed vpon: yet will not God leaue such doings unpunished: for it is too manifest that they were attempted. And hereby it appeareth how fond and childish a thift it is to excuse ones selfe by saying that it is not euill to doe this or that, so there be no intent to doe euill. As for example, such as delight in dauncing and dissolutenesse: is that so euill a thing (say they) so long as there bee no whoredome committed? yea truly: It is all one as if they would mocke God of set purpose, and blindfold his eyes to buffet him, and in the meane while bid him gesse whether it be euill or no. It is well known that dauncing can be no better but a prelude to whoredome, to open an entrie purposely vnto Satan: and a crying out aloud vnto him, y he should be bold to come in. That is alwayes the very effect and substance of dauncing. If thou say, I meant no euill: thou makest God a lyer.
 Behold, S. Paul auoweth that lewde wordes corrupt good manners. Yea and hee alledgeth that saying of an heathen man, of purpose to make vs the more ashamed. If we admit not the doctrine giuen by S. Paul: let vs goe to schoole to y wretched infidels and idolaters: for they coulde good skill to alledge, that vnhonest speech corrupteth good manners. Now when mens tongues are infected with naughtie and vnchaste talke, and there is nothing in their behauiour and wordes, but signes and marks of vtter dishonestie: if they say hereupon, that they had none euill meaning: is it nota manifest belying of the holy Ghost?
 Yes: and therefore let vs marke, that whereas whoredome is forbidden: it is meant that wee should behaue our selues modestly both in our wordes and in our gestures, & that there should be no inking of loofenes in vs that may tend to whoredome or whorifinesse. It is true that all thinges are cleane to them that haue a cleane conscience: but yet for all that, we must beware that Satan ouertake vs not, least hee make some breach vpon vs. Thus ye see y this precept ought to be considered in such wise, as we must haue an eye, not onely to the very deede of whoredomes but also to all that matcheth with it, to all appurtances of it, to all that commeth neere it, and to all that may intice or induce vs to it. To be shorte, wee must come backe to that which I touched euen now out of S. Paul: namely that as wee must not doe any man wrong either in his person or in his goods: so must wee also lue honestly, and put away all loofenesse and disor-drednesse from vs.

And lyke as all lewde talke, and dauncing, and other vnchaste dealings are condemned before God for kindes of whoredome: so let vs marke that all other loofe misbehaviours shall be condemned lykewise. Ye shall see a sorte of drunkardes that cram themselues lyke brute beastes. And when they be so full that they be ready to burst: the fling they themselues into all manner of filthinesse till they euen stinke again, not perceiving their own shame. Therefore whē men behaue themselues so beastly, y they play the drunkardes and gluttons, and morouer abandon their bodies to all villanie: thinke wee that they shall scape Gods hand, and not be cursed as whoremongers, though they commit no whoredome in actual deede? Yes. Ye see then that the sobernesse which Paul speaketh of, doth tell vs that if wee will be chaste and stayed before God: wee must not onely absteine from whoredome it selfe: but also vse our eating and drincking soberly for our nourishment, and not to prouoke vs to lecherie, so as wee should haue no more stay nor holde of our selues. That is a thing which we haue to marke further.

But now it will be alledged: and howe then can we absteine from all vnclannesse, considering the frailtie that is in our fleshe? For we see how little stay men haue of themselues: whereby it appeareth (doe what they can) how fincefull our nature is. True it is that men be notable to be chaste: for our Lorde will haue vs to feele the cursednesse of Adams sinne in that behalfe, that is to say in the vnrulynesse of y flesh, if hee himselve preserue vs not by speciall gift, accordingly as it is sayd that it is not giuen to all men, but euery man must consider what G O D hath giuen to himselve, and he must vse the gift that hee hath, assuring himselve that hee is so much the more bound vnto God. But yet how-soeuer he fare: mariage is prouided for a remedy to all such as haue no stay of themselues. Although then that God list to leaue this marke of infirmitie in vs: yet doth hee appoynt a conuenient remedy for it. Is a man fraile in his flesh, or a woman lykewise? In deede it is a vice:
 and although it bee as it were a naturall inclination, (yea proceeding of the corrupt nature that wee take from Adam): yet is it to be condemned of it selfe. For all such vnstayednesse is farte off from the excellent dignitie which God did put in mankinde, of purpose that wee should haue borne his marke, & haue bin as Angels. Therefore all vnrulynesse of the fleshe is sinne. Notwithstanding, sofar as our Lorde beareth with vs, he hath ordeyned a meane whereby y sayd vice shal not be imputed to vs for sinne. Now then whereas the vnru-nelleſſe of the fleſhe is of it ſelfe ſinfull and damnable: it ſhall not be imputed to vs before God, if it be couered with marriage. And when a man ſeeth that hee cannot forbear, and thereupon prayeth vnto God, and hauing committed him-ſelfe vnto him, taketh a wife to the intent hee may not leade a lewde lyfe, by running at ran-don lyke a dogge, or a bull, or a brute beaſt: his entering into wedlocke after ſuch maner as God hath ordeined, doth couer and hide his vice, ſo as it cometh not to account. And herein we ſee the inſtimable goodneſſe of our God, that whereas hee leaueſh this vice in vs, yea in ſuch wiſe as ought to make vs aſhamed: yet notwithſtanding hee ordeineth a good meane whereby to bury it. And although men be vnchaſte, yet are they not blamed for it before God and before his iudgement ſeate, ſo they hold theſelues within the boundes of marriage. For all vnchaſtite is vnlawfull. As for example, if a man take too much libertie with his wife, or the wife with her husband: it is no reaſon that they ſhoulde make their bed a brothelhouſe. But if a man liue honeſtly with his wife in the feare of God: although the companying in bed be ſhamefull, yet hath it no reproch or ſhame before God and his Angels. And why? Becauſe the couert of marriage ſerueth to ſanctify the thing that is vncleane and vnholly of it ſelfe, and to make cleane the thing that is ſoule and filthy o fit ſelfe. Seeing then that our Lorde is ſo gracious, as to ordeine ſuch a remedie: are we not the more lewde and vnthankfull if wee vſe it not, and put not away all the excuſes that men alledge, as who ſhoulde ſay that God had not provided for their neceſſi-tie, nor played the good phiſition with vs in healing our diſeaſes, yea euen preuented vs as wee ſee? Now then, ſeing that our Lorde hath vouchſafed to ſuccour vs in this behalfe, and ordeined holy marriage to keepe men from abandoning theſelues to al naughtineſſe, which haue not y gift of chaſtite: let vs put away al ſhifts of fraiue. That is the thing which wee haue to marke.

Heb. 13. 4.

And hereupon let vs marke well how the Apoſtle ſayth, that when men and women holde themſelues within the feare of God and ſobrietie, the bedde of marriage is honorable: And whereas it ſhoulde iuſtly be ſhamefull: our Lord conuerteth all to honor. It is no ſmall matter, y the Apoſtle calleth the thing honorable before God, which would be ſhamefull eue before men, if God pardoned it not: & yet pronounceth curſe & vengeance againſt al adulterers. Sith we heare ſuch a ſentence: let vs learne to ſhrowde our felues vnder this honorable ſhadow, (if we haue neede of it,) to the end that our ſhamefull dealings be not accuſed and condẽned before God and his Angels; and therewithall let vs ſtand in awe of the dreadfull ſentence that is giuen againſt al aduowterers and whorehunters. Yea & if any be able to forbear marriage, let them take good heed that they forbear it not but for the preſent time, ſo as they reiect not the remedie that God hath appointed them, if they finde

1. Cor. 7. 5.

not that God giueth them a ſtay of themſelues,
 And ſo let their liuing out of marriage be but ſcõ morrow to morrow, being alwayes ready to ſub-mit themſelues to God, whenſoever he ſhall call them to that ſtate.

But here we ſee how Satan hath diſplaced al order, yea and that vnder pretence of holyneſſe.
 The world ſees what abominations haue come of it. Inſomuch y in poperie it ſeemeth to be the moſt Angelike vertue that can be, to liue vnma-rryed. The ſtate of perfection (ſay the Munkes) is to be vnmarried. The prieſtes ſay that they be vowed to God. Seeing we bee the Cleargie (ſay they) and as it were the flower of y Church:
 it behoueth vs to be ſeparated from the common deſilementes of the world. So then, in poperie it is counted an approaching to y Angels of heauen, when men forſake marriage. But in the mean while, we ſee how God is mocked with ſuch diueliſh pride: for worſe than beaſtly abominations haue happened through the diſpi-ſing of marriage after that ſorte. See how the Prieſtes, Munkes, and Nunnes deſy God, by re-fuſing the benefite which he offereth the: which is, that if they finde infirmitie in themſelues, they ſhoulde marrie. But this doe they diſpiſe and diſdayne, eſteeming it as an vnclene thing: and that is a fighting euen againſt nature. And therefore, was it not meete that God ſhoulde be reuenged of ſuch preſumption, when men trode the remedie vnder their feete, which he had gi-uen them? Is not that ſicke man out of his witte, which in ſteade of taking a medicine for his health, dooth ſling it againſt the ground in diſ-piſt of his phiſition? As much is done by theſe helhoundes of the popedome, euen all this vermine of Prieſts, Munkes, and Nunnes which haue reſuſed holy marriage: wherein they haue made open warre againſt God. And they bee not contented with that: but wee ſee they haue ouerſhot themſelues ſo farre, as to be bolde to vtter blaſphemies, that ought to make all mens haire ſtand vp vpon their heades. If there were no more but that: the world may ſee that the di-uell hath altogether ouermaſtered them, and that the Apoſtate or backſlyding Church of Rome is the very ſeate of Antichriſte, inas much as it hath giuen ſentence, that ſuch as are in the fleſhe cannot pleaſe God, but wee muſt be ſe-parated from all vncleneſſe: And therefore marriage ought to be forbidden vnto prieſtes. Thoſe are the very wordes of a Pope: and yet notwithſtanding, they haue bin regiſtred as an Oracle coming from heauen. Now if the diuell had his full ſcope, yea and were incarnate in this world: coulde hee ſpeake more deteſtably in diſpite of God and holy wedlocke, than to apply this ſaying, they that are in the fleſh cannot pleaſe God, vnto married folke? It is as much as if he condemned all mankind: For in ſo doing hee condemneth not onely thoſe that are alieue at this day: but alſo all the holy fathers that liued vnder the Lawe, and all the holy Patriarches, Apoſtles, and martyrs.

Rom. 8. 3.

Yee ſee then that the diuell of Rome intendeth to baniſhe both the Apoſtles, and martyrs,
 and

and all the holy fathers out of heauen. And therefore whoſoever liſteth to bee in the Popes paradife, muſt bee a fellowe with the diuels in hell. For altho' it bee a monſtrous thing, that the vngenerous Pope Syracus ſhoulde utter ſuch blaſphemie, as to goe about to ſhut the moſt part of the holyeſt folke that euer haue bin, our of the kingdome of heauen: yet would God neuer haue ſuffered ſo horrible blaſphemie to bee ſpoken, but that it was his will to make the Sea of Rome abominable, by letting thoſe diuels haue their own ſwinge ſo farre, as to reiect marriage vnder preſence of holineſſe, by meanes whereof (euen through iuſt vengeance) they tooke libertie to commit all wicked filthineſſe, and ſo infected the worlde with their deteſtable Sodomie, that euen the very Paynians themſelves did abhorre it. And hereby wee be warned (as I ſayd afore) not to diſpiſe Gods giſtes: but to vſe them with all modeſtie. And as for ſuch as haue not ſtay of themſelves: let them learne to bow downe their neckes, to receiue the yoke of marriage, and to ſubmit themſelves therunto, aſſuring themſelves that if the husbands beare with their wues and the wues indouour to lue quietly with their husbands: it is an acceptable ſacrifice to God. And if they haue charge of children: let them looke to the bringing vp of them, and to the finding of them, whether they bee poore or riche: aſſuring themſelves that God accepteth that ſeruiſe. Alſo when the women take paynes and are troubled about their houſhold buſineſſe: let them vnderſtand that their doings are acceptable ſacrifices to God. And altho' marriage be deſpiſed by thoſe ſecondes, who in deſpight of GOD, doe ſuſurſe an Angelicall perfection in abſteining from it: yet notwithstanding let ſuch as bee in that ſtate vnderſtande, that God accepteth and receiueth them, yea and that hee gouerneth their houſehold. For ſeeing he auoweth himſelfe to be the author of marriage: hee will bliſſe it, if folke proceede to it according to his will. Let ſuch as are vnmarried bee well aduiſed to walke neuertheleſſe in the feare of God, and to haue marriage in eſtimation, and to honour it accordingly. And let both ſorts bee carefull to maintaine themſelves in all cleaneſſe both of body and minde, as S. Paul declarcth in the ſeuenth of the fiſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians. In that place he condemneth not widowes and ſuch others as abſtaine from marriage: but exhorteth them to doe their duties. For widowes and maydes and ſuch as are vnmarried, ought to ſticke the faſter vnto God, and to lue as folke that are leſſe hindered to giue themſelves wholly vnto him. Why ſo? for they haue not ſo many worldly thinges to drawe them away. Maryed folkes haue no incumbrances: but yet muſt they beware that they giue not themſelves the bride, ſo as they ſhould not walke continually in feare and carefullneſſe. Thus yee ſee how that in all ſtates wee muſt haue ſobrietie and honeſtie in ſuch eſtimation, as wee may not onely ſhewe tokens of chaſtitie and honeſtie in our perſons: but alſo make offerings & ſacrifices both of our bodies and of our ſoules vnto God, ſeeing hee hath bought them ſo dearely by the blood of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and will haue them dedicated to himſelfe, to dwell in them as in his temples.

Now let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good GOD with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to voutſafe to make vs feele them better than we haue done, yea euen in ſuch ſorte, that being rightly ſorry for them, wee may learne to repayre vnto him, with acknowledgement of the faultes whereof wee bee guiltie, ſeeing to giue our ſelues to his obediencie, and to pleaſe him in all things, euen vntill we haue finiſhed our courſe and pilgrimage vpon earth, and bee come to the ſalutation that is prepared for vs, as it is already in the kingdome of heauen. That it may pleaſe him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but alſo to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

19 Thou ſhalt not be a thiefe.

IF wee vnderſtoode Gods will in one worde, as hee declarcth it familiarly enough vnto vs: wee ſhould not neede any long ſtudy, to know how to behaue our ſelues well, and to leade a holy and righteous lyfe. But there is not ſo lewde and ignorant a perſon, as hee that wil not vnderſtand: nor ſo deafe a man as hee that wil not heare, as they ſay in the prouerbe. And that is the cauſe why wee play the blinde buſzardes, though our Lorde ſhewe vs his light to our faces. And wee ſee it as well in this cōmandement of the lawe, as in the reſt that haue bin touched. For if euery man would enter into his owne conſcience to make true ſearch: ſhould hee not finde it eaſie to iudge, that howſoever things be cloaked, we bee guiltie of theſe before God if we deceiue our neighbour, or doe him any wrong in his goods? Yes. But what for that? So we may hide our ſhame to the worldewarde: it is enough for vs. And in the mean whil: Gods Iuſtice is thruſt vnder foote, & we thinke nor on it. Yet notwithstanding, all theſe ſigge leaues ſhall ſtand vs in no fead, we must be faine at length to come to account before  $\bar{y}$  heavenly Iudge: and the shall we seele how it was not for naught  $\bar{y}$  he sayd by his prophet Zacharie,  $\bar{y}$  his curse shall light vpon the forsworne person, and vpon  $\bar{y}$  theefe:  $\bar{y}$  is to say, wherfoeuer we offend, what poynt of  $\bar{y}$  lawe fouerit bee: he will finde meanes well enough how to punish vs for it. Men then may well either iustify or flatter themselves: but yet for all that, God will in the end vtter his wrath, both against forswearers and against theeues.

Howbeit, to the intent wee may know Gods will the better, let vs marke that hee vseth the worde Theft, to make vs hate all deceite and robbery, and all maner of wrong that wee can deuise to doe to our neighbor, as hath bin shewed heretofore in the. expounding of murder and aduowtrie. If a man call one theefe, he will take displeasure at it, (for it is a worde of iniurie) in so much that hee will not abide to bee so dishonest before the worlde. Now God to bring vs to the hating of all fraud, couin, deceit, guile, harme, hurte, & extortion which we may doe to another man in his goods: setteth them all downe by the one name of theft. He coule well enough haue spoken after another maner: hee coule haue sayd, keepe your selues from catching or plucking of other mens goods vnto you: keepe your selues from working any harme or losse to your neighbors. keepe your selues fro doing any maner of violence: but hee sayth in one worde, Steale not. And why? To the intent wee should: the more abhorre all deceite, all pilling and polling, all scratching and catching, and al maner of annoyance: and to the intent we should bee ashamed, once to make mention of doing any man wrong, yea and euen abhorre it from our heartes, seeing wee shall bee guiltie of theft for it before God. Moreouer, let vs marke  $\bar{y}$  there are diuers kinds of theft. For some vse priuie packing and deceite in drawing other mens goods to themselves by subtil meanes and practises. Some vse open force, and that is properly termed either robbery, or extortio, or spoyling. And other some deale yet more covertly, so as they seem not to touch a man, neither can they bee accused to  $\bar{y}$  worldward: neuertheless forasmuch as they deale not playnly and vprightly, they be theeu: s before God. After  $\bar{y}$  maner must wee come to the particular kinds of theft, if wee intend to know what is forbidden vs in this text.

But by the way wee haue to note, that God iudgeth not of these after the maner of men. For they that are in authoritie and estimation, shall not faile for all that to bee condemned before GOD, yea euen though no man accuse them but only the crying out of the poore for vengeance, whome they haue deuowred. And although they say neuer a word, yet the afflictions which they suffer shall cry out lowde and shrill enough before God, and make an inditement substantiall enough without vttering any word. So then wee must not bring our owne imaginations hither to iudge of theses, nor thinke our selues escaped from Gods hand, when wee bee not punished by men nor by worlde-ly iustice: for GOD looketh farre deeper. And therefore let vs beare in minde at a worde, that all maner of harme and all maner of coueiting to rake to our selues that which is none of our owne, is called theft in respect of God throughout the whole holy scripture. And in deede when as GOD threareth by his prophet Esay, that he which hath spoyled and robbed, shall haue his turne [ to bee spoyled and robbed lykewise: ] hee speaketh not of the petie theeues that are caryed to the galloves: but of the great princes and monarks that bare sway in the worlde. Also in the first chapter when hee speaketh to the holy people that were the Church of GOD: Thy princes and gouerners (sayth hee) are companions of Theeues. Yet notwithstanding it is certaine that they were not arraigned: Nay, they themselves arraigned other men: and yet neuertheless they failed not to bee condemned before GOD. So then the theeues that are honorable here beneath, faile not to be accused by the Lawe, and God hath giuen sentence of them in this text. Therefore wee must be faine to cast downe our eyes knowing  $\bar{y}$  it shall not boote vs though our theeuery be excusable before  $\bar{y}$  world, nor though it bee cocealed or faced out. For yet for all  $\bar{y}$ , Gods Lawe shall haue his course, & the execution of it is ready at hand. God hath not forbidden any thing, which he calleth not to accout. Thus ye see what we haue to remember vpon this text.

But now must the things which I haue touched breefly, bee layde forth by parcelmeale and specified by examples, that they may be expressed the better. As I sayd afore, if we were diligent in harkening to the things that God declareth: there should neede no long exposition in this behalfe. But what? All our seeking is to intangle our selues, and to take occasio of doubting though the matter be knowne vnto vs. And therefore doth it stand vs in hand to be pressed the more. I haue tolde you already that there are moe kinds of stelh or theft than one. For some play the theeues by stealing away other mens goodes: as if a man say, such a one hath stolne a horse, he hath stolne monie, he hath stolne bedding, pottes, platters or such other lyke things. Well the worlde can iudge well enough of these kinds of theft.

But when a marchant taketh more for his ware than it is worth, or if hee sell vnlawfull wares, and the simple man that knoweth nothing of it is beguiled, and woteth not how to winde himselfe out of the snare: men deeme not this to be theft. Yet notwithstanding such a marchant is a theef though no man condemne him, because hee hath dealt so vnconcionably. Surely hee that hath bin bitten will bee a good and rightfull iudge in that case: if hee spy the collusion, hee will by and by say, hee doth me wrong. We need not to goe to any doctor, Sergeant, Coufeller, for great cleark to shewe vs  $\bar{y}$  we haue wrogon vs: euery of vs knowes it well enough: but yet for all this, we discern not  $\bar{y}$  same kinde of theft in our selues, neither doe we sufficien-ficiently consider it. Yet notwithstanding, God will not faile to iudge him for a thiefe, which shall haue so abused a simple man, by deluering him vnlawfull wares, seeing hee hath beguiled him for want of iudgement and skil. Lykewise hee that ouerfelleth his wares to an vnskilful person therein, is a thiefe as well as the other. Againe, if a handicraftes man make slight or falsie stuffe, and the fault be not perceiued, but hee maketh what hee can of it, not regarding to sell it according to the valew of it, but how to enrich himselfe, alledging these excuses for himselfe: I see with whom I haue to deale is a rich man, it is al one to me, he hath a good purse. A man doth in deed vse these speeches; but yet true it is, that albeit his shitts may well serue him to the worldward, yett shall Gods iustice still haue his course and take holde of him. When euery man hath bin asked his opinion, and all agree that it is no theft at all: yett will not God vnsay his worde for our pleasure. Yee see then that the thestes which men let slip, shall neuertheless come to accoitt before God, notwithstanding that the takers of such libertie, would neuer so faine haue the lawdenesse pardoned them. For beholde, Gods Lawe is vnchangeable, as I haue tolde you already: and it shall be shewed hereafter that it caryeth execution with it.

Againe sith it is so that we must not goe to worke with craft and subtiltie: wee must come backe to natural vprightnesse, which is to do nothing to another which we would not haue don to our selues. Seeing we haue such a rule, we neede no huge volumes to teach vs that wee shoulde not steale: for euery man may know in one word, how to behaue himselfe towards his neighbors: that is to wit, that he deale not lawdely; that hee goe not about to enrich himselfe by other mens losses, and that hee rake not other mens goods to him as his owne. Thus needeth there not any moe wordes than this: and then the fairest coverings & countenances that we haue, would vanish away. For when we haue once beguiled men: we beare our selues in hand that wee haue lykewise bleared the eyes of God. Let vs take an example whereby this poynt may be plainly perceiued. He that hath gotten away another mans goods by sute at the lawe, thinks himselfe to haue as iust title as can bee to possesse them. Why so? because he hath them by order of lawe. I will forbear to say, that perchance the lawe was corrupted. Of a tructh there are that make lawe a flat theecury by their bribing and other wicked practises, so as they ouerthrow all right and equitie, and the courte of iustice becommeth oftentimes as a market to sell other mens right in, and to peruert all equitie. And although it be not so: yett if a man finde the means to get another mans goods by craft and subtiltie: alledge he neuer so much that Lawe hath so iudged it, and therefore that there is not a better nor a rightfuller title in the world: yett is it duble theft, and hee had bin much better to haue robbed and spoyled his neighbors house, than to haue gotten his goods so vnjustly by order of lawe. Why so? For in so doing there is theft, yea and the theft is committed vnder colour of iustice, which is a most holy thing: and that is a treacherie that God cannot abide. If a house be robbed, it shall be grievously punished: and is it not farre woofe than robberie, when the feate of iustice which God hath dedicated to his owne maiestie, is so disordered that all things are turned vpside down and confounded? So then let vs marke well, that what pretence soeuer we can make before men: Gods lawe shall still keepe on his course: in somuch that if wee vse any crattinesse or kinking, or any extortion or violence: wee shall be condemned for thees. If a man misuse his poore neighbor vnder colour that he is in autoritie, and by that meanes oppress him: he is a theefe, and halfe a murderer, and it is not single theft or robberie, but (as yee would say) qualified with murder: and yett for all that, it scapeh and is pardoned. It is true that men will now and then mutter at it: but that is but with halfe mouth: and in the meane while hee that hath misbehaued himselfe, sootheth himselfe, and (which woofe is) the greater thief that he is, the more is he honored. For the more a man hath gotten to himselfe, and the richer that hee is become: the more doe men stoope to him, and the highjer is hee aduanced. Yee see then that oftentimes men come to greater honor in the world by theecury. And therefore let vs not take any of those skarifes to couer our eyes: but rather let vs consider what y holy scripture sayth: namely that we be thees, if we doe not vnto others as we our selues would be done vnto, ne yeelde to euery man his right. For we must define a vice by the contrary vertue. If we will knowe well what theft is: let vs consider what it is to doe right to our neighbors. Now, we doe not right to our neighbors, when we spoyle the of their goods, and by any meanes rake y things to vs which are theirs. To be short, if we vse any couin, violence, or extortion, it is iust proofe good enough of our theecury.

Hereby wee see that theft is committed, not onely by taking away of mony and other things with our handes; but also by withholding a mans owne from him, and by neglecting to preferue the things that God hath put into our handes, according as his will is that euery man shoulde keepe that which he hath. As for example: If a seruant waste or deuour his maisters goods, hee is a thiefe. If a laboring man look to haue his wages, and in the meane while loue to loyter and to haue his hand in the platter: surely hee is a theefe, and wee can well skill to deeme him so. But it were expedient for vs to come to the other kindes also, and to make this comparison, that if wee render not euery man the right ybelongeth to him, such vnindifferent dealing shall alwayes be taken for theft before God, and wee shall be condemned for it.

But now remaineth to see how we may liue in such sorte, as God may not curse vs as if wee were thees. The first poynt thereof is to learne to loue our neighbors, as Saint Paul sheweth in the thirteenth of the Romans. And it is a wonder that men should make so light of the taking away of other mens goods, seeing that if a man aske vs whether it be so harde a matter to loue our neighbors: wee will aunswere, no. For nature hath voutfaced to linke men together in vnicie, and God hath created them all after his owne image: and therefore it ought to bee no hard nor comberfome matter to vs, to loue one another. Now it is so, that if a man haue loue hee will neuer bee a theefe, as sayth Saint Paul: yea and if wee did willingly consider, what wee owe to other men of right, and howe wee be bound vnto them: wee should not neede all these warnings, Thou shalt not play the sheefe, Thou shalt not play the aduowterer, Thou shalt not play the murderer. All this were needelesse, as Saint Paul sheweth in the same place. But what? there are very fewe that thinke vpon that. Nay contrariwise, (as I haue told ye already, ) when wee haue stolne other mens goods, wee fall by and by to seeking of vaine excuses: and when wee haue done any deceit, shrewd turn, or extortion, strighthais we shift it off with an excuse redy at hand: But yet in so doing it appeareth that wee haue no loue in vs, and that wee bee as wilde beastes, so as wee be not worthe to bee taken for men, because wee breake the bonde of vnicie which GOD had fet among all the children of Adam. Thus much for that one poynt, namely that it behoueth vs to minde this lesson of charitie, if wee will not bee counted theeuers.

Againe there is another poynt, which is that wee must not couet to bee rich. For as soone as the desire of gayning is setled in vs: it is certaine that wee shall become theeuers, and it cannot bee otherwise. This will seeme strange at the first blush: but when euery of vs shall haue gathered home his wittes to himselfe, [we shall finde] (as the heathen themselues coulede well skill to say) that euen nature teacheth vs, it is vnpossible for vs to couet to bee riche, but wee shall bee inflamed to rake to our selues by hooke or by crooke. Will wee then shunne theft? Wee must lay aside couetousnesse, that is to say the desirousnesse of enriching our selues. To the intent this worde be not caullat: how shall wee doe it? Let vs learne to bee contented with our state. For as for him that hath no certaine stay, but is alwayes tossed and turmoyled with coueting: his affections harrye him to and fro, so as hee can neuer haue any rest, to say, Here must I hold my selfe within my bounds, I say that the state which GOD hath giuen to euery man, must bee as a bound to hedge him in, as though it were sayd to him: Beholde, thy God will haue thee to stay vpon that which hee giueth thee, content thy selfe therewith: if thou doe not, thou not onely troublest the whole order of the worlde, but also defycst thy GOD, as though thou meantest to bid him battell.

Yee see then that the thing which we haue to marke, is that inasmuch as we haue the rule of charitic to leade vs, wee must learne to bee contented with our state. And why? Because wee knowe it is Gods will, and that hee will haue a triall of our obedience. And that cannot bee done without keeping of Saint Pauls rule: which is, that we haue learned to bee riche and to be poore, to bee hungrie and thirtie, and likewise to haue abundance. Saint Pauls saying is, not onely that wee must bee patient in pouertie, whereof hee protesteth himselfe to haue felt his part, and therefore hath giuen vs an example thereof, and shewed vs the way: but also that wee must learne to bee riche and to haue abundance. And how is that? They seeme to bee but wordes to no purpose: for euery man knowes wee haue neede to bee exhorted to patience when wee be in pouertie. Why so? For wee shall bee tempted: and it is a harde and grieuous thing, when a man hath not breade to eate. And although hee had but browne bread, yet would hee fauie haue ease and quietnesse with it.

So then as touching pouertie, euery man will graunt that wee haue neede to bee comforted, and to bee tolde that wee must not grudge against GOD, nor bee incited to doe euill. But when hee sayth that wee must know how to bee riche: men will laugh that speach to skorne, as if it were not grounded vpon any reason, and yet is that lesson needefuller than the former. And why? Let vs consider a little what rich men are: They be gulfes that can neuer bee filled, yea and much more vn-easie to bee contented than poore men. If a man compare the rich and the poore together: lyke as hee shall finde poore men which martyr themselues, and repine, and are induced to filching and to doe many lewde turnes: so shall hee finde the most part of them contented with that which God giueth them, and so keeping on their course. But if a man goe to the rich sorte, specially to kings and princes: hee shall finde them so inflamed, and so farre in loue with the riches of this worlde: as they cannot be satisfied. Nay, it euen greues them at the heart, that the sunne shineth vpon the poore. To be short, it is seene that if God should giue the whole earth in possession to the riche: yet the moste parte of them would neuer thinke it enough. For (as I sayd) it greueth them that the light of the sunne should be common to the poore, or that they should haue water to drinke, Yea and although the poore take paynes, and do the best they can: yet doth the rich man malice him. Although hee shed sweate and bloud for him: yet the riche man thinks that hee plucketh the guttes and bowels out of his bellie, whē he catcheth of his cost. This nigardship, or rather beauly crueltie of the richer sorte, is apparant: & it is too common a thing. Not without cause therefore doth Saint Paul say that wee haue greatly profited, when we haue learned to bee rich: that is to wit, when we be not desirous to gather still more and more, so as if GOD haue giuen vs any abundance, we followe our trade still without coueting in this wise: O, such a peece of ground were good for me: I must needes purchase that, and the next to it.

Againe, not to be desirous to bestill increasing, is not all that a riche man hath to doe. Wee must also bee poore in our heartes: that is to say, wee must not bee proude to trust in our riches, nor take occasion by them to oppresse the weaker sorte, and such as haue no estimation nor friends in the world to maintaine them. And finally wee must bee readie to become poore whensoever it shall please God. Let him that is nowe verie riche, which hath his garners, store-houses, and Cellars full, which hath his purse well stuffed, which hath Landes and possessions, and which hath a good Trade of marchan-10 dize: let him (say I) not thinke it straunge if GOD list to bereaue him of all, neyther let it grieue him and vexe him ouermuch, but let him bee patient as Iob was and say, seeing it is Gods will to take againe the thing that he had giuen mee, his name bee blessed for it. It is a verie hard thing (say I) to haue skill howe to be riche: yea verily, if wee submit not our selues to Gods will, to accept quietly whatsoever he gi-20 ueth vs, that is to say to beare pouertie patient-ly when he sendeth it, and to holde our selues contented with the goods that he hath put into our hands, without setting of our heartes vpon them. Otherwise wee must alwayes neede be theeues. For the poore shall be tempted to doe euill, and they beare themselves in hand that God dispenseth with them for it: in so much that nowe and then they vse this shift, O, I see howe such a man goes about to eate the flesh from my 30 backe, and he would destroy mee if he could: & why then should it not bee lawfull for me to bee reuenged of him? See how euerie man would be his owne caruer: but it is not for vs to doe so. Verily when a man is become riche euen by pil-ling and pawning, by fustletie and deceite: yet is it not for vs to spoile him of that which he hath, bicause he must make account of it vnto God. Nowe then if wee bee poore, wee shall by and by be prouoked to theft, if wee haue not this 40 bridle to say, What thou? It is our Lordes will to exercise vs, and therefore are wee needie of worldly goods: wee haue not as we would wish, and that is bicause God mindeth to humble vs by that meanes. Marke that for one point. And therewithall, let vs labour to ouercome this temptation. For wee see howe that euen Salomon desireth that hee may not bee poore, for feare least he should be prouoked to steale. Seeing that such a person was afraid, yea and made 50 sute vnto GOD in the name of the faithfull: ought not wee to stand vpon our garde? Yes: and therefore let al such as haue lacke and scarcetie of bread and drinke, and wote not which way to tune them, burleade a verie slender life, so as some time they can scarcely get halfe their fill of bread: and let others also which haue not their commodities as they would desire: let them (say I) put themselves into Gods hand, and pray him to graunt them the grace to lue in 60 such sort, as they may not bee caried to doe any man wrong or harme, vnder prerence that need driueth them vnto it. And as for them that haue the world at will, and money in their purse: let them take good heede that they oppresse not the poore, as they commonly doe, by laying their snare for them. Loe howe the rich men deale. If they see a poore man going to decaye: they play the Hunters, they fall by and by vpon him, and they neuer leaue tolling and turning of him about, till the poore soule bee at length intrap-ped. Therefore let such as are wealthie be-ware that they bee not ouergreddie, but rather let them holde themselves backe, so as they a-10 buse not their abundance. Let not such as haue abundance steppe vp to oppresse such as haue it not. After that manner must wee procede in this case. Yea and in stead of being fustle to seeke things a farre off, let vs when occasion serueth to doe it, let vs aduisedly repulse all such naughtinesse. And in stead of imagining all to bee well wonne when wee can intriche our selues by other mens losses: let vs assure our 20 selues that such riche folke doe cut the poore folkes throates, & that they make many widowes and fatherlesse children, though they thinke it not. Howbeit for as much as our flesh is sharpe witted and fustle in seeking such occasions: let vs thinke vpon our God, who intendeth to trie vs. Wee may well haue a sword in our hand: but let vs beware wee doe no harme with it, and let vs consider that if wee were in like case as poore

 30 folkes are, wee would gladly be succoured. To be short, if wee wil abstaine from theft, let vs bee neither wolues nor Foxes. For as many as deale by deceit and craftinesse, they be like foxes: and what neede so euer the poore haue, if they fol-40 lowe the prouocation to doe euill, they shewe themselves to bee no more men, by their vn-just raking of other mens goods vnto them. And as for them that rob with violence: they be like wilde beastes, which seeke nothing elsse but to deuour all. So then, to y intent we be not theeues, let vs not be cruell.

Therewithall, whatsoever worldly thing wee want, let vs waite for it to haue it by the blessing of God. If wee helde this rule: surely all coue-50 rousnesse, all fleecing, all fraude, and all other like things woulde soone be amended. Wee should neede none other medicine to heale all our diseases than this, namely that wee coulde lise vp our eyes to heauen to saye, God is our Father, hee will prouide all that wee want, it is hee to whom wee must trust for all things that belong to the mayntenance of this present 60 lyfe, and at a woord, his blessing is the wellspring of all riches. If wee were well perswaded of this: wee shoulde not neede any more, eyther pre-ceptes of the Lawe to forbid vs theft, or any other warnings and aduertisements. This onely one woord woulde suffice vs. But what? Wee aske GOD our dayly breade, protesting that it is his peculiar office to feede vs: and yet in the meane while wee fall to filching, decey-70 uing, and malicing: and is not that an vtter scorning of God? I lay with my mouth, giue me my dayly bread: and in the meane reason I goe and seeke it at the diuels hand. For if wee vse vn-80 lawfull meanes, so as wee beguile one and fleece another: at whose hand fetch wee our welfare? Is it at Gods hande? Are wee not companions with theeues and robbers? So then, it is certaine

Iob. 1. 21.

Prou. 30. 9.

that our whole seeking is to bee enriched by the Diuell, when we giue our felues so to craft and extortion. And morcouer the same is a sure token of our vnbeliefe, and that wee looke not for anye thing by Gods blessing, ne thinke him riche ynough to finde vs. Loe at what poynt wee be. Neuerthel. se these things ought to profite vs. When wee heare that our Lorde curseth theft and robberie, and that he abhorreth it: let vs likewise hate and abhorre it, assuring our felues that he iudgeth not after the fantasie of man, but will haue vs to liue in such vprightnesse, as euerie man may haue his right, and no man bee hindred or impeached in his goods and substance, and therefore wee must still haue the more staye of our felues. Againe, forasmuch as wee bee so inclined vnto euill: let vs seeke meanes to holde vs in awe of our God, and to restraîne vs from stealing as I haue shewed you before. And sith wee knowe that hee hath knit vs together: let vs keepe that Law and rule of equitie. Furthermore let vs not couet to bee riche: but to bee short, let vs put this l. s. in vre, of bearing pouertie patiently, and let vs not bee eager of getting, and of promoting our felues out of measure. And finally let vs abhorre all crueltie and deceite: and specially let vs learne not to bee so beastly, as to thinke that our catching & snatching by hooke and by crooke, is able to enrich vs. Let vs not beguile our felues in that poynt. Why so? For the true richenesse (as I saide afore,) is the blessing of GOD. Then must wee drinke of that fountaine, and bee filled with it, if wee will abstaine from all theft.

But nowe herewithall let vs come also to Gods threatninges. When he hath shewed vs sufficiently that this commandement is exceeding rightfull, and hath also giuen vs meanes to liue vprightly without hurting or wronging of any man: perceyuing vs to bee harde heard still, and that our wicked lustes doe turne vs the contrarie waye: hee addeth threats to make vs afraide. And is it a small matter when he sayeth, that theeues and robbers shal not enter into the kingdome of God? Nowe then, shall wee fet so much store by this present life, that to gather a litle good for the maintaining of it in this world, wee shall wilfully prouoke God to displeasure? He telleth vs that we shall be banished out of his kingdome. If we had any spark of fayth at all, woulde not this threatening pearce vs to the heart? Yes: but our Lorde proceedeth yet further. For in as much as he sees vs to bee so fleshy, and so greedily giuen to the earth: he telleth vs that euen in this world he will make vs to goe backwarde: in so much that he which thinketh to further himselfe by his cringing, pulling, and deceuying, shall bee consumed, and a secreete curse shall waste him away. According whereunto it is sayde in the foreallegged text of Zacharie, that Gods curse shall llyght vpon the house of the theefe, and there abide vntill hee be consumed. Also wee see howe hee speaketh of it by the rest of the Prophets: In so much that our Lorde telleth vs,

1. Cor. 6. 10.
Eph. 5. 5.

Miche. 6. 11.
2. 4. 25.

that when men weene they haue enriched them felues and doone much: hee will blowe vpon them, yea and he will blowe after such a sorte, as all shall vanish away, and that so sodainely, as a man woulde neuer haue looked for. But God passeth yet further. In deede it is ynough and too much alreadie, when wee see howe our Lorde mocketh at those which martyr themselves so much in heaping vp of riches, when all goes to decay and slippeth away like water: but a man shall see moreover, that the same goods are a cause of the ouerthrowe of such as haue bene in some reputation. Looke mee vpon a father that hath pilld & powld and prouoked Gods wrath against himselfe all the time of his life: When he dyeth, hee beareth himselfe in hand that his children shall become litle princes. Nowe had he left them but a litle, that they might haue falne in trade of occupying, and had he taught them to haue trauailed honestly, then they might haue had competent wherewith to find themselves. But behold, the father spinneeth a halter for euery of his children, by making them to trust after that fashion in their euill gotten goods, so as they must needs cyther goe to the gallows, or come to some other vnhappie ende. And what is the cause of it? The wrath of God which is present with them to consume all the goods that were gotten by stealth and by powling. The house of them must needs bee accused: and God must needs shewe himselfe a iust iudge, both against the theeues, and against all such as dally with his diuine Maiestie. If a man tell them of it, they make but a iest of it, as these scoffers doe, who will say, well well sir, the tyme is worth the money they thinke, all is one. And if a poore man bee neither of abilitie nor of credite to make his part good against them: O how they welter themselves in the meane whyle in their wickednesse! But wote yee what? When God seeth men so fortified, and that hee can not bring them backe to the heavenly lyfe, in so much that they make no reckening of being banished from the kingdome of heauen: well then goe to (saith he:) I summon you aforchand, for I will begin to put my sentence in execution. I will shew how my curse lyes vpon euill gotten goods, and that they which haue possessed them for a tyme, must bee dispossessed of them, and that themselves and their goods with all their whole ofspring must be consumed together. Now when wee see all these things: must wee not needes be moued at them, if the diuell haue not vtterly bewitched vs? Yes. What remayneth then? We must holde faste the good conscience which God requireth of those that are his, so as euerie of vs trauell quietly for our liuing, and goe not about to grieue other me, but seeke by al meanes to passe our life without offending of God, that if we haue no great reuenew nor much to spend: sobrietie may serue vs for a double portio. After that maner must wee deale.

But now if these [to manward] be so condemned of God: what shall bee done if wee rob him of his honour? For wee must compare theste towards man, and theft towards God together.

Psal. 127. 2.

Beholde,

Beholde, it is God that hath forbidden vs to bee theeues. And why? Because he will haue vs to keepe equitie and vprightnesse one towards another. Yea and looke what goods soeuer he appointeth to our vse, he will haue them vsed, as wee possesse them not by wicked shiffes. He that hath much, must spend them as one that hath but onely the laying out of them, and not the ownership of them: and he that hath but litle, must be contented with it, as I haue saide already. Now if God will haue vs to keepe such an euen hand towards our neighbours, for the preseruing of their goods which they haue in their hands: if he make such account of the goods y<sup>e</sup> he hath created, as he wil not haue them defiled by gulfufulness, by violence, or by such other like dealings: what will he doe in the thing which he fettereth much more store by? So then, when wee haue liued soundly & vprightly in all respects among our neighbours, so as we haue induoured to giue euery man his due: let vs also yeelede our God his right: y<sup>e</sup> is to say, let vs glorifie him, and beware y<sup>e</sup> he remaine vnmpeached in his Maiestie, so as we take not more vpon vs than is lawful for vs as we see men commonly do, who are so bolde, that when they haue bin so mad as to oppress their neighbors, by & by they set vp their horns against God. When they haue spoiled other men of their goods, they woulde make God their vnderling too, and they will not obey him further than they list themselves. Therefore we must beware of al these things. And to conclude, let vs also beware, not onely y<sup>e</sup> we abstaine from all iniurie and anoyance: but also y<sup>e</sup> as neere as we can we suffer not any man to be vexed or indomaged. For these are the two things that God commaundeth: namely lustice and iudgement: lustice consisteth in yeelding euery mā his right: and iudgement consisteth not to any euils, nor suffereth the poore to be misused, which haue no meane to maintayne themselves. For if I see a man oppressed before my face, & induour not to helpe him: I am consenting to the theefe, so as the saying of the fiftith Psalmie may be verified of mee, thou sawest a theefe & rankest with him. Now is it not a running with theeues, when we labour not to restraime them, but either wink at them, or giue the the bridle [to doe what they list:] Yes: and [in so doing] we be consenting to the robbrie that is committed, and we must answer for it, as theeues before God, although no reckning be made of it among men. Therefore let no man thinke that he is bound but onely to keepe his own goods. but let vs also beware that we induour not to maintaine and procure the welfare of our neighbours as we would our own, and as the rule of charitie willecth vs to doe. Thus ye see how we shal not be found to be theeues both before God & man, & how the goods y<sup>e</sup> he hath put into our hands may be blessed, so as he shall make them to prosper, and we haue such contentment, as we shall euer mount vp to the heauenly heritage, being sure that there wee shall haue the perfect fullnesse of all good things.

Nowe let vs kneele down in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God, with acknowledgment of our finnes, praying him to make vs seele them better than wee haue doone, and that wee may profit more and more in the keeping of his holy Lawe. And because wee be so corrupt and frowarde, that all our thoughtes and affections goe the contrary way: it may please him to reforme vs by his holy spirit, and to draw vs in such wise vnto him, as we renouncing the world and despising these mortall and transitorie things, may mount vp to the heauenly kingdome, where we shall haue all contentation and rest. And so let vs all say, Almighty God heauenly father, &c.

20 Thou shalt not beare false witness against thy neighbour.

We haue seene heretofore, that it is not lawfull for vs in anye wise to vex our neighbours in their persons, or to do them anye damage in their goods. Notwithstanding for as much as harme may be doone by the tongue: God hath vouchsafed to make mention of y<sup>e</sup> also in his Law, as we see in this text. Now then like as heretofore he forbade the doing of any outrage to our neighbors, (which thing he comprehended vnder y<sup>e</sup> word Murder:) & likewise all gringing of them and all anyoing of them by any meanes in their goods: so he sheweth here y<sup>e</sup> we must not speake euill of them, nor vse any such words as may cast any blemish or stain vpon them. It is true that he speaketh expressly of False witness: howbeit, that is according to the rule that I haue set downe, namely y<sup>e</sup> he fettereth forth the thinges for most which we ought most to mislyke, to the intent wee shoulde mislyke the finnes that come neere them. Then if wee speake euill of our neighbors, so as wee slander them: although it bee not taken for a grieuous sinne before men: yet doeth God take it for a false witnessing. But here a mā might demaund a question, why GOD speaketh here of false witnessing and periurie: seeing he had already said, Thou shalt not take y<sup>e</sup> name of y<sup>e</sup> Lord thy God in vayne. For it seemeth to be a needlesse repetition. For in so forth a sum of y<sup>e</sup> law, where there be not about ten sentences, it seemeth vn-conuenient to reapeate one thing twise. But we must marke that the things which haue benee set downe heretofore, concerning the not taking of Gods name in vayne: were in the first table, where GOD respected onely the Maiestie of his name, to the intent it shoulde bee had in reuerence. Therefore whensoever we speake of God, we must thinke vppon the infinite glorie that is in him, that wee may neuer open our mouth but with reuerence and humilitie. And whether wee intend to sweare, or to speake of him in any other wise: wee must euer thinke that his name is to bee reuerenced, and that wee must not fling it forth at aduerture. Thus much concerning the things that wee haue seene alreadye vppon this matter. Now God speaketh of another thing: namely of the not hurting or harming of our neighbours in any wise by our wicked tongue. So then, in as much as there is a dubble intent: wee see nowe that these two sentences differ, & also that there is no superfluitie at all. Wherefore let vs marke well, that for as much as it is shewed here howe men ought to liue together charitably and vprightly: although Gods name be dishonoured by lewd witnessing: yet the lawe is not superfluous which saith, That we must not beare false witnesse against our neighbours.

I tolde you before, that Gods meaning here, is to condemne generally all slaunders, all false reportes, all diffamations, and aliother such like things. And for prooffe therof it is expresslye saide in another place, Thou shalt not bring vp any euill reporte, nor speake euill on thy neighbour, to cast any blot vppon him. If the Law of God containe all perfection of good life: it insueth that this also is comprehended therein. And where shall wee put it, but vnder this sentence? Therefore wee must conclude, that although GOD haue peculiarly set downe here the name of False witness: yet notwithstanding hee meant to extend the doctrine thereof to all slaunders, misreportes, and crooked speeches that tend to the diffaming or defacing of our neighbours, or to the hurting of their good name. Wee see then that Gods meaning here, is to keepe vs in good friendship one towards another, and that so farre, as hee suffereth not any man to bee impeached any more in his name, than in his person or his goods. Therefore whoeuer diffameth his neighbour, or in any wise backebyteth him: doeth (to the vttermost of his power) breake the bond of charitie among men, and proclaime open warre. And if we consider all things well: it is certaine that sometimes misreportes, slaunders, and backebytings, doe much more harme than robberies. Wherefore let vs vnderstand that if wee minde to obey our God, wee must maintaine the honestie and honour of our neighbours, to the vttermost of our power. For seeing he hath forbidden vs to hurt any mans good name: it is his will on the contrarie part, that wee should indeuour to preserue all mens honesties. For it is not ynough to abstaine from dooing of euill: vnlesse a man doe good therewithall.

Now must we proceede by the degrees which God meant to set out vnto vs in this place, speaking of False witness. The first then is to beware that wee vtter not any false report, Lye, or perurie in place of Iustice, whereby to hurt them whose honestie, honour and welfare wee be bound to procure. For hee that beareth false witness against his neighbour, doeth kill him and robbe him as much as in him lyeth, and doeth all the euill that may growe of his perurie. In deede most commonly men thinke it not to bee so: but yet is it so in truth. And for the same cause did God expresslye command in his Lawe that the witness should be the first in executing the partie that was to bee punished for any misdeede: to the intent a man might knowe, that their words and their tongues put him to death: and that the witnesses themselves might stande the more in awe, & consider y they should yeeld account vnto God, of their witness bearing against any man. Therefore when any euidence is to bee giuen, it standeth euery man in hand to looke neerely to himselfe, that he enlarge not his conscience, but speake the thing simply & plainly which he knoweth to be true before God.

But the case concerneth not onely the giuing of false euidence in matters of life & death: but also in all matters that touch mens honour, honestie, good name, or goods. Therefore let vs haue a care to preserue the honour and welfare of our neighbour in all respectes, when wee be to beare witness. Yet notwithstanding wee must not vnder this colour, cloake the offence of him that hath doone amisse, or lye against God to maintaine his good state. For if the honour of men bee precious vnto vs: howe much more precious ought Gods honour to bee? Gods forbidding of mee to beare false witness against my neighbour, is because he will haue friendlinesse maintayned among men, and that no man should bee impayred in his name or goods. Now if God haue such regard of vs which are but wretched Earthwormes; thinke wee that he forgetteth himselfe in the meane while? No. But if I by my false record, doe goe about to support or bolster an offender, so as I couer or conceale his crime: it is certaine that I dishonour God as much as in mee is. Why so? For I protest to say the truth, & yet notwithstanding I make a lie. And is not y a defacing of Gods honor? Is it not an imbaging of his glory? Yes: & therefore let vs vnderstand, that when God said, Thou shalt not beare false witness against thy neighbour: hee meant not to gratifie or pleasure euill doers, or to couer mens faults: but to shew in few words, that we ought (as much as in vs lyeth) to maintaine our neighbours honestie, so it may be done with truth.

And let vs marke further, that heere God had an eye to the wicked affections that proceede of malice and rancour, rather than to the deede it selfe, as wee shall perceyue better in the things that remayne as yet to bee discussed. For I haue tolde yee alreadye, that in this place, GOD speaketh not onely of the giuing of false euidence in place of Iustice, and in cases whereto soleme othe is to bee taken: but

Leuit. 19. 16
17.

Psal. 34. 15.

but also of all slanders and diffamations, because that after what sort soever a man backbite his neighbour, hee shall euer be counted a false witness before God. If I wisper any man in the eare to diffame my neighbour withall: surely it is a false witnessing. It was true that I was not called before a iudge: I laide not my hande vpon the Booke: I pertormed not the rest of the ceremonies in taking of an othe: but yet wee see howe God speaketh of it; and therefore am I guiltie in that behalfe. But now must this be considered: if I spie a fault in a man without bearing him any ill will, whether am I to be counted a false witness before God or men for so doing? No. For God hath a speciall respect to the euill will and enmitie. Then if I hate a man and therevpon misreport him, caried thereto by the illdisposed minde that I beare towards him: in so doing I am to be condemned for a false witness. If I have desire to backbite, and that vice doth so reigne in mee, as I must needs be snatching at euerie man: surely I am a false witness. And that is the cause why it is saide that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes, but hatred bewrayeth them to shame a man. Loe howe Salomon hath in fewe wordes, in this sentence touched the roote of the false witnessing which GOD hath forbidden and condemned by his Lawe: namely, that we bee ledde by hatred. And why? For if wee loue one another, surely wee will endeavour to maintaine one another. We knowe it is as a kindling of a fire, when wee backbite any man, so as hee must needs bee angry with vs in defence of his owne honestie: by means whereof all friendship is broken. So then, if wee had any care to maintaine charitie: we woulde hide other mens faultes as much as wee coulede. But if there bee any enmitie, then will our tongues runne ryot. If the heart bee venomous, it must needs haue a vent, and we must needs vter the malice that lay lurking within. Let vs marke wel then, that in this text God condemneth all backbitings that proceede of malice, and ill will, when we hate any man, and woulde wish him vndone, so as if wee cannot annoy his person, nor hurt him in his goods, by bercauing him of his substance: wee fall to touching of him with some priuie nippe, and we will goe about to diffame him. If we doe so: it is a wicked roote, which cannot but bring forth like fruits. That is the point that we must resort vnto, to haue the right vnderstanding of this commaundement of God.

Howbeit let vs marke by the way, that whereas it is saide that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes: it is not ment that wee shoulde flatter one another, and foster our vices by lying: but that we should not blowe them abroad vpon desire to diffame the parties, who possible might rake such a stomacke therat, that they might giue themselves ouer to al naughtinesse through shamelesnesse, as desperate persons do. Wherefore let vs marke well, that the holy Ghost intendeth not to make vs flatterers and fosterers of our neighbours vyces, nor yet lyers: but that

wee shoulde labour to reforme their vyces as much as wee can, and yet notwithstanding beare with them, that we make them not desperate when they haue done amisse. For when a man seeth himselfe defaced, and that it is done vpon reuenge: it spytch him, & hee giueth himselfe to the doing of euill, and so hee hardeneth in it. Therefore when men are in an euill plight already, if wee reprove them boytlowly without any charitable affection: wee cause them to disorder themselves the more. And therefore if wee rebuke mens vyces: let it be doone with mildnesse, that the parties which are rebuked may perceiue that our meaning is to drawe them backe from the way of destruction. And for the same cause doth S. Iames apply this text to such as labour to drawe their neighbours to God, by good, gentle, and friendly corrections. Therefore if I see a man deale leawedly, and I tell him his faulte, so as by my warning I win him, that he returneth into the right way: beholde (saith he) then is this saying fulfilled, that loue couereth the multitude of sinnes. True it is that Salomon speaketh it to another end: but yet hath not S. Iames misapplied this lesson of Salomons by a similitude, for he doeth vs to vnderstande, that our couering of mens sinnes, must not bee by winking at them, nor by holding of our peace when God is offended: (if a man destroy himselfe, wee must not then dissemble to conceale his vyces through loue: that is an ill practising of this lesson;) but we must rather vse good and brotherly correction, & therewithall finde the means that his faultes may be buried before God, & also not come in remembrance before men. Therefore it must content vs to haue brought our neighbours home againe; and wee must alwayes keepe this measure, that when the faultes are amended, we must not diffame the parties if it be possible, least they haue shame of their repentance, and fall into dispaire to the worldwarde. But this is ill put in vire; and we see how men do amisse in going too farre both the ways. For the meane way, (that is to wit of correcting mens faultes with gentleness, and offering to couer them to the ende that euerie man should be reclaimed, and in the meane while not bee diffamed;) will in manner neuer be kept. Why so? For our desire to haue friendship with men, is by flattering them. When we see them offend God diuers ways, we let it slip: and as wee woulde that our friends should spare vs, so do we beare with the naughtinesse that is in them. Ye see then that this is a wicked clogging, because Satan blindeth the wretched sinners by it: and wee be the cause of it, forasmuch as wee winke at the faultes which we ought to rebuke. And yet that inconuenience sufficeth vs not. For the worlde is come to that point nowadayes, that we cannot seeme to be good friends, nor to be faithful and trustie to those whom we much withall, vnlesse we agree to all naughtinesse for their sakes. If they haue offended, & it come to the point that they must receiue rebuke or shame for it: we must rather fall to flatter perurie. And howe? Euen thus men speake, Shall I willingly hurt my neighbour? I am beholden to him: and shall I depose against him? What a thing were that? Lo how we esteeme Gods trueth. Lo how we turne it into a lye. Lo how we abuse the commaundement that forbiddeth vs to diffame our neighbours. Wherefore let vs learne that this ouercockering is wicke when we support the euill, and feed mens vyces. And specially when we be called and required to giue record, if we bewray not the euill truly which is to be corrected: wee shall bee guiltie of it as accessories to our power. I conceale a murder, a robberie, a leawde, pranke, a briberie, a false packing: surely in so doing I intrangle my selfe in al those crimes both before God and man. So then the foresaide couering of our neighbours finnes through loue, doeth no whitte hinder the bewraying of them, when it is needfull and meete to be done, & when we be required therunto.

But there is yet another soule extremitie, worthie of blame: which is that wee be too hastie in blasfing abroad the misdeedes which ought to be reformed quietly, and without making too great brute of them. And this groweth somtimes of enmitie, sometimes of ambition or vaine glorie, and sometimes of a sonde desire to vaunt our selues. Sometimes it is of enmitie. For vnder colour that wee bee desirous to chastise vice, and that we be loth to haue God offended: wee fall to lying in waite for those whom wee hate, and to whom we beare any priuie grudge: and if we find any thing to be blamed or caught holde of against them: by and by their tale shall bee tolde, and wee abuse Gods name falsly in playing the zealous persons after that fashion, when wee seeke nothing else but to vndermine our enemies. And our malice appeareth the better in this, that hauing rebuked a vyce in one whom wee hate, we beare with it and cloke it as much as wee can in our friends, and keepe not an indifferent hande. And doeth not that bewray that wee doe it not of any good wil, and that wee make not warre against the finnes and vyces, but against the persons rather? It may be discerned too easily. And therefore whensoever wee goe about to bewray mens vyces and finnes, let vs vnderstand that our hearts must be cleare and free from all ill will, so as wee may protest before GOD that wee bee desirous both of the welfare and of the profite of him whom wee finde fault with. Let that serue for one point.

Againe wee must keepe our selues from all sonde ambition or vaine glorie, (as I touched afore:) which is, that we must not bee desirous to vaunt our selues before men as a number do, who woulde faine make themselves as holy as saints, by crying out against other men, and by finding fault with them. As soone as they spie a thing amisse: by and by men must bee charged with it, and all the world must know it. O this is a good zealous man: and yet in the meane while all is but a foolish desirousnesse to vaunt himselfe. For this cause God doth oftentimes punish such pride, because they beare themselves in hande, that so they rebuke other men sharpelie, they themselves are faintes and halfe Angels: whereas notwithstanding, they dispenche with many misdeemeanors in themselves, and though they offende more grossly than those whom they finde fault with, yet will they needes haue men to beare with them. And why? Because they haue well chidden others. Yea and yee shall see some that are not ashamed to say, (What haue I not done well in rebuking euill? Seeing I haue behaue my selfe stoutly, is it not ynough for mee? Yes, and if thou couldest not beare with other men, how wouldest thou haue other men to beare with thee: If thou haddest but one droppe of good disposition in thee, wouldest thou not hate the vice in thy selfe, as well as in another man? So then, when wee crie out against our neighbours in rebuking them: let vs beware that we be cleare from all ambition. If wee will discouer the euill that wee perceiue in another bodie: let vs deale so orderly, as to beginne at our selues. If wee intende to condemne other mens faultes: let vs serch and examine well what is in our selues, and reprove our selues first: and then let vs steppe to our neighbours. That is the order which we must keepe if we intend to proceed according to Godlinesse. But let vs marke that here God condemneth generally al iniuries and all backebittings, so as if wee doe but open our mouth to speake any maner of euill of our neighbours, wee be condemned for full witnesses before God. Neuertheless it is not ment herby, that men shoulde conceale the euill that is knowen. For as I haue shewed heretofore, that wee must not foster mens finnes through flatterie and lying, vnder pretence of charitable hiding of them, so must wee not say that blacke is white, vnder colour that wee bee forbidden to doe men wrong. And that is to bee marked well. For there are some which woulde faine that nothing at all shoulde bee condemned, but that men shoulde alter their speech, so as if there be a robbery committed, it shoulde bee termed by some other title, and vyces shoulde not bee condemned by their proper names. This is to bee seene: inso much that if wicked men bee to bee reprovued, which haue not onely offended God, but also caused others to play the naughtipackes as well as themselves, and are as an infection to poyson all the rest: if a man fall to rebuking of them lustilie as hee ought to doe: by and by there are a sort of these nyceelings which take greefe at it. Yea (say they)? And ought men to proceede so farre as to goe vp euen into the pulpit, when they will crie out against vyces? A man shall see blaiphemie reigning, and a man shall see open wickednesse against God and his word, a man shall see as shamefull disobedience as may bee, a man shall see so outrageous occasions of offence as he cannot possible beare with them, except hee will be a traitour to God: and yet if he crie out against them, by and by, hee shall bee answered, what now? The Gospell teacheth you to win all men by gentenes. Did not Iesus Christ cal sinners louingly vnto him, by forgiuing them their faultes? Nowe then shoulde the preachers of the Gospel vs such rigour? Verily as who should say that Iesus Christe will were that men should abuse his grace, to establish the kingdom of Sathan, that sinne might haue full scope, and men winke at it and let it passe vncondemned. Nay, contrariwise, he saith that by the Gospel hee exerceeth a iurisdiction, to condemne the whole world. Beholde, the thing that he ameth at, is that when we be tolde of our naughtinesse, wee should be so ashamed of it, as wee should not knowe whether to flee for refuge, but onely to his grace, and that wee should be vtterly confounded in our selues.

Therefore let vs marke well howe wee be forbidden to disseme our neighbours, vpon any hatred or euill will: but yet wee be commaunded on the contrarie part, to blame the euill, and to rebuke them lustily that doe amisse, to the ende wee may assaye to bring them to good againe, and also make other men take heede, that they be not corrupted by euill examples. This will be the better vnderstoode, if on the one side wee take the meaning of our Lord Iesus Christ, where hee saith that whosoever calleth his brother foole, shall be in daunger of hell fire: and whosoever doeth but grunt at him, is alreadie damnable. And on the other side, whereas it is saide that wee must rebuke the fruitlesse workes of darkenesse: let vs abhorre the euill as saint Paul himselfe saith, auouching to the Corinthians that if the Gospell be preached as it ought to be, they that heare it shall be constrained to glorifie GOD, by casting themselues vpon the earth, that is to say, by being ashamed of their finnes. And why? Because they be brought to light, where as they were hidden before. Whereas their finnes were not knowne: they see themselues as it were dissemed before GOD, and that it is not for them, to hide themselues any more. Then if I doe but grunt of ill will against my neighbour, yea though it cannot be saide that I haue called him naughtipacke, vnchrist or foole, but that I haue but onely nodded my head at him, or made but a firt at him with my finger: behold, it is a false witnessing before God. And why? For I despise my neighbour, and am desirous to shame him. And what moued me thereto? The misliking of him which I haue conceiued against him.

But on the contrarie part, if I be desirous to giue my neighbour good counsell, and to seeke his weldoing, so as I am not ledde by any euill affection, but I woulde procure his welfare as much as in me is: I may well say vnhappy man, looke to thy selfe, it seemeth that thou intendest to sell thy selfe to the deuill, wilt thou be a slave vnder that cursed bondage? Thou shewest indeede that thou art wise and starke madde, seeing thou wilt receiue no warning. Wilt thou needes perish so vnhappy? Go like a wretch as thou art, euerie man ought to spitte in thy face. I may alledge all this to a man, and yet doe him no wrong. For why? I coulde not otherwise reclaime him. When I see that Sathan hath so hardened him, that hee had neede to be quickened vp with maine strokes of the hammer: I may deale thus vehemently wth him, and it is the next way to couer his faultes. For to what intent doe I so, but that they should be pardoned at Gods hande, and that he should no more be dissemed to the worldward: it greueth me to see him pointed at with the finger, it greueth mee to see him a laughingstocke to all men, it greueth me to see him set as it were vpon a scaffolde for all men to gaze at: I say this geere greueth mee; and therefore I labour to bring him into the right way againe. In so dealing there is no wrong at all. But yet for all this we must not take leaue to be ouer bitter. For although wee be verie well minded, and be not caried with any euill intent: yet may wee soone doe amisse, if we be too sharpe in rebuking. And therefore doeth Saint Paul warne vs expressly, to deale mildly in rebuking such as haue offended. And why? Consider (saith hee) that thou thy selfe also maist fall. Therefore let vs be milde and gentle to our neighbours, as wee woulde they should be to vs in like case. But howe fouer the world goe, let vs speake of vyces without colouring of them, and let vs induour lustily to correct offenders, according as they be able to beare, and after as wee see them disposed: and let charitie and brotherly loue moue vs thereunto, for if wee pray God to guide and gouerne vs in this case by his holy spirit: the things that are spoken roundly and charitable cannot be counted an iniurie. Yee see then that the way for vs to keepe this commaundment, is to beware that wee doe not so much as once open our mouthes to speake one worde of rayling or slaunders, vpon enmitie or euill will: and yet notwithstanding to rebuke offenders plainly and mildly as wee woulde that others should do to correct vs in like case if neede required. If we vse this vprightnes: then shall we not be false witnesses against our neighbours.

Furthermore let vs marke, that where as Falschoode or Falsenesse is spoken of: wee be not onely forbidden to inuent or forge any lye, so as the thing that wee speake should be continued without any colour of truth: but if a man doe maliciously marre deface or disgrace the thing that is not euill of it selfe: beholde, it is alreadie a false witnessing. According wherevnto it is saide that the parties which gaue euidence against our Lorde Iesus Christ, that hee had saide, Destroye yee this Temple, and in three dayes I will bulde it vp againe, were falsewitnesses: and yet notwithstanding it is verie certaine that Iesus Christe had saide so, and that hee had spoken the selfe same wordes with his owne mouth. Why then are the reporters of them called falsewitnesses: The reason is, because they wrested the wordes of the sonne of GOD, to another sense than hee had spoken then, and therevpon went about to ground their owne furre, and to charge him with wicked slaunders, as though hee had spoken of the materiall temple of Ierusalem, whereas he ment his owne bodie, which is the very temple wherein dwelleth the fulnesse of the whole Godhead:

8. Tim. 3. 16. for he is God manifested in the flesh. So then, we see in fewe wordes, that the fallenesse which God condemneth here, is not the contriuing of some lie, nor the forging of some thing that was neuer done nor faide, so as we should report some fable, and men should not knowe what it is: but also a malicious wretling or defacing of wordes that might haue bene well taken, and a turning of them to euill: if we doe so we are false witnessers. As for example some are so frowarde, that as soone as they spee a thing that mislyketh them, although it be not altogether wicked and vngodly: yet they fall to picking of some quarrell to it. O say they, see, such a nian hath done such a thing. If they spee neuer so little a spot or specke, there needes no more with them to make vertue become vice. If wee doe but misconter some one worde that is well spoken, beholde, wee mischarge the partie, and his good reputation is wounded. Yee see then that we fastnesse, and so rush out into all naughtenesse. That is a thing which we must needs take heede of.

Nowe if wee will obserue the things that are contened heere: we must resort to a higher gronde: which is, to consider for what purpose God hath made our tongues, and to what ende hee hath giuen vs speech: namely to the intent wee might impart our mindes one to another by communication. And wherevnto shoulde the communication of men tende, but to the maintaining of themselves in charitie and loue? Therefore at a word, wee must learne so to bridle our tongues, as the vnion which G O D hath commaunded, may alwayes bee maintained as much as is possible. And that is the cause why saint Iames vsith such earnestnesse in speaking of euill wordes. The tongue (saith he) is a small thing, and but a little peece of fleish: and yet it kandleth such a fire, as is able to burne vp the greatst woods in the worlde. Nowe let vs come backe to the faide gronde: which is, to vnderstande that God wrought vs a singular benefite, in giuing vs abilitie to comunon together. Beholde, the thoughtes of men are secret: and yet the tongue ferues vs to vtter our minds. Therefore let vs bee circumspect in vsing such a benefite, that it bee not steined by our vice and naughtenesse. And seeing that God hath giuen it vs to maintaine loue and brotherly good will one towards another: let vs not abuse it in babling, or in gadding vp and downe with it to sowe rancour & malice among our selues, by wresting our words amisse. Thus yee see whereto we must come backe.

And when wee knowe generally, howe to auoide the crime of false witnessing: forasmuch as it is a hard thing to bridle our tongues: let vs take the more paine and heede to doe it. We see tha many euill wordes doe easily scape vs. And when we haue talked to and fro vnadvisedly: because wee bee accustomed to it, we thinke it is no fault before God. But let vs marke that forasmuch as wee bee naturally too much inclined to speake vndirectely, and to cast fourth wordes of blame and reproch against our neighbours: wee haue the more neede to endeavour to imprison our tongues and to holde them downe. For though wee bee giuen to some one sinne more than to others: that will not serue vs for excuse before God. But when wee perceiue any fault in our selues, we must not flatter our selues in it, but rather bee sorie for it and say, Alas I see this disease reigneth too much in me, and therefore I must fight the more stoutly against it, and I must by Gods grace inforce my selfe to attaine to the repressing thereof, seeing I perceiue that God condemneth it. And herewithall let vs be thinke vs of the threatens that are giuen out against it. For whenas saint Paul saith that neither whoremongers, nor drunkardes, nor theeuces, nor murderers shall inherite the kingdom of heauen: he addeth also Cursed speakers, and he baniseth them likewise from all hope of life and saluation.

Nowe when wee heare these things, is it for misstrustful, as Saint Paul speaketh of it: & therefore we must be sure that a thing is euill, before we condemne it. It is true that we may sometimes bee deceiued in discerning of good and euill: But when there are apparant signes and tokens, and the matter is manifest as we may bee able to say, This is ill done: if wee be still too much wedded vnto it, it cannot bee but sinfull. And specially if our nature bee so malicious as to bite men and to slander them where there is no cause: surely we be condemned for false witnessers before God.

Nowe if they that are stout in rebuking vices be to be condemned, wher their stoutnes proceedeth of too rigorous a minde: what shall they be whose doings spring of manifest hatred and which will needes misconter such sayings and doings, as might neuer thelesse be well taken, and haue no apparant fault in them? If they marre such things by their lewde constructions: are they not false witnessers before G O D? So then, let vs learne in fewe wordes to maintaine the honestie and welfare of our neighbours in such sorte, that whether wee rebuke them, or whether we speake of their vices to the intent they shoulde bee punished, and that such as might bee seduced and miserieid by their euill example may bee reclaimed: let vs alwayes haue this regarde in our speaking, namely that wee seeke their welfare and benefite as much as in vs lyeth, and that wee keepe such an euen hand continually, as wee dis fame not men after such a sort as they shoulde bee out of heart with it. For wee shoulde rather burie their faultes to the vttermost of our power both before G O D and man, to the intent they may call themselves home againe, and not forgoe all shame-

vs to couer our felities any more with leaues , or to beare our selues on hande that there is no harme in speaking eul of our neighbors: Thinke wee that the threate which God hath vttered by the mouth of S. Paul, serueth but to scare liell children, and shall not bee executed vpon such as will needes exempt themselves from it, as it were in despyte of him? Yes.

So then let vs take paine in this behalfe : and to conclude, let vs specially make this comparison, that if God will haue vs to mainteine the good name of our neighbours, forbidding vs so freely to lay blame or misreport vpon it, where-by their honestie may bee defaced: hee will much more haue vs to regarde his honour. For are wee not a hundredfolde more bounde to maintaine Gods honour, than to preferre the good estimation of men: seeing wee cannot by any meanes benefite him? Yes: And therefore let vs beare that we beare not false witnesse against God, according to Sainct Pauls saying, who auoweth that such as corrupt the purenesse of the Gospel, are falsewitnesses, against God and not against men. What is to be done then? Wee must maintaine Gods truth, and deale roundly in it, that forasmuch as wee see the doctrine is good, wee beare it abroad and maintaine it, knowing that God hath ordeyned vs to bee as his deputies. Then if I see the truth oppressed, I must not suffer it, to my power. Why so? God hath appointed mee to see that lying and vntrueth bee suppressed in his name.

And this is to bee obserued most specially, when the doctrine of saluation commeth in question. As for example, when wee see the doctrine in daunger to bee falsified, and that men woulde mingle Leuen with it, to imbrowe men with falsehood and leasings: in that case wee must be zealous indeede, not suffer false witnesses to haue their full swudge against God, vnlesse wee mind to consent to them, and to bee partakers with them, as I haue declared alreadie. Finally let vs learne, that when wee haue liued in such plainenesse among men, as it cannot bee laide to our charge that wee haue gone about to deface any man by slaudering, rayling, or back-byting: wee must also haue such zeale to Godward as his truth may continue founde, and be maintained to reigne among vs. Thus ye see in effect what wee haue to consider vpon this commaundement.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our fautes, praying him to make vs perceiue them better than we haue done, and to leade vs more and more to such repentance, as we may learne to bethinke vs of our sinnes, to be sorie for them, and to mislike of them, that hauing obtained forgiveness of them, we may learne to direct our life according to his holy commaundementes, so as he may be honored of vs with true obedience, & not onely with confession of the mouth. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people & nations of y<sup>e</sup> earth &c.

21 Thou shalt not lust after thy neighbours wife, neither shalt thou couet thy neighbours house, nor his field, nor his manseruant, nor his womanseruaunt, nor his Oxe, nor his Ass, nor any thing that is thy neighbours.

IT might seeme at the first sight that this commaundement were more than needeth, because that in condemning of theste & whoredome, God ment thereby to repress all wicked affections. For I told you that we must expounde these commaundements according to gods nature, and we knowe that it is Gods peculiar office to serch mens hearts, so as he knoweth euen the deepest, secretest, and hiddest thoughtes. It followeth then that in forbidding men to be theues and whoremasters, hee ment also to bridle their affections and lutes. And indeede, if it were not so: God had no more power in making of lawes, this mortal men, For if an earthly man condemneth whoredome, he will also condemne the intent of it. If there appeare a wicked intent, it shall be punished. If Gods Lawe were no more but so: it were a matter of no great importance: for it were but a ciuil order to gouerne vs honestly to the worldward. But there is much more in it: for we see howe S. Paul saith, that the lawe cannot be kept without a pure conscience and an vnfeined faith. If it bee requisite for vs to haue such a soundnesse in vs, for the well keeping of Gods Lawe: it followeth that all wicked lusts were forbidden vnder the name of whoredome. As much is to be said of the word Theft. Also we might alledge the authoritie of our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is a faithfull expounder of the Lawe. For it is by his spirite, that Moses and all the Prophets spake. Why then is it added heere, that we must not couet? If all wicked lustes were spoken of before: why should they bee repeted againe? Wee must marke, that in this place God meaneth not to repress the affections that are fully intended and determined vpon: but the other affections or motions that stirre vs vp and prouoke vs although we neither stick to them nor consent to them. This requireth a longer and plainer exposition.

Sometimes Conuorsifneffe or Luff betokeneth the will in man. As for example, when I see my neighbours goods and am tempted to couet them, and to lust after them: Now if I feede this temptation in my self, and giue my selfe the bridle: then doth the sinne fo ouermaster me, that my wil is fully resolued vpon it, and I would faine that those goods were mine. This is a kinde of couetousnes or lust that carieth the will with it: for the partie consenteth to the sinne, and hee would put his wicked intent in execution, if hee were able. Nowe such kinde of wicked couetings and lustings were forbidden heretofore where it is saide, Thou shalt not steale, Thou shalt not committ adulterie. For there God hath forbidden vs, not onely the actuall deeds of theft and whoredome: but also the verie lusting and longing after another mans wife, goods, or possessions.

But there is another kinde of couetousnesse or lust, whereto we doe not altogether cleaue, as to consent thereto and yet notwithstanding it tickleth and moueth vs in such sort, as wee feele some euill prouocation in our felues, which is against God, & striueth against the righteousnes that is contained in the Law. Those are the lusts that are forbidden in this place.

And so wee see, that God hauing alreadye condemned all wicked intents and purposes: doeth iustly adde, that that is not yet such a perfection as he requireth at our handes: but that we must vnderstande that all manner of affections which stirre vs vp to euill, [are sinfull:] insomuch that although wee determine not vpon any thing in our felues, ne purpose it at all, but onely that some lusting or liking doe glance through our heart: A sinne is forthwith committed, and wee bee guilty before God. We see then what manner of foundnesse is required in this text: namely howe that our Lorde hauing alreadye forbidden wicked intents, addeeth that all our senses & wits must be so imprisoned vnder the feare of him, and so inflamed with loue and desire to liue in all holinesse: as wee may not bee moued or stirred one way nor other, by any wicked passion, to luite after another mans gooddes or wife.

Seeing wee haue Gods meaning: nowe let vs see whereto he bindeth vs: for the Lawe shoulde be as a looking glasse vnto vs, to behold our own wretchednesse in. And when we once knowe our dutie: let vs assure our felues we be worthy to be condemned, if we draw not to the perfection which God calleth vs vnto. Thus yee see wher vpon wee must stand, that wee may make our profite by this last commandement of the Law. And to the end we may take the better heede to it, and consider that it is such a doctrine as deserueth well to haue our whole mindes applyed vnto it: let vs beare in minde howe saint Paul saith, that whereas hee had bene counted a great doctor, and a wise man, and had bene trained vp in Gods lawe from his childhood: yet notwithstanding he had bene so blinde that he wist not what Gods Lawe ment, vntill hee had bene conuerted, and that our Lord Iesus Christ had lightened him by his Gospel, and so made him to knowe wher vnto the Lawe ought to leade vs. Yee see then howe S. Paul had bene brought vp in such fort, that he was of great reputation among men, howbeit not among the heathen, as who should say hee had bene some Philosopher, but as one that had bene trayned vp in the Lawe of God. And as in respect of his life, he protesteth y he had bin vnblameable before men. Yee see then that S. Paul was a holie and a wise man in common account: and yet for all that, hee is but a sillie beaſt as in respect of Gods Lawe. Why so? He saith that he thought himselfe to bee alme, and to haue bene righteous before God, not knowing that hee needed the mercy which God offereth to all sinners. For hee abstained from whoredome, and robbiee and such other things: and againe he had no euill intentes that any man coulde perceiue or knowe, by reason whercof hee thought himselfe to be a righteous man. But at the length when God had pitied him, hee opened his eyes and made him to vnderstande by this last word, Thou shalt not luff. Loc howe S. Paul began to learne the lawe newe againe, whercof he had bene a teacher before. S. Paul making profession of the Lawe wherin he had bene brought vp from his tender age, saith that vntill such time as he had thoroughly bethought him of the meaning of this text: hee poſted ouer it as it had bene vpon burning coales as they say, so as hee tasted not the strength and power of the lawe, ne knewe what sinne was that hee might condemne himselfe and flee to Gods mercie for refuge, where in the hope of our saluation lyeth, and ought to bee grounded. Seeing that S. Paul could not conceiue the meaning of the lawe, nor attaine to the right vnderstanding thereof, but by this clause let vs determine with our felues to trauell y earnestlyer in it. And sith hee was so blinde all the time of his life vntill his conuerſion, that he vnderſtoode not that saying: wee ought to take the better heede of it, as I tolde you before. For wee be not of better abilitie than hee: but God must be giue ſane to ſhewe vs by his holy ſpिरite, what is ment by this coueting or lusting, which is condemned in this place.

But nowe besides this, we haue here another warning which is right necessarie for vs. For the duell hath labored to couer this commandement after such a fort, as Gods intent and meaning might not be knowne, but that men might lightly passe ouer all wicked luites, which were ſene to be sinne, and whercof euery man might haue prooffe in himselfe. Insomuch that men restrained this worde luff, to none other affections than such as import a resolute purpose or full intent: but that is contrarie to the plaine meaning of Moses. And let vs consider what is come to passe in the Popedome. For although the Papiſtes cannor denie, but that to be prouoked and stirred vp to euill desires, is a damnable fault, and springeth of originall sinne, and of the corruption which wee receiue from our father Adam: yet notwithstanding they imagine that after baptisme it is no longer sinne, though there come a thought into a mans minde minde to doubt of Gods promises, and to grudge and repine against him. If a man bee afflicted, and his heart riseth against it, so as he blameth God of vnrigheteousnesse and crueltie: that is no sinne say the Papistes. And they be not the small fooles that say so: but it is a generall resolution in all their diuellish Synagogues or Schooles. There is not any Synagogue in the Popedom, wherein this point is not receiued as an article of the faith, namely y<sup>e</sup> though a man bee moued and prouoked by any wicked lust, yet it is no sinne: insomuch that if hee bee tempted to murder, to payson, to committe whoredome, and to doe all the crimes and outrages of the world: yet if he do not consent thereto, nor assent, (for those are the two termes that they vse) that is to say, so they determine not fully vpon the matter to say I will goe through with my wicked intent, nor stande vpon it to delight in that wicked affection: it is no sinne at all, it is but an exercising of our selues in battell, whereby wee shewe our selues to bee valiant champions, and that sinne ouermasteth vs not. Indeede it is true that the faithfull doe well shewe that Gods spirit reigneth in them, by their beating backe of such temptations. And when they hold themselves in awe, and as it were imprison them selues, and resist those things because they know they bee contrarie to Gods will, and that hee condemneth them: it is certaine that thing sheweth, that God hath giuen them the vpper hande of sinne, and that his power is resident in them, and that they be stout champions to fight against Satan: but yet doeth it not followe, that they bee cleare from all fault, and that they can pluck vp sin, and fully deliuer themselves from it, as though there were not any spot or blemish more in them. Alas, we come farre short of that. For surely on the one side wee haue cause to praise God, for giuing vs the grace by his holie spirit to ouercome all wicked affections. But yet must wee sigh with all humilitie, acknowledging our selues to be weake on our part, and that if he pited vs not, we haue such a wicked minde already in vs, as prouoketh his vengeance against vs, so as we shoulde well deserue to be vterly destroyed at his hande. Moreouer it was requisite that God shoulde discouer the shame of the popedom, and shewe that the greatest clarks there, are duller witted than the sillie Infidels that neuer hard one word of holy scripture. Why so? For we must take that which is written in the Law. It is saide that the whole summe of the lawe is that wee shoulde loue God with all our heart, with all our soule, with all our minde, and with all our powers. If it had beene saide, Thou shalt loue G O D with all thy heart: very well, a man might haue concluded, that it is no sinne vnlesse the wil doe fully resolute vpon it and purpose it. For although the word Heart, doe sometime signifie the vnderstanding: yet doth the holy scripture take it also for the will. Nowe then a man might alledge this shift: it is s<sup>id</sup>e that we must loue God with all our heart: therefore if we haue not our will bent contrarie to goodnesse, it is ynough, we be quite discharged before GOD.

For men woulde take the wil for the wicked affection, and so it woulde seeme that the wicked lustes which stirre vs vp and prouoke vs, are not comprised vnder the name of sinne, so long as they holde vs not captiue. But when as hee addeth, with all thy heart, with all thy thoughts, and with all thy powers: let vs see whether a peece of my soule or minde be not already corrupted, when I conceiue any thing against God, or when I conceiue any wicked lust of whoredome or robbetrie, although I sticke not to it. Is it to bee saide that I loue God with all my heart, when a peece of my minde is bent against him? The case concerneth not the very heart or will, as I haue declared afore: but the conceit that is in the soule of man. Now then, I shew that there is vanitie in mee, and that the feare and reuerence of God restrain mee not as they shoulde doe: and therefore it followeth that I am condemned as blameable, because I haue not discharged my self in louing my God as I am commanded. Again, is there no power of my soule which is not applied to the thinking of some one thing or other that is contrarie to God and his righteoussnesse? Yes. We see then that naughtie and wicked thoughts are to bee condemned, and wee must no more qualitie them that they shoulde not bee punished at Gods hand: and also that the men which neuer consented to euill so farre as to purpose and fully intende it, should not faile to be cursed before God, if hee list to vse rigor against them. Nowe therefore we haue the true and plaine meaning of this text, whereby we see that it beloueth vs to looke neerer to it, that we be not beguiled nor misledde. And S. Pauls example ought to prick vs the more forward, seeing hee confesseth himselfe to haue bin ignorant of Gods lawe, vntill our Lorde Iesus Christ had enlightened him by his holy spirit, to the intent he should know what was meant by the word: Lust, or Concupiscentie.

Nowe must we apply the foretouched things to our benefite, and vse. First therefore let vs learne, that to serue God well, we must not onely be desirous to doe well, and go forwarde therein to effect: but also rid our hearts from all euill affections and corrupt thoughts, so as al our senses may tende to the giuing of our selues all wholly vnto God. Let vs not shewe our selues to haue beene drawn aside to reele one way or other: but let vs bee thoroughly stayed, to runne forwarde without stopping or stunting, yea euen to runne forwarde in the way that G O D sheweth vs, so as there may be nothing but perfect purenesse in vs. And when we once knowe that well: then must wee take warning to stande vpon our garde. For wee see howe men runne altraye and disperse with themselves. And what is the cause thereof? It is for that they make their reckening without their hoste, as wee say. For they conser Gods lawe after their owne fancie, bearing themselves in hand that it is ynough for them, so they had none euill intent with them, nor rested vpon the thing with determinate purpose. Truth say they, God imputeth none of all this. And therupon they w<sup>ill</sup>ke for warde in leawde lusts, with a towell of their owne tying before their eyes, that they may not discern their owne secret deceiuing of themselves. But yet when men haue spoken so, they cannot scape the hande of the heavenly iudge. And therefore let vs looke to the restraining of our lustes. For God hath condemned not onely the wicked inrentes and purposes: but also all the lustes that prouoke vs & thrust vs forward vnto euill. Wherefore let vs lue in the greater awe, and let euerie man holde himselfe thort, euen because there is no part in vs which is not infected with sin. Let vs make a trial of all the powers of our soules, and wee shall finde that sinne is shed throughout, like as when a payson is soked into a mans bodie, it infecteth him throughout, and so is there as it were an vniuersall leprosie which liath ouergrown the whole man, both bones, and marowe, and thoughts, and affectiōns, and all that euer is of him. Seeing then that our nature is so corrupted, ought we not to be the more vigilant to holde our selues in awe, considering that God by his lawe condemneth all wicked thoughts, that tend to the prouoking of vs vnto euill, inasmuch as there is a certaine inward mouing that ticketh vs, and wee feele our will pricketh forward, although it be not ledde quite and cleane away as a prisoner? Sith we see this, haue wee not good cause to gather our wittes to vs, and to walke the more warily and carefully vnder the hande of God? So then whereas wee see drowie and slothfull, and woulde faine discharge our selues to Godward with ease; yee see howe this commaundement ought to waken vs. But wee must vnderstande that it is not for vs to scape by such shifts. And why? After that God hath condemned wicked intentes: hee proceedeth still to the condemning of euill lustes too. And that ought to stande vs to a double vse. The one is, that we must pray to God the earnestly-40 er, to gouerne vs with his holy spirite, and to cleanse vs from all vices and corruptions, & that hauing prayed vnto him, euery of vs shoulde inforce himselfe, and as it were doe violence to our nature, and to all our senses and powers of munde, forasmuch as there is nothing in vs but rebelliousnesse against the Lawe of God, euen as Saint Paul speaketh not onely of mens willes, when he saith: that men in their owne frowarde nature are enemies to God, but also of their affectiōns and thoughts. Hee vseth a worde there, which extendeth euen to the thoughts y<sup>e</sup> we conceiue. Al of the (saith he) are enemies vnto God.

Seeing it is so: let vs assure our selues, that when we haue takē neuer so much paine to hold our selues imprisoned vnder the awc of God: yet there will scape manie euill lustes from vs, the which it behoueth vs to bewaile before God. And so the first point is, that we must be earnest in calling vpon God, to gouerne vs by his holy spirite, and doe our indeuer and diligence to bridle our selues in such wise as satan may not haue any hoole to enter at, nor bee able to make any breach vpo vs, to win the possession of our hart: but that we driue them a great way off, so as if we perceiue any thought tending vnto euill, wee straitwayes preuent it and set a barre in the way saying: No not so, Thy God must haue the wholl dominion of thee, so as he possesse, not onely thy heart, but also all thy senses. And for the second point wee must learne to condemne our selues, that we may glorifie God in cōfessing our selues to bee all gilty, and that if hee call vs to a reckoning, we be all vndone and cast away, if he vse rigor against vs. To that point must wee come, or else we shall neuer profite in Gods Lawe as wee shoulde doe. But here it might bee demanded, seeing that God knoweth mens frailtie, why hee doth not either strengthen them better, or else make a Lawe that were lesse straite and seuer? For it should seeme that God ment to oppresse vs, when he forbiddeth wicked lustes, and thinks it not ynough for vs to yield him obediēce in our willes, without adding of the other worde. And that is the cause why scoffers say that God ment to mocke men in his lawe, and intended (as yee would say) to forbidde men to scratch, when hee made them to itch. But wee must come to the cursednes that is in our selues: namely that wee haue neither thought nor affectiō in vs, (as I said afore) but the same is disobedient to Gods righteousness. Therefore let vs not wonder though there be such a battle betwene Gods law & mens lusts. For why? when we haue throughly serched what is in vs: we shall find nothing there but vter corruptiō and damnable vices: for we cannot conceiue so much as one thought which tēdeth not to euill. Forasmuch as it is so: beholde, God giueth vs here a perfect rule of all goodnes and righteousness. Nedes therefore must there rise vp as it were a thundering, and the fire & water must needs shewe their contrarie workings. Nowe there is lesse agreement betwene mans nature and Gods righteousness, than is betwixt fire and water. Therefore let vs not thinke it strange, that God doth so repress all our lusts And when we heare the blasphemies which the scoffers that I spake of, doe spew out: let vs abhor them as monsters. For insteade of glorifying God for his righteousness, they come dashing against him like wild and mad beasts. Thus much concerning this point of the frailtie of men.

Nowe although hit be fuch: yet is it not to bee marueiled at, that God hath condemned it in his law. Why so? For in ordering of our life and in shewing vs howe we shoulde walke, God respecteth not what we be able to doe, nor y<sup>e</sup> measure of our strength: but what duety we owe to him, & what righteousness he is, although it be not to be found in vs. We be Gods creatures: and ought we not then to giue our selues wholly to his seruice? Yes certainly. That is a peremptory reason. And men may well grunt at it, but yet shall they alwayes finde prooffe in themselves, that forasmuch as they belong to GOD, they ought to dedicate all their senses, all their affectiōns, and all that euer is in them both in bodie and soule vnto him. Howbeit let vs mark well herewithall, that wee cannot discharge our selues thereof: and what is the cause thereof but our owne naughtinesse? And we take that from Adam. That followeth not. For although wee bee helde in bondage vnder sinne, and this bondage hindereth vs from well doing, and driueth vs to all euill: yet how focuer wee fare, the roote of it is in our selues, and euery man shall feele himselfe blame worthy, so as wee shall not neede to say that wee bee driuen by any other force: but euerie man is caried and driuen to it by his owne lust. And so is there no more excuse for vs. Whereby it appeareth, that it is not for vs to measure Gods Lawe by our owne power and abilities. Why so? As I sayde afore, G O D respecteth not what wee can doe, nor what our abilitie can brook: but he respecteth wherein wee bee bounde vnto him, and hee hath an eye to the perfection that is without vs. That is the thing which wee haue to marke. And it is the thing that begyleth the Papiſtes. For they haue this principle among them, That Gods Lawe is not vnpossible to men. It is a wonder that they should bee so straught, and that the diuell should bewitch them after that fashion. For it is most euident and apparant doctrine throughout the whole Scripture, that men shall alwayes bee condemned by the Lawe, and that they must bee sayne to flee for refuge to Gods onely mercie. When Saint Paule goes about to prooue that all men are cursed for as much as all men are sinners, and that there is not so much as one righteous man: what argument vseth he? He alledgeth this text of Moses, Cursed are all they that performe not the whole contentes of the Lawe. Nowe at the first blush, it shoulde seeme that Saint Paule reasoneth amisse, and that the sayde allegation is impertinent. Well then, it is sayde that all such as transgresse Gods Lawe are cursed: but yet it followeth not therefore that all mankind is accursed. For if a man keepe the lawe and discharge his dautie: in so dooing hee is exempted from the sentence of condemnation. Some then there are to bee founde that haue performed the lawe: and therefore all are not accursed. Yes. But Saint Paule presupposeth, that the lawe is vnpossible. And if he should not presuppose that: he had spoken as a witleſſe and vnreasonable man. Therefore wee see that the Papiſtes haue taken a grounde that is cleane contrary to Gods spirit: and surely hee besotteth them in such wise, as they knowe not the verye Apſte of the Christian faith and Religion. So then let vs marke well, that when wee treat of Gods lawe, we must not measure it by our abilitie, nor looke what wee can doe: but wee must looke what wee owe vnto God. Yea but saye they, nor so: howe shall wee doe this? For to their seeming all the worlde shoulde bee damned. It is true, and so is it meete that it shoulde bee: that is to wit, that wee shoulde all be damned, if wee will not haue saluation in Iesus Christ. For howe shall wee seeke Gods grace, vnlesse wee thinke wee haue neede of it? Men will not begge by their good willes. So long as we thinke our selues to haue any rightuouſnelle of our owne, wee will not passe to seeke any else where than in our selues. Therefore it behooueth vs to bee vtterly ridde of it, and to feele

Rom. 8.7.

Gods wrath and death lying heauie vpon vs: for without that, wee will neuer vouchsafe to submit our selues to God to obtaine mercie. But this deserueth to bee layde fourth more at large.

Therefore let vs beare well in minde first of all, that when wee feele any finfull thought in vs, and our lustes doe tickle vs vnto euill: wee be guiltie before God. But here it might bee demanded, how then? If a man doe but conceiue a thought, so as hee not only hath no will to abyde by it, but also mislyketh of it euen before he haue felte any sting or pricke of it: is this sinne? Nowe there are thoughtes which touch not our heart at all, neither are wee mouued with them, neither doe wee conceiue any euill desire. A thought cometh vpon a man as it were sleeping, and it flittereth afore him. What? so as his heart is moued with it, or his desire inclined to it? No. When it happeneth but euen so to vs, surely it behooueth vs to bewaile it before G O D, and to consider that if we were not helde backe by his grace: there were a gap open for Satan, and he woulde by and by winne the aduantage of vs. Therefore wee must fill sigh in this case. But yet doeth not God impute this for sinne.

The second point is, when wee not only conceiue some euill thought in our minde, and some thing presenteth it selfe before vs: but also wee bee somewhat mouued with it, so as wee feele some sting of Satan pricking vs, and then is the sinne conceiued: that is to say, although there bee no consent as they terme it, nor any resolute purpose: yet is the sinne full shaped before God, and it is damnable. It is expedient to alledge examples hercof. It may bee that a man beholding another mans house or ground, conceiue some light imagination, and yet is no whit mouued therewithall in his heart, ne hath any desire to say, I woulde this were mine, but passeth it ouer and sees it but vanitie. Hee can not let the coming of it into his minde, but yet (as I sayde afore) although it bee not matched with any euill affection, G O D doeth thereby warne vs of the infinitie that is in vs, and it behooueth vs to humble our selues, and to bee lorie, and to consider that it is such a fault alreadie, as wee are well worthe to bee condemned for. For let vs see it this bee to be founde in the Angels of heauen. No vndoubtedly. And yet their rightuouſnelle of the Angels is hardly and scanty answerable to the Lawe of God. In dedde there is a rightuouſnelle of God (as wee haue seene in the Booke of Iob) which surmounteth the rightcouſnelle of the Lawe. But though the Angels of heauen giue themselves neuer so much to the keeping of Gods lawe: surely the vttermoſt that they can doe, is but to frame themselves to the rule that is giuen vs here. Nowe then wee see howe it is a fault alreadie, for the which men ought to condemne themselves, though they haue not had any wicked thing presented before them, but euen a little heartinesse, so as a man shoulde say, I woulde, and yet for all that hee doeth verie foadainely beate it back, and yeeldeth not thereto, though I say, he so cut it off, yet is he guiltie of that coueting or lusting whercof mention is made here. And seeing it is so, let vs learne to condemne our selues in all respects.

Againe let vs looke that wee condemne our selues dubble, when wee haue not onely had some heartising to prouoke vs to euill: but also some settled affection by nourishing the said heartising, as when a woman breedeth childe and nourisheth the conception till it come to the birth. Now then, when wee haue giuen head after that fashion to our euill lustes, so farre forth that our will is overcome, and wee rest vpon the euill to consent vnto it: behold (say I) there lyeth a dubble condemnation vpon vs. And then must wee bewaile our wretchednesse yet more because wee see a dubble condemnation hanging ouer our heades, vnlesse GOD of his infinite goodnesse doe spare vs. Thus ye see what wee haue to marke.

But nowe herewithall wee must resorto to the remedie. For wee shoulde fall into vtter dispayre and confusion, if wee had not Gods grace to succour vs withall. Therefore if wee acknowledge our selues blamewoorthis in all respects: then doeth GOD call vs to him, and shewe vs that although the wicked lustes which are in vs, bee sinne of their owne nature: yet hee will not impute them to vs for sinne. Then if it bee demanded whether euill lust, bee imputed for sinne to the faithfull: I say no: but they bee two diuers things. For if ye haue an eye to the nature of the vice: ye shall euer finde it to bee sinne: but yet GOD pardoneth it. After that manner shall no euill lustes bee laydeto the charge of the faithfull, for as much as they bee forgien through Gods free goodnesse: and wee knowe also that all our spottes are wyped out by the blood of our Lord Iesus Christ: and therof is Baptisme a good warrant vnto vs. For there haue wee our spirituall washing, to cleane vs from all the filth and vn-cleannesse that is in vs, that wee may appeare pure and cleane before GOD. So then our wicked lustes shall not come to account. Nay (which more is) euen the deadly finnes, notwithstanding that they proceede euen into the acte or deede doing, shall not bee imputed vnto vs: verily euen because (as I saide before) God respecteth not that: and yet notwithstanding hee will that we haue an eye to it. Howbeit, if any man beguile himselfe by bearing himselfe in hand that he hath not conceyued any wicked lust: it causeth GOD to call him to account.
And why? For in as much as men soothe themselues, it is meete that they should be condemned. And for the same cause hath the Diuell brought to passe to beare mens eyes by making them beleue that none of all those things is sinne: in so much that wee see how the Papistes imagine, that euen the grossest faultes that bee, are blotted out by the signe of the Crosse, or taken away with the sprinkling of holy water. To their seeming they bee matters of no weight, and they dally with God as with a litle babie. But on the contrarie part let vs alwayes beare this in minde. And for as much as wee be not only too negligent, but also inclined to sooth our selues in our own vices: let vs take this looking glasse to behold our selues in. Let vs not de-ceiue our selues. A man may bee smeared or grimmed, and euery man shall laugh at him, and yet hee himselfe shall not perceiue it a whit. But if he go to a glasse, and there spie his face all bespot-ted, hee will shrinke away and go wash it of. Euen so must wee doe. Surely the whole Lawe of God is as a glasse to shewe vs our foulnesse, to the intent wee should bee sorie and ashamed of our lewd doings. And if we will haue a true looking-glasse, we must come to this present commaund-ement as I haue saide already. For as long as we reade no more but Thou shalt not steale, Thou shalt not murder, Thou shalt not committ adulterie: all is well, euery man will beare himselfe in hand that he is not guiltie. But when wee come once to this poynt, Thou shalt not lust: it is a sharp lancing knife wherewith God launceth deeper, to search not onely the bottom of our hearts, but also of our thoughts, imaginatiōs and conceits.

There is not that thing in vs which cometh not then to triall and knowledge. In so much that the things which we tooke to be no faultes at all, must be condemned before God, and hee must haue the iudging of them, vnlesse wee play the iudges with our selues aforehand. And herewithall wee haue to magnifie the mercie of our God, in that although we be faultie so greatly & so many wayes, yet notwithstanding hee accep-teth vs for righteous. Let vs make comparison here betwene the righteousnesse which we obtaine by faith, and the curse that is vpon vs.
Whereinto we be plunged? Are we faultie but in some one offence, or in some two or three, or in some certaine number? Nay we be plunged in such a gulfe, that if wee begin once to fall to reckening, wee must needs be confounded. A hundred Millions of faultes is not the hundred part of the offences that wee haue committed before God. Then are we so guiltie, as there is none ende nor measure of our finnes. Yet notwithstanding God receiuet vs to mercie, so as wee bee counted as righteous before him, as though there were such full soundnesse and perfection in vs, that nothing were amisse, but that we had performed the whole Lawe. Seeing then that God forgueth vs such an infinite number of offences, and clotheth vs with his owne righteousnesse, through the operation of the death and passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, in as much as wee lay hold by faith vpon the grace that is purchas'd for vs, and do him the honour to say, Lord, it is in thy meere and free bestowed goodnesse that our saluation consisteth: doeth it not appeare therein, how much wee bee bound vnto him? Yes. So then, whē Gods Law hath brought vs to our wittes end, not onely because of the infinite number of our lustes, but also because wee shoulde lye hurried vnder them as vnder huge mountaines, if God should deale rigorously with vs: let vs call to minde that Gods iustice is not to leaue vs in despair, but to lift vs vp againe as soone

soone as wee be funke downe. When he sees our feeblennesse, he reacheth vs his hand, and calleth vs to him, and will haue vs to bee comforted, for as much as he of his mercie layeth not any of al our sinnes to our charge. Thus ye see howe the faithfull cease not to be of good cheere, though they bee so condemned in themselves. But yet must wee begin at this ende of being vtterly dismayed in our felues, that our Lorde may deliuer vs from the dungeon of death, and wee acknowledge y<sup>e</sup> our saluation consisteth in his only grace. Howbeit let vs notwithstanding lue warly and keepe good watch, assuring our felues y<sup>e</sup> when we haue traiailed neuer so much, and taken neuer so much paine to serue God, so as wee haue on the one side eschewed all occasions of euill, and on the other side subdued our affections, & lusts, & also induored to repress all wicked thoughts: yet wee must not cease to condemne our felues still, and to stand still in awe. Although we haue had victory through the grace of God, and sinne hath not ouermastred vs: yet doth it dwell continually in vs, and there is still some vncleanesse and spot in vs. Therefore let vs sigh, and let vs sigh in such sort, as it may sharpen vs to doe our dutie. We see how S. Paule speaketh of it. After he had profited as much as might bee, and was come to an Angelicall holinesse: yet notwithstanding he saith still, wretch that I am, who shall deliuer mee from this body of death? And what is the cause that he considereth death in himselfe, but for that he sawe sinne there? Neuertheless let vs vnderstand that wee must not bee out of heart. Although wee perceiue a Million of sinnes day by day in vs: yet must wee still passe on further. And therefore when Saint Paule exhorted the faithfull to eschewe sinne: He saith not, Let not sinne dwell in you: but he sayeth, Let not sinne reigne in you. In deepe it were to be wisht that sinne dwelled not in vs: but seeing it is in vs, yet must wee not bee too much discomforted. For whereas it is saide that sinne dwelleth in vs: first it warneth vs of our wretched state: and secondly it willeth vs to consider that wee must bee occupied in continuall warfare, and therefore fleve the earnestlyer to our God for succour, praying him to strengthen vs with his power, by the grace of his holy spirit which he hath giuen vs for our Lord Iesus Christes sake.

 Nowe let vs fall downe in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better, and that wee may learne to frame our lyues to the obeying of him, which beholdeth not onely our outward woorkes, intentes and affections: but also euen all our thoughtes and conceytes. And for as much as wee can not attayne to such perfection out of hand: let [vs beseeche God] that the same may bee an occasion to humble vs: and therewithall to stirre vs vp continually to fyght lustilyer, so as euerie of vs may inforce himselfe to correct the vyces that are in his nature, vtill our Lorde haing rid vs from this corrupt fleshe, doe clothe vs againe with his owne righteoulesse, and fashion vs al wholly like to his glorious image. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people, &c.

On Tewfday the xvj. of Iuly. 1555.

22 These are the woordes which the Lorde spake to your multitude, vpon the Mount from the middes of the fire, out of the Cloud and darkenesse, with a great voyce. And he added no more thereunto, but wraite them in two tables of stone, and gaue them vnto mee.

Or as much as wee finde not a better excuse of our lewdnesse & disobedience towards God, than to please ignorance: we coulde finde in our hartes to haue alwayes that shrouding sheete, so as wee myght laye we vnderstand not what GOD sayeth, or that hee speaks 60 not vnto vs, or else that his voyce is too farre off for vs to heare. But GOD foreseeing such lewdnesse, meant to prevent all that men could alledge, to the ende they might haue nothing to defend themselves withall. And therefore in setting forth his Lawe, it was his w<sup>il</sup> that the doctrine which is contained therein, should be vttered with a loud & thirle voyce. Yea & he spake it not onely to three or foure, but to all the people, both great & small without exception. Besides this, it was his will that the lawe should be put in writing, that it might continue, and not serue for one age onely: but stand in force and authority to y<sup>e</sup> worldes end. And y<sup>e</sup> is the cause why it is said in this place, That God spake with a laude voyce. Hereby Moses sheweth that the Lawe is no hidden doctrine, and that men can not alledge that they bee not of sufficient learning: for not without cause did God solist vp his voyce, when he intended to giue a rule for men to lue by. It is added added expressly, That it was doome to the whole multitude. As if he should say, It is true that God hath chosen men from among you to gouerne you, and that he hath giuen them his spirit: but yet for all that, he will haue his lawe knowne euen of the rudest and most ignorant, so as it may be a wisdom common to all men. That is one of the pointes which we haue to marke here.

The seconde is, That God added not any thing more, after those ten sentences. Wherein Moses doth the people to vnderstand, that this briefnesse which God vseth, ought to incourage vs to receiue the things that he speaketh. For if he should lay great volumes before vs: we might replie, that all our life would not suffice to studie them. God therefore was not ouerlong in giuing vs his woord. There are but onely ten verses of them. Let vs count them vpon our fingers, and wee shall haue instruction ynough in all things that are requisite for our life. Yea & herewithall Moses meant to doe vs to wit also, that seeing God hath giuen vs such a sure rule, as he intended not to adde any whit at all to y<sup>e</sup> which he had spoken already: it behoueth vs to holde vs to it, and it is not lawfull for any creature to adde aught vnto it. Thus much concerning the second point.

For the third point he rehearseth that againe which he had sayde heretofore: that is to wit, Deut. 4. 11. That God in setting forth his lawe, spake from out of the cloud, and that the mountain smoked, and that there were flames of fire, and flashes of lightning flew to and fro. Whereto tendeth all this? That the doctrine might carrie the greater Maiestie, and that men might be moued to humble themselves reuerently before GOD, and to submit themselves wholly to his word, and to obey the same. These are the three notable points which Moses rehearseth here, before he proceede to the rest.

Now as touching y<sup>e</sup> first, let vs remember what hath bene said afore, that is to say, That God spake loud and shrill: and not to a fewe folke, but generally to all the people: which thing was doone to make vs vnderstand, that Gods woord shall be cleare and certaine to vs, so wee playe not the deafe folkes wilfully. True it is that our wits are so weake, as we shall neuer vnderstand one word of the things that God speaketh to vs, except he

i. Cor. 2. 13. inlighten vs by his holy spirit: for the sensuall man vnderstandeth not the heavenly things. Those then are too high for vs. But whereof cometh that fault and vice but of our owne blindness? Yet notwithstanding, Gods trueth, as in respect of it selfe and in it owne nature, is easie & open ynough: and therefore let vs not charge it with darksomnesse. Againe, what is to be done, if we would haue God to make vs profite in his word? Let vs be lowely and of small reputation: for it is not in vaine, that he hath promised to

Psal. 25. 9. teache the lowely. Then let vs not trust to our own wit, let vs not come with ouerweening and loftinesse, as though wee thought our selues of sufficient capacite to iudge of the things that shall be said vnto vs: but let vs rather beseeche God to open our eyes and to reach vs his hand, and let vs confesse that we haue not the aptnesse to profite in his schoole, further forth than he giueth it vs. If wee bee at that point: let vs not doubt but that Gods word will be easie to vs, and wee shall vnderstand what he intendeth to say. Hereby we see what wretchednes hath bin in y<sup>e</sup> world, whereby the comon people, and wellneere all other men haue bene plucked backe from reading the holy scriptures. For it hath bene an opinion, that it belonged to none but Monkes & Priestes: yea & in the end there was such beastlinesse, as it seemed that diuinitie ought to be locked vpin chestes or caskets. But yet for all that, this record hath indured, and must indure to the worldes ende, namely that God hath spoken with a loude voyce, & not hidden or shrunk himselfe aside into sonie litle odde nooke. Therefore it was too shamefull a thanklesse, that men haue so left Gods woord as it were in a wilderness. And wee ought to marke this text so much the more, where it is saide, that God spake not to some Doctour onely, but to all the people in common, yea euen to the verie simplest sort of them. In respect whereof we haue cause to magnifie the goodnesse of our God, in restoring the benefite vnto vs, whereof wee see the most part of the world bereft, for their churlishnesse and retchlesnesse sake, so that now adays Gods word foundeth among vs, and we may reade it, and be partakers of it both openly and secretly, and the treasures thereof are set forth to vs, so as wee may inioy them: and that is an inestimable benefite, which wee ought to magnifie. Againe let vs be diligent in giuing care to our God, and let no man alledge excuses to shif himselfe from him. For seeing that God speaketh to all y<sup>e</sup> companie of the faithfull, euen to as many as are baptized in the name of our Lorde Iesus Christ: let euery man on his owne behalfe and in his degree, inducours to profite thereby, and let all of vs in common take God for our schoole-maister, and bee readie to hearken to him whensoever it pleaseth him to speake vnto vs, which thing he doth daily. Thus much concerning the first point, where it is said that God spake to the whole multitude.

Now let vs come to the second point, that is to wit, That he added not any thing: and that is to the end that we should be the willinger to heare what is contained in the Lawe. It is true that all that cuer is set downe in writing by Moses, belongeth to the Lawe. Likewise the things that the Prophets haue left vnto vs, and finally that which is added in the Gospell, containe all one substance. And though the Byble be very great: yet notwithstanding GOD hath made it all to ame at one certaine marke, to the intent wee should not goe wandering at rouers, nor bee driuen to make too much seeking whither wee should goe. For why? All is referred to ten verses, as I haue said already. Let vs reckon vpon our fingers, and wee shall haue Gods commandements, we shall haue a summe of the things which we ought to beare in minde, that we may be good schollers to Godward. Seeing there is such briefenesse, must it not needes be that men are too froward, if they refuse such teaching, and can finde no leasure to profite in Gods worde? Now then, let vs forbear all such trifling replies as this, O s i r , the holy scripture is a deepe sea, it is a bottomlesse pit. If a man would enter into it, how should he get out againe? Let vs alledge no such things. It is true y<sup>e</sup> in the scripture God sheweth such secrets, as euen y<sup>e</sup> Angels doe reuerence. It is true y<sup>e</sup> we can haue but a small tast of the so long as we be in this world. It is enough y<sup>e</sup> we know in part (as sayth Saint Paul) & darkely, and y<sup>e</sup> we see y<sup>e</sup> things now as it were through a glasse, which we cannot see as yet face to face. All this is very true. But yet for all y<sup>e</sup> God hath so abased and applyed himselfe to our slenderesse: that the things are become easie vnto vs, or at leastwise we conceiue so much of them, as is auailable to our saluation. If we meet with things that are doubtfull: let vs haue this modestie with vs, that wee rush not too farre forward, till wee haue first asked counsell at Gods mouth, knowing that wee be yet farre off from our perfection. Yet notwithstanding, wee may alwayes glorie, that according to the abilitie that is giuen vs, our Lord will not leaue vs in doubt and ignorance, without giuing of vs such certaintie, as we may walke safely on our way, so as we shall knowe that his calling of vs to him is not in vaine, and that wee bee not let loose to runne at rouers: but that wee haue a certaine marke set vp for vs to runne at, whereunto if wee hold on our way, wee ought not to mistrust that we shall misse, forasmuch as wee haue so good direction. Therefore let vs beare in minde, that our Lorde speaketh not here according to his owne nature.

For if he should speake in his owne language, should it bee vnderstood of mortall creatures? Alas no. But how is it that hee hath spoken to vs in the holy scripture? As nurces doe to their little babes. Saint Paul sayth that hee did as a nurce doth with her little children, when hee preached the Gospell. And in speaking of himselfe, no doubt but hee sheweth the goodness of God, who ruled him after that sort by his holy spirit. And looke what was in Paul: the same doe wee finde lykewise in Moses, and in all the prophets. Then let vs marke, that God made himselfe nurcelike, who talketh not to her little babe as shee would doe to a man, but hath a respect of the chldes capacitie. So then, G O D did as it were stoope, because wee should not haue vnderstood what hee sayd, vnlesse he had lowlyed himselfe vnto vs. That is the cause why that in the holy scripture, hee shewes himselfe the rather lyke a nurce, to the intent to conceale his high and infinite maiestie, whereunto wee could not attaine, no nor once come neere it. Seeing that G O D hath yeilded himselfe so courteously vnto vs: there hangeth the greuouser condemnation ouer our heades, if wee indueer not to profite in the doctrine, which is (as yee would say) chawed to vs aforehand, to the intent that we should doe no more but swallowe it downe and digest it. Furthermore let vs marke well, y<sup>e</sup> where as Moses sayth, that God added not any thing to these sentences: it is to the end that this breecfenesse should stirre vs vp, and incourage vs, knowing that Gods intent is not to make vs to wander as in a thing that hath neither brim, nor bottome: but to set vs downe these onely ten sentences. True it is that he expoundeth these ten sentences by Moses, and consequently by all the prophets: and in the ende wee haue had a small exposition of them, made by our Lorde Iesus Christ, as it is giuen vs nowadayes in the Gospell. But what for that? Yet haue wee still this one marke to aime at, that there are bus senns sentences. Sith it is so, must it not needs bee that men are too frowarde, when they dispise such grace of G O D, and cannot finde in their heartes to come to him when he intreateth them so gently? Yes. So then this is the effect of that which wee haue to remember here concerning the easines which Moses sheweth to bee in Gods word.

And by the way let vs marke also, that hee intended to cut off all occasion of quareling, to the ende wee shoulde learne to bee contented with the simplicitie of the lawe: that is to say, that wee should not fall to controuling of G O D, by adding of collups and morsells of our owne to his worde. For when hee spake: hee spake once for all. And hee will haue vs to holde our selues to that which hee hath spoken, as we shall see hereafter, where he forbiddeth vs straitly to swaue to the right hand or to the left, or to adde any thing at all to the doctrine thereof. And in deede, seeing that G O D himselfe hath not added aught vnto it: what are wee, that wee shoulde presume to take vpon vs about him? Think wee that when G O D gaue his Lawe, hee had lost his remembrance, and wist not what was for our profite? Can a man bethinke himselfe of any thing that is ynknown to God?

Againe moreouer, when as our Lorde hath applyed himselfe so familiarly vnto vs: thinke wee hee meant to teach vs by halues, and to leaue vs in the midst of our way? No. Then let vs remember that seeing God added not any thing after hee had once spoken those ten wordes: it becommeth vs to yeelde our selues wholly to the simple doctrine that is contained in his Lawe, without interlacing of any thing of our owne, assuring our selues that our perfect wisdome is to obey our God. Had this bin wel obserued: we should not be so greatly cumbered nowadayes in correcting y<sup>e</sup> corruptions y<sup>e</sup> reigne in the world. For wherof came the corruption of Gods religion & seruice, that is to be seene in the Popedome? The Papistes vaunt they serue God, when they vse their kyrieleysons, their holy, holy, holy, their ceremonies & other petie trash. And why? Because they tooke vpon them to adde to Gods word, so as they thought it not enough to serue God after his owne deuising: vnlesse men also did forge what they listed in their owne brayne. Therefore all y<sup>e</sup> euil is termed by the name of Gods seruice in poperie, is but toys of mens inuention. And not onely so: but also the saying of the prophet is fulfilled in them, namely that they haue despised Gods commandementes, and in the meane while giuen themselves to their own inuentions. The worlde sees what mischief hath insued through this diuclish malapertnesse, that men durst disguise Gods word wth their owne dreames and dotages. So much the more therefore doth it stand vs in hand to marke this text where it is sayd, that after GOD had once spoken, hee added not any thing to that which he had sayd. And in deede, (as I sayd afore) it is an horrible blasphemie, when men take vpon them to finde some better thing than is conteyned in Gods lawe. It is all one as if they would reprove him as a lyer, or say he was misadvised, or that he had forgotten what hee should haue commaunded. But can men finde any better way? No. Then let vs learne to submit our selues in such wise vnto God, as wee may alwayes beare in minde, that when God had once spoken, hee made a finall ende and conclusion, as if hee should haue sayd, Holde yee there, these are my boundes and listes: whosoeuer goes any further, hee shal breake his necke: so as there will be nothing but falling, if wee keepe not the right way which God hath made and hedged in after that fashion. And although God speake not presently after a visible maner as hee did then: yet ought we to be think vs oftentimes of this lesson which is conteined in his lawe. In deede God spake not twice: but hee spake once for all, as they say. Wee on our part ought to heare it often, according to this saying of the threefcore and second psalme, the Lord hath spoken once, and I haue heard him: but my hearing of it was not for once and away, I haue heard it twice. Hereby wee bee warned, that it is not enough for vs to bestowe one dayes hearing vpon the things which our Lord hath willed to be set forth in his name: but wee must minde them continually. Then let euery of vs occupy himselfe in them morning and euening all the time of his lyfe, and let vs not cease to recorde well the things which our Lord hath told and declared vnto vs. For though wee should apply our selues to them all the dayes of our lyfe: hardely shoulde we atteine to the one halfe of our iourney. It is true (as I sayd afore) that our Lord will instruct vs so far forth as shall be expedient for our saluation: but yet for all, wee shall alwayes finde our selues to haue neede to profl more and more in Gods worde. Therefore let vs bee diligent, and let vs not think our labor lost when we take y way, and apply our whole stody dayly thereunto, so as we neuer leaue searching and seeking out of the things which our Lord teacheth vs. Thus yee see how we must put this sentence in practise, where it is sayd, that our Lorde added not any thing more.

Psal. 1. 2.

Now let vs come to the third poynt, which is: that hee spake from the midst of fyre, cloudes, and whirlewinde. In deede this hath bin expounded already heretofore: Howbeit forasmuch as it is repeated by Moses: let vs marke that it is not superfluous. And in deede, it cannot bee tolde vs too often, that Gods worde ought to cary a maiestic towardes vs, to make all our wittes to stoope and to submit themselves to it. And why? First wee see there is such pride in men, as they cannot bowe their neckes. It is true that they will not say that they intend to resist God or to bid him battell: but whatsoeuer they say, are they plyable and meeke as they ought to bee? No: they come farre shorte of it. Again, there is a blockishnesse in vs, so as wee dote vpon these worldly things. Wee cannot rayle vp our wittes to apply them to the hearing of God. Wee cannot atteine to that spirituall wisdome, because our wittes are occupyed afore hand aboute the affaires and cares of the world, and we neede nothing to holde vs here beneath. Therefore it is greatly for our benefite, that our Lord shoulde touch vs to the quicke, to the intent we may yeelde such reuerence to his worde, as it may not dye, partly through our stubbornnes and partly through our blockishnesse: that is to say because we be partly so dull, grosse, and earthly, and partly so forepossessed with vanities, that we mount not vpwarde, but are helde downe heere in these corruptible things. And therefore not without cause did God speake from the midst of fire, cloudes, and whirlewinde, when hee went aboute to set forth his Lawe. For it was expedient that the people shoulde bee touche d with some feare, so as they might say, it is not for vs to daly with our God. Seeing he appeareth to vs with so greate and terrible maiestic: what should wee doe but tremble vnder him, and yeelde him such subiection as hee may rule vs as sheepe, and wee all of vs bowe downe our neckes and holde downe our heades, suffering him to wealde vs at his will, and giuing our selues in such wise vnto him, as wee may be abashed when hee speaketh, and haue none other desire, but onely to serue and honor him, and to submit our selues wholly to his guiding? Lo here the cause why God did so magnify his lawe at the setting forth thereof. He could wel haue spoken without the casting forth of flames of fyre, without making the hill to smoke, and without hauing any thicke or darke cloudes about him: but it was his will to adde all these miracles, to the intent that the people shoulde bee afrayde. And therefore let vs marke, that hee intended to bring the prophet Esayes saying to passe: namely, that his spirit shoulde not rest vpon vs, excepte wee tremble at the presence of his worde. For the thing wherein hee will try our obedientnesse towardes him, is if wee doe Ioue him so well, that as soone as hee speaketh, wee receiue his word without gaine saying, so as wee thinke it good and agree thereunto, saying amen, not onely with our mouthes but also with our hartes, and seruing him quietly all our lyfe long. For Gods requiring of the seruice whereby hee will be honored at our handes, is to shewe the obedience which wee owe vnto his worde. Howbeit, forasmuch as wee be so hard and heauy that we rather dragge backe, and cannot abide

to bowe downe our neckes to beare his yoke: we haue neede to be helped by all the meanes that are mentioned here. And therefore let vs marke that these flames of fire appeared not for that time onely, to serue no moe but them that sawe it: but also to the intent that the Lawe of GOD should beare record stīl at this day, of how great authoritie it ought to bee, and to the intent the remembrance thereof should be renewed vnto vs, that by calling to minde what happened at that time, we may bee humbled vnder the maiestie of our God, and that whensoever wee goe about to aduance our selues, or to be tempted with presumption and pride, the burning fire that made the people asgast at that time, & the thicknesse and darkenesse of the cloude, and the sight of the smoking mountaine, may come before our eyes and serue to holde vs in such awe, as all lositnesse may be beaten downe in vs, and we bee so wakened in good earnest, as we may come & yeeld our selues to our God to deale with vs as he list, and to leade vs whither he will, so as wee may follow him whithersoever wee be called by his mouth. Thus yee see whereto we must referre the things that are spoken here concerning the smoking of the mount, the flaming of the fire, and the thicknesse of the cloude.

Beides this, let vs marke further that Gods appearing in whirlewindes, and thicke cloudes after that sort, serueth to repressē mens foolishne curioſitie. True it is (as I haue saide already) that God speaketh to the intent to bee vnderſtoode, and therefore vseth no doubtful wordes, nor goeth about the bushe (as they say): but hath vttered his will so plainly, as wee cannot but be thoroughly instructed, vnlesse we ourselues bee to blame for that wee will not hearken to him. But yet for all this, we must not bee too curious and inquisitiue in seeking whatsoeuer seemeth good to our selues, as we see men commonly bee, who are inclined to such a desire of glorie, that their eares are cuer itching to heare and knowe this and that. But behold, here our Lord saith the contrarie: would ye taine knowe? Behold, here is a cloude to stoppe yee: seee what a darkenesse is here. So then let vs learne that if we wil be good scholers to Godward, wee must not giue our owne desires the head, to searche the things that ought to bee hidden from vs: but content our selues to knowe what GOD telleth vs, and tary vntill the day of full discouerie for y knowing of the rest which we cannot yet comprehend. To be short, let vs be ignorant in the things that God vouchsafeth not to shew vnto vs. For this ignorance of not coueting to knowe more than our Lord giueth vs leaue to knowe, excelleth all the wisdom of the world.

Nowe let vs come to that which Moses addeth. Hee saith, that the lawe was written in two tables of stone, and deliuered vnto him. Whereas hee speaketh of the two tables: wee must call to remembrance what hath bin treated of heretofore: namely that God could well haue written all his lawe in one stone: but it was his will to write it in two that the distinction might the better leade vs to the vnderstanding of the things contained in the law. For wee see that our Lord doth as it were chaw the things to vs which are set downe there, to the intent wee should not alledge y he speaketh to high for vs. Because there are two principall poyntes of our lyfe: our Lord hath deuided his lawe into two tables, of purpose to make vs to know how wee should behaue our selues towardes him, and also how wee ought to liue with our neighbors. Is a man desirous to rule his life aright in all perfection? First hee must giue himselfe to the seruing of God, so as hee be sure what things God requirereth and alloweth: and secondly he must liue so vprightly and euently with his neighbors, as he may shewe by his doings that hee is the very childe of God. The first poynt then is, to know how God wil be honored at our handes: and the second is to yeelde our neighbors their dewes, and to keepe this indifferēce of nature, of doing nothing to another, which wee would not haue done to our selues. So then, in the one table God hath shewed how he himselfe will be serued, accordingly as I haue tolde you already y he did set himselfe alone there, to the intent y men should not inuent newe Gods: declaring therewithall that he will not be resembled by any images or puppets: but that forasmuch as he is a spirit, he wil haue vs to serue him spiritually, and not to deuise one thing or other on our own heades, but to yeelde him spirituall seruice: & moreover that he will haue his name sanctified, by our exercising of our selues in his worde, & specially by forbearing [our owne wits,] & by renouncing our owne imaginations & affectiōs, so as we rest from our owne doings, to suffer our selues to be governed of God. These are the things contained in the first table. As touching the second, we haue seene how he commanded vs there, to honor our father & our mother, and how hee forbade vs murder, whoredome, theft, euil speech, & all maner of wicked lusting or coacting. That is the cause why God diuided his Lawe into two tables.

Now then, wil we lead our lyfe aright? Let vs alwayes haue regard, first to honor our God, & afterward to liue vprightly and indifferently w our neighbors. For there are some y forbear to doe harme to their neighbors, but in y meane while they make no reckoning of God: but they thinke they shall go quite & cleare, so no man cōplayne of the in the world. And I pray you what matter is it though we steale not frō men, if we rob God of his honor? Is it not a heynouſer crime to rob God of his honor, than to rob a man, or to cur his purse, or to riſe his coſer? Yes. Then let vs not thinke we haue all done, whē men cannot inddeth vs nor cōplayne of vs. For y case standeth vpon yelding vnto God y which he demandeth, y which also is dewe vnto him. For we be bound to honor him all our lyfe long. Therefore it standeth vs so much the more in hand, to apply our minds to y keeping of y first table of the lawe, so as we lead not a philosophical lyfe lyke y heathē, onely to behaue our selues honestly among men: but specially y we haue Gods honor in estimatiō & make that the first poynt which wee begin at.

Lykewise there are some others which wil neede cary a countenance of deuotion towards God, and of great zeale to serue and honor him: and yet when they come to bee conuerfart among men, they pill, they poull, they quarrell, and they be ful of crueltie, enuy, and malice. But let vs marke that God hath not separated the two tables of his lawe. In deepe he hath put a differēce betwixt them: but he hath not deliuered to some men the first table, and to other some the second to keepe. Hee hath sayd, this is my lawe: and looke what I haue ioyned together, must not be put asunder. True it is that ye must be put in remembrance of the Loue that yee owe to your neighbors, that ye may goe through with it: But yet notwithstanding, when ye haue discharged your felues of that poynt, yee must frame your felues to the other also. Lykewise when yee shall haue shewed great deuotion in the worshipping and seruing of me: ye must not bee carelesse to liue iustly and vprightly with your neighbors. Also there are many that bee desirous to serue God: but after what sorte? Euen as the papistes doe: after their owne fancie. But our Lordes wil was to bridle vs in his giuing forth of the first table, to the end we should learne to serue him as he commaundeth vs, and not lyke well of any thing but that which he alloweth for good. Thus ye see whereto this saying is referred, that God wrote the lawe in two tables.

And his wil was to write it in two tables of stone, purposely to the intent it should continue: For it was not giuen for any litle time, neither is it transitorie. True it is that the ceremonies had an end, and in that respect the lawe is called temporall: namely because the order that had bin established among the people of olde time, to continue till the comming of our Lorde Iesus Christ, was then abolished, and things were made perfect, so as wee be no more vnder the shadowes & figures which serued for that time.

Neuerthelesse the substance and trueth of the lawe serued not for that one age onely, but is a thing that shall indure for cuer, and neuer faile. Wherfore let vs learne, that Gods setting forth of his wil at the going of his people out of Egypt, and his speaking to them vpon mount Sinay was after such a sorte, as he prouided and tooke order therewithal, that his doctrine should stand in force for euermore. And for that cause did he set downe his lawe in two tables of stone, and not write it in barkes of trees as the manner of wryting was in those dayes, or (as we might say now adayes) in paper or parchmen: but his will was to ingraue it in stone as an euerlasting monument, to confirme vs the better in the things that he had sayd. For he was not satisfied with the speaking of it for that onely day: but by ingrauing it in stone, his intent was that wee all our life long, should giue attentie eare to heare what he tolde vs. Yet notwithstanding, surely Gods ingrauing of his lawe in stone after that sorte, would serue to small purpose, vnlesse it were also ingrauen in our hearts. What is to be done then? Let vs assure our felues that the doctrine which God setteth downe vnto vs, is be-hoofefull and necessarie for vs, and yet it should stand vs in no stead, vnlesse hee added a second grace, which is, the thing which he hath vttered be forthwith printed in our heartes and bowels. Then lyke as God wrote his lawe at that time in two tables of stone with his finger, that is to say with his power: so now he must be faine to write it with his holy spirit in our heartes, which are stony and hard as the prophet sheweth, where he prayeth God to giue vs heartes of fleshe, that may be soft, lythe, and plyable to receiue what-soeuer he shall say. Nowe then seeing that God hath shewed vs visibly, that it belongeth to him to write his Lawe, that it may be well knowne: let vs beseech him to vouchsafe to write it in vs now adayes by the power of his holy spirit, to the end wee may holde it fast, as the diuell may neuer wpe it out of our remembrances, doe what he can.

And herewithall Moses concludeth, that the Lawe was deliuered vnto him to bee the preferuer and keeper therof, and to bee the minister and dealer forth of it to the people, so as etteric man might acknowledge him for a Prophet. For otherwise he could not haue executed his office, nor haue builded Gods Church, except me had known that that charge had bin committed vnto him. Likewise now adayes, if we were not persuaded that it is Gods will, that his Gospell should be preached by the mouthes of men, and that there should be Shepheardes in his Church to beare abroad his worde: who would vouchsafe to come together? Neither I, nor any other creature is of abilitie to traine men to come to receiue the things that are to be vttered by my mouth. When I speake here in the name of God, and men giue eare to the doctrine, to submit themselves to it and to doe him homage: it is more than all the lawes and proclamations of kings and Emperors can doe. Is the mortal man the doer thereof? No. But when we once knowe it to be Gods will, that this order should be in his Church, and that it should be kept vniuersally: namely that there should be shepheardes to beare abroad his worde and to expounde the same, which should be as messengers to bring tidings of the forgueneffe of sinnes in the name of our Lord Iesus Christ, and to rebuke, reprove, comfort, and exhort: when we (I say) doe vnderstand it to be Gods will, that there should be such government in his Church: then are wee ashamed to withstand him, which created and fashioned vs. So then, ye see now why Moses sayd in this text, that God deliuered him his lawe for himselfe. Trueth it is that God gaue it for all the people in generall, as I sayd afore. Why then is Moses now the possessor of it? It should seeme that God meant to bereaue all his people thereof, and that none should be priuiledged but Moses, so as the lawe should be restrained vnto him, and the residue be as it were shut out from it. But it is not so. For although the Lawe was giuen for all the people: yet was Moses made the protector of it. And looke what God hath spoken of him: we must extend it yet further, accordingly as we heare that the prophets phets were put in the same commission, to be as it were disposers or dealers fourth of the treasure of saluation, and of Gods couenant, so as their office was to shewe Gods will from time to time, and to bring vs worde of it in his name. And the generall rule which Saint Paul giueth vs, is that men must esteem vs as Gods ministers & as dealers forth of the secretes which he sendeth to the world. Now whereas Saint Paul sayth wee be dealers forth of Gods secretes: he sheweth vs thereby, that it is not enough for vs to haue the holy scripture, and to reade it euery man at home in his house: but it is required that it should be preached vnto vs, that wee should haue this order of being taught by the mouthes of men, and that there should be shepherdes to serue Gods turne, to the ende y by giuing care vnto them, wee might profite more and more in the doctrine of saluation. And for the same cause doth Saint Paule say in another place, that the Church is the pillar of truth, and as it were the ground and standard of the truth. The Papistes alledge this text full dolitfully, to clayme priu ledge to themselves to deuse newe articles of fayth, and to Iode men with lawes at their owne pleasure. But Saint Paul meant the cleane contrarie: For hee saith that the Church is the pillar or ground of Gods truth, because that seeing God hath vttered his truth to men by his Lawe, and by the Prophetes and Apostles: his will is that the same ministerie should indure continually, namely that there should bee men ordeined and appointed to the office of expounding his worde, and of building vp his Church. Then let vs vnderstand, that after that maner the Church is the meane of vpholding Gods truth sounde and vnappayred. For when God sayeth vpe men indued with his spirite, to confirme vs in the faith, and to enlighten vs, and to shewe vs the right way: by that meane Gods truth continueth in the worlde, so as it is not quenched nor vtterly done away. Let vs mark then that Moseses meaning here, is not to take him selfe the onely possessor or owner of Gods lawe, and to shake off the people and to shutt them out of the gate: but to vtter his minde plainly to this effect: my friendes, in dede the Lawe is common to vs all, all of vs are Gods children, I chalenge no more to my selfe in that behalfe than to you: but yet will I discharge my selfe of the commission that God hath giuen mee, which is that I should serue you for a faithfull expounder of the Lawe, and bee as a keeper thereof, that yee might not thruit it vnder foote, nor forget it for euer, but alwayes hee put in minde of it by mee. Sith it is so: let all ministers of Gods worde looke that they bee readie prepared to serue the ignorant: and let all men consider howe it is not for vs onely to reade the holy scripture, but wee must also be diligent to profite therein, and humbly come to y hearing of those who he hath appointed to be his ministers, to giue vs the exposition & vnderstanding thereof. Thus ye see whereero this text is to be referred.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faules, praying him to make vs feele them better, and to drawe vs dayly to such repentance, as our whole desire may be to serue him and to please him, without seeking any whit of our own will. And that forasmuch as we be so greatly giuent to worldly things, it may please him to drawe vs from them, and therewithall to graunt that wee may submit our life to his will, and frame it to his righteousnesse, and that for the bringing thereof to passe, his worde may so ouerrule vs, as wee may be governed by it, and all our whole life be framed thereafter, vntill that being quite rid of all our fleshy affections, wee be clothed againe with his heauenly glory, at such time as wee shall haue no more neede, neither of writing nor of preaching. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth. &c.

23 And when yee heard the voice from the middest of darkenesse: because the Hill burned, yee came to mee, all the heades of your tribes, and your Elders.

24 Then saide you, Behold, the Lord our God hath shewed vs his glorie and his grearnesse, and wee haue hearde his voice from the middest of the fire: This day haue wee seene that GOD hath spoken with man, and man is still aliue.

25 Now then: why die wee? for if wee heare the voice of our Lord God againe, this great fire will deuour vs, and we shall die.

26 For what man is hee that may heare the voice of the liuing God speaking from the middest of the fire as we doe, and yet liue?

27 Goe thou and heare whatsoeuer the Lord our God shall say, and then tell thou vs what the Lord our G O D saith to thee: and wee will heare it and doe it.

EEbee of opinion, that where as God cauſeth his worde to be preached vnto vs by ſome meanes of men, if he ſpake to vs in his owne maiestie, or ſent ſome Angell to appeare vnto vs, wee would bee the better touched, and all the world would bee conuerted by and by, and every man obey without gaineſaying or rebelling: but wee knowe not what is for our owne benefite and behoofe. For if wee looke vpon our owne frailtie: it is not poſſible that God ſhould make vs feele his power, but it ſhould be to our vtter vndoing and deſtruction. Now therefore when men are deſirous that God ſhould come downe from heauen, or manifeſt himſelfe by ſome viſible token: they know not what they wee, nor how frailte their ſtate is. For did they well conſider it, they would bee agast at Gods infinite glorie, knowing well that they were not able to abide it. Beſides this, let vs aſſure our ſelues that God tendereth our welfare and ſaluation, in ſhewing vs his will by the mouth of men, when hee ordeyneth and appoynteth them to be miniſters of his worde, to bring vs ſuch meſſage as hee knoweth to bee for our benefite. Neuertheleſſe, it was his pleaſure to aouwe it by open prooffe to mens faces, that it is not good for them to heare his voyce thunder from heauen. And that is the cauſe why hee thought good to giue forth his lawe, not ſimply by Moſes, but by comming downe in his owne perſon, as I haue declared already, and as I tolde you yeſterday that the lightnings and whirlewindes, and the flaming of the fire, and all that is written in the nineteenth and twentieth chapters of Exodus, was done euery whit of it to the end that the people of Iſraell ſhould learne to yeelde reuerence to Gods word. And this leſſon belongeth to vs alſo. For Gods intēt was that the remembrance of thoſe things ſhould indure for euer, and that they ſhould be put in vre continually. So then, we ſee here that God hath vttered his glorious maiestie once for all, to teach vs to receiue his worde with all reuerence and lowlyneſſe.

But yet furthermore hee intended likewiſe ſome thing that the people ſhould bee driuen of themſelues to ſay. It is not good that God ſhould ſpeake to vs againe. Only let vs haue a man to bring vs the doctrine which is ſhall pleaſe him to ſend vs. And this rule ſerueth to condemne vs, if wee followe not this people which ſtepped forth to ſay ſo. And if any man alledge, that the things which were ſpoken at that time cannot binde vs: The anſwere is eaſie, namely that if God ſhould doe the lyke at this day, that is to wit, if hee ſhould ſpeake ſome things with his owne mouth, which we heare at the mouthes of men: it were impoſſible for vs to abide his glory, wee ſhould bee vtterly vndone. And therefore let vs learne that this is rehearſed vnto vs, to the ende that in the perſon of the people of Iſraell, we might vnderſtand that God applyeth himſelfe to our ſtenderneſſe and infirmitie, and that in voutſafing to ſend vs his worde, to be preached vnto vs by men lyke our ſelues, whome hee maketh his meſſengers: hee hath reſpect to our benefite and commoditie: and therefore it proceedeth of a fooliſh and inordinate luſt in vs, to deſire that hee ſhould appeare to vs from heauen, or that hee ſhould worke any viſible miracle: for wee cannot comprehend his glory and maiestie.

Furthermore although the proper nature of the lawe bee to fray folke: yet notwithstanding, the ſame may alſo be verified of the Goſpell. For wee muſt take it for a generall rule, that as ſoone as wee perceiue Gods preſence, we muſt needes bee aſhamed. Wee ſee how the very Angels doe hide their eyes, becauſe Gods glory is too great for them, and they be driuen to confeſſe that they bee too feeble, as creatures. And what will become of vs then? For wee be inferior to the Angels, and beſides that, wee holde not ſtill the vncorruptneſſe of our nature. Wee be not as wee were created: that is to ſay, we be not earthly men as our father Adam was, but wee be vtterly corrupted, ſo as there is nothing but ſinne in vs: and therefore God is faine to be as an enemie to vs, and wee bee faine to ſhunne his throne, as offenders ſhunne the ſeate of the Iudge to the vttermoſt of their power. To bee ſhort, we be but wretched wormes and caryons. Nowe then, looke how ſoone God commeth neere vs, wee muſt needes be diſmaied, yea and vtterly ſtryken downe. And therefore (as I haue touched already) it is to our benefite that God ſheweth himſelfe after that faſhion: that is to wit, by the meanes of men, ſo as hee appoynteth men to ſhewe vs his will as well as if hee ſpake himſelfe, and hee will haue vs to receiue his word with as great reuerence, as if we heard him thundering from heauen. But yet it will bee good for vs to vnderſtand more at large, the thing that I haue touched in one worde: namely that the Lawe frayeth vs far more in compariſon than the Goſpel, as is declared alſo more at length elſewhere. And why is that? Becauſe that in the Lawe God requireth that which is due to him at mens handes. But now let vs ſee if wee be able to diſcharge our ſelues of it. No: but contrariwiſe wee bee lyke wretched detters, which haue not one dodkin nor dodkins woorth.

Now then wee be vtterly vndone, For whatſoeuer come of it, God diſchargeth vs not, but ſheweth vs that wee deſerue to bee curſed and damned at his hand. And for the ſame cauſe, after he hath ſhewed how the lyfe of man ought to be ruled: he addeth this curſe thundering downe vpon them: That they be all accuſed which performe not all the things that are contained there. As if hee ſhould ſay: All men muſt bee faine to yeelde themſelues guiltie in this behalfe, and from the greateſt to the leaſt they muſt all knowe that they be in my danger, and that I may ſinke the downe to the bottom of hel.

I doe

Deut. 37. 16.

I doe already pronounce this sentence, & there is no man able to reply against it. Behold then ye are all lost and condemned: This is the language of the Lawe, and the speech that God vseth there: and now must not all men needs quake at it? Yes. So then it is not sayd for nought that the lawe frayeth vs, and that we must needs bee forlorne, so long as God listeth to demand his due at our hands with rigor. But the case

Eze. 11. 19.

standeth not so with the Gospell. For there God beareth with vs, and not onely forgueth vs our sinnes, but also wryteth his lawe in our heartes. And moreover although wee seue him but by halues: yet doth hee pardon vs our defaultes, and as it were winke at them. And lyke as a father will not presse his childe too straitly: so doth God vse a fatherly gentleness towardes vs in the Gospell, to the intent wee should not bee afraid to come vnto him. In respect whereof the Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, sayth that wee bee not come to this smoking mountaine, wee be not come to mount Sinay to bee astonishd at the sight of burning fyre, and at the sight of the lighnings and of all the other things that were done there to abash the people: but that wee heare a gracious and pleasaunt melody, wherein wee be accompanied with the Angels of heauen, with the soules of the holy patriarkes and other fathers that liued vnder the hope of lyfe, notwithstanding that they had as then but darke shadowes of it, and so GOD coupleth vs with those that waited in olde time for the coming of our Lord Iesus Christ. Seing it is so: we must not recoyle backe, but goe still on forward with a chearefull courage to heare our God, because he speaketh to vs so kindly, and with so fatherly speech, as doth not scarre away his children, but rather (as ye would say) allure them. This difference then is to be marked well, that it may make the Gospell amiable to vs in comparison of the Lawe.

But yet for all this we must come backe againe to the generall principle: which is, that it is much better for vs that Gods word should be preached vnto vs by the mouthes of men, than y God himself shold thunder it down from heauen. And why? For let vs but here the naturall thunder, and by and by we be astonishd, and yet is nothing expressed there. God doth but (as yee would say) braye with a confused noyse. What would come of it then if hee should speake to vs, & shew vs his glory? We feele such a weakenesse in all our senses that we cannot so much as looke vpon the sunne which is a corruptible creature: and how then can we beholde gods maiestie, if it shew it selfe to vs playnly and in full perfection? And therefore it is sayd that no man living can see God, and not dye and bee vtterly consumed. Truth it is that God shewed himselfe to Moses, and that, not as he did to the prophets, not in dreame nor in vision: but with a speciall priuledge, and (as it is sayd in Exodus) face to face as a man speaketh to his friend, and with so great familiaritie, that he was after a sort exempted from the companie of men, that hee might become the more familiar with God.

Exo. 33. 11.

But yet for all that, the truth is so that GOD shewed himself vnto him but in portion & measure. For had he shewed himselfe in his infinite being: what grace of the holy ghost fouer Moses had receiued, hee must needs haue bin vtterly ouerwhelmed. In deece once in his lyfe God shewed him his glory more fully than euer he did: but yet for all that, he sawe but as it were the backe parte of him. In the which similitude is expressed vnto vs, that when wee seee but the backe of a man, wee seee not the chiefe part of him, (for the chiefe sight of a man is in his face:) so although Moses had speciall familiaritie with God, in somuch that in y soueraigne sight which was shewed him in the mountaine, he was separated from the state of this mortall and transitory lyfe, and was as an Angell of paradise: yet notwithstanding he sawe God but in part, as if wee should see a man but on the back. Therefore let vs be contented when God vseth the lyke order with vs: (that is to wit, that his worde be preached vnto vs by men:) and let vs receiue it as if wee sawe his maiestic face to face. And why? For it is good for vs that shepherdes are ordained to bee ministers of his worde, because we should be vtterly confounded by the glory of God, if it were manifested to vs to the full.

And to the ende that no man should haue cause to complayne, as though Gods doctrine were not sufficiently ratified, but y it were to be doubted whether a man might holde him to it or no: therefore did hee shewe himselfe in the setting forth of his lawe. And wee haue record of it heere, in that the people say, It is the Lord. This day hath hee made vs to see his glorie, and his greatnesse: and wee haue seene that it is euen hee that hath spoken vnto vs: hee hath not put any other person in his place, but we haue heard his voyce with our owne eares. This was done but once for all. Howbeit let vs take the things that are reported here, to bee as a record that Moses spake not on his owne head, nor deuised the doctrine of his owne brayne, which wee receiue of him: but that hee was a faithfull steward to Godwarde, who aduoweth him self to bee, and not onely ratified his doctrine with miracles, but also declared in his owne person, howe it was hee himselfe that was the author of the doctrine that Moses taught. And forasmuch as it was good reason that the Gospell should bee authorized as well as the Lawe: wee haue had recorde likewise from heauen, that the same is not a doctrine of man, but that it proceedeth of God. And this is the thing which Saint Peter toucheth in his second Epistle, saying that hee & his fellows had heard the voyce from heauē, whereby the father proclaymed his sonne the chiefe maister and teacher of all his Church, saying, this is my welbeloued sonne, heare yee him.

1. Pet. 1. 17.

Seing then that this voyce hath thundered from heauen: God hath shewed that wee must not take the Gospell as a doctrine bred here belowe, but we must alwayes haue the sayd maiestie before our eyes. Lykewise nowe adayes if we will bee Gods true disciples, wee must at our resorting to sermons, remember what Moses rehearteth, namely that the lawe was giuen forth in such sort, as God was the speaker thereof. Again in the second place we must adde the testimonie that I am about to alledge, so as the foresayd saying of God may cuer ring in our eares, whereby he proclaymeth our Lord Iesus Christ to be the onely partie whom he will haue men to heare. Loc here the perfect scale whereby Gods word hath full and perfect authoritie among vs as it deserueth, notwithstanding that it be brought vnto vs by mortall men.

Furthermore to the intent that men may not thinke that Iesus Christ is not to bee heard, but onely in his owne person: hee sayth, hee that heareth you, heareth me, and hee that refuseth or despiseth you, despiseth mee, and him that sent me. In deede the Pope and his champions lyke a sort of traitors to God, vsurpe that saying to mainteine their owne tyrannic: but it belongeth as much to them as to the diuell of hell. And why? for first they should bring vs the pure doctrine of our Lord Iesus Christ. For the sonne of God hath not resigned his office to men to be spoyled thereof, hee will not haue vs gouerned after the lyking of men; but hee himselfe will alwayes haue the preheminance and foueraigntie ouer vs that was giuen vnto him. Now then, whereas hee sayth that in hearkening to those whome hee sendeth, wee hearken to him: his meaning is, that if wee obey the doctrine of his Gospell, without despising of it when it is preached to vs by men: it is all one as if hee himselfe spake to vs, and wee must not in this case rest vpon the outward appearance. And that is it that Saint Paul meaneth in saying, that although wee be brittle vessels, yea and as broken vessels of no valewe nor worthinesse: yet the inestimable treasure that is committed vnto vs, is not y worse or of lesse estimation & valewe therefore. True it is y we cannot purchase the word of God such reuerence as we faine would. And why? For we haue not any thing in vs (I meane of our own) whereby it may be sayd y God shoulde bee exalted: but yet must wee approue our obedience in this behalfe, namely that wee deliuer Gods his worde with such boldenesse, courage, and power as if hee himselfe spake in vs. And herewithall let all losenefse be corrected in this case, and let euery man receiue the doctrine of the Gospell in simplicitie, and without disputing or scanning why we be bound to submit our selues to mortall men. For inasmuch as it were a despising of Gods sonne, yea and of the heavenly father himselfe who ordained him to bee the chiefe teacher, if wee should not heare those whome hee sendeth as his messengers: it standeth vs in hand to yeelde in y behalfe. So then let vs learne to bowe downe our neckes and to beare the yoke of Gods sonne by receiuing y doctrine of y Gospell with all humilitie, though it bee preached vnto vs by men.

And as I sayd afore, let vs thinke well vpon the ratification that was giuen thereof, which ought to bee enough to make vs to vnderstand, that the lawe was brought from God himselfe, and that the Gospell also was warranted and ratified from heauen, when God pronounced with his owne mouth that he would haue vs to hearken to his sonne. That is the effect of the thinges which wee haue to remember vpon this text. And therefore let vs followe the example of those which are spoken of here, and let vs not couet that God should come downe from heauen to feede our humors: but let it suffice y he voutsaeth to communicate his word vnto vs.

But it should seeme at the first sight, that heere were some contrarietie. For first the people say, This day haue wee seene how God speaketh with men, and that they continue aliuie still: and afterwarde they say againe: wee dye if God speake to vs. For by all lykelyhoode, if wee haue once found by experience y God speaketh to vs without destroying of vs: it ought to imbolen vs. And why? For seeing wee remaine aliuie still after wee haue heard the voyce of God once: why should wee not doe so still after twice or thrice, as well as after once? And here the people say, Wee haue heard the voyce of God: but if hee speake to vs againe, wee dye for it. wee bee vndone, wee bee forlorne. It seemeth that they trust not to Gods goodnesse, but rather that they be vnthankfull, in that they acknowledge not the benefite which God did for them in letting the continuie in their strength. But wee must marke how the people shew here, that they will not try God any further, and that it is enough for them to haue had that one experience, that the lawe was not a thing inuented by man, but that God was the author thereof. Therefore it must be taken as if they had sayd thus: This day haue wee seene that God hath spokē to men, and they remaine still aliuie: that is enough for vs: we intend not to abuse Gods patience in this case: he hath spared vs to day, but wee must not looke y he should doe for euery: he hath giuen vs a try all for this once, & that was because of y lewdenesse & hardnesse of our heartes. For were we worthe to haue him appeare to vs in his glory? No: but he knew y we would neuer be fully tamed & subdued to his obediēce, except he had come in his visible glorie, & made vs so afraide as we had bin at our wits end. Therefore if he had not won vs so by force, he knew wel that we would haue bin aliuie as well he lasts. But seeing it hath pleased him to pardon the fault that we haue committed, & to beare with vs this time: we wil not fal to it againe: for y were ouermuch: it were a storming of his patience. So then, this one recorde sufficeth vs, both for our owne liues and for the liues of our children, & so forth for euery to the worlds end, y they which come after vs may knowe y it is not for vs to draw God out of heauen any more, as though he ought to be but our mate. Thus see we how these two sayings agree very well.

Now hereupon we haue to note, y although Gods word be of force to bring vs to naught: yet he vseth such mercy towards vs, that whereas it should consume vs, it giueth vs life. And whē I say y Gods word can bring vs to naught: I meane not y word alonely as Moses describeth it here: but also that if our Lord list to make vs feeble the power of his word, it would vtterly vndo vs, notwithstanding that it be vttered by men. Neuerthelesse wee see how our Lord quickeneth vs by his word, specially now adayes by the preaching of his Gospell. For that which is spoken in the fifth of Saint Iohn, is daily accomplished: namely that as many as heare the voyce of the Sonne of man, are restored to life. For naturally we be strangers to God, and banished from his kingdom, and so by that meanes wee bee as it were in our graues. But here our Lord Iesus Christ offereth vs the remission of our finnes, and God his father adopteth vs for his children: and so doeth he shewe vs the light of saluation, and we be quickened againe by meanes of the Gospell. And therefore wee haue good cause to glorifie our GOD in that he maketh his woorde to serue to deliuer vs from death, and to restore vs to life, notwithstanding that it bee of power to consume vs, at leastwise if he turned it not to the contrarie vse.

But by the way let vs marke well, that if our Lorde haue at one time giuen vs more than we deserue: wee must not therefore take leaue to tempt him, and to subdue him still to our lustes, as wee see the Papistes doe nowe adayes, who excuse themselves of their not comming to the Gospell, bicause they see no myracles wrought in our time. No surely. But whereto serue the myracles that our Lorde Iesus Christ wrought, and which he committed to his Apostles to doe likewise? Shoulde those serue to no purpose at this day? Ye see then y<sup>e</sup> God vttered an excellent power at the first comming vp of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell: heauen & earth were shaken at that time: there was no part of the world wherin God printed not some marke of his Maieestic, to the intent that y<sup>e</sup> Gospell should bee authorized. The Angels came downe at the birth of our Lorde Iesus Christ to beare witness of him: the Sunne was darkened at his death: the vaile of the temple was rent asunder to shew that the sanctuary was opened, and that there was more free access to God than euer there had bin: the sea was calmed: the diuels themselves did homage to y<sup>e</sup> glorie of God which was vttered at that time: and to be short, GOD shewed both from aboue and beneath, that the Gospell came from him, (as I haue tolde you already,) as well by the healing of diseases, as by all the other myracles y<sup>e</sup> were wrought. And this serued not for y<sup>e</sup> time onely, but the remembrance thereof continueth vnto this day, and it behoueth vs to receiue that record to seale vp our faith withall, to the end wee may not doubt, but that our Lord maketh his Gospell of as great force by them at this day, as he did at the same time that they were shewed. Yet notwithstanding wee see howe the fawchlesse doe still alledge, that if they sawe myracles, it would conuert them. But it is certaine that if they saw neuer so many myracles, yet would they continue in their stubbornnesse, & take occasion of greater rancor against God. What is to be donee then? Let vs learne to be contented, as I said afore. If God haue giuen vs more than he owed vs, let vs receiue it with thanksgiuing, & learne not to prouoke him to wrath, nor to tempt his patience. That is the thing which we haue to remember in this text, where the people saith, Let not y<sup>e</sup> Lord speake to vs any more, for it is flesh vs that wee haue heard his voyce once: & he is dead, and that yet notwithstanding, he hath let vs see the still.

And to the end that the diunges which I haue declared heretofore may bee the certainer: let vs beare in minde how it is said here, Was there euer man that heard the voyce of the liuing God, and continued still aliuie? Here it is shewed vs that the people of Israel spake not in their name onely: but as it were for all mankind in common. They say not onely, who are wee, but what is all flesh? And in deede, (as I saide at the first,) it must needes bee that men are bestorded, when they cannot humble themselves. For they neede no more but to looke to their owne state and to say, what are wee? There is nothing neither in our bodies nor in our soules, but all maner of frailtie, (I mean not, as we may be considered in our nature as we were first created;) But now being fallen as wee bee, what are wee but as water that glydeth away, & as a smoke that vanisheth away? Nay, which worse is, we be enemies to god, and he must needes be against vs, bicause he findeth nothing in vs but sin and frowardnesse. And therefore when wee bee tickled with our sonde lusts, so as we would faine that God should work myracles, and that we might heare Angels from heauen: let vs reparaire to that which is tolde vs here, and say, What is all flesh? Let vs (say I) enter into consideration to see what wee bee: and our owne vniabilitie will teach vs sufficiently, to praise God for not making vs to feele his presence to consume vs and confounde vs: but to make vs feele it in such wise as it may drawe vs to him with amiable gentleness, by hearing me like our selues, and our owne brethren speaking as it were in his person.

And whereas the people of Israel say, What people is it that euer heard the voyce of the liuing God, and continued still aliuie, as wee haue done: it is to shewe that this deede of his should not bee drawn into a common example, [so as others shoulde looke to haue him doe the like.] And therefore let vs not say, why doeth not GOD speake to vs now adayes after a visible maner, as he did vpon Mount Sinai? It pleased him so to doe: but it is not for vs to lode him with any law, or to binde him to doe still as he hath done once heretofore. Therefore (as I said erst) let vs not abuse Gods grace, neither let vs fall to disputing with him, to say, seeing that God did so at other times, why should hee not doe y<sup>e</sup> like now adayes? For when men auance themselues after that fashion, it is a duellish presumption. Wherefore let vs yeelde God to much honour, as to giue him leaue to manifest himselfe to vs as he himselfe listeth, and as he knoweth to be expedient, and let vs not binde him to any needefull, vnder colour that he hath vouchsafed to shewe some speciall fauour at some time before. Let not vs thus scape vpon him to doe the like againe, but let vs be contented with his single wil, for it becometh vs to be subiect thereto.

Rom. 3. 7;
Eph. 2. 3.

In the ende it is sayde, God thow to God, and heare what hee will say to thee, and bring vs woorde thereof, and wee will heare it and doe it. Heare we see first, that the people desireth Moses to bee their Spokesman, and to bring them woorde what he receyueath at Gods hand. Nowe this is written for vs, that all men shoulde submit themselves to the order that GOD hath set in his Church. For (as I haue sayde afore) his will is to speake to vs by the mouthe of men. That is the cause why hee woulde there shoulde bee Ministers. It was not deuised by men: but our Lorde Iesus Christ hath tolde vs that hee will haue that kinde of gouernment in his Church. Nowe then, that there shoulde bee shepherdes in the Church, to preach godly doctrine, which it behoueth vs to receiue for our owne saluation: it is an inuioiable ordinance, and such a one as proceedeth from GOD. Sith it is so: let no man strue against it, but let vs beare it patiently, and when GOD raiseth vp men to serue him, in bringing vs the message of saluation: let vs not grudge that euerie of vs hath not the same preheminance: for it is his will that his bodye (that is to saye his Church) shoulde bee gouerned after that fashion. Ye see then that the thing which wee haue to gather vpon this text, is, that seeing God hath ordayned Ministers of his woorde, we must hearken to them quietly, and not beare any spyte or malice in our heartes, though all of vs be not teachers, nor put in that office by GOD: for wee must yeelde our selues to his will as I haue told you before. Let that serue for one point.

But by the waye, let vs marke also with what condition wee must haue shepherdes. For this text teacheth vs to discern beetweene y deceyuers y abuse Gods name falsly, by taking vpon them y title of prelates without cause or reason: & the true Prophets, the good seruants of God, & the Ministers of the Gospell. The Pope & all his rable will surely say that men ought to hearken vnto them, and to receiue their doctrine without gainfaying. And why so? Bicause it is Gods will y there shoulde be prelaters in the Church, and that men shoulde heare them and obey them. All this is true. But yet for al that, hath he set vp the title of Prelacie without discretion? No, but he hath also declared therewithall, that he himselfe will continue chiefe still, so as we must obey him, and not be in bondage vnto men. Seeing it is so, we must consider what maner of Prelates & teachers God sendeth vs. And that is, (according to the contentes of this text) y they must hearken what God sayes vnto them, & afterward report the same faithfully to the people. Therefore they that are desirous to be heard in Gods name, and will haue their doctrine receiued reuerently: must first hearken vnto God, so as they take not vpon them to adde any thing to his woorde, but yeeld themselves teachable vnto him. And whē they haue learned at his hand: let them deale forth the things to others, which they haue receiued. For no man shall euer bee a good Minister of Gods word, ynlesse he bee a scholes first, so as he take not vpon him as a Maister ouer other men, to tell them what he listeth. And a mā must not be ouerwise in this case: for God referreth to himselfe the office of appointing what things he will haue vs to know. It is not said here simply, Hearken what the Lord will say to thee, and then come and bring vs word: but it is said, Hearken vnto all y the Lord shall say vnto thee, so as there beene not one point nor one article omitted. By meanes whereof Moses is restrained of all libertie here, and not permitted to report any thing, but that which God comandeth him, as we haue scene alreadie in other places. And what are nowe these rascals, that dare auance themselves aboute Moses? We shall see in the end of this booke, that there was neuer any Prophet raised vp with such grace. And in deed, although we see there was a wonderfull spirit in Esay, & in all the rest of the Prophets: yet is Moses preferred before them all. Whereas it is said, be mindfull of the Lawe that was given you in Horeb: Malachie which spake last of all the Prophetes, doth notwithstanding referre all to Moses, as if he had bin the first teacher, & as though the law were the fountaine from whence we ought to draw all things. Now seeing that Moses being so greatly preferred, & hauing so excellent preheminance given him of God, might not for all y, take vpon him to speake aught of his own head, but was bound to deale forth the things faithfully to the people, as he had heard them of Gods: is not too diuulish a pride now adayes, that lewd lozels should aduance themselves so farre as to say, y it is in their power to lay lawes vpon mens consciences, and to binde them vnder paine of deadly sinne? Is it not too barbarous a tyrannie? Therefore to the end we fall not into the two extreme vices: let vs hold the meane way that is shewed vs heere: which is, that sith it is Gods will to haue his Church gouerned by the outward preaching of his word: euerie of vs must submit himselfe thereto, and be diligent in hearing of Sermons, and hold this as a holy & reuerent order: to wit, y we should be taught by the mouth of men. And yet in the meane while, men must not haue authoritie to rob vs what they list, but they must be faithfull dealers forth of Gods word, so as we may euer be able to protest, that our faith is grounded vpon Gods will, and that we depend not vpon the wisdom of men, but that our Lord holdeth vs so in obedience towards him, as we may say y wee heare him from heauen, though he vse the meane and trauell of men in the doing thereof.

Now let vs kneele down in y presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs so to feele them, as we maye learne to mislike more and more of our selues for them. And for as much as the verie remedie to rid vs from al our diseases and corruptions, is to heare his holy woorde: it maye please him so to open our eares, as we maye receyue it with all reuerence and humilitie, and so print it in our heartes, as we may make it auayle to the vse for which hee ordeyned it, namely to quicken vs and to drawe vs to saluation, tion, that wee may desire it with all our heartes, and apply our inducours thereunto more and

On Thursday the xviiiij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xliiij. Sermon which is the fifteenth and last vpon the fifth Chapter.

28 At the same time the Lord heard the voyce of your words when you spake to mee: wherevpon the Lord said to mee, I haue heard the voyce of this peoples words which they haue spoken vnto thee: all that they haue said is good.

29 I would they had such heart to feare mee, and to keepe my commaundements alwayes, that it might goe well with them and with their children for euer.

30 Go say vnto them, Returne ye into your tentes.

31 But as for thee, tarie thou here with mee, and I will tell thee all the commaundements, Ordinaunces and Lawes which thou shalt teache them, that they may do them in the land which I giue them to possesse.

32 Therefore see that ye doe as the Lord your God hath commanded you. Ye shall not bow aside to the right hand nor to the left:

33 But walke in all the wayes which the Lorde your God hath commaunded you, that ye may liue, and that it may bee well with you, and that your dayes may bee lengthened in the land which you shall possesse.

According to that which was declared yesterday, God in this text sheweth that he graunteth the peoples request, and giueth them the choise of that which shoulde bee best for them. And herely wee see, that he meant to make the people to feele his goodnes, of purpose to win them the better. True it is that he might iustly subdue vs to him by authoritie, and he could doe it: but hee had much leuer to deale with vs by fatherly gentleness. That then is the cause why he shewed himself agreeable to the people. Therefore let vs marke well, that God hath such regard of our welddoing and welfare, as if the choise were in our owne hands, we could not wish better thā he doeth. It seemeth not so at all times: but yet is it so in deede. Furthermore he addeth y<sup>e</sup> he graunted not the peoples desire in any other respect, than for that he himselfe liked of it. For now and then God graunteth men their requestes, howbeit, it is for their importunate sake, and the thing turneth to their condemnation. As for example, when the people were desirous to eate flesh, it is true that they had their fill of it: but they paid right deare for their shot, for they spited God by their willfull desiring of the thing that was withheld from them. Neuertheless it is true that God did fully satisfie the murmurers, so as they had wherewith to fill their bellies: but it had bin much better for them to haue starued for hunger. But it is not so in this request whereof Moses speaketh here: for GOD sayeth expressly, That they meant rightly. As if he should saye, keepe that course still, and yee shall see howe I will pleasure you. Yee haue desired that yeemight haue a man to speake to you in my name, and I am contented with it. Nowe then it ought to perswade you the more, to receiue the doctrine that shall bee preached vnto you from mee, on my behalfe, for as much as I haue done it at your desire and choysle. But yet yee must not thinke that I meant to please you without reason or cause why. For I assure you, all things shall goe well with you, if yee keepe on this course of profiting in my woorde, so as whensoever Moses shall come vnto you of my sending, you giue reuerent care to the things that hee shall tell you for your welfare. And so let vs marke well, that when Gods woorde is preached vnto vs by men, they doe it not vpon their owne head, but because GOD hath giuen vs here the doctrine thar is for our benefite. And this ought to fertle vs the better, that wee bee not moued with any fond affection, to chaunge as our manner is, to delight alwayes too much in Nouelties. Let vs vnderstande that the thing whereunto wee must holde our selues, is that wee must giue care to the preaching of Gods woorde, all the time of our lyfe. And why? For it is not onely his will that wee should doe so: but also he sheweth vs that it is for our behoofe.

Besides this, GOD wakeneth the people here, to the ende they should thinke better vpon the keeping of the commaundements of his Lawe, than they had doone. For the people had saide, we wil doe it. And sayth God on his side, who will giue them the heart to doe it, and who will giue them such disposition of minde? And by these wordes he doth vs to wit, that it was an easie matter for them to promise, as men commonly make great protestations with full mouth, but when it cometh to the performance they shewe well that their promising was at alaculture. God therefore to make the people perceiue how hard a matter it is to keepe the lawe, sayeth here, I would fayne it were so. For the Hebrew word which he vseth where he sayth, who wil giue the heart, importeth as much as when we say, be it so: I would fayne it were so. True it is that here God speaketh after the maner of men: for he needeth no more but with things done, all things are in his hand. And therefore it might be replied, Lord it belongeth to thee, and askest thou who shall giue them the heart? To whom belongeth that to doe? Man of himselfe will neuer incline to good, but he must be driuen to it by some other meanes, and that can no creature doe, but it is thy spirit that must doe it. Now then seeke not thou who shall giue them the heart, but let the power of thy spirit vter it selfe, and then shall they doe it. Likewise Deut. 30. 6. we shall see howe God will say, I will giue you a heart to feare mee. If it were in vs, why shoulde he say so? But he saith that it belongeth to him to doe it, like as he addeth by the Prophet, I will giue them a heart to obey mee. As much shall we see hereafter, where he saith, I will cause them to keepe my commandments. God then chalengeth to himselfe the instructing of men, and the governing of them by his holy Ghost, to the intent they should be subiect vnto him, & submit themselues to his righteousnesse. And why then doth he pretend to wish it in this text? It is because he speaketh after the maner of men, as he doeth in many other places. And (as I said afore) it is to the ende that when there is any mention made of walking in obedience to Godward, we should vnderstand that it cannot be done without hardnesse, and that our wits should be wakened to apply our selues earnestly to that studie. Therefore whereas men promise vnauidedly, that they will worke wonders in obeying God and in keeping his Lawe: let vs vnderstand that we must examine our owne abilitie, and then we shall finde that there is nothing but all maner of weaknesse in vs. So farre off are we from being able to performe all that is commaunded vs: that wee knowe not at which ende to begin. Nay, we haue not the skill to conceiue one good thought, vntil God haue reformed vs, drawn vs to him, giuen vs the minde, and therunto added abilitie to put our desires in execution. Thus ye see what is ment by this saying, And who shall giue the heart? or I would it were so.

Phil. 2. 13.

Hereby wee be warned to take heede, that we presume not vpon our owne strength, to bee too bolde. For when we beare our selues in hand that wee can doe all things, it is the cause of our ruin. And God doeth iustly laugh such ouerweening to scorn. But let vs learne to feele that we can do nothing: and that although we be bound to fulfill all that euer God commaundeth vs: yet it followeth not therefore that wee be able to doe it, but rather that we be vterly vnable. Neither is it so small and common a matter to loue God with all our heart, with all our minde, and with all our power, as if wee needed no more but to say, yea, I will goe about it out of hand: but it is a thing that passeth all that is in man. When we once know that the law containeth too high a righteousnesse for vs to attaine vnto, and that wee on our part are so weak as is pitie to see: then will we learne to sigh before God, and consider well that wee be bound to doe whatsoever he appointeth, but yet wee will craue power at his hande, that it may please him to helpe vs with his holy spirit, and not onely supplie our frailtie, but also be the beginner and performer of all things in vs, so as he make vs willing, and confirme vs in that willingnesse, and with that constancie match also power to accomplish our desires.

And by the way God sheweth here, that his sending of his worde vnto vs, is to the intent to be ioyned vnto vs, and that wee also should be vnited vnto him: so as he requireth nothing but obedience, that we might be his children, and he shewe himselfe to be our father. And so Gods intent in causing his word to be preached vnto vs, is to gather vs as it were vnder his wings, that wee may be defended and saued, yea verily so wee come vnto him quietly, and suffer our selues to be ruled by his word, and be subiect therunto. But it is true (as I said afore) that it is not in our owne power to doe this, but God must giue vs that grace, and he giueth it not to all me. Neuertheless it is not for vs to be inquisitiue of Gods secreete purpose in that behalfe, why he reformeth the one sort by his holy spirit, and leaue the other sort goe on still in their corruption, without bringing of them backe. Wee must not enter into that maze: but it must suffice vs that God listeth to make men vnexcusable, in saying, I would fayne it were so. As if he should say, that after we haue once bene taught by his word, wee haue no more excuse: God is not to blame if wee be not saued. Why so? For we shall perceiue that to walke as he hath commaunded vs, is the way to attaine to all goodnesse. And therefore let vs lay the blame of all our miseries [vpon our selues:] and if God afflict vs and punish vs with aduersitie, let vs vnderstand that we haue no cause to grudge or complaine of him, for wee be faultie, because wee haue not followed his lawe. That is the thing in effect, which we haue to marke vpon this text. Yet notwithstanding, it is true that wee must haue recourse to his aide, knowing that wee of our selues are too weak to performe his lawe, in so much that we be neuer able to come at it, no nor any thing neere it. But yet if we liue not as becometh vs, we must alwayes yeelde our selues guiltie, knowing that the fault remaineth in our selues, so as if God doe beate vs with his rod, we can not say it is vnderfered on our part. For why? Seeing we haue Gods word, wee haue matter of record that he is desirous to bee at one with vs, and to doe the dutie of a father, and to maintaine vs in all prosperitie, if wee burie not his grace, ne withhold the thing that is due on our part. Yee see then that men are iustly conuicted and condemned for refusing Gods grace, and for shutting ting the doore against him, in that they profited not in his worde when they were taught it. And so it is a very profitable warning for vs, when we see in this texte howe God wisheth that we shoulde doe the things that hee commaundeth vs, to the intent it might go well with vs. Whereby wee see that if wee receive the doctrine with humilitie, and desire to obey it, the ende thereof cannot bee but happie, so as wee shall bee sure of our saluation. Howbeit wee must alwayes come backe to this point, that wee pray to God to giue vs heartes: (for it belongeth to him to doe that): and yet if wee doe amisse, wee must learn to condemne our selues, that he may acquire vs.

On the other side let vs reioyce inasmuch as we see howe hee procureth our saluation, and intendeth the furtherance thereof, as oft as his worde is preached vnto vs. And let vs remember howe it is saide in Salomons proverbs, That it is the delight and pleasure of Gods wisdom to dwell among men. See heere howe God auoweth, that his sending of his worde vnto vs, is to teach vs the full perfection of wisdom, as if hee shoulde sende his owne wisdom from heauen. Yea, and to what ende? Wisdom is brought in their saying thus. All my delight is to dwell among men. And that is as much as if God shoulde open his heart and say, Beholde, my teaching of men by my worde, is of purpose to binde my selfe to them with a holy band. And if they on their side bee not stubborn, they shall perceiue that I wil alwayes be among them with out departing from them at any time. This ought to inflame vs greatly with a reuerence to Gods worde, so as we may seeke to profite in it, and neuer suffer our selues to bee turned from it, forasmuch as it bringeth inestimable benefite vnto vs, namely that our Lorde vniteth himselfe vnto vs thereby.

Nowe it followeth in Moseses texte, that God commaundeth the people to goe euerie man to his tent, and Moses to arise there still: and then he addeth, I will shewe vnto thee all the commandements, statutes, and ordinances which thou must teach to all the people. Heere God sheweth againe, that hee ceaseth not to continue his teaching of the people, though he vse the fore declared meanes, that is to wit, though hee make Moses as it were the vterer of his will, and the bearer of his message. This is to bee marked well: for it serueth to make vs knowe, that God intendeth to holde vs alwayes to himselfe, and will not haue our faith grounded vpon men, nor to depend vpon them: And that is a very requisite thing. Truly as for them that followe their owne good intentes, or say they holde the things that haue bene determined by the Church, or by the ancient fathers: they may many times be grossely deceiued. And if a man tell them they doe but as it were hang in the aire, and haue no certaintie in being so wedded vnto men: they bee willfull in their owne opinions, as we see the Papistes are, whome the duell hath so bewitched, that they content themselves with the resolutions made by men, and boldly despise the worde of God.

Inasmuch that if a man bring record from thence, to reprove their superstitions: they bee at a full point, for they bee so doted that they regarde not to haue God against them. Men then may well for a time haue this ouerlustinesse of running boldly whither soeuer their foolish imagination carrieth them, & they may harme themselves against God: but when it cometh to the vertie path, they be so dismayed as they wote not where to become. And therefore let vs note that wee shall neuer haue any sure and longlasting stay, ynlittle our faith be grounded vpon Gods worde, and that wee bee able to say, that looke whatsoeuer wee haue wee holde it of him, and that it is the vertie truth, so as wee wander not in our owne imagination, nor take the doctrine of men for our stay. And whereas we heare God say in this text, I will tell thee the things which thou must teach: Let vs marke that wee likewise must rest wholly vpon him and vpon his infalible truth, y our faith may not be wauering and doubtfull. And the thing which wee haue to seeke when we come to sermons, is to haue this point well warranted and sealed in our consciences, namely that we haue Gods word wherein lyeth our life.

And herewithall let vs marke also, that God ment to holde the preachers of his word in such awe, as they shoulde not presume to put forth any thing of their owne, but be contented to bee faithfull setters forth of the things that he commaundeth, so as they may alwayes protest, that they haue serued god in executing his commaundement, and in deliuering it forth from hand to hand. This is a thing which wee haue to marke, we (I say) whom God hath appointed his ministers to preach his worde, and to whom hee hath committed the office of teaching: namely that we adde not aught of our owne deusing, but deluer the thing simply which we knowe to bee proceeded from God.

And to the end that folke should knowe y God ment not to teach them by halues: hee reherseheth the thing again which we haue seene heretofore namely his statutes, ordinances, commandements and Ceremonies. As if he should say there wanteth nor any thing in his doctrine, neither ought the people to couet any thing more. This hath bene declared more at large alreadie. Notwithstanding, whensoeuer God vseth such diuerstie of wordes to vs, whereas he might say in one word the Lawe: let vs marke, that it serueth to restraine men the better from fond curiositie of adding any thing to his law, as the thing which wee see we bee too much guen vnto by nature, forasmuch as our flesh prouoketh vs continually to inuent, I know not what new thing. And y. the cause why in popery euery mā hath aduertured to cast to his colup, & to make so many lawes one vpon another. For why? They thought it not ynough to liue plainly according to gods word, but y it would be good to ad still some minglemangle. But contrariwise God telleth vs that if we haue his law, we haue statutes, commandements, ordinances and rites y now: as if he should say y morel me ought not to stand so much in their own conceits, as co goc about to be wiser than hee. For when they haue made neuer so large discourses, yet can they not amende any part [of his doings] nor ad any thing to them, but whatsoever they put too further of their owne, it shall bee not onely superfluous and vprofitable, but also a marring to all the rest: as if a man should mingle vineger with good wine.

And now God hauing spoken after that manner, addeth that they should take good heede that they kepe the things which he commaunded them, without bowing to the right hand or to the left. Here our Lorde sheweth vs againe, that the honoring of his Lawe which he requirerth at our hands, must not be an onely allowing of it with our mouthes, after which manner we woulde faine discharge our selues thereof: but hee telleth vs that his giuing of it forth, is to holde vs in his subiection & seruice, and that to the same ende he will haue it preached still at this day. For thereby he intendeth to trie whether he can weeld vs as quiet people that submit themselves to him. Therefore let vs marke, that our resorting vnto sermons must not be to commend the doctrine for good and holie: for God shalbe much beholden to vs for saying that his word is worthe to be receiued: hee will not haue vs to be his iudges. It is true that we owe him that acknowledgement, so as when wee haue hearde his worde, euery of vs ought to confesse it to bee the pure trueth, and that there is none other rightnesse, righte-ousnes, nor wisdom than is contained there. But yet must we passe fur ther therewithall, and yeeld our selues to the seruing of our God. That is one point which wee haue to gather vpon this text. Another point is that we must beware that we keepe it. Wherein God sheweth, that wee must applye all our strength earnestly in that behalfe. For men shall neuer followe God by sleeping. Although they inforce themselves neuer so much, yet the infirmities of their nature is such, as they can hardly keepe their feete. Therefore let vs nor think that we can discharge our selues to Godward without taking of paine. For the thing is too hard considering what we be, namely slowe and sluggish to good things, yea euen though God haue already made vs willing, and do gouerne vs by his holy spirit. And if he let vs alone as we be of our selues, we shall not only be slowe, but also drawe cleane backe from his wil. If he call vs to him, we shall go from him: yea & wee shalbe so little able to couet any good at all: that wee shalbe enforced to doe euill. But let vs marke what I haue touched afore, namely that although our Lord haue giuen vs some good disposition of minde, and set vs in some good forwardnesse: yet are we slothfull still, and when we should steppe one pace forth, whereas the faune should be done in lesse than a minute of an houre, we must haue a whole houre to do it in. Nay we fall to kicking, or else by that time that we haue gone one pace, oftentimes we stumble, or retyre backe, or else take such foule falles as is piteous to see. Therefore it is not for nought that God saith here Take heede that yee doe them. As if hee should say, in decde my lawe is giuen you to the intent you should put it in execution and obey it: but yet thinke not you that it is so easie a matter to be done. What is to be done then? Prepare your selues to walke after my commaundements, thinke vpon them, put to your indouour, be diligent therein, take a tast & laucour of them, keepe good watch for feare of being turned away, and take very good heede to your selues. Thus we see in effect, that our Lorde exhorterth vs here to labor earnestly, when the case standeth vpon walking in obedience towards him. And why? For the things that he requereth of vs are not so easie to be don. And besides that, we be so ill disposed therevnto, as is pitie to see: in so much that if we be not spurred and driuen by force, we cannot goc forward. Therefore it standeth vs in hand to awake, and to take heede, and to stande continually vpon our garde, that we may performe y things that our Lord hath commaunded vs. Nowe afterward he addeth, that this must be done without bowing to the right hand or to the left, so as men walke throughout in the way that he hath shewed them. In decde this text shalbe expounded more at length in the twelfth chapter: but yet must we not passe it ouer without knowing what God ment by it. In forbidding vs to bow to the right hand or to the left, he sheweth vs that hee will haue vs to harken to him in all things without exception. And this importeth two things: namely that wee must neither put any thing to his lawe, nor take any thing from it. As concerning putting to it, it is as if we would go to the right hand: for they y ad to Gods law, do it vpon an imaginatio y the keeping of the things contained there, is not all that they haue to do, & therefore y it is good to put somewhat more to it. Loe howe men would giue place to their owne fancies, so as if any thing come in their heades, they thinke that God forgate that, and that it were good to be done. And that was the very cause of the great number of ordinances, lawes, and ceremonies that are set vp in poperie. The Iewes had the like vice among them, according as they be blamed for despising of Gods commandementes & statutes, for their owne traditions sakes. Nowe then, let vs keepe vs from walking on the right hand, so as we should turne from the way which God hath shewed vs. And why? For the right hand is when we will needs bee too wife and too righteous, bearing our selues in hande that it is good for vs to do more than we be commaunded. But in so doing we be the diuels seruants, for God venterly refuseth all that euer we addeto his worde: he will haue no such mingling.

And we decline or bowe to the left hand, when wee diminish Gods worde, that is to say, when wee be contented to serue him by halues, and therewithall would haue him to giue vs leaue to follow our owne lusts. Some man peraduenture is not subiect to some vices: and well coulde hee find in his heart to discharge his duetic to Godward in seruing him so farre forth: but forasmuch as he cannot ouermaister himself in some other vices, hee woulde haue God to holde himselfe contented, & to enter into a bargaine with him, as if he should say, yery well, if I faile in this behalfe, I will recompence it in another. But let vs keepe our selues from walking on the left hande, that is to say, from taking any thing away from Gods worde. For as he hath forbidden to murder: so hath hee also forbidden to steale and to commit adulterie: and therefore we must submit our selues to his commaundements in all points and all respects without making of any reply thereto. For as wee must not in any wise adde aught to his Law: so is it not lawfull to take any thing from it, but we must walke in all the wayes that he sheweth vs.

And whereas hee termeth it a way, it is to the ende to exhort vs to keepe vs in it, according as we shal see in the ende of this booke, where Moses will say, This is the way, walke therein. As if he should say, whoeuer turneth away from the doctrine that I set before you, goeth astray, hee doth but runne gadding ouer the fields, and yet for all that hee cometh neuer the neerer his wayes ende, but rather is still further and further from it. Therefore in this place, walke in the way is as much to say, as wander not ye wretches wilfully, goe not astray. Sith your God is your guide, you cannot goe amisse in following him. But if you followe your owne heade: in the ende God must bee faine to shewe you, that yee shalbe no better than stray beastes, and that yee haue not helde the right way. Know ye therefore that Gods doctrine is your way. If this saying were well printed in our mindes, we shoulde be helde so in awe, as our itching appetites shoulde not be able to make vs runne astray as wee doe, but our life shoulde be restrained by it. For God sheweth vs dayly which is the way, & yet notwithstanding men dispute & make much questioning with What is to be done? & what is to be done? Verily as who should say it were not told vs, that God neuer openeth his mouth, but it is to shewe vs the right way. And seeing he sheweth it vs, do not we offer him wrong and iniurie if we followe it not? Do we not blame him as though hee had lost his time & trauel about vs? Now we see what this worde way importeth: that is to wit, that out of Gods doctrine there is nothing but error and deceit, and that men beguile themselves when they thinke they do well, further forth than when they suffer themselves to be ruled by gods word, which sheweth vs the good and right way.

And he saith purposely, At the wayes. For he intendeth not to make such a parting of stakes in this behalfe, as men woulde that he should, so as they would faine referre somewhat alwayes to themselves. Here God saith contrariwise, either you must obey me throughout in all pointes, or else I renounce you. So then, are wee desirous to make our life allowable to God? Wee must not be obedient vnto him in part, but we must loke that all our whole life be framed according to his commaundements, so as we may say wee haue kept all wayes. But here it might be demaied, whether it be possible: for vs to walk throughout in the way of the Lord. For on the contrarie part, seeing that men do not the good which they faine would: it is much for vs if we shal haue endeoured to come to y good way, & to go towards the ende, though we be not come at it. S. Paul himself complaineth that he was not able to do as he would in the discharge of his duty towards god. Here is no speaking of such perfection as is required by y Law: but we must only vnderstand that God will haue men to yeeld & giue out themselves vnto him, & inforce themselves to run thirward though they attain not to the mark. Although then that we do as it were drag our legs after vs in our going all our life long, and neuer come fully vnto God: yet must we keepe on to himward, and that not in part, but in all the things that are contented in the lawe. Truth it is that we cannot so discharge our selues, as there may bee a full answerableness betwix Gods word and our lues: but if wee bee desirous to submit our selues vnto God, and to frame our selues thereafter, not in some one point but in all without exception, in deuouring the same to the vttermost of our power: it is as a keeping of all the wayes of God. For he beareth with vs, and taketh such willingnes in good ward, when he seeth vs go to it roundly, & that we be not dubble minded, nor desirous to reserve any peece of our owne willes or to take leaue to do them, but laboure [and strue to the contrarie] as much as in vs lyeth, according to the grace that is giuen vs.

Nowe herevnto he addeth also, That they may prosper, and that it may goe well with them and with their children. Whereof hee sheweth, (as I haue touched alreadie) that all the miseries and griefes which we indure in this world, are chastisements for our finnes. And we cannot write our unhappinesse vpon any thing else than our owne faults. True it is that euery man couets to liue at ease and in prosperitie: we neede no teaching to desire that: for our owne nature leadeth vs therunto. But in the meane while it shold seeme that we haue conspired our owne mischiefe. For y meane of prosperitie is to obey our God. And then will he blesse vs in such sort, as we shal feele the fruits of his grace and fauour in all respects. But what? We be loth to yeeld him his due obedience: and therefore must we also bee bereft of his blessing, and reiected as vnworthy to be of the number of his creatures. And so let vs marke, that here our Lorde intent to rebuke men, and to shewe them that they themselves are to be blamed for all the aduersities and miseries which they indure in this worlde, and that they must wyte the same vpon their finnes. But yet moreouer hee ment therewith to drawe his owne to him, by setting the reward before them. As if he should say, Go to, I defectue well to be serued at your hand without looking for any thing at my hande for it: for seeing you bee my creatures, is it not reason that you should be subiect to me? Ought not all your life to bee giuen vnto me? Yes: but yet intende not I that you shall serue mee for nought, I will forbear mine owne right, which is that you shoulde bee bounde to doe whatsoeuer I commaunde you, without looking for any thing: and I tell you that I am readie to blesse you, and to make you to prosper if you serue me. Our Lorde then in saying so, sheweth that his meaning is to winne his seruants to him by gentleness, & as it were to breake their hearts, that they may be the willinger to serue him, seeing hee goeth not to worke with such rigour as he might, but forbearth his right, and rather playeth the father, telling vs that if wee behaue our selues like children towards him, he wilbe gracious and liberrall towards vs, and although hee owe vs not any thing, yet will hee not faile to rewarde vs for the seruice that we yeelde vnto him.

Hereby wee bee warned that Gods intent is to drawe vs vnto him, but yet must wee not inferre therevpon, that men can deserue any thing in seruing of God, as the Papistes doe, who when they heare such texts doe by and by fall to their merits, and beare themselves on hand that God is beholden to them therefore. But contrariwise Gods meaning is to shewe vs that he is readie to apply himselfe to vs after the manner of men, so as he seeketh nothing else but to induce vs to obey him. And that is not for any benefite to himselfe for what profite can hee receiue by vs, though wee should performe his whole Lawe? Should that aduantage him any thing at all? No, Yee see then where at God ameth, and what we haue to marke vpon this sentence. Wherefore let vs learn, that if we haue obeyed our God, and he make vs to prosper it is not for that hee oweth vs any thing, or for that wee haue deserued aught, and can boast that he recompenseth our deserts: but because it pleaseth him to vter his free goodnesse so farre forth vnto vs, as to terme that thing a wages, [hyrc, or recompence], which hee giueth vs of his owne only free liberalitie, without being bounde any thing at all therunto. Again, when he chastiseth vs, and wee bee distressed with many miseries: let vs assure our selues that we reape the fruits of our own feede: and because we haue liued amisse, our Lord also must be faue to giue vs some signe of his wrath, to the ende that hee may be knowne to be the iudge of the worlde. But yet hath hee also a regarde of our welfare, namely to mislike of our faults and to bee sorie for them, and to resort to him by true repentance. Thus yee see that God in shewing of himselfe angrie with vs ceaseth not to vter his loue towards vs. For he indureth to bring vs home to himselfe thereby. He seeth that we be false asleepe in our finnes, and hee wakeneth vs, as one knowing it to be expedient for vs so to be. That is the thing which wee haue to marke vpon this place.

Nowe in the end Moses speaketh of the land, and saith: That thou maist prosper in the lande which I will giue thee: and afterwarde hee serreth downe this saying againe, That is may goe well with you in the land which yee must possess. Nowe it seemeth heere at the first sight, that God promiseth none other rewarde than in this earthly and transitorie life. And if it had bene so, then had the hope of the children of Israel bene quite dashed, But wee must note that our Lorde vsed another manner of dealing towards that people, than hee doth towards vs, though they tend both to one end. For the sacrifices that were ordained by the lawe, serued not to drawe the people away from the saluation which we haue in Iesus Christ: but rather to leade them to it: so as Gods mind was to doe men to vnderstande; that they were condemned, and that there was none other meane of reconciliation, but by the bloude of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But yet in the meane while men ceased not to kill brute beasts, and God said vnto them, your finnes shall bee forgiven you when you shall haue offered me a Calfe, a Lambe, or a Sheepe. It should seeme by this, that God ment to set the remission of finnes in the sacrificing of brute beastes. But hee did not so. That was done to leade the people after that grosse manner to the redempcion that was at the length purchas'd for vs by our Lord Iesus Christs owne person. In like case is it with the land of Chanaan. For first of all Gods will was to set forth the euerlasting heritage of saluation to the children of Abraham, in saying to Abraham, I am thy large reward. He promiseth not Abraham the lande as though he would haue him to stay himselfe there, but willed him to put his whole trust in him, and to raise vp himselfe about the worlde, & to looke for the heauenly life both for himselfe and for his offspring. Howbeit forasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ was not yet come, not the veile of the temple was not as yet broken, I say it was meete that the Land of Chanaan should be as a pledge of it, because it was fully beighted him for an inheritance. Then let vs marke well, that whereas God saith, that thou maist prosper in the land: his intent is not that his people should set their mindes vpon this present life, but to guide them higher by that meane, namely to the hope of the immortalie which hee had promised them. Neuertheless our Lorde promiseth his blessing in such sort to his people, as they shall seele it euen in this worlde and haue some tast of it here, in waiting for the discouerie of the full inioyment thereof, at such time as they shall be taken out of the worlde. And euen at this day also wee must bethinke vs of this text of Saint Paul, that if we feare God, we shall haue the promises both of the life present and of the life to come. For God will make vs to feele his goodnesse in this worlde, to the ende to drawe vs vp higher, and to teach vs so to receiue his benefites heere, as wee may looke to haue our fill of them when we be come to his kingdom, where we shall haue the whole fulnesse of them.

Nowe let vs fall downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feele them better than we haue done, euen till they haue drawen vs to true repentance, and that wee acknowledging our wretchednesse more and more, may learne to striue against all the affections of our flesh, and against all our wicked and frowarde lustes, and moreouer to withstande the cursed presumptuousnes that is in vs which also would haue vs to doe that which we our selues best like of, so as nothing may stay vs from following the pure and simple worde of our God, assuring our selues y it is the true & perfitte rule wherunto we must submit our selues, and that we must not attempte to ad any thing to it, but sinple rest vpon that which is conteneid there, and goe forward more and more therein, vntill that hauing finished this earthly race, wee be come to the heauenly rest wherunto hee calleth vs. And let vs pray him to reach vs his hande in the meane while, whensoever we seeke him and call vpon him in our neede. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

The xlv. Sermon, which is the first vpon the sixth Chapter.

THese are the Commaundements, Ordinances and Lawes which the Lorde your God commaunded me to teach you: to the end that you should doe them in the Land whereinto you shall enter to possesse it.

2 That thou maist feare the Lord thy God, in keeping al his ordinances & commaundements which I commaund thee, all the dayes of thy life, both thou and thy children and thy childrens children, that thy dayes may be prolonged.

3 Hearken therefore O Israel and take heede that thou doe them, that it may goe well with thee, and that thou maist be mightilie multiplied in the land that floweth with milke and honnie, as the Lorde God of thy fathers hath sayde vnto thee.

4 Heare O Israel, the Lord our God is the onelic Lord.

E haue sene oft heretofore howe Moses spake to the people concerning y<sup>e</sup> contents of the lawe: yea and euen yester day we saw y<sup>e</sup> hee made mention ther of: and here we see the like againe. And yet for all that, it is not a needeleffe repetition, considering howe soone men forget the thinges they haue learned of God, if they be nor put in mind of them: and wee knowe that we neede not any thing to turne vs away from them. For we be so giuen to vanitie, that nothing is harder to vs, than to holde our selues in obedience vnto God. As soone as any toy takes vs in the heade, it carrieth vs away, and wee minde no more what God had saide vnto vs, Againe forasmuch as he is very desirous to winne vs to him: he must bee faine to plucke vp y<sup>e</sup> false opinions by the roote, wherewith we be ouergrown aforehande. For when a grounde is busshie, it will aske much labour before it can be put to any vse: and euen so is it with vs. And that is the cause why Moses saith againe, that these are the commaundements, statutes and ordinances which the Lorde committed to him, to giue them forth to the people, that they might be kept. Nowe by these wordes hee giueth an inling, that Gods intent is to holde the people vnder his obedience. What meane yee wretched folke to goe a stray after that fashion? I giue you my Lawe: and hauing that doctrine ye cannot goe amisse: it is the way of saluation, and therefore holde you to it. But yet for all this, men are fickle and flecting to and fro: and God reigneth them with a strong bitte: like as when a horse is harde to bee ruled, hee is faine to bee raigned backe more than once, and if hee fling out and will not suffer himselfe to be handled, the ryder is faine to reine him streyt againe & againe. After the same manner doeth God deale with his people. And thereby hee sheweth that mans minde is full of stubbornnesse, or elle of lightnesse, so as hee cannot rest vpon Gods worde, wherein notwithstanding lyeth our whole saluation and welfare. Sith it is so: let vs marke that in the person of the people of Israel, wee bee warned heere, that when God setteth his worde before vs, wee must not onely minde it for one day, but wee must exercise vs in it all the dayes of our life, and wee must alwayes haue this saying before our eyes, these are the Statutes, these are the Ordinances, these are the Commaundementes, so as it is not for vs to frame rules and Lawes wherewith to gouerne our life, forasmuch as that authoritie belongeth only to God.

Besides this wee bee also put in minde, that God hath shewed vs the right way. Therefore let vs followe it, and not stand questioning what wee haue ro doe. For there is no more cause of doubt when our Lorde hath once spoken. Wee must not any more alledge, I cannot tell whether it bee good, I wote not whether I neede to do more or no: but let vs be contented with that which God hath shewed vs. For hee will alwayes be a good schoolemaster vnto vs, if wee be not euill scholers vnto him. And for the same cause speaketh hee here againe of Commaundements Statutes and Ordinances, to the intent we should not think that God ment to teach vs by halues.

Psal. 19. 8.

Then is the perfection of wisdom contained in the Law: and there remaineth no more for vs to doe, but to obey it, so as we be not curious in coueting more than God hath shewed vs, or in sonde deuotions to draw vs one way or other, but perswade our selues that God hath not enuied those of whome hee tooke the charge, but hath taught them all that is for their benefite. Let vs behaue our selues according to his will, and apply all our wittes therevnto, and let his lawe suffice vs. Although all the worlde reiect vs, wee shall not passe for it, for wee haue our iudge. And therefore although the worlde wander away in vaine imaginations, and euerie man deuiceth what hee thinketh good: Let vs alwayes remember that wee must appeare before the iudgement seate of our God, so as it is hee to whome wee must make our account. But hee hath giuen vs his Lawe, and according therevnto will he iudge vs. And therefore let vs leaue al worldly imaginations, assuring our selues that they are al but vanity and leasing.

Rom. 2. 16.

Rom. 2. 12.

Herevnto Moses addeth, that as concerning his office he had not brought them any thing of his owne deuising, but had set forth Gods Lawe faithfully according as hee had giuen him in charge. And this protestation is well to be marked. For wee must bethinke vs of the thing that hath bene treated of heretofore: namely that

Deut. 34. 10

Moses was the excellent Prophet that euer God raised vp: and yet notwithstanding he taketh no libertie here to teach what hee himselfe deemed good: for he knew himselfe to be a mortall man, and subiect to the Lawe as well as other men. That is the cause why hee protesteth that the things which hee bringeth are the same y<sup>e</sup> he receiued of God, so as hee deliuereth them as it were from hand to hand. Seeing y<sup>e</sup> Moses did so: who dareth say that it is lawfull for him to passe further? And yet we see what hath come to passe. For in the whole Popedom is there any hearkening what God saith, that they might put a difference betwixt it and the doctines of men? No: but they haue their holy mother y<sup>e</sup> Church as they terme it, they haue determinations and decrees of their owne, and they thinke it ynough to take couert vnder the name of the Church: and in the meane while they rob God of his authoritie to bestowe it vpon men, which are no better but dung. Therefore it is an intolerable traiterousnesse, that God should not bee suffered to be any more the Lawemaker that hee might guide his people, and holde them vnder his yoke: but that men should vsurpe such authoritie against him. And therefore we haue so much the more need to marke what is contained here: namely that although Moses was as an Angel of heauen, and had bene exalted aboue all men by God, and had bene fortie dayes and fortie nights with him vpon the mount without eating or drinking, to shewe that he was no more of the common aay of other men: yet notwithstanding when hee came from that heavenly glorie and as it were from the company of Angels: hee humbled himselfe still, and shewed that hee did not put forth aught of his owne, ne followe his owne fancie in that behalfe, but was contented to harken what God said, and reported the same as a good seruant that had neither added any thing, nor falsified the commission that was giuen him. That is another thing which we had to marke againe vpon this text.

Nowe followeth an exhortation that the people should discharge themselves in doing the Lawe. As if hee should saie, that the giuing thereof was not to the ende that men should but onely confesse that all that is contained therein is good, iust and rightfull: but also that men should thereby shew whether they were obedient to God or no. And in that respect he saith, to the ende that thou shouldst feare the Lord thy God, and keepe his commandements and statutes. By this word Feare he doth vs to wit, that God in giuing forth his Law, meant to trie what we be, and whether we be willing to serue him or no. For although we coulde doe all his commandements in such sort as no fault coulde be found in vs to the worldward, if in the meane while the feare of God be not rooted in our hearts, to yeelde him such reuerence as to be willing to be his: all our life shall be but a fond pompe: for wee must not thinke that God is satisfied with outward apperances. Howmuch soeuer they be commended of men, they bee but smoke before him. Then if wee munde to keepe his Lawe dewly, and to haue our life acceptable vnto him: we must beginne at this point of yeelding him such reuerence, as to be desirous to be vnder his hande and gouernement, and to doe him homage as to our foueraine Lord, & to giue ouer our selues to him as to our maker, and to honour him as our father. If we be thus minded, it is the beginning of all the Lawe and of all righteousness. And that is the cause why it is sayde that the true wisdom is to feare God. And if we will know whether we haue profited in gods lawe or no: we must alwayes sitt & search our selues whether we haue such desire & zeale that God should be honored & glorified by vs. For if there be that feare in our hearts, y<sup>e</sup> fruits thereof wil shew themselves both in our feete and in our handes, y<sup>e</sup> is to say in al our members, according to y<sup>e</sup> rule which he hath set downe in publishing his law. And as for them that boast of the feare of God, & neuertheless behaue themselves lewdly in their conuersation: they belie they selues wth their own mouthes, & bewray y<sup>e</sup> they be shameles in bragging of the feare of God. Now then we see here a text which is well worthie to be marked: wherein Moses declareth, that to serue god well, first we must giue our hearts vnto him, so as it sufficeth not to haue all y<sup>e</sup> vertues y<sup>e</sup> can be imagined to outward shew, vnlesse a vertuous mind go before them: & secondly that the feare of God is no secret or ydle thing, but y<sup>e</sup> although it bee inclosed in mens hartes, yet neuertheless it must shew it selfe in their liues: for it is the heart that gouerneth both the hands and the feete and all that euer is besides. Therefore if wee feare God, we must leane to shew it by our deeds and by proofe, euen by framing our life according to his will.

Now he receypon we may gather, that God disalloweth all that euer men can doe, when they

Luke 6. 15.

Prou. 1. 7. &amp; 9. 10.

turne away from his worde. As for example, the Papiſtes are alwayes ſeruing of God (as they themſelves ſay): but in the meane ſeaſon what doe they? They take much paine, but they bee neuer a whit the forwarder, becauſe they haue nothing among them, but mens inuentions. Their ſeruing of God, is to bleebleable or to kneele downe before puppets or idols, to ſcudde from altar to altar, to cauſe Maſſes to be chaunted, to gadde on pilgrimage, to faſt ſuch a day in the honour of ſuch a ſaint, and to eate no fleſh vpon fridays and ſaturdayes. To bee ſhort, it is a gulfe of all baggage, couered with the name and title of Gods ſeruce. But ſhall ye find that euer God vttered one word or ſyllable concerning ſuch thinges? No. It was euery whit of it deuiled by men. Now let vs conſider by this texte, whether God accepteth ſuch ſeruce for good and lawfull. Nay contrariwiſe he ſaith, thou ſhalt feare the Lorde thy God, and keepe all his commaundements and ſtatutes. So then, when men turne from that way, and followe their owne imaginations and the inuentions of men: thereby they ſhewe ſufficiently that they haue no feare of God in them, for elſe they would offer him the ſacrifice which hee prefereth before all things: namely the ſacrifice of obedience, as is ſhewed in the fiſt booke of Samuel the fifteenth Chapter. In ſomuch that if a man herken not vnto Gods voice to ſubmit him ſelfe thereto, but contrariwiſe followeth the inuention of his owne braine, or the thinges that other men haue deuiled: ſurely it is an ydolatrie, and as badde as witchcraft, which God abhorreth. After that manner doth Gods ſpirit ſpeake of it, notwithstanding that mortall men doe deeme the cleane contrarie. Now then wee ſee howe Mooſes declareth here, that if wee feare God in good earnest, we will alſo doe him the honour to be ruled by his will, ſo as we will not take leaue at mens handes to doe what they thinke good, but ſtop all mens moutes when God ſpeaketh, and open our eares to hearken what hee ſaitheth, and receiue the fame.

But yet for all this, it is not ynough for euery of vs to imploye himſelfe in the ſeruing of God: we muſt alſo procure to the vttermoſt of our power, that he may be worſhipped of all men: yea and that his ſeruce may continue euen after our deceaſe, ſo as his honour may abide faſt ſetled when wee be deade and gone out of the worlde, & not be aboliſhed with our tranſitorie life. And that is the cauſe why Mooſes ſaith, thy children, and they that iſſue of their race, ſhal continue in ſeruing God & in keeping his law. Therefore let vs mark well, that here Mooſes not onely exhorteth euerie man to ſerue God by framing his owne life according to the Law that he hath giuen vs: but alſo willeth fathers to take paine in bringing vp their children, and to leaue ſuch ſeed after them (to neere as they can), as God may be honored in their oſpring, and his name be euer purely called vpon, that by that meane ſuch as deſcend of vs may be bleſſed, and his couenant (which containeth our ſaluation) indure for euer, & not periſh though we our ſelues be mortall. But wee ſee that fathers are ſo farre of from diſcharging their duties in this behalfe: that they giue ſuch examples to their children, as they may ſeeme to haue conſpired to abolſh al feare of God, and all keeping of his Lawe. And therefore no maruell though God withdraw himſelfe from vs, and ſeeme to be minded to cut off the benefits which he hath beſtowed vpon vs. For are we worthy of ſo continuance of them towards vs, ſeeing wee be ſo negligent in cauſing his ſeruce to continue in perfect and vnappaired ſtate? But yet for al that, this muſt not be ſpoken to vs in vaine. Therefore let vs indeuour to reach ſuch as ſhal ſucceed vs, ſo as God may euer bee worſhipped, and knowne to be the father and Saviour of the whole worlde, and men giue themſelves whollie vnto him.

Immediately here vpon, Mooſes addeth that which he had ſaid afore: namely, to the end that their dayes might be prolonged, and that God might make the people to proſper, according as he had promiſed to their fathers to giue them a Land that flowed with milke and honnie. I haue declared alreadie heretofore, what Mooſes ment by this ſaying: that is to wit, that although God might at one worde haue compelled vs to ſerue him, yet notwithstanding he vſeth a more louing kinde of dealing towards vs: which is, that hee promiſeth vs rewarde for ſeruing of him: not that our workes deſerue aught, or that hee is any whit bounde vnto vs: but that his beneficiſing of vs after that ſort, is to the end that we ſhoulde be the better allured to ſerue him the more careſſly. For is it not too ſhamefull a thankleſneſſe, that when wee heare howe God bindeth himſelfe to vs after that manner, of his owne accorde, and vouchſafeth to ſet rewarde before vs, is it not (ſay I) too great a ſhame and vndankfulneſſe, if we giue not our ſelues wholly to his ſeruce? Wee bee his, and whatſoeuer we can doe, wee be beholden to him for it, as our Lord Ieſus Chriſt ſpeaketh thereof. Howe ſay you, ſaith hee? tell mee, if a man haue a ſeruant, or rather a ſlaue whom he may put to toyle like an Ox or a horſe, and the ſame haue done him ſome ſeruce: will his maſter riſe from the table to ſerue him at his turne? No: for whatſoeuer a man doeth that is in bondage, hee oweth it to him that hath the ſuperioritie ouer him. So owe you all thinges to God (ſaith Chriſt), and God oweth you nothing. Yet notwithstanding God binding himſelfe of his owne free good will, promiſeth that if wee ſerue him we ſhalbe well recompens'd, and not loſe our labour. To what purpoſe doth hee ſo euen to breake our hearts, for (as I ſaide afore) wee be too churliſh if wee be not wholly inflamed to ſerue God, when wee ſee that he of his owne free goodneſſe vouchſafeth to becheight vs rewarde, whereof we be not worthy.

And herewithall let vs marke alſo, that if God had couenanted a thouſande times with vs to rewarde our workes: yet could we ſo little ſay that hee owed vs any thing, as hee might rather curſe and abhorre vs. For which of vs performeth his Law as we ought to do? If wee doe one point, we faile in a hundred: and when we thinke

we do the things that God commandeth vs in his Law: we do but drag our legges, and there is alwayes much imperfection in vs, so as wee can neuer runne as were requisite. Therefore wee should be cursed and damned, if God listeth to iudge vs with rigour. Then is it not for men to vaunt themselves in this behalfe of the obtaining of any rewarde for desertes sake, or to boast of their workes. But rather they must vnderstand that all the promises which God hath giuen in his Law, import a condition, and therefore that they should not boote vs at all, because none of vs discharge his dutie, if God did not accept vs & beare with vs of his own mere goodnes. And hereby we see how mad the papists are to boast of their merites, so as it seemeth to them that they haue to bargain with God, and thereupon enter boldly into account with him through delishious alapeartnes, bearing themselves in hand that God is greedily bounde vnto them. And for what maner of dealings? They alleage their satisfactions, their workes, and their merites. And where shall a man finde these merites? O (say they) we haue done this and that: and therefore we neede not sticke to enter into account with God. But on the contrary parte, God requireth here that we shoulde serue him thoroughly in all respectes: which thing we can not do as we haue seene heeretofore, and as is declared in many other places. For lette all the worlde examine themselves, and see if euer there were anie one that performed the Lawe. Nay, so farre off is that to be found, that there is none which may protest that he hath done the hundredth parte of it. Therefore all must needs confesse themselves to bee accursed. Besides this, euen in that little portion which men can bring, howe small so euer it be, there is alwayes some default and blot: by reason whereof God might well refuse it and abhorre it. Nowe then let men continue confounded in their shame, and confesse themselves to be all faultie before God. And let vs note that this promise can not be performed, vlesse God beare with vs, and respecte not the great number of infirmitie and vices that are in vs, but bury them through his mercy. Our workes then are receiued at Gods hande, inasmuch as he respecteeth not what they be, but accepteth them as good and holy, through the power of the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. And although there be euer some blemish and blot in them, yea and that God could finde euen some filthinesse in them if it were not blotted out by the blood of Iesus Christ: yet doth he accept vs by that meane, and not otherwise. Wherefore let vs learne to glorie in Gods meere mercie, and not to boast of any dese ruings. And yet therewithall let vs not cease to steppe vpp with the better courage to serue him: when wee see that he vouchsafeth to drawe vs fo vnto him and to winne vs by such gentleness.

Verly Moses sheweth that all that euer God promised to his people for keeping of his Law, springeth from the same fountaine, rather than from any bond. And that is it which he meaneth by saying, As God promised to sly Fathers. As if he should say, my friends, serue God and hee will be good maister vnto you: and thinke not that ye shall haue lost your time when yee shall haue kept his Law: for ye shall haue the large rewarde that is beighted you. But yet for all that, consider from whence the same commeth. The fountaine thereof (sayth he) is, that before yee were borne into the worlde, God promised your fathers to bring them into a lande that floweth with milke and honnie. Moses by bringing the people thus backe to the promise that had bene made to the Patriarkes, sheweth sufficiently that God promised nor any thing anewe, but onely that he performeth the thing that hee had promised afore. And why so? Was it for that hee, was bounde to them, which were not yet borne into the worlde? No: but because hee loved their fathers as is saide heretofore. It is true that heere Moses sheweth that the people should be partakers of that promise, so they kept Gods Lawe. But what for that? Yet behoued it them to come backe still to this point, that men are viterly, vndone if they set themselves against God, and that if they alleage any worthines, they shall abide still in their condemnation, and finde themselves all accursed. Therefore they must haue none other refuge but to Gods mercy, & they must vnderstand that when they haue enforced themselves neuer so much to liue according to Gods Law: yet shall God owe them nothing at all, neuertheless hee will not faile to performe his promise to them euen of his owne mere and free bestowed goodnesse. And so yee see how this text is to be vnderstood. Nowe forasmuch as here is mention made of the Land that was promised to the Iewes: let vs marke that we nowadays ought to bee much more prouoked to serue God, seeing hee hath dedicated the whole earth to himselfe, & will haue his name to bee called vpon euery where. For the bloodshed of our Lord Iesus Christ, hath sanctified the whole world which was then in vncleanness. For we knowe there were noe lands but this, which God reserved to himselfe, and wherein he would reigne til the coming of his sonne. But when our Lord Iesus Christ was once come: then got hee the possession of the whole worlde, so as his kingdom was extended from the one side thereof to the other, specially at the publishing of the Gospel. Seeing it is so, let vs marke that we nowadays are so much the more straitly bounde to serue God, because hee hath sanctified the whole earth by the precious bloude of his sonne, that wee might dwell in it and liue vnder his reigne, and beware that we addict our selues vnto him, as well as we would that hee should haue vs in his protection and safekeeping.

Howbeit forasmuch as men are alwayes so ticklish, that (as I haue saide already) they cannot bee bridled ynough to restrain them: Moses confirmeth the whole doctrine that hee had vttered heere, saying, Harken therefore O Israel, the Lorde sly God is one God. Hee had saide afore, Harken: he had saide, take heeds: hee had saide that it behoued them to keepe the law: but heere hee confirmeth the whole matter much

much better, by setting downe expressly that the God of Israel is the one God. And hereby his meaning is to exclude all the Gods which the world forged to it selfe, and to shew that it is not lawfull for vs to conceiue any thing in our owne imagination, whereof wee haue not warrant in Gods woord. Therefore whereas the God of Israel is called the one God, it is all one as if Moses should compare the God that had set fourth his lawe, (who had also manifested himselfe before to his seruant Abraham, and to the Patriarkes,) with all those whom the worlde weened to be Gods, and should set him against them all. For in deede God had bene called vpon in all ages, and that name was common to the heathē. But what for that? The Heathen wandered at rouers, so as euerie man said I worship God. And yet in the meane while, what was it they did? nothing but dreames and fantasies: for when men take vpon them to worship God without knowing him: no doubt but they worship idols. The Turkes at this day doe say they worship the God that made heauen and earth: but yet is it but an idoll which they worship. And how so? They name him the maker of heauen and earth, and they haue none images. That is true: but yet for all that, they haue but an idoll in stead of God, because they admit not our Lorde Iesus Christ, who is y<sup>e</sup> liuely image of God his father. And we knowe how S. Iohn saith that he which denieth the sonne, denieth the father too. Therefore they haue not God, but an idoll. As much is to be said of the Iewes. The Iewes boast of their hauing of the lawe, and of their worshipping of the God of Abraham, Isaac and Iacob. But what for that? They be but backsliders and haue renounced Gods lawe, for as much as they haue reiected Iesus Christ who is the soule of the law. It is he in whom God the father intendeth to manifest himselfe vnto vs: It is he, whom he will haue to be worshipped. And in that respect he saith, Kisse the sonne whom I send vnto you. And againe, he that honoureth not the sonne, honoreth not the father that sent him. Let vs marke wel then, that here Moses meant to compare the God which vetered himself by his word, with all the Gods that are honored through the whole world, and to shew that in them all there is nothing but mockerie and leasing. And why? For wee can neuer worship God aright, vnlesse we first knowe him. And we must alwayes haue an eye to this saying of Iesus Christ which hee spake to the woman of Samaria, yee knowe not what ye worshipspe. Iesus Christes vsing of such speech, is as much as if he should speake at all the worshippings which y<sup>e</sup> world had set vp in those dayes. There was not that nation which boasted not themselves to serue God: but Iesus Christ reiecteth quite and cleane the things which me rooke to be good and holy. Ye knowe not what ye worship saith he. Hereby he sheweth that it is expedient for vs to be told of it. We must not goe to it at all aduenture, but we must bee sure not themselves to serue God: but Iesus Christ reiecteth quite and cleane the things which me rooke to be good and holy. Ye knowe not what ye worship saith he. Hereby he sheweth that it is expedient for vs to be told of it. We must not goe to it at all aduenture, but we must bee sure der from whence this knowledge cometh. Groweth it in our owne garden as they say: May wee get it by our owne trauell or policie? Is it lawfull for euerie man to imagine what he listeth, and to say, I knowe God? No no: but God must bee faine to vtter himselfe, and to come vnto vs. And so the onely meane to knowe God aright, is to be taught by his woorde. And that is the cause why he saith, The Lord thy God. For this people had receiued the lawe: and beside, the couenant had bin made with their fathers: God had schooled out that stocke from the rest of the world. Iustly therefore doeth Moses here bring back the people to the knowledge of God, to the ende they should restraine themselves from all the superstitions of the heathen, and haue nothing at all to doe with the vnbeleeuers, but know that in as much as God had manifested himselfe so familiarly vnto them: they had the certaine and infallible trueth.

Now although this was spoken in the time of the lawe: yet doeth it agree better full to vs. For although God gaue the Iewes sufficient warning that they should not haue to doe with the defilings and idolatries of the heathē: yet haue wee a much larger light nowe adayes, since the coming of our Lorde Iesus Christ. Hee is the liuely image of God his father (as I haue sayde alreadie,) and we may well agree to this saying in the first of Saint Iohn, That no man euer saw God, but the sonne who hath alwayes bene in the bosome of the father hath reuealed him vnto vs. The fathers of olde time had a knowledge as I said, but that knowledge is esteemed as none at all, in comparison of the knowledge which we haue now adayes by the Gospell. God shewed himselfe more plainly vnto vs by the shining forth of the day sunne of righteousness. And for the same cause the Prophet Esay treating of the redemption that was to be performed in the person of the sonne of God, saith expressly: Behold, this is he: beholde, this is our God. The Prophet crieth out, this is he, this is our God. He contenteth not himselfe to say, behold our God: but he speaketh as if the thing were present, and as though God had appeared vnto him. How so? And was not God in y<sup>e</sup> minds of his people? Yes: for he said, I will dwell among you. And againe, This is my rest, Sion is y<sup>e</sup> place where I will dwell. And afterward he protesteth that he will neuer depart thence, and that the people is his temple and a royall Priesthood. Why then doeth the Prophet Esay say, Behold, behold our God: this is he, this is he: when our Lorde Iesus Christ was to come into the world? Euen because God reuealed himselfe to vs in greater perfection. Now then we be the lesse to be excused, if we run gadding nowe adayes without holding of our selues to the pure trueth, so as euerie of vs turneth away after his own dotages, to say, it seemeth so to mee, this I thinke I good. Let vs assure our selues that all this is nothing worth, but we must repaire to the certaintie that is brought vs by our Lord Iesus Christ.

Neuertheless, so farre off is the worlde from knowing this, that it should seeme they be all hent to spyte God, and haue conspired to turne their backs vpon him, and to shake off all subiection, that they may haue libertie to continue in their disorders, and to scape in the meane while vnspied with their lewdnesse. The Iewes are vnexcusable, according as wee see howe the Prophetes vpbroyde them with their willfull forsaking of God, so as they coulde not excuse themselues by saying y they had not heard any thing, as the poore Paynims might doe: for God protesteth that he spake not in vaine. And now adayes when God speaketh to vs with open mouth, and wee haue him perfectly discovered vnto vs by the Gospell, is it not too great a lewdnesse that men should tunne astray after that fashio? Were there euer any superstitions more grosse and more outrageous, than are to bee seene nowe adayes in the Popedonie? It is true that the Iewes medled with the superstitions of the Heathen, and tooke much filth and vncleannesse of them: but if all bee well searched, it will be founde that the Papists haue farre exceeded them. For Gods word is as it were, at this day buried among them. When they treat of fayth, they fetch the points of it from mens inuentions: and the holy scripture is in as much reuerence among them as if it were dead, and that all things went to hauocke. Loe at what poynt they bee. And if a man speake to them of Gods seruice, (as I sayde) they bee busie about their owne inuentions. Yea verily, myne intent is good say they: and so they beare themselues in hand, that God will suffer himselfe to be dandled lyke a little babe, and will neuer come to examine any whit of the doctrine of Poperie. Againe if they speake of fayth: exhort they men to resort to Gods free promises? No, but they challenge all to themselues. When they take in hand to treat of the office of Iesus Christ, they ouerthrowe the vertue of his death and passion, as much as they can. When they treat of their saluation: then step forth their owne freewill, their merites, and their satisfactions. But contrariwise we should resort to the mere grace of the holy Ghost, acknowledging our selues to bee in bondage to sinne, vntill God deliuer vs from it through his mercie. And thereupon it cometh that the holy Scripture calleth the forguiness of sinnes our righteousnesse. That is the point which wee must resort vnto, to know that when we haue done amisse, wee can bring none other amendes or payment for it, than such as wee borrowe of the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ. But there is nota word of all this in Poperie. When God is to be prayed vnto, they make their vagaries to their HCESAUNES and SHEESAINES: & in the meane while Iesus Christ is not knowne to bee as he is, neither is let alone with the office that is giuen him by God his father: but they depose him, lyke a sorte of theemes and traytours that seeke nothing else but to burie him againe, and to make hauocke of all the glorie that was giuen him by God his Father. After the same sort deale they also in all other things. Wee see how the Sacramentes are defiled to the vttermost. In stead of the Supper of our Lorde Iesus Christ, they haue set vp that same hellish abomination of the Masse, wherein they say that Iesus Christ is sacrificed, as though he had done nothing already, nor were appointed to be the onely & everlasting Priest by God his father. Wee see then that the Papists haue so dalyed with Gods word wherein he hath reuealed himselfe: as it should seeme that they meane of set purpose to wpe away the knowledge that is in the Gospell. And therefore wee haue so much the more neede to marke well this saying, That the Lord is God, yea euen the onely one God.

Nowe then, as oft as this word God commeth to our minde, let vs assure our selues that it serueth to cut off all toyes that may come in our heades, and all inuentions of men, and all other things whereof we haue not warrant in the holy scriptures. For God will haue vs to consider him in such wise, as wee snarle not our selues in the imaginations and errors of idolatrie. And of a truth, we cannot haue the true God, except wee haue him alone: that is to say, without adding any companion vnto him. For as soone as we fall to bringing in of vndergoddes, we forsake the liuing God. And why? Bicause his will is to bee alone, as he auoweth in another place by his Prophet Esay saying, I am the liuing God (saith the Lord) and I will not giue my glory to any other. Againe we haue seene heretofore how he called himselfe a iealous God. And why was that, but to withdraw vs from all corruptions, as S. Paule affirmeth in the second to the Corinthians? For as soone as we be turned aside from the simplicitie of Gods word, it is all one as if a wife should hearken to a bawde that came to whisper hir in the eare. By and by we be corrupted, and so wee commit foule whoredome against God, when we falllie the faith that we haue plighted him in Baptisme. We cast away his law, and stain all religion, when wee swarue neuer so little from the pure Religion. Wherefore let vs beare well in minde, that as oft as this word God commeth to our remembrance, God must be all alone. And if wee accompanie him with any creatures: he forsaketh vs as backsliders, and as folk vnworthy to haue any thing to doe with him, bicause wee vouchsafed not to yeelde him his deserved honour: that is to wit, to take him for our [Onely] Lord, but haue vnhalloved that name by imparting the same to creatures, or rather to our owne dreames.

And herewithall let vs marke, that it is not ynough for vs to referre to the liuing God the tytle of the onely God: but all that euer belongeth vnto him must also abide vnminished and vnappaired. As howe? His meaning is not alonely to be called the onely God: but also to be acknowledged to be almightie, and to be our father and Sauiour, which hath all authoritie ouer vs to gouerne vs, in whom wee ought to put our whole trust, and whom wee ought to call vpon. Those are the chiefe things which wee ought to minde when mention is made of the honoring of the onely one God. Truth it is that the Papists will well

well ynough say, that S. Michael and S. William are not their Gods: but yet for all that they worship them, yea euen the stockes of them. Although they hope to scape by this shift, that the images are not the Saintes themselues whome they pray vnto, but onely remembrances set vp there to represent them: yet is it exprefselly against Gods forbidding. And againe, we see that they cannot by any meanes discern the difference how God will bee worshipped, when they intrangle themselues after that maner with their idols of stone and timber, whereby they surmise themselues to represent their Saintes. True it is y<sup>e</sup> they countenance the matter with the termes of Doulia & Latria, which they themselues vnderstand not, saying that they serue their puppets and yelde reuerence vnto God: for that is the thing which they meane by those wordes. But surely God is much beholden to them, in y<sup>e</sup> they shew that they doe but honour him, and in the meane season serue their idols. Againe, is it not a holy thing to pray vnto God? Yes: for it is y<sup>e</sup> very seruice that he requireth, as it is saide in the sixth Psalmc. So then, we see that the world doth dally too shamelessly with God, in corrupting his seruice so lewdly, yea and that it is too detestable a thing, that men should runne astray so, after so cleare and open reuelation or discouerie of things, as is contained in the Gospell. And therefore it behooueth vs so much the more to stand to this doctrine, knowing that our Lorde will haue vs tyed wholly to himselfe alone, so as there may be an intiuolable vnion betwixt him & vs. Which thing will come to passe, if wee holde our selues simply within the boundes and listes of his word, so as we giue no entrance to mens inuentions, nor suffer our mindes to wander at rourers, but hearken to the things y<sup>e</sup> are contayned in the holy scripture, & not only say amen to them readily with our mouthes, but also settle our faith thoroughly vpon the things that are proceeded out of the mouth of our God.

Now let vs kneele downe in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God, with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to make vs feeble them better than wee haue doone, so as wee may knowe more and more wherein wee bee bounde vnto him, and not thinke to discharge our selues thereof lightly, but bend our selues wholly to him and to his seruice, not hauing any other intent or desire than to keepe his holy Lawe. And seeing wee bee yet verie farre off from it, so that straine wee our selues neuer so much, wee stop in the middes of our waye: let vs flee for succour to the forgiveness of our finnes, praying him to vouchsafe to receiue vs to mercie, and to beare with vs in such sort, as he neuer cease to guide vs with his holy spirat, though wee deserue to bee vterly shaken off at his hand. And therewithall it may please him so to open our eyes, that wee beholding the brightnesse of our Lorde Iesus Christ, may bee wholly rauished therat, to renounce these worldly things and our fleshly affections, which carrie vs awaye: so as wee may haue none other desire than to humble our selues vnder him, to the ende that being striken downe in our selues, wee may bee lifted vp at his hand by his wordes, wayting till it please him to transfigure vs after his owne image at the latter daye. That it maye please him to graunt this grace not onely to vs but also, &c.

On Saturday the xx. of Iuly. 1555.

The xlvj Sermon which is the second vpon the sixth Chapter.

4 Hearken O Israel & c.

5 Therefore thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength.

6 And these wordes which I commaund thee this day, shall be in thy heart.

7 Thou shalt rehearse them to thy children, and talke of them when thou art at home in thy house, and as thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest vp.

8 And thou shalt binde them as a signe vpon thy handes, and they shall bee as frontlets written betwene thine eyes.

7 Also thou shalt write them vpon the entries of thy house, and vpon thy gates.

Beganne yesterday to tell you wherefore Moses auoweth that There is but onely one God: that is to wit, because me can neuer giue themselues to the seruing of the true God, vlesse they discern him from all things imagined by the world, For euerie man forgeth gods at his owne pleasure, and the verie fountaine and wellspring of all superstition and idolatrie, is that men cannot bee contented with the liuing God, but giue heade to their owne fancies, and therupon builde a great sort of fables to beguile themselues. Therefore it is requisit before all other things, to know which is the true God, that wee may holde our selues wholly vnto him, and worship him simply without adding any thing at all to his word. For as soone as any thing is mingled thereunto, by and by it is corrupted. And here is expresse mention made of the God of Israel, because God must needs haue manifested himselfe, or else wee could neuer haue known him. For where are the wings wherewith we should flie to so infinite a height, as to comprehend the Maiestie of God? But when it pleaseth him to reucale himselfe to vs by his word: it is as though he came downe to acquaint himselfe with vs: and then doe wee knowe him. And this certaintie of being fully resolved that we worship not a new forged god, or a god that is brought in by men, but the same God to whom all praise is due: is the verie foundation of all Religion. Herewithall let vs beare in minde, that he will be worshipped all alone, not onely by referring to himselfe the name of God: but also by hauing all that is his, that is to wit, all that belongeth to his Maiestie, and as ye woulde say to his office. I speake after this manner, to expresse the better, that God hath not respect onely to his being. His will is not that men should onely call him the eueralasting, or confesse him to be the maker of the world: but that they should also knowe him to be almighty, and that it is he to whom the government of vs belongeth, it is he in whom is all vertue, wisdom, goodnesse, and righteoufnesse, it is he to whom we must runne for succour, it is he in whom we must put all our trust, it is he to whom we owe all glorie. Yee see then how Moses, in shewing that there is but onely one God, meaneth that men should commit themselues vnto him, knowing that they be in his hand, that they be maintained by his onely power, that it is he at whose hand they must looke for saluation and all welfare, and finally that it is he in whom they haue their life, mouing and being: and therefore that it is he whom we must honour, as well with prayer and supplications, as also by praise and thanngiung.

And now to shewe his meaning the better, Moses addeth, Thou shalt loue the Lorde thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, and with all thy strength. In these wordes wee see the thing that hath bin touched alreadie: that is to wit, that Gods intent is to hold vs wholly to himselfe, and to possesse vs in such fort, as wee setue him not by halues, ne wander in the meane while to and fro. Then like as God of his gracious goodnesse giueth himselfe to vs: so doeth it behouue vs to be altogether his possession and inheritance. That is the summe of the things contained in these wordes of Moses, where he speaketh of the louing of G O D with all our heart, with all our soule, and with all our strength. As if he should say, There is no meane way in this case, deceiue not your selues by imagining to serue God by parcellmeale, and by making any restraint from him: for he will keepe his owne right throughout in all points. What is to be done then? You must giue your hearts wholly vnto him, so as ye referre not any peece of it to idoles. For that were a corrupting and a bastarding of his seruice: eyther he must haue all whole, or else he will haue none at all, accordingly as we see how he renounceth the people in Ezechiel, for mingling of superstitions with his Lawe. Goe your wayes (saith he) and serue your owne idoles: I will no more of you. He giueth them leaue and casteth them vp to Satan, telling them that hee liketh not any of all the things which they doe: for he will not be matched with idoles. What an outrage and blasphemie is that? Thus then wee see now the meaning of Moses.

Now as concerning these words, Soule, Minde, and Strength: the Iewes did misundersand them. Their saying is, that Thou shalt loue God with all thy soule, is as much to say as thou shalt not spare thy life for the loue of thy God, but thou shalt set so much store by his glorie, that in comparison thereof thou shalt not esteeme thine owne lyfe, so as if neede require that thou shouldst die to shewe the loue which thou bearest vnto God: thou shouldst doe it. Againe Thou shalt loue thy God with all thy minde or Heart, betokeneth with them but as it were a comparison, so as a man should preferre G O D above all other things. And finally, Thou shalt loue God with all thy strength, importeth among them, that thou must loue him with all thy substance and with all thy goods, so as if the case required that thou shouldst bee impouerished, thou shouldst rather giue ouer thy worldly goods, than forsake thy God. But this exposition is too strait laced, and attaineth not to the verie meaning of Moses. For proofe whereof there needeth nowe no long discourse. For what better expounder of the Lawe is there to be found, than our Lorde Iesus Christ, by whose spirit it was giuen? For it was at his hand and by his authoritie, that Moses receiued the Lawe which wee holde of him. So then, we must fetch the exposition thereof at his mouth, and we must receiue it without gain-saying. And for the same cause doe the three Euangelists S. Matthew, in the 22. S. Mark in y 12. and S. Luke in the 10. set downe this louing of God to be the whole summe of the well keeping of the lawe. True it is that he addeth, Thou shalt loue thy neighbour as thy selfe. Howbeit, in answering he saith, thou shalt loue thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, with all thy minde, and with all thy strength. Our Lord Iesus Christ addeth there one word more: not to make a new sense, but to assure vs the better of the same thing that Moses meant by the wordes Soule and Heart. So then he setteth downe Soule, Heart, and Minde, as if he should say, The man that intendeth to keepe Gods Lawe well, must yeeld himselfe wholly and throughly to the obeying and louing of God. Nowe wee see that in our soules, first there is the power of thinking, when we conceiue things to iudge and discern of them. That is the first power of the soule: namely that vpon the insight of things, we enter into deliberation and iudgement, and conclude one way or other. Gods will then is to retrain all these thoughtes to himselfe. Againe there is the soule, which is not onely the life, but also the meane betwixt the thoughtes and the heart. For the Heart betokeneth the affections, desires, & will.

It is one thing to think a thing, & another thing to desire it, and to let a hartie affection vpon it. Ye see then that the heart is matched with the thoughtes, to shewe that we must loue our God with all our mind. And there is the Soule, which is as it were betwene both: as if it were sayd, that whether wee debate and take counsell of our owne affaires we must alwayes begin at the loue of God, and referre all things thereunto: or whether wee couet one thing or other in seeking our own profite, Gods loue must alwayes gouerne vs, so as al our desires be as it were restrained and bridled vnder it. Ye see then that the whole soule with all the powers thereof ought to bee thoroughly possessed with the loue towards God. And the word strength serueth to shewe yet better, that God admitteth not any exception, neither may wee reply in this behalfe, and say, is my doing of this or that an impeaching of any part of my loue towards God? No no, if thou doe neuer so litle a thing, & that al thy thoughts tend not to the louing of God, so as the loue of God doe guide thee: all is marred, and there is nothing but sinne in thee & in all thy whole soule. For hast thou any strength or power there, which is not giuen thee from aboue? No. Therefore must thou reknowledge it, vnto God of whome thou holdest it. Now then, seeing that our Lord Iesus Christ hath expounded vs this text, wee neede not to make long discourse of it, as I sayd afore, but onely to holde vs to the authoritie of him which is the very Lawgiuer.

Now remaineth the practising of this doctrine, that is to say, to knowe how wee should put it in effect and execution. And let vs marke first of all, how this onely one text sheweth vs sufficiently, that Gods Law passeth al our abilities, so as it is not possible for vs to fulfill it, & to discharge our selues of it, or of the hundreth part of it, as long as wee liue here beneath. For why? doe we knowe God thoroughly as we ought to doe? No no. wee come farre short of it. Then is it impossible for vs to loue him with all our strength and with all our affectiones: for knowledge goeth before loue. If our knowing of God bee but in part, so as wee be wrapped as yet in much darkness: our louing of God must also be weake lyke-wise. Moreover wee see what the fondnesse of our minde is: for in stead of seeking heauenly things, wee looke alwayes downward. And if wee be desirous but so much as to lift vp our head: wee must be faine to strue and to goe to it by maine force, and yet wee returne still to our owne nature. How fickle are our desires? and how fight they one against another? So as men are tossed and turmoyled without ende or measure, and haue no rest at all, but are tormented with vnquietnesse, of ambition on the one side, and of couetousnesse on the other. Again they would faine liue at ease and in pleasure, and they would faine be had in honor and estimation. Finally they be combered with fleshly lustes and such other lyke things. Hereby then it appeareth enough and too much, that wee come farre short of louing God with all our heart, and of giuing our selues wholly ouer vnto him, as wee be commaunded here. And loe let vs marke, that the righteousnesse of the Law respecteth not what men can doe, but what they ought to doe. We be bound to loue our GOD with all our heart, with all our minde, and with all our soule. Although we haue no such perfection in vs as to come any thing neere it, yet notwithstanding wee be bound vnto it. If any man say, How loe why should God require more of vs than we be able to performe? we must consider from whence the mischief springeth: namely euen from our owne fault. The original sin that is in vs is the cause thereof, so as we take it by byrth. And is it meet y because we be naughty and frowarde, therefore God should be best of his seruice and lose his right? No. If a man haue played the vnthrift and wasted away both his owne goods and other mens: shall his creditor bee bound to bring him his obligation and to say, take thee here thy bond, thou owest me nothing? The creditor will at leastwise keepe still his obligation, and although the vnthrift haue not wherewith to pay: yet ought he to doe homage to his creditor, and to stand bound vnto him still, and not to deny him his dette. Now God deserueth well to bee much more priuiledged than mortall men. Wherefore let vs consider that we owe him a hundred thousand fold more than al the debts of gold and siluer in the world. So then, Gods righteousnesse is an inuioleable thing, so that the order of nature ought rather to be abolished. Now then if men be lewde and froward, doth it follow therefore, that they should pluck the sonne out of the skie, or make the earth to bee confounded? True it is that there happen many confusions by reason of our sinnes, in so much that our Lorde sendeth both rajne, and thunder, hayles, and tempestes, and such other like things: but yet for all that, the order of nature continueth vnappayred after such turmoyling. Therefore wee must vnderstande, that although wee be lewde, and there is nothing but vnrighteousnesse and naughtinesse in vs: Yet must Gods iustice and righte continue perfecte and vnappayred as in respecte of the commaundementes: and we must needs stoope to them, and suffer our selues to bee condemned for not discharging our duties. Doe we then heare this summe of the Law, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soule, with all thy minde, and with all thy strength? Let it make vs conclude that we be all damned and accursed before God, and that there is none other shifte for vs, but to flee to his mercie: and that we bee not condemned for any one sinne, or for two or three: but y God findeth vs guilty in al pointes & al respects. And for proote therof, let vs examine wel y best works that we can haue done in all our life: and there will be stil some fancie or other to turn vs away, so as we shal not goe on so freely towards God, but y there wil be some temptatio mingled therewith, or som toy to pluck vs back, & the diuel shal haue endeuered to coole vs. And when it fareth so w vs, it is a plaine corruption to infect y thing y should be good and commendable in our works.

Ye see then that wee take not any deliberation, any counsell, or any desire in our whole life, but the curse of God is with vs and vpon our heads. Were this well printed in our heartes: all glorying to the worldward should bee beaten downe in vs, and there would be no more so much meriting, wherewith the Papists are so bewitched, that (to their owne seeming) they may enter in to account before GOD. Alas, they shoulde then see that they be far off from their account. Howbeit forasmuch as the Diuell hath blinded them with such pride: let vs on our side make our commoditie of this text.

And sith wee heare that God requireth that we should loue him perfectly with all our heart, with all our minde, and with all our soule: let vs be of opinion that hee condemneth vs vnto vntill hee haue acquit vs of his owne infinite goodnesse. But yet for all this, we must plucke vp our hearts and quicken vp our spirites, sith wee see that our Lorde prouoketh vs after that fashion. For what maketh vs so cold and negligent? It is our bearing of our selues in hande that wee bee discharged. The cause therefore why men doe flatter themselves, is for y they take themselves to be perfect, when they haue brought some petite trifles vnto God. When we bee at that point, let vs be thinke vs how it is said here, Thou shalt loue God with all thy heart. If it happen that we be not very disordered in our life, but that wee haue praised vnto God at our vprising in y morning, wee haue done no man wrong all the day long, we haue not played the whore masters, nor the drunkardes, wee haue nor hurt any of our neighbors, we haue not spyfied any euil, we haue not blasphemed God, but wee haue occupied our selues about some good matters, inso-much as wee haue inducoured to doe good to such as were in necessitie, and laboured to apply our selues to the things that God commandeth, and haue done them some seruice which had neede thereof: when night commeth, we thinke our selues to be litle Angels, and that God hath no more to demaund of vs. That is the cause that cooleth vs, and why we serue not GOD so earnestly as were requisite. For wee beare our selues in hand, that wee be perfect, and we be contented with our selues, and we need nothing else to content vs withall, for we be too much inclined to like well of our selues. But behold here is wherewith to waken vs frō such follie, namely, Thou shalt loue y Lorde thy God. And after what manner? after our owne measure? No no: but w al our heart, w al our soule, & with al our strength. And therefore let vs looke that wee searche well our thoughtes: and in examining of our liues, let vs consider what a number of vaine and fonde fancies haue passed vs. And if it be alleaged, yea but I yielded not to them: very well, diddest thou not conceiue any such thought? Will nor thy God possesse thy whole soule? Shal y diuel beare rule ouer thy thoughtes, & God in y meane while haue nothing to doe w the? And seeing he hath giuen thee those thoughtes, if thou fall to mingling of the w any corruptio, whence proceedeth y, but frō y affection of our mindes? Therefore if wee were well fraughted aforehand with the loue of God, should not all the powers of our soules be brought vnder his obedience? Yes. So then, our forging of so many fond imaginations, our letting of our desires and delightes loose to followe this and that, and our forgetting of God in the meane while, or rather our excluding of him from bearing any sway at all in vs, doth prouue sufficiently that the true loue of God is not receiued into our soules. Alas, doth it not appeare that we be yet farre off from discharging the hundreth part of our ducie?

Besides this fore sayd condēning of our selues, wee must also quicken vp our selues, and say, what doest thou wretched creature? doest thou gue thy selfe to doe well sith god exhortheth thee so earnestly? In the meanwhile thou seest y thou hast much adoe euen to begin. Thus ye see how wee ought to beare this text in minde, that it may inflame vs with the loue of God, seeing we be yet so farre off from the perfection which hee requireth and commaundeth. Againe let vs marke well, that our Lordes vppening of all the abilities of our soule here, is to make vs looke better to the good turnes that he hath done vs, to yeelde him homage for the same, and to apply them to his honor. For what a thing is it that wee haue the gift of consulting, the choyce of discerning betwene good and euill, and the abilitie to conceiue things so as we can say we will doe this or that? Lo here an excellent gift wherewith wee be indued. Now then seeing wee haue will to choose, so as wee can say, go to, I finde this to be good: and againe, seeing wee haue a soule which beareth Gods image printed in it, and seeing we haue so many goodly vertues, wherethrough wee excell all other creatures: ought not the consideration thereof to prouoke vs the more to serue God, and to honour him with those so precious giftes which hee hath put in vs? Yes: and therefore let vs learne, that whē our thoughtes are set vpon vaine and wicked things, and when our desires runne at rouers and rebell against God: we vnhallooe so holly a treasure, as wee deserue well to be vtterly cast vp at Gods hand, because of our vnthakfulnesse. Now then whereas Moses speaketh here of the thoughts and the will: and our Lord Iesus Christ addeth one word more, that is to wit, minde, Soule, and will: let vs vnderstand that hereby we be warned, that if we submit not our selues wholly vnto God, it happeneth for want of considering the good things that hee hath bestowed vpon vs. For if wee feele him liberall, as hee sheweth himselfe towards vs: surely it will drawe vs wholly vnto him. So then let vs consider, that Gods making of vs so excellent as to haue his image printed in vs, was notto any other end, thā y we should do him homage for them, & by that meane be y more moued to loue him, & to keepe our selues well from desling so precious gifts, as reason, will, discretion, & all y rest of the powers of our soules which he hath guē vs. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remember vpon this place.

But yet herewithall wee must marke also the thing that I haue tolde you heretofore: that is to wit, that God will not be serued by constraint, but of free loue. He could say, Thou shalt honour thy God, thou shalt obey thy God, thou shalt feare thy G O D: and so hee doeth in other textes, and it is good reason that it should be so: but he speaketh exprefly of loue. And why? To shewe that if our seruing of him bee by constraint, so as wee goe to it against our wils: though wee honor him neuer so much, and doe all that is possible to glorify his name: yet if the same proceede not of loue, so as our heart yeeld vnto him freely and without gaine saying: hee vtterly disalloweth it, and such seruice is not acceptable vnto him, for he loueth him that giueth with a free will and pure affection, as sayth Saint Paul treating of Almesdeedes. Seeing then that God loueth him which giueth with a chearefull courage: thereby hee sheweth that if a man should spend all his goods, yet should it not boote him at all as to Godward, vnlesse hee haue a delight in well doing. And why? Because God hath commaunded it, and wee ought about all things to desire that hee be glorified, that his righteousnesse be obeyed, that hee be exalted at our handes, that hee reigne ouer vs, and that we be his people in very deede. Ye see then that the chiefe ioy which wee should haue to incline vs to doe well, is a hartie and free affection. And that is the cause why the worde Loue was playnely set downe in this text.

Notwithstanding, God will not haue vs to loue him as our fellowe: but hee will haue vs to loue him, honor him, and serue him as our God. And therefore let vs marke well, that if wee will obserue Gods lawe as we ought to doe: we must not consider him alonely in the degree of a maister, thereby to yeelde him reuerence: but we must also set before vs the title of father, and assure our selues that Gods intent is to win vs to him by gentlenesse, that our heart may bee as it were tyed vnto him, according to this saying of his by his prophet, If I be your maister, where is my feare? and if I be your father, where is my loue? In deede he setteth downe honor in that place, to betoken that a seruant ought to feare his maister: but yet immediatly after hee setteth downe the worde Loue also, of purpose to shewe what honour the childe yeeldeth to his father.

And therefore let vs remember, that the first point of seruing God aright, is to bee led vnto him, yea and to be led thither vpo knowledge of this worde Sauour, so as we couet about all things to be so knit vnto him, as all our ioy, contentation and rest bee there, that by that meane we may no more be giuen to the things that are contrarie to his righteousnesse. And that is the cause why wee say, that we must first know Gods grace and goodnesse, before we can serue him. For as for such as serue God for feare of being damned, not knowing that hee will be their sauiour: what doe they? They seeme to inforce themselues greatly forward: but in deede they drawe cleane backe. Though they breake both their armes and their legges, yet are they neuer the forwarder. And for that cause is it sayde in the hundred and thirtieth psalme, Because the Lord hath bin mercifull, and men haue found him gentle and gracious: therefore is hee feared and dreaded. In deede the world thinketh to serue G O D well enough, without knowing him, and wee see that the Papistes doe this and that vpon such opinion. But what for that? In the meane while they haue no trust in God, they neuer knewe his will nor his louing kindenesse: and therefore are they alwayes in terror and vnquietnesse.

True it is that they yeelde some outward seruice vnto God: but all that cuer they doe is not worth a pin, insomuch that God reiectes euen their keeping of the Lawe: for wee must be led by loue and by a franke and free goodwill, as I sayd afore. And how may that be done? Euen by knowing God to be our father and Sauiour, as I alledged out of the text of malachie, and as is yet better expressed in this verse of the psalme, that wee must first know Gods mercy, and rest thereupon, or else wee can neuer feare him, and come neere him to serue him. That is the true & plaine meaning of this text, and so must wee apply it.

Moses hauing spoken after that fashion, addeth now, that the Lawe must bee so deare vnto vs, as to take it for our chiefe treasure. And forasmuch as wee be too much subiect to the seeking of the corruptible things of this world, and forget God out of hand, and withdrawe our selues too farre from him: hee sayth, that men must haue Gods lawe continually in their sight, and make as it were a Headroll thereof, as if a woman were attyred after the auncient maner, with borders on her head, bracelets on her armes: or as if a man should make borders of the about his house, or ingrauers vpon the doores of his house, so as Gods glorie might be euery where. And whereas hee speaketh heere of frontlets and bracelets, and of painting and ingrauing of Gods lawe vpon doore postes: it is to shewe that whereas men giue themselues to vaine glory in decking and attyring of themselues, and the same turneth them away from God: they must make all their deckings of Gods Lawe: that must bee their Jewels. Like as if a man or a woman haue a costly Jewell vpon their finger, and take pleasure therein: in steade thereof they should haue Gods Lawe continually before their eyes, so as a man should no sooner looke vpon himselfe, no though it were but vpon his nayles, but it should come to his minde to thinke, Thou hast a maker who fashioned thee, and whose will it is that thou shouldst serue him by yeelding thy selfe wholly to his obedience. Although thou bee a sillie vnprofitable creature: yet will thy God be glorified in thee. Thus yee see howe we must make all our deckings of Gods Lawe. Again, in stead of the beautifying of houses, with things of goodly shewe and furniture, to the ende it may be saide, this is the house of some man of estimation: the Lawe of God must be written vpon it. Now wee see what the meaning of Moses was.

But by the way we haue here to bewaile  $\text{f}$  corruption of mankinde . For it is manifest , that euen of the holyest thinges in the world , men take occasion to mocke God , and to marre all , and to turne them to a contrary ende . As how ? This saying , Hearken O Israell , the Lorde thy God is one onely God , is a notable saying , and worthe to be had in remembrance aboue all others . For it serueth to magnify the liuing GOD , that hee might bee discerned from the idols that haue bin forged , to the ende that our religion might be certeine and infallible . Then is it as excellent a lesſon , as a man shall reade any : and yet what haue the Iewes which were Gods people fared the better for it ? They haue turned it into a charme and forcerie , imagining y<sup>e</sup> speaking of those words would make a coniuration , lyke to the Agnus Dei in poperie , and to such other geugawes as the papists hang about their necks , in the which Agnus Dei they write y<sup>e</sup> beginning of Saint Iohns Gospell and I wote nor what els , wherewith they beare themselves in hand that they can coniure both God and the diuill . As much haue the Iewes done with this lesſon : inſomuch that they haue abused euen the very letters of it . There is one letter (say they) which importeth foure , betokening that God is Lorde of the fowre partes of the worlde . They haue taken otherſome according to their numbers and ciphers , to signify things which they haue deuised of their owne brayne . And in the meane while they had no reuerence to God , but would that hee should haue no more power nor authoritie ouer them . And that doe they shewe full well , not ortely by their despising , shunning , & reiecting of Iesus Christ , who ought to haue reigned ouer them : but also by their crucifying of him in despite of God , and by their turning away from the saluation that had bin promised them . And euen as much haue they done with this text . For they haue turned to pride and ambition the thing that is sayd here , as wee see how our Lord Iesus Christ in the Gospell vpbraideth the Scribes and Pharises with their large gardes , inſomuch that if the common people had any narrow garde of wryting , wherein the commaundements were set downe , these great Rabbies ( to the intent to become holier than other men , ) had gardes of an handbreth vpon their garments , wherein Gods lawe was written in great letters , that it might be seene a great way off . O , those were holy persons , for they had Gods lawe written in great letters , whereas the common people had it in small . They knew the lawe much better , and therefore was God much magnified in them . Nay , contrariwise , such vaine bragging was a flatte mocking of God : but yet it was the fashion of all men , as I haue declared already . And by this which befell the Iewes , let vs take vnderstanding and instruction , that the same must serue vs to behold that we bee so froward , that whereas God laboreth to drawe vs familiarly vnto him , we despise it , and in stead of profiting our selues by the doctrine that is set before vs , wee turne it vnto laughter , wee vnhalowe it lyke Churchrobbers , and wee turne quite and cleane contrarie to his meaning , so as it had bin better for vs neuer to haue heard one worde of his mouth . Thus yee see what wee haue to marke .

But now herewithall we must come to the meaning of Moses , which I haue touched shortly already . Remember these wordes sayth hee . And howe : By talking and conferring of them in thy house , and as thou goest abroad . Here wee see well how our Lordes meaning was not to be honored with gardes of garments and such other thinges , but to haue his lawe printed in his peoples heartes , and to haue it kept alwayes fresh in remembrance . Therefore let vs consider , that whereas wee haue so much needeleſſe talke our Lord will haue his people exercised in talking and conferring vpon his lawe , whether it be in resting , or in iourneying , or when they be at home in their howſes . If wee minded this warning well , surely it would be a bridle to reine vs backe and to withdrawe vs from the vnprofitable talke whereunto wee bee so much giuen . For wee can spend , I say not some forenoone , but the whole day continually in light talke : but if wee speake but two or three wordes of God , by and by wee bee wearie and it greueth vs . Yet notwithstanding , this talking of him is not the chiefe poynt . For wee must come to this saying of the psalme , I beleue , and therefore will I speake . For oftentimes and most commonly , they that haue Gods lawe in their mouth and at their tongues end , haue it not at all in their heart and affection . Therefore wee must speake of Gods lawe , much more with our heartes than with our mouthes . But yee must we talke of it also , to edify our neighbors , that the father may teach his children and the maister his seruantes , to serue God . That is the cause why our Lord commaundeth men to talk of his Lawe : not to discharge themselves lightly of it , as though the whole matter lay in speaking of it : but to quicken vp and correct our vnlustineſſe , so as euery man help forward his neighbor , and drawe him with him , and the fathers and maisters in the meane while be careful to teach their children and seruantes , as I sayd afore . That is Moseses simple meaning when he speaketh here of talking either at home or abroad : namely that mens talke must alwayes be of Gods Lawe .

Psal. 16.10

Afterward here inſueth , show shall muse vpon it in thy heart . Herein wee see how our Lord rebuketh vs , and sheweth vs how fickle headed wee bee , inſomuch that if wee be not helde fast by diuers meanes , wee forget God his lawe out of hand . For what is the cause that he setteth as it were frontlets here before our eyes ? Wherefore is it that hee will haue vs to weare as it were Tablets , Ringes , and Bracelets : but for that whereas we bee wont to grace chiefly at such thinges , and to make a shewing of them , he will haue his own law to be set in them ? Now the excellentest part of man is his face and his eyes : and our Lorde wil haue his lawe to be there . Againe he will haue it vpon our handes : and we cannot doe any thing , but our handes must needs goe foremost still in it . Now our Lordes will is that wee

wc should not be able to stirre one finger, but we should be put in minde of his law by it. Hereby he sheweth vs (as I sayde afore) that if we haue not good store of bridles, we shall play the loose coltes: and if the lawe be not brought to our minde, and the remembrance thereof refreshed by many means: we wil soone haue forgotten it. Wee neede no more but to close our eye, and the things that wee had learned and which had bin tolde vs and retold vs afore, are streightways out of our thought. Let vs vnderstand therefore that our Lord blameth and condemneth vs in this text, for being so customably carried too and fro, and that hee must bee fayne to quicken vs vp, and to giue vs so many helps, if hee will enioy vs and haue vs to obeye hym. That is one thing which wee haue to marke vpon this text.

Besides this let vs marke also, that our Lord could not better haue rauced the vanities wherunto men and women are giuen in all their pretie toys and trifles, in atyring and decking themselves with gardes, imbroyderies, and borders and such other lyke things: God (I say) could not haue scorned such vanities better, thā by telling vs that in the meane while wee forget the chieftest poynt of all, which is the minding of his lawe which wee forget easily, to occupy our selues about vaine and vnprofitable things. And this is spoken chiefly to women, because they giue the selues ouer curiously to these nice attires and deckings. For if they considered that they should apply themselves to the minding of Gods lawe, they would not be so much occupied in decking or rather in disguising of themselves: but they would rather consider which is the true decking of faithfull women: that is to wit, to feare God, to liue honestly, mildly, chafely, and soberly, to gouerne well their householdes, and to occupy themselves in bringing vp of their children. This is a beautifull attyre, and such a one as is precious in Gods sight, as Saint Peter termeth it. So then let vs marke, that whereas the worldlings doe decke and disguise themselves, and make so many deuises to please and allure one another: we must beware that wee take the true decking which wil make vs acceptable before God: that is to wit, that wee beare his Lawe in minde, and can glory that wee haue a God which guideth and gouerneth vs accordingly as it hath pleased him to receiue vs for his people, and to giue vs his word to rule our lues by.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs so to seele them, as we may learn to mislike the more and more, and to flee for refuge to his mercie, being vtterly voyde of all trust in any strength of our owne: And yet notwithstanding that wee may not leaue to enforce our selues, so as we may be the more giuen to his seruice, knowing that wee be not yet come to perfection by a great way, no nor yet to the midde way thereof: and therefore that these warnings which hee giueth vs may inflame vs more and more to yeelde him praye al our life long, by acknowledging the benefites which hee hath bestowed vpon vs, and the nobilitie and worthinelle which hee hath giuen vs about all creatures, that we may learne thereby to withdrawe our selues from all the vaine and transitorie things of this world, and to seeke the spirituall and heauenly things, to the intent that being knit vnto our God, wee may not onely withstand all worldly temptations, but also drawe our neighbors from the same by our example. That it may please him to graūt this grace not only to vs but also to al. &c.

On Wednesday the xxiiij. of Iuly. 1555.

The xlvij. Sermon, which is the third vpon the sixth Chapter.

10 And when the Lord thy God shal haue brought thee into the land, which he sware to thy fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob, to giue thee great and goodly Cities which thou buildedst not:

11 And houses full of all maner of goods which thou filledst not: and welles which thou diggedst not: and vineyardes and Oliuegardens which thou plantedst not: and thou shalt haue eaten and filled thy selfe:

12 Then beware, least peradventure thou forget the Lord which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage.

13 Thou shalt feare the Lorde thy G O D, and serue him, and swaere by his name.

He haue seene how it was Gods wil that his law should alwayes bee before his peoples eyes, and that the remembraunce thereof should bee renewed by all meanes. For this cause hee commaunded them to set gardes vpon their garments, and to wryte the sentences of the Lawe therein, and to weare them in stead of bracelets, and other ornaments, and to haue the in their cappes and in the rest of their apparell, and to ingraue them vpon the postes of their houses.

houses. All this reheatfall tended to this end, that because men are too forgetfull of G O D S Lawe, they must haue certein helpes and meanes to put them in minde thereof: and specially that whereas the children of this worlde are curious in decking themselves, and in making themselves braue to the eye, and giue themselves to pompe when they bee rich: in stead thereof G O D woulde that his faithfull ones should decke them selues with holinesse of lyfe. For it is not enough for them to beare skroules of the lawe aboute them vnlesse all of it be referred to the right end.

Now we must also cal to minde what hath bin toucht. d. aforesayd: namely that if we were as wel inclined to thinke vpon God and vpon the doctrine which hee setteth forth vnto vs, as were requisite: we should not neede any other helpes. Therefore it is a token that wee bee full of vanities, and that our wittes wander too and fro, and that it is very harde for vs to settle our selues vpon God.

But yet notwithstanding wee shall bee neuer the more excused for all that. Secing then that wee be easily led away after our owne folles, and there are a great number of temptations in this world to beare our eyes withal, and to wipe Gods law out of our hearts and mindes: it standeth vs in hand to take the more payne in the thing that is commaunded vs here, namely that wee make a continual exercise of returning vnto God, so as it be our whole studie, and that whereas wee see the vnbeleuers carryed away in their owne follies, wee seeke vnto God, to settle our selues vpon him, and to referre all our thoughtes and desires vnto him, so that euen in making miith wee haue him before our eyes, and in our remembrance, to the end he may be glorified in the things that wee take pleasure in.

And now Moses addeth, that when the people shall bee come into the land that was promised them, & inioy the goods that are there: (for we know it was a fruitful & fat land:) they must beware that they forget not him to whom they were beholden for all things, but rather honor and serue him, and shewe themselves to holde all things of him who is their God. Now at the first sight it might seeme superfluous to warn the people that they should not forget the Lord their God, after they had possessed the land that was giuen them to inherite. For is it possible: y a people which hath bin guided by the hand of God, and seene so many miracles, should turne away, yea and bee so blinded, as to bee vnmindefull of him to whom they were so much bound? That were against nature. But what? The vnthankfulnesse of men is so great, that notwithstanding all the benefites which they haue receiued at Gods hand, yet they cease not to defie him, or at leastwise to shew that they haue no further care of y things that were tolde them. True it is that here Moses speaketh to the people of Israell. But yet in that people hee setteth vs forth a looking glasse, wherein to shewe vs our frowardnesse in that we cannot finde in our heartes to doe homage to God for all his benefites, but that all that euer hee bestoweth vpon vs is lost, because it is misbestowed, vnlesse wee be exhorted and pricked forward to doe our duetic better. Therefore let vs not thinke that this doctrine was written for the lewes onely: but let vs rather vnderstand that it is directed vnto vs also.

Howbeit, first of all wee must make what Moses meant: and afterward the doctrine conteyned therein must bee applyed to the instruction of our selues. When thou art come (saith hee) into the land which the Lord thy God promised to thy fathers Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. Moses speaketh exprefely of Gods promise, to the intent that the people might bee thoroughly perswaded, that their going into that land was not by haphazard, nor their winning of so many victories against their enemies was by good fortune (as they terme it) or by their owne strength and pollicie: but that it was wrought by Gods owne hand, and all came of his power. True it is that the wonders which were shewed at that time, were sufficient enough to haue made them beleue, so as they needed not to haue sought any further.

When the people sawe Gods scourges vpon the Egyptians, was it not a sure recorde of the diuine and heauenly power which shewed it selfe there? Again, whereas they passed the red sea, whereas they were guided with a cloud by day and with a fire by night, whereas they were fed with manna from heauen, and whereas they sawe the cloud vpon the tabernacle which was a token of Gods presence & maiestic: should they not haue concluded that God bare rule ouer them and shewed himselfe to be their guide? yes: and yet for all that, Moses beholding the hardheartednesse of the people, thought it not enough to tell them of the things which were seene at that time, but also alledged the promise that had bene made fowre hundred yeres afore.

Behold (sayth hee,) the Lorde thy G O D will bring thee into the land of Chanaan. If thou aske what prooffe thou hast that it is Gods hand: thou needest no long disputing of the matter, thou knowest what promise was made thereof. This heritage the was assigned vnto you aforehand by the free goodnesse of your God, euen before you were borne. If God had giuen this land simply to the people of Israell without promising of it before: it had bin somewhat the darkefomer.

But seeing that G O D made an agreement and as it were a solemne leagie with Abraham, saying, this is the signe that I enter into couenant with thee and with thine ofspring this day, namely that thou shalt inherite this land: howbeit, that shall not bee presently, but thou thy selfe must liue and dye there as a stranger, and also they that come of thee and their ofspring lykewise, must bee sojourners in a straunge lande, and bee there vexed and grieved with continual tyrannie: neuertheless they shall returne thence at the end of foure hundred yeeres, and then will I performe my promise: Doth it not appeare by these sayings, that God wrought in that behalfe? Should any further prooffe be sought thereof? may not euen blinde folkes feele it with their hands? We see then for what purpose Moses alledgeth here y<sup>e</sup> promise y<sup>e</sup> had bin made to Abraham, Isaac, & Iacob: yea and Gods rehearsing of his promise againe, was a larger prooffe thereof, so as the thing became the better known and of more authoritie. In dede the people are also put in minde therewithall, that this inheritance befall them not by their owne policie, nor for any worthynesse that was in themselves, nor was conquered by their own power or strength, but was giuen them freely of God, so as it becometh them to acknowledge that they had receiued it, and that their possessing of it was not as though they had obtained it by their owne power. The Lord (sayth hee) promised you this land. At what time? when none of them was yet borne or bred. Then could they not haue earned or deserued aught. And therefore it behoued them to acknowledge that Gods onely free gift was the cause of it, and that they obeyed not any thing but through his freebestowed mercie, because it pleased him so to doe. For men will neuer sufficiently perceiue themselves bound vnto God, vntill they bee vtterly bereft of all their merites and that it bee shewed them that they haue not any thing of their owne to bring, but that it is God which doth all, not of duetie, but of good will. Men must bee fully perswaded of that, or else they will neuer duely perceiue themselves to be bound vnto God.

And whereas Moses speaketh afterward of the great and goodly Cities, of howses full of gooddes, of vineyardes, oluegardens, and of all other commodities: it is to make the people to vnderstand the better, that God delt not nigardly with them, but had powred forth his treasures, to the intent that they should be the more prouoked to serue him. And that is another point well worthe to be marked. For so long as God dealeth with vs but after the ordinarie maner, wee will not perceiue that heis willing to be our father, because wee consider but the order of nature and stand nusing therupon. That then was the cause why God voutfaced to adde the full measure of all liberalitie, by handling his people as is shewed here, so as hee gaue them not a meane land, that was neither barrein nor abundant, of which sort some are to be found: but hee gaue them faire and strong cities, howses thoroughly furnished, and groundes thoroughly manured. Seeing it is so: the people ought to haue bin the more prouoked to acknowledge, that seeing God had shewed himselfe so bountifull, it became not them to fall a sleepe, but to know him to whom they were so greatly bound. And it is sayd expressly heere, that the people should possess the things which they had not made, or gotten to themselves. There is not any thing of thine owne labor, sayth hee. Diddelt thou build the howses wherein thou dwellest or shalt dwell? (For hee speaketh here of the time to come.) When ye come into the land, yee shall finde fayre howses, and that of other mens building: ye shall finde all maner of houfholde stuffe and necessaries ready made: yee shall finde vineyardes and Oluegardens thoroughly planted: ye shall want nothing: yee shall finde welles ready digged: for that land had not water at will. We know what payne and distresse the holy fathers were driuen vnto, onely to haue water for themselves and their cattell, namely how they were driuen from place to place, yea and that not for any pretious things, but when they digged some poore pitte, their neighbors came and draue them from it. Not without cause therefore is here expresse mention made of pittes or welles, to shewe that the people should finde all commodities there, without the putting too of one finger to take any paynes for them.

And therefore hee addeeth, take good heede that thou forget not the Lord thy God when thou art full. This is the chiefe matter which we haue to wey. For Moses doth vs to vnderstand, that me are a kin to restie horses: if they be ouerpampered, they fall to kicking, and will not be handled nor ordered any more: and this similitude is set downe more expressly in the two and thirtieth chapter. But in this place hee sheweth playnly, that ouermuch ease is the cause of willfull stubbornesse: so that if God hath once pampered vs, wee forget him, and play the drunkardes so as we cannot order our selues in such wise in the inioying of the benefites which hee bestoweth vpon vs, as to yeelde him thanks for them and to serue him the more effectually, but contrariwise we deuoure them vp with such greedinesse and excesse, as our nature becometh vtterly brutish, and God hath no more authoritie ouer vs, but wee beare our selues in hand that wee could well enough forbear him. Yee see then that men become brutish through pleasures and abundance of wealth. And that is the thing which Moses hath noted here, in saying: take good heede that thou forget not the Lord God when thou art full.

Finally hee concludeth, that wee must feare God, and honor him, and take him for our GOD, which thing he betokeneth by this word Sweare. For whereas y<sup>e</sup> people are commanded to sweare by the name of God, as wee shall see more fully hereafter: it serueth to shewe how it was his wil that they should keepe the Religion that was giuen them by the lawe, and not mingle it with any idolatrie, so as they might throughly protest that they had not any moe Gods than that one which had shewed himselfe by his lawe and word. That is the effect of the matter which is contained here. In dede the land of Chanaan which had bin promised to the fathers of olde time, and giuen to the people of Israell by so many miracles, had more to be considered in it, than haue the countries wherein the faithfull dwell at this day. For wee bee not seded in them by the mightie and miraculous hand of God, as it shewed it selfe in those dayes . But yet for al that wee must come backe to this poynt, that none of vs commeth into this worlde by his owne power, and that our dwelling in it is the singular benefite of God . For there shoulde bee no earth at all, if God listid not to assigne it vnto men .

It is for our sakes that the seas & waters withhold themselves: or else they would ouerflowe and drowne the whole earth . And therefore although there were no more but the order of nature, it were a miracle great enough to shewe vs that God vouchsafeth to nourish vs here . We know what is sayd in another text which we shall see hereafter: that is to wit, that God did spread out his meetelins ouer all the nations of the world, so as hee deuided the countries and did set the boundes of them . Then let vs vnderstand, that wee cannot bee in any nooke or corner of the world, without Gods mainteyning of vs there, nor haue any place to dwell in, which is not giuen vs of his free fauour . And as the land of Chanaan was dedicated to the seruice of God at that time: so is the whole world consecrated therunto at this day . For it is sayde that our Lorde Iesus Christ is a king, and that hee hath enlarged his dominion from the one end of the worlde to the other . Wherefore let vs vnderstand, that our Lordes setting of vs here and his mainteyning of vs here, is to receiue such praye at our handes as hee deserueth .

Now it is certaine that wee must liue of our labor, and most men that not haue the world at will, but a number haue much a doe to get bread, and God will handle them very hardly: but yet howsoeuer they fare, one bit of bread is enough to make them beholden to the Lorde . Yea and although men labor for their liuing: yet must they be fully resoluod of this which we shall see hereafter, namely that it is not their labor that findeth them, but the blessing of God, whereby the children of Israell were fed in the wilderness . True it is that the falling of the Manna from heauen was a more manifest token . But yet howsoeuer the case stand, God hath left a continuall present, that by what meanes soeuer wee liue: it is hee that mainteyneth vs, and it is at his hand that wee receiue both sustenance and nourishment and all that euer wee haue . Yee see then that no man can exempt himselfe from seruing of his God, and from shewing by our deeds that we thinke our selues beholden vnto him, both for our life and for all things belonging therunto . Again the more bountifully and liberally that G O D dealeth with vs, the more ought wee to be prouoked to serue him . Therefore let euery of vs on his owne behalfe learne to beare Gods benefites well in minde . Let not the poore murmur though they wot not oftentimes which way to turne them: but let them assure themselves that G O D will so blesse the little which they haue, as it shall well enough suffice them to liue therewith . And as for the richer sorte which haue more abundance; let them vnderstand that Gods shewing of himselfe so gracious towards them, is to the ende they shoulde the better knowe him and honor him .

For although the riche sorte may now and then alledge that they haue taken much payne in gathering the things which they possesse, or that they haue atteyned to them by some other meane, and that they haue them by succession from their fathers and auncesters: Yet will not God lose his right, for (as I sayd afore) it is his blessing that maketh men riche . Therefore they that possesse most must knowe that Gods being liberal to them after that fashion, is to the ende to binde them the streitlyer to him, and to allure them the more to serue and honour him as their father, yea and as a kinde-hearted father which desireth nothing but to giue his children their fill of all good things, so as they may not want any thing .

Thus haue wee heere a generall rule: which is, that after as G O D giueth vs ease and the commodries of this world, so must wee bee the more disposed to loue him: for that gentleness of his draweth vs vnto him . And when we haue so tasted of his goodnesse and found saouour in it: needes must there bee too great vnkindenesse and charlithnesse in vs, if wee bee not moued to loue him as we ought to doe . And that must be not only in our eating & drinking, but also in all things that concerne this present life . As for example, if G O D giue vs peace and quietnesse, while others are in trouble or at warres: if wee bee vnexed of plagues and diseases, while wee see a number of other folkes afflicted: let vs vnderstand that our Lord allureth vs gently vnto him, and would faine winne vs by such kindenesse, and therefore if wee vouchsafe not to come vnto him, wee shall pay right deare for the things that we shall haue receiued at his hand . True it is that God requieth not any payment at our handes: for we haue not any thing to giue him: but yet will he haue vs to bee thankfull towards him for our duties sake . If wee doe not so: it must bee layd to our charge, that being not his children, wee haue treacherously robbed him of his goods .

For what right haue wee to the inioying of them, but that hee is our father? And if wee honor him not, dare wee say wee bee of the number and company of his children? And that is the cause why Saint Paul is so hotte against such as returne not vnto G O D when hee spareth them . What meane yee you wretches (sayth hee?) know yee not that yee abuse the great treasures of Gods goodnesse? For his dealing so gently with you, is as an alluring of you to repentance . True it is that G O D doth sometimes chastise vs sharply, to waken vs and to make vs knowe our faultes, that wee may bee sorry for them: But yet for all that, if hee deale mildly with vs, it is as much to say as he woulde faine winne vs by friend-friendly meanes, as hath bin said already. Nowe if this can beare no sway with vs, wee shew our felues to be too too leud, and y<sup>e</sup> wee despise Gods goodnesse, yea and that wee make but a skorne and mocke of it. And therefore must horrible vengeance hang ouer our heades, according as S. Paul threatneth in the foresaide place, to al such as abide hard harted and stubborne in their vices, when God beareth with them. And nowe let vs looke to our felues. For although euery mans state be not so wealchie as hee would wish: yet are wee handled v<sup>y</sup> gently in respect of others. What remaineth but that our Lord should enter into account with vs, if wee on our side haue no lust to serue him, and that the case and rest which hee giueth vs, be not applied to shewe that wee take him for our tather in deede, forasmuch as hee handleth vs as his children? If wee (say I) acknowledge not this: then shall not our vnthankfulnesse escape vn- punished.

Allo by the way let vs not forget howe Moses exhortheth heere the people of Israel to beware that they forget not the Lord when they were well fedde and grown full. But seeing that wee be inclined to such frowardnesse as well as they, let vs consider our owne disease, that wee may seeke remedie for it. For though there were no more but this one point: it were enough to occasion men to mislike of themselves, and to be ashamed. For wee bee as monsters against kinde: insomuch that whereas God offereth himselfe to vs, and reacheth vs his hande, so as if wee sawe him in his owne person, wee could haue no greater assurance of the fatherly loue that hee beareth vs, than that hee is so liberall that wee may haue our fill of his benefites: yet notwithstanding wee forget him euen when hee putteth vs in minde of him, not onely by speaking to vs, but also by shewing vs by experience that hee knitteth himselfe to vs, and hath a care of vs in watching ouer vs, not onely for the sauing of our soules, but also for the nourishing of our bodies, feeding vs like little babes, and as it were stretching out of his wings ouer vs, as a hen doeth ouer her chickens, as comparison is made in the holy Scripture. Seeing that God giueth vs such proofe of his goodnesse, and also knitteth himselfe vnto vs, of purpose to garber vs together and to take vs vp to himselfe: were it not a diuine madnesse to forget him, and to turne our backes vpon him, and to shut our eyes against him, yea and to conceiue so excessiue rage as to say, wee wil not thinke vpon him that seeketh vs, is not this a diuine madnesse? Yes: and yet is there not any of vs all, that can excuse himselfe to be vn- subiect to such naughtinesse. So then, this text ought of right to humble vs, and to make vs ashamed afore GOD, because wee see wee be so malicious and spitefull as not to regarde God when hee is neere vs, nor to wake and open our eyes that wee might see his goodnesse when it is shewed vnto vs, yea euen after so euident and easie a manner. That is the thing which wee haue to remember. True it is that wee make common prouerbes of it, but in the meane while no man thinks vpon it. Wee say that nothing marreth men but ease: Wee say that ouermuch welth maketh men vnweldie: and yet in the meane while the same thing be- falleth vs, and none of vs findeth fault with him- selfe. And although God preuent vs and blame vs, and doe vs such shame as to make vs heare of it: yet will not wee thinke vpon it. Notwith- standing it is not written in vaine, When thou hast thy fill of the benefites of thy God, beware that thou forget him not. Wherefore let vs marke, that pro- peritie of it selfe ought to prouoke vs to resort vnto God, because it is all one as if he should reach out his hands and armes vnto vs. Like as when a father offereth his childe a thing and sayth to him, Come hither, and holdeth out his armes: so likewise Gods desire in bestowing his benefites vpon vs, is nothing else but to see vs quiet, as it were in his lap or vnder his wings. Nowe then, if wee haue an eye to the order of nature: prosperitie should draw vs to God, and make vs well minded to serue him: and yet notwith- standing, wee see how wee despise both GOD and nature and all kindenesse, and become woorse than wilde beastes. For whereas GOD allureth vs to him after that gentle manner: wee turne our backes vpon him, and in stead of coming to him, retyre from him: nay (which woorte is) wee kicke ag: inste him. For it is not inough for men to despise Gods goodnesse, and to stop their eyes, and to deuour al y<sup>e</sup> good things which they haue, without knowing who giueth them: but also they proceede so far as to rush against him, and to gnashing their teeth at him, and to spurning at him. If a man should liken vs to swine, wee woulde thinke hee did vs greate wrong. And yet are swine contented with rooting in the ground, to fill themselves with the Acornes that are fallen downe, and they be not so feare as to fall to rending downe of the tree, they leape not vp against it, they bite not the boughes, they haue their groines hanging alwaies downward. As for vs we play in deede the swine, because we haue alwaies our groines in the earth: insomuch that When we cram our felues neuer so full, there is none of vs which listeth vp his mind on highe to saye, it is Gods hande that giueth vs this thing: but either we impute al things to our owne policie, or we thinke that the game cometh of our felues, or wee imagine that it happeneth vs by some chaunce, and to be short wee neuer thinke of God. But besides this, wee fall to spurning of him, we caste out our furye and rage against him, we strike at him with our tusks, wee withstand him stubbornly to the vttermoste of our power, and we could finde in our hartes that his iustice were vtterly abolished. For wee treade it vnder foote, as much as in vs lyeth. We see then that wee be woorse than swine, and woorse than the vilest brute beastes that are, yea wee be euen vnkindly monsters.

But behold, our God calleth vs to him by this exhortation, wherein wee see the patientnesse which hee vseth towards vs. If a father had handleed his child as gently as could be, farre about the common maner, and the child should thereupon growe proude and despise his father: woulde not the father beare him such displeasure, as to disdaime to open his mouth to him, to tell him of any thing bicaufe of his despising of him after that fashion? Yes. Then is it most certaine that wee be much lesse to bee borne with when it falleth out, that wee recist GOD who is more worth than all the fathers in the world, without comparison. So then, should he not haue iust cause to let vs alone as wee bee, when he seeth that wee haue no minde of him, and that euen his benefites are an occasion vnto vs to dispise him, so as wee turne them the cleane contrarie way fro the lawfull vse wher-vnto hee had ordained them? Might hee not iustly leaue vs in that state as cursed creatures and vnwoorthy that cuer hee should open his mouth to speake to vs? Yes: and yet for all that he commeth to seeke vs. Beholde (saith he) I knowe yee bee inclined to forget mee, when I haue fed you well and fat, and the more abundance that you haue, the more ye refuse to come to me, and therefore ye deserue to be shaken off, & that I should neuer remember you any more. Yet notwithstanding, my desire is not that you should perish, but that ye should returne vnto mee. What naughtinesse or lewdnesse so euer Iespie in you, I am contented to take you still for my children, I will preuent the vices whereto you bee giuen: therefore take heede, ye forget me not when you be at your ease. Seeing that our Lord beareth with vs after that fashion, ought it not to breake our hearts though they were harder than stone?

So then, first of all let vs mistrust prosperitie. In dede we couet it, & for the loue thereof wee shun the things that are hard and combersome. If we suffer hunger and thirst, it grieueth vs, & we neuer leaue storming vntill God haue provided for it: but yet for all y it would be more for our profit oftentimes, to indure hunger than to haue abundance. Howloeuere the case standeth, whensoeuer God bestoweth his benefites vpon vs, let vs haue prosperitie in suspitiõ, as I said afore. Not that it ought of it selfe so to deceiue vs & blindfold our eyes, as wee should not knowe God: but for that it behoueth vs to percieue our owne nature to be so sinfull and euill giuen, as we cannot profit our selues by any of the benefites which we receiue at Gods hand. Yea and we see howe euen Salomon was afraide to bee ouerriche, for feare of aduancing himselfe against God, least he should despise him and forsake him. See here howe Salomon who was indued with so excellent giftes of grace, did neuerthelesse see the frailtie of man to bee such, that when he had all y his heart could wish, yet he might forget himselfe, & be ouersotted as he should fall to renouncing of God by aduancing himselfe against him. Now then, let vs lue in feare and aw, and if God giue vs not such abundance as we would desire, but doe cutte our morsels very small: let vs vnderstande that the same is for our benefite, in that wee haue neede to bee dyeted, for feare least fatnesse stoppe our eyes, and so make vs starke blinde. If wee thinke well vpon this, it will make vs to beare pouterie the more patiently. When wee want our pleasures and dellyghtes, when wee want our delicate morselles, and when wee want abundance to fill our selues withall: let vs knowe that our Lorde hath a regarde to holde vs in awe by that meane: for we shoulde bee in daunger of forgetting him, if we shoulde growe too fatte. And therefore when wee haue wealth at will, let vs bethinke vs thus why was it sayde to the people of Isracl, forget not thy GOD when thou hast thy fill? It was bicaufe men can not brooke their wealth, in so much that if they haue all that they haue neede of, yea and more too: they ouershoot themselves, they play the loose coltes, they arme themselves against GOD, and they haue no more care of him. Is the winde in that doore? Let vs learne to haue God alwayes before our eyes: so as if he deale graciously with vs and giue vs more than he doeth to other men, we may haue the skill to consider. See howe my God cometh to me, and to what intent but that I shoulde be as it were brooded vnder his wings, and lue obediently towards him, honouring him and referring my whole life to the glorifying of his holy name, so as it may bee as a bond whereby to binde mee straylyer vnto him, than others on whom hee hath not bestowed the lyke benefites as he hath doone vpon mee? Thus ye see that both poore and riche ought to tend to Godward, eche one according to his degree.

Againe, the comparing of the people of Isracl with our selues, ought to quicken vs vp yet better, to stand vpon our garde. It is said, when the Lorde thy GOD shall haue giuen thee thy fill. And of what goods? Of wyne which thou shalt haue gathered of other mens labours, and of all other things to lue by which thou haste not earned: when thy God shall haue fedde thee so of his owne free goodnesse, see thou forget him not. If the people of Isracl myght forget GOD hauing had most apparant recordes of the fauour that was shewed vnto them: what will become of vs which are helde here vnder the common order of nature? For wee haue no myracles to spurre vs forth to Godwarde: wee haue not a lande of Chanaan as a speciall elected and chosyn dwelling place. And therefore wee myght easlyer forget GOD than that people coulde, if wee shoulde not remember this present lessoon earely and late. And for as much as wee see our owne coldnesse, let vs learne to marche the spirituall benefites as well which God hath bestowed vpon vs heerefore as which we looke for heereafter, with the things that pertaine to the maintenance of this transitorie lyfe. True it is that although wee thought vpon no more than the things that are giuen vs for this bodie: yet were wee sufficiently bounde to God, yea and a hundred folde more than wee coulde discharge our selues of. Notwithstanding, besides all this, our Lorde giueth vs cause ynough to serue him, in that he graunteth vs so many spirituall benefites that belong to the fauouring

uing of our soules, whereof wee haue a portion alreadie. For whereof comnieth sayth? whereof commeth it that wee bee grafted into the bodie of our Lorde Iesus Christ by being baptized in his name, and that wee bee taken into Gods houfholde to bee auowed for his children? Whereof come these things but of his giuing of the spirit of adoption vnto vs, to the intent wee should call vpon him as our father, bee assured of the heauenly heritage, stande in awe of him, and liue according to his woord? And is not this dooing of his a speciall gift? Yes, and yet besides this, there is a lyfe prepared for vs, whereof wee haue but onely a taste as yet. For wee haue receiued (as yee would say) some first frutes of it; but wee shall not haue the full fruition of it, vntill God haue taken vs quite and cleane away to himselfe: it is ynough for vs as nowe, that we followe after it aloofe. Now then sith wee see that besides y things which our Lord giueth vs for our bodys, and for this transitorie lyfe, he hath also giuen vs benefites farre nobler and precioufer, as which doe leade vs to his euerlasting kingdome; must it not needes be that wee bee too lewd, if wee bee not drawen vnto him? And if wee take occasion to forget him for all his drawing of vs vnto him after that sort: what horrible damnation deserue wee for such vnthankfulnesse? Yee see then in effect, that the thing which wee haue to remember vpon this place, is that euerie of vs must bethinke him of the great number of benefites which hee hath receiued at Gods hand, and which wee receyue sil day by day: and that the same must stirre vs vp to put our selues continually foreward in going towards him, and teache vs to doe him homage for all things and in all respects. For we desyre all his benefites, if the end whereunto we reserue them, be not the honoring and glorifying of him.

Againe as touching the goods of this worlde: let vs vnderstand that our Lord cannot deuse to do so little for vs, or to giue vs so slender a portion of them, but we shall bee exceedingly much beholden to him though he doe no more: but if we perceiue that he dealeth gently with vs, and that hee beareth with vs: that ought to quicken vs and to prouoke vs so muche the more to come vnto him. And therewithall let vs beware that our vnthankfulnesse leade vs not to forget him, seeing it is not for nought that hee warneth his people heere by the mouth of Moses, to beware that they forgat him not whē they came to the inioying of the benefites which hee would bestowe vpon them. For wee haue examples thereof euen among our selues. I pray you hath not GOD wrought after a wonderfull fashion heere in planting of his Gospell, and moreouer vttered his blessings in such sorte, as they that perceiue them not, must spite of their teeth knowe that hee hath shewed his mightye arme? neuertheless I shall not neede as nowe to blame mens vnthankfulnesse, it is too apparant and openly known. For haue not many beene ashamed, yea and are not many ashamed still, to bethinke themselves of the miserable state out of which God hath deliuered them? Wee heare howe Moses sayeth heere, Forgett mostly GOD which brought thee out of the lande of bondage or bondmen. As if hee should say, when GOD shall haue graunted you the grace; to dwell quietly in the lande which he will giue you in possession: call to minde the state wherein yee haue beene, that yee maye acknowledge the good which GOD hath done you in deluering you from it. Heere then are two things done you to vnderstande: The one is, that the present benefites must prouoke ye to honour him that hath shewed himselfe so liberal towards you: [And the other is,] that the remembering of your former miseries, must alwayes humble you and holde you in awe, so as ye mount not vp in pryde to like well of your selues and to bee puffed vp, nor the prosperitie that is giuen ye make yec to forget what bondage yee haue beene in.

Now although this was spoken to the children of Israell, I pray you doeth it not fitly agree vnto vs? Ought not wee to consider well to whom wee bee beholden for this change, that God hath vouchsafed to giue his children (as ye would say) a quiet nest heere, so as they which were oppressed and ouerlayd with bondage and tyrannie, are nowe at full libertie, and inioy the things which they neuer hoped nor looked for? Seeing then that our Lord sheweth himselfe so gracious, are we on our side to bee excused, if wee feare him not? Though all the world might bee acquir, and all men scape Gods hande for misknowing him: yet deserue we to be condemned in that behalfe. But ought not the remembrance of all the miseries whereout wee bee scaped, to be so printed in our heartes as wee might liue continually in awe of our God? And although we haue prosperie as nowe, let it not puffe vs vp, nor minister occasion to vs to stand too much in our owne conceits. And generally, ought not all Citizens, Burgesies, yea and strangers of Geneua to bethinke themselves thus? It is not long agoe since wee were in suche bondage and tyrannie in this Citie, as there was no likelihood that euer we should haue scaped them. Nay rather wee seemed to haue beene as a people forlorne and past hope of recouerie: and yet hath our GOD looked mercifully vpon our miseries, and prouided remedy for them, and that after suche sorte as men would neuer haue thought, and as surmounted our desire. The Citizens and Burgesies that haue beene priuie to the calamities and miseries from the which GOD hath deliuered them, haue they not good cause to magnifie suche goodnesse and mercie? And as for the strangers whome God hath conueid hither as it were into his folde, ought they not to consider thus with themselves? Alas, wee were as in the gulfe of hell in the horrible desolation of the popedome, and God hath pyeied vs, insomuch that hee hath reached vs his hande to take vs thence and to bring vs hither into his Churche; that wee myght worship him with one common accord.

Now then let vs put this text in vre, seeing it was not written onely for the people of Israel, but also ought to serue vs now adayes more than euer it did. For seeing that the Gospell is preached vnto vs, should we looke for an Angel from heauen, to giue vs larger certaintie, when we see that God hath so ratified his doctrine alreadie for our instruction?

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to mortifie vs in all our affections and wicked lustes, and to renew vs so againe, that being gouerned by his holy Ghost, wee may desire nothing but to submit our selues vnto him, and to profite more and more in his doctrine, that wee may be settled in his feare and loue, euen vntill he haue rid vs of all imperfections and vices. And so let vs all say, Almightie God heauenly father, &c.

On Monday the xxix. of Iuly. 1555.

The xlviii. Sermon, which is the fourth vpon the sixth Chapter.

13 Thou shalt feare, &c.

14 Yee shall not walke after other Gods, I meane the Gods of the Nations which are round about you:

15 (For the Lord thy God is a ieaalous God in the middes of thee:) for feare least the wrath of the Lorde thy God bee kindled against thee, and he roote thee out of the Land.

EE haue seene heretofore, that the wellspring of all mischiefe is the forgetting of our God after he hath once shewed him selfe to vs, and that wee haue once knowe his wil. And this is the warning that Moses gaue vnto the people, that when they had once their fill of Gods benefites, they shoulde not forget him to whom they were so greatly bounde. Pursuing still the same matter, he addeth, Feare the Everlasting, your God. Wherein he sheweth what it is to mynde God aright: namely that it is not a bare musing or speaking of him onely, but a yeelding of his due honour vnto him. For it is not possible that we should thinke vpon God and not be moued to honour him vnlesse wee make an idoll of him. For when Gods maiestie cometh to our remembrance, must it not needs touche vs to humble our selues vnder the same? Ought wee not to vnderstande that he hath created vs with condition to bee wholly at this deuotion, and to dedicate our selues to his seruice? Then let vs marke, that the remembering of God importeth the reuertencing of him. And so, To feare GOD, and not to forget him, are two groundes which are so knitte together as they cannot be put asunder. Again, vnto Feare Moyses addeth Seruice, that is to say, the worshipping of him. For the terme Seruice betokeneth a dewtiful submission and reuerence, when men humble themselves before GOD, and yeeld him the honour that is dew to him to serue him withall, as is sayde of it heere. Feare then goeth foremost: and from the same feare proceedeth the dewtiful submission that we yeeld vnto him. I tould you that it is all one as if wee shoulde protest, that wee hold our life and all our goods of him, and that hee is worthy to hold vs vnder der his subiection, and that wee shoulde glorify him in all respectes, by referring all our workes to the honoring of him. Thirdly hee addeth that men should sweare by the name of God, which is a kinde of confessing of our fayth. For we haue seene heretofore, that suche as sweare (I meane as they ought to sweare) doe take their othe by the name of God, because that only hee is the sufficient witnesse of the truth, and will iudge all suche as turne his trueth into leazing. And so in this text Moses sheweth againe, that when wee haue worshipped GOD, we must also make a declaration of our fayth, so as men may perceiue vs to bee his people, and that hee rageth among vs, that wee bee free from all superstition and idolatrie, and that wee hold none other religion than that which the lying GOD hath giuen vs. That is the summe of the thinges contained heere.

Ierem. 5. 30.

Now, that wee may fare the better by this doctrine, wee muste vnderstande that GOD accepteth not any seruice at our handes, except that first and foremost we haue learned to feare him, that is to saye, to yeeld him suche reuerence, as to bee desirous to obey him, and to bee ruled by him, and to graunt him all superiouritie ouer vs. Then if men take neuer so much trauell in doing this and that, and in the meane while haue not the feare of GOD rooted in their hartes: all that euer they do is but vanitie and lost labour. And therefore let not our onely handes and feete bee applied to weldoing, neither let our induour bee so employed vpon outward workes, as the sayde roote shoulde not goe before: But let vs conceaue suche knowledge of GOD, as our whole seeking may bee to submit our selues vnto him, so as wee may saye, Seeing that GOD hath shadded vs, is it not reason that hee shoulde raigne ouer vs? Seeing we be his creatures, shoulde wee not offer our selues to him with al humility, that he might inioy vs? Seeing we hold all our goods of him, is it not reason that wee shoulde doe him homage for them, and that our life shoulde bee dedicated vnto him? Seeing he hath done vs the honour to bee our father, ought we not to yeeld him childely obedience? This is the point which we must beginne at, if we will keepe Gods Lawe, to please him well all our life long. Herewithall let vs marke what was saide afore: namely that in thinking vpon God, wee must not imagine a deade thing, but we must see his glorious maiestie before our eyes, that wee may be touched with the foresaide feare of him.

Moreouer, when wee feare our God, let vs learne also to worshippinge him. For if a man boast that hee feareth God, and in the meane while despise all his commaundementes, so as hee regardeth not to doe him honour to whom hee knoweth himselfe to bee subiect: is it not too grosse hypocrisie? Then let vs marke that the feare of God bringeth with it a desirousnesse to serue him, and to direct our whole life according to his commaundementes, and specially to yeelde him the duectifull submission which hee requireth in our worshippinge of him. For the meane whereby hee will be separated from ydoles, is that whereas the heathen and vnbelievers worshippinge Gods inuented of their owne braine: wee must shewe our selues to haue none other than the liuing God. And why? For by our yeelding of that honour vnto him, we reiect all the fancies that haue bene deuised by men. And therefore with our fearing of the Lorde, let vs learne to shewe by our deedes, that our whole desire is to serue him.

Nowe this seruice is properly inward: that is to saie, the chiefe pointes thereof are, that wee put our whole trust in him, that we acknowledge all our good things to come of him, that wee call vpon him with the saide trust, and that wee yeelde him the praise of all things that hee bestoweth vpon vs. This consisteth not in bare Ceremoniousnesse, but it lyeth altogether in the heart. And like as wee must worshippinge God by acknowledging all our good things to come of him, and that it is his onely goodnesse wherunto wee be beholden, both for this present life and also for the hope of our saluation: so on the other parte, wee must make men priuie to this our spirituall seruice which wee yeelde vnto God, that they may commonly beare recorde thereof and bee edified by our example. And all this respecteth the swearing that Moses speaketh of heere, saying, Thou shalt sweare by the name of thy God.

It shoulde seeme at the first blith, that heere is no great reason in this case: for we be but too forward and readie of our selues to sweare, without any furtherance thereto at Gods hand. Why then doeth Moses take order that wee shoulde sweare by the name of GOD? By all likelyhoode he shoulde rather haue commaunded vs to abstaine from all othes, and haue saide, Thou shalt not sweare in any wise at all. But (as I haue touched already) when othes be made lawfullye and according to Gods Lawe, wee shewe that it is hee whom wee worshippinge, and whose people wee couet to bee. Nowe let vs consider the right vse of othes. The right vse is, that if neede require that the truth must bee witnessell and warranted: then God must bee brought in as a pledge. As howe? Hee nameth himselfe the truth: and therefore in things vnknown to men, wee cannot haue a fitter witnessell than him. When a man sweareth faithfullie in a matter that is not known, saying that men would get the confession thereof at his hande: if hee take the name of God [ to witnessell ], it is to shewe that hee goeth to worke vnfeynedly: like as in a case of Iustice, if the Iudge beinge desirous to finde out the certaintie at a witnessell hande, doe cause him to * lise vp his hande vnto GOD: such swearing is as it were a doing of homage to GOD, as though the partie shoulde say: I knowe that GOD is the truth, and the iudge of mens hartes, and I protest heere that I speake as in his presence, euen in truth, knowing well that I shall yeelde him an account of my saying.

This yee see that the true vse of othes and swearing, is to warrant and ratifie the truth when it is not known to men, in which kinde of case God must bee set as Iudge, and the deponent must protest that hee speaketh as before him, to the intent there may be no counterfetting at all. But yet is it not ment that it is Lawfull for vs to sweare [ in all cases ], though wee say the truth. For it may be that the matters are not of such weight and importance, that Gods name shoulde be auouched: and then were it an vnhalloving or desling of it. But if the matter deserue it and require it: then doeth God lende vs his name, as hath bene declared in the last chapter before. He vseth such courtlesse towardes vs, as hee is contented that wee shall borrow his name to the ende that the truth may be warranted by his recorde.

Thus wee see nowe, after what sort it is lawfull for vs to sweare: that is to wit, when there is such a case as deserueth it, and againe when wee cannot otherwise satisfie men, to shewe them that the thing which wee say is certaine and true, that they ought to stande to it. After that manner doth God giue vs leaue to sweare by his name.

Nowe seeing it is so that hee which sweareth doeth call God to witnessell, and also submitt himselfe to punishment if hee shall haue abused his holy and sacred name: is it not a doing of homage vnto God? For our swearing by him is because he hath soueraine Dominion ouer vs, because it longeth to him to search our hartes, because hee must be our iudge, and because wee must yeelde account of our whole life before him.

1. Cor. 4. 4. 5

Seeing it is so that all that euer belongeth to the one onely God, is contened in an othe: must it not needes follow that it is a cursed superstition, when we sweare by the name of an ydol? Yes: for the honour that is due to the onely one God, is conueyed away to the creature. All they therefore which sweare by any other than by the name of God, doe shewe themselues vnworthy to bee his people, yea and that it is not long of them that they bereeue him not of his due homage. Nowe wee see howe it was not for nought that Moses hath tolde vs here, that wee must sweare by the name of God. And indeede when the prophets intende to shewe that the right Religion shalbe set vp euery where, they say that all tongues shall sweare by the name of God. The heathen men likewise had the same opinion, that their swearing by their ydols was a token of their seruing of them. And that was comprehended vnder the worship which they yeelded vnto them. If they had not imagined that there was some diuine maiestie in an ydoll: they woulde neuer haue sworne by the name of it. True it is that afterwarde they disguised their othes, so as they sware likewise by their kinges and princes: but that flatterie was an vnhalloving of Gods name, and they themselues knewe full well that they were blameworthy in so doing. For in going about to flatter men, they vniustly snatched to their ydols y<sup>e</sup> honour which they pretended to be due to them. Seeing that the Infidels knewe that an oth is a kinde of worshipping, shoulde not they that haue bene rightly taught, haue a much more surer rule? Yes: and therefore let vs marke wel, that Moses in commanding men to sweare by none but by the name of God, sheweth that therein they doe him the honour of acknowledging him for onely Iudge, and attribute vnto him the office of seruing mens hats and thoughts, and of bewraying the things that are secret and hidden, & finally acknowledge him to be the certaine and vnfallible truth, and therefore that he is able to be sufficient witness thereof. That is the effect of that which he ment to say.

Nowe hereby wee see, that such as sweare by the names of creatures are ydolaters, & rob God of the protestations which hee will haue men to make vnto him, inasmuch as hee will haue none to be so honored but himselfe. It is a common thing among the Papiests to sweare by the virgin Mary and by the rest of the saints. True it is, that men haue not thought that to bee so great euill: but although there were no more but that, yet there appeareth to bee manifest ydolatrie in so doing. For why? They that sweare by the virgin Marie, doe set her in Gods seate, as though it belonged to her to iudge the worlde: and a man coulde not deuise to doe greater wrong to our Lorde Iesus Christ, than to attribute that thing vnto her which is giuen vnto him alone, yea and giuen vnto him in respect that hee is God manifested in the flesh. Againe, they attribute vnto her the searching and knowing of mens secret thoughts, which title the holie scripture referreth peculiarly vnto God. Then is it horrible trecherie to sweare by the virgin Marie, or by any other creature. And would God this superstition were vtterly abolished among vs, that it might neuer be had in remembrance any more. But what? There are a number of wilfull folke, from whom that cursed custome cannot bee taken, and say what yee will to them, they continue doted in it, insomuch that if a man doe so point them to it with his finger, that as blinde as they bee they may see the meane howe to yeeld God his due honour: yet all is one with them, they will not in any wise bee made to beleue it. And why? Because the diuell hath bewitched them. Howsoever the case stande let vs note that all such as sweare by any other name than by the name of God, are ydolaters. And why? I tolde yee the reason before: namely because we cannot sweare by the name of God, but wee must confesse that he is our iudge, and that it is onely hee to whom it belongeth to knowe our secret thoughts, and to punish vs for falsifying his truth and for turning of it into a lye, whereas we should beare witness vnto it. And let vs marke that one kinde is put for all of that sort. By reason whereof wee bee commaunded, not onely to sweare by the name of God, but also to yeelde such confession of him before men, as we may shewe our selues to bee his people in deede, and that we woulde faine that hee shoulde reigne among vs, and that his name shoulde be glorified. And to let vs extend this lesson generally to the honoring of God, so that if the case concerne religion, wee giue not that thing to creatures, which our Lorde telleth vs is peculiar to himselfe. And therefore whensoever wee speake of the name of God, let vs yeeld him all that belongeth vnto him, let those things bee referred vnto him, and let vs not bereeue him of his honour, to giue it away by peeces and collappes to men and other creatures. This extendeth verie farre. Neuertheless it is ynough for vs to be admonished in faire wordes, that when Moses saith we must sweare by the name of God, it is as much as if he should say, my friends, like as yee worship the Lord, so must yee also maintaine his honour before men. Insomuch that if any man will compell you to transforme or change your religion, you shall not suffer it in any case whatsoever: but stande still in this vncorruptnes to say, we haue the one God who hath called vs to him, and both created and redeemed vs: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde bee his heritage, and continue wholly his. Thus yee see in effect what Moses meant to vtter in this text.

But heere wee see the frowardnesse that is in men, which is a thing greatly to be lamented. For an othe (as I saide) ought to be a recorde of y<sup>e</sup> honour which we yeeld vnto God: and wee see howe men cleane contrariwise will needes spite him in vsing of othes. First of all, when men sweare vnaduisedly, is it not a manifest despising of Gods name? It must be capt our when theris neither why nor wherefore. The talke shalbe but of mirth and laughter: and yet notwithstanding Gods name must bee mingled with it. And is not that too great and too shamefull a skorning of him? Nay moreouer, a mannes patience is no sooner stir'd, so as he entrench into a litle cholere: but by and by gods name must answer for it. In so much that it is not enough for them to come out their rage against their neighbours, but they must also step vp against God, and shew themselues wode and starke mad. And they be no simple othes which they vse: but othes match'd with blasphemie, whereby y<sup>e</sup> maiestie of Gods name is as good as trampled vnder foote. Othes are referred to nothing lesse than to the end that I spake of, (that is to wit to the glorifying of God among vs) when they be applied to so deuillith outrages as the wilfull defying of God, and the skorning of his name, by tossing it too and fro like a tennisball, without yeelding any reuerence vnto it. And therefore let vs learne that it is too too detestable a vice when trifling othes are so rise among vs, and also that in our choleric passions of impatience Gods name shoulde be so rent and torne, and that men are not contented to haue sworne after some simple manner, but also take vp kindes of othes that are match'd with blasphemie, so as it appeareth that their intent is to make warre against God, and euen to spyte him when they cannot be reuenged of men. Thus yee see what wee haue to marke vpon this text. Therefore to bee short, let vs vnderstande that it is not ynough for vs, that the spirituall seruice which wee owe vnto God be yeelded vncorruptly vnto him: that is to wit, that wee put our trust in him, that wee call vpon him, and that wee offer him our soules and bodics in sacrifice: but wee must also thewe openly before men what religion wee holde of, and wee must make it known that wee be separated from all the defilements of the Infidels and vnbeleeuers. The thing which is expressly required heere, is that when othes are to be vfed, wee must vse them with such sobrietie as God may be glorified, and that whensoever wee sweare, wee must beate in minde that God is to be reuerenced as our iudge, and offer our selues in such wise before him, as hee suffer not any fallhood: to abide vnpunished, and as wee yeelde vnto him the office of seruicing euen our heartes. If wee deale so: then shall our othes be holie vnto him, and accepted as a part and portion of the seruice that he requireth and alloweth. And by that meanes wee shall abhorre and loth not onely the blasphemies whereby he is spyt out of measure: but also all sonde and trifling othes, that are made without cause or reason. Thus wee see in fewe words what wee haue to note, and howe this text is to bee put in vte.

Nowe Moses addeth immediarely, Yee shall not followe any other Gods, the Gods of the heathen which dwell rounde about you. When hee saith, yee shall not followe any other Gods: hee threateth vs that wee cannot mingle the true religion with any abuses, or with any thing deuifed by vnbeleeuers, but by and by all is mard, and God disauoweth it, as soone as wee swarue one way or other from the plaine trueth, and from the rule that hee hath giuen vs. For it is not saide simply, yee shall not renounce your GOD: but they bee forbidden to followe any other Gods. So then let vs marke wel, that if wee intende to serue the liuing God, wee must holde our selues to him alone, and worshipe him with such vncorruptnesse, as all ydoles bee vtterly cast downe, and all superstitions cut off and cast behinde vs. And if this were well obserued, wee shoulde no more bee put to such paines, neither shoulde wee haue so manie bickerings as wee haue. For what causeth the troubles that are nowadayes in the world, and that there is such diuision betwene vs and the Papises? For both of vs confesse that there is but one God: that grounde is common to vs both, both of vs name him the maker of heauen and earth, and both of vs take Iesus Christ for our redeemer: and yet notwithstanding wee bee at so greate oddes, that the Turkes and the Iewes are not more deuifed from vs than the Papises are. Whereof commeth this? Not that the Papises doe vtterly renounce GOD: but because they will needes make a mingled and confus'd hotchpotch of all the Religions of the world. They haue raked together all abuses, all Sathans trumperie, and all the superstitions that euer haue bene: and that terme they the seruice of God. It is no part of their meaning to holde themselues to the purenesse of the holy scripture, and of the Lawe and the Gospell: but to the things which they haue deuifed of their owne braine. They will needes haue those things mingled with the pure seede: and that is such a corruption, as God is vtterly shaken by it. Although men thinke it not, or at leastwise confesse it not with their mouth: yet hath hee no more place where those things are. So then (as I saide afore), if this saying which forbiddeth vs to followe any other Gods were well obserued: wee might easily agree nowadayes with the Papises. For the controuersie heere concerneth not the onely name.

True it is that the Papises call not their Sainctes which they haue forged, their Gods: but yet they serue them and worshipe them as Gods. And therewithall they haue deuifed such lawes and ordinances as they thinke good: and yet the thing which they terme Gods seruice, is but vtter tollie of their owne inuention. Nowe it is a flatte following of the Gods of the Paynims; when men vse strange fashions in the seruing of God, and in steede of praying vnto him alone, doe call vpon the creatures, so as they cannot tell whom to choose when al comes to all. And therefore let vs beare wel in minde the meaning of Moses: which is, that to worship God aright, we must sticke simply to his word: wee must stop our eares against all things that are brought vs from elswhere: and we must not admit any thing but y<sup>e</sup> which we haue from God onely. Let vs then submit our selues wholly to the obeying of our god, & not receiue any thing which procedeth out of his mouth, And if we followe followe not that rule, but giue care to all Satans trumperie, and to all manner of superstitions inuited by man: then haue straunge Gods their full scope among vs. Although wee giue them not the name of Gods: yet hath not our God the thing that belongeth vnto him for the seruing of him according to his onely will.

And Moses saith expressly, namely the Gods of the nations that dwell rounde about you. As if hee should say it wil not serue for excuse to alledge 10 contrarie examples, that such and such doe: none of all those things wil passe in account. But if we will needs shielde our selues with men: our Lorde will disallowe such shifts. That is the cause why Moses speaketh heere expressly of the nations that were rounde about them. And therefore let vs beare well in minde, that to haue the true and right religion, we must not inquire what men doe, but we must heare God speake, and agree to whatsoeuer hee saith to vs. And 20 although wee see the whole worlde againt vs: yet must wee not be abashed. For what are men in comparison of our God? Dare we make such comparison, that men should rather be heard than God, and that they should haue more authoritie than hee? But so wee doe when wee be not contented with Gods pure and simple word, but alledge mens doings and deuices to the contrarie. Wherefore let vs beare well in mind, that wee must not csteeme the true religion 30 by the wayes which wee see men walke: but although wee be hemmed in rounde about with ydolatrie, and see nothing but stumblingblockes about vs, and wee meeete with store of incoun- ters to tempt vs and to seduce vs: yet must wee not be moued therefore, but rest stedfastly vpon the things which our Lorde shall haue tolde vs. Haue wee Gods worde? Let that suffice vs: But let vs goe on: I see that the worlde doeth so, I see men behaue themselves after that manner, 40 I see great countries vse that fashion. Yea, but yet our Lorde doeth well deserue to be obeyed. Though men drawe all the cleane contrarie way: yet must they not beare such sway with vs as to make vs to checke against our God. Marke it for a speciall point, that wee must renounce all that euil men can say or doe, if wee intende to serue our God duely. And hereby wee see howe for the ignorant wretches are beguiled, which weene themselves to be armed with good de- 50 fence when they can say, O, it was not of mine owne deusing, it was the fashion of our aun- cters and forefathers, they doe so in France and Italy. But what doeth Moses say? Though all the worlde conspire in superstition, and thou seest neuer so many trades of life differing one from another: yet must thou not fleete, but stande fast neuertheless in the faith which thou holdest from Gods worde, and hast learned of him. Content thy selfe with that, and desie all men: passe not for the whole worlde, let it beare no sway at all with thee, when the case concerneth Gods trueth. Seeing it is so then, let vs assure our selues it is a miserable excuse to al- ledge the examples of men to ground our selues vppon, considering that our Lorde will haue vs

to receiue his worde in such wise, as all the worlde may not bee able to thrust vs from it. And therewithall let vs marke also, that forasmuch as the duell casteth temptations in our wayes: wee haue neede to bee armed and fenced. It is not without cause saide heere, Thou shalt not fol- lowe after the Gods of the Nations that are a- bout thee. For God regardeth the weakenesse of his people, and seeth that they should soone be turned away from the true and pure religion, if they were not restrained with this bridle. Take heede to thy selfe, for thou shalt be tempted, be- cause thou shalt bee beset on all sides with stum- blingblocks.

Nowe if this were spoken in old time to the Jewes: it pointeth also to vs at this day: for wee be not stronger than they were. Let vs not beare our selues in hande that there is such a strength and stoutnesse in vs, that we be able to hold our owne when wee once knowe Gods truth. For come the deuill once to imbrow vs with the false doctrine, and to draw vs to superstition: we bee caried away out of hand. Seeing then that we be so weake: let vs learne to fence our selues a- gainst corruptions, that wee maye beate backe temptations when they assaile vs. And we see in what plight wee be. For our Lorde holdeth vs heere as it were vnder his hande: whereas in the meane while if wee looke about vs, wee shall see the wretched world corrupted with all ab- hominations. We see how Gods seruice is vtterly defaced, and Idolatrye raineth euery where. Nowe then if wee depended vpon men, what would become of vs? But seeing it is so that wee might bee ouerwhelmed by such stumbling- blockes, let vs looke that wee arme our selues with that which is saide heere: that is to wit, that we may boldly walke on in the Religion which we hold by Gods worde, and laugh them all to skorne which swaue from it. Accordingly also as there are some which think, alas, shall be wiser than so many nations whom I see liue other- wise? Behold, the great kings, behold, the wis- est men of the world hold of that religion: and should I not stand too much in mine owne conceit, if I should not agree to it as well as they? The question is not heere, whether they or wee be the wiser: but whether God ought to beare all the sway and to be acknowledged to be onely wise, so as there is nothing but foolishnesse in vs, vntill wee haue learned to submit our selues to him. Therefore let vs be fully resolu'd of this, that we must not turne aside neither one way nor other, though they that dwell about vs doe hold strange religions: but we must stand fast ground- ed vppon Gods worde, and holde our selues contented with this, that he alloweth vs though the worlde mislike vs and condemne vs. For wee knowe that if wee followe Gods worde, wee shall 1. Cor. 4. 3. 4 one day iudge them which do nowe condemne vs: & that it is a diuillish malapertnesse for them to behaue themselves so after their owne fancie and liking. Thus much concerning the point where Moses sheweth that the people must not follow the straunge Gods that were worshipped in all the countries about them. 1. Cor. 6. 3.

But this extendeth yet much further: namely that although the world flowe out into all naughtinesse; yet shall not we be excused, if we bee corrupted as all the rest bee. And why so? It is not for nought that our Lorde hath sanctified vs to himselfe. In these dayes wee see blasphemie, wee see murther, we see enuie, malice, and backbiting, we see whoredome, wantonnesse & such other things raigae almost euery where, and to haue their full scope: now if we should alledge this for an excuse to doe euill, it would not serue our turne. For although we were hedged in with thornes rounde about: yet ought we to walke in such sorte, as we might petist in the seruing of our God. Yea and euen when wee see nothing but naughtinesse euery where: let vs vnderstande that our Lord intendeth to hold vs in the freiter awe. And therefore wee must alwayes let this laying before our eyes: Take heede to thy selfe, and beware that thou be not corrupted, seeing thou canst not open thine eyes, but thou shalt meete with some euill thing or other to allare thee vnto naughtinesse. Thus yee see howe wee haue neede to lue fo much the more warly and carefully in these dayes, forasmuch as the diuell hath obtained to peruert the whole worlde. Therefore let vs marke well this saying, that wee must not followe the trumperie that is rounde about vs.

Nowe Moses addeth, The Lorde that is in the middes of you, is iealous. Beware therefore that his wrath kinde not, or that his countenance wax not angrie (for the hebrewe worde that he vseth in this place betokeneth the countenance, and by similitude and translation it betokeneth wrath or anger,) least thou be rooted out of the lande which the Lorde thy God hath giuen thee. In this text Moses ment to proue by particular, that if men abuse Gods goodnesse, in the ende they shall not be able to shunne or escape his hande. God (saith hee) is in the middes of you: and hee is iealous; and therefore beware of his wrath. When as he saith, God is in the middes of you: it is an vpbraiding of the Iewes with the grace that was giuen them, in that God had communicated himselfe so familiarly vnto them, And it serueth to make vs the more blameworthy, if wee serue him not in all purenesse. Wee knowe that the more benefites wee receiue at Gods hande, the more he bindeth vs vnto him. Now he dwelt in the middes of this people, and kept his residence there: it was ineete therefore that they should haue considered fo more aduisedly, that seing god came so neere to them, & had made the to seele his goodnes: they should not haue turned away from him, nor from the true religion, forasmuch as if they did so, they should bee the more to blame. As if it were saide, As touching the Paynims and Infidels, it is true that they shall at length yeeld account: they may well blindfolde their owne eyes as now by soothing themselves: but yett shall they bee driuen to knowe that God hath not surrendered nor giuen ouer his right. And whereas they abuse themselves in their false religion, and yett thinke not themselves to be beguiled (the time wil come that) they shall know it to their cost. But yett shall they bee excusable in comparison of you. For they bee blinde wretches walking in darknes, our Lord is a stranger vnto them, and he hath not vouchsafed to draw them to him, nor to gather them as it were into his flocke. Yee see then that they bee as it were in vtter confusion. But it is not so with you: for a man may iustly cast you in yo teeth, that yee haue falsified the faith which yee gaue to your God. Yee ought to bee well acquainted with him because he sitteth in the middes of you, and he hath chose you for his people, and you also haue perceived him. For you haue his power which faileth you not: hee heareth you, and hee sheweth himselfe fauourable in all your requits. Seeing then that your God dwelleth among you: yee ought to vnderstand that there is not any other thing wherby you should be instructed than his law: and ye ought to know after what maner he will haue your liues ordered. Sith it is so, assure your selues that so much fo horribler vengeance will light vpon you, if yee step aside. Yee shall not passe the same way that the ignorant wretches and vnbeleeuers doe: but yee shall be punished a hundredfold more grieuously for your vnthankfulnessse, in that yee haue not offended God through ignorance, but through spitefull wilfulnessse, so as he could not hold you vnder his yoke nor wield you, though he gathered you into his flocke to be your shepheard and gouernour.

Although this were spoken a good while agoe to the Iewes: yett it concerneth vs likewise. For wee see how our Lord sitteth in the middes of vs. First we haue this promise concerning fo church, This is my resting place, here wil I dwell for euer. Besides this, experience teacheth vs, your Lorde not onely will dwell among vs: but also auoweth our soules and bodies to be his temple, & that we be members of our Lord Iesus Christ, in whom dwelleth the whole fullnesse of the godhead. Nowe then ought not euery man to dedicate himselfe to God, as though hee were his temple? And againe we know howe it is said, that God dwelleth in vs by his holy spirite. So then, God is not onely familiar with vs as he was with the people of olde time, whom he saide he would holde as it were in his lappe; but also he dwelleth in euery of vs. Seeing it is so: if we turne away to the superstitions of the heathen, if we will needes resemble the vnbeleeuers in desling our selues with them, and if wee will needes make a hotchpotch or mingleweale (as they terme it): thinke we that such vnthankfulnessse shall scape vnpunished, considering that our Lorde cometh so nigh vnto vs? No: and yett for all that, after we haue rushed against him, we runne gadding away from him like stray beastes. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this saying, where Moses declareth that God resteth among the people of Israel.

And heere withall hee saith that God is iealous and therefore we must beware that we kinde not his wrath. Whereby he doth vs to vnderstande, that Gods dwelling among vs, is not to be despised at our hands. True it is that hee will bee louing vnto vs, and hee tellecth vs that hee will bearc with our infirmities, and that he is alwayes pitifull. Although we deserue to sinke vnder his hande: yet will he alwayes shew mercie towards vs. But doth it followe therefore, that he will be scorned at our handes, and that wee may come pranking against him to despise him? No: but contrariwise, forasmuch as he sheweth himselfe gracious and louing towards vs, it ought to break & soften our hartes, to make vs submit our selues wholly vnto him, and at leastwise to applie our selues altogether to the seruing & honouring of him, when he pretueth vs through his free goodnesse. Then let vs mark well, that when our Lord is neere vnto vs, although it bee of purpose to make vs glad, and also to giue vs contentation and rest: yet notwithstanding hee ceaseth not to be zealous in the maintaining of his glorie, neither will he suffer it to be trampled vnder foote, without sending horrible vengeance for it. Doe we then know that our Lord dwelleth among vs? Let vs on our side beware that wee sanctifie our selues wholly vnto him, for feare least his wrath beekindled, that is say, least hee withdraw his goodnesse which he hath once shewed towards vs, and bereaue vs of it as we deserue, and therewithall powre out his wrath vpon vs, when hee seeth that hee cannot winne vs, nor any whit preuaile by shewing himselfe pitifull in bearing with vs with such louingkindnes and gentlenes as he doth. Ye see then after what fort we ought to vse y<sup>e</sup> goodnes and patientnesse of our Lorde. That is to wit, knowing that we may boldly itay vpon him, not doubting but that he wilbe fauorable vnto vs, wee neuertheless must indeuour and inforce our selues to the vttermost of our power to serue and honour him. And forasmuch as we cannot do it of our selues: wee must pray him to hold vs in such obedience by his holy spirit, as our whole seeking may bee to shewe y<sup>e</sup> his comming so vnto vs is not in vaine, but that wee be truly knit vnto him, and that hee hath set such a holy and vniuolable bond betwene him and vs, that as he once gaue himselfe to vs to be our inheritance, so he also possesseth vs, and maketh vs to be thoroughly contented with him, and to proceede in such wise in profiting to his honor & glory, as our whole life may shewe that we desire nothing else but to bee reteined vnder his protection.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God & acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to humble vs more & more by true repentance, so as we may not onely be sorie for our faults, but also amend them and submit our selues ductifullly vnto him, to the intent we may be more and more rid of all our naughtie lustes, and bee clothed againe with his righte outnesse, that by the shining of his image in vs, we may shew our selues to be his true children and that our desire is to be ruled by his holy spirit, euen vntill he haue made vs partakers of his heauenly glorie. That it may please him to grant this grace not onely to vs but also to all people, and Nations of the earth, &c.

15 For the Lord &c.

16 You shall not tempt the Lord your God as you tempted him in Massa.

17 Yee shall keepe the commaundements of the Lord your God diligently, and his testimonies and ordinances which he hath commaunded you.

18 Thou shalt doe the thing that is right and good in the sight of the Lord, that it may goe well with thee, and that thou maist go into this good land and possesse it according as the Lord hath sworne to thy fathers.

19 And that hee may beate backe thine enemies before thee, as the Lorde hath saide.

Wherein I sawe yesterday howe Moses shewed the people, that forasmuch as God vouchsafed to dwell among them, they also ought to lue in his feare. And wee likewise must thinke, that his approaching vnto vs after that sort, is not to be despised of vs, but rather to the intent that his goodnesse should prouoke vs to honour him the more. And there was a threatening added immediately, For feare least that be bereft of the land which thy God hath now giuen thee. Wherein Moses declared, that when we haue receiued any good already at Gods hand, we must not be proude of it, but rather yeelde him due honour for it, that we may inioy it still: for after as he sheweth him selfe liberall to vs, so doth he binde vs vnto him. And therefore let vs marke, that when wee haue the possession of his benefites, it is not to the ende wee shoulde fall asleepe in them, but rather haue the greater care to serue and honour him. And herewithal let vs note, that vnder this terme of y<sup>e</sup> lande of Canaan, Moses comprehendeth generally all that belonged to the peoples clecction: for that lande was an outward testimony thereof. Therefore in effect hee ment to say, Beholde, God hath chosen thee to bee of his household and Church: wilt thou continue therein? Then must thou be careful to honour him, and walke after his guiding. Nowe to apply the same

fame to our vse, it is all one as if a man should say vnto vs, seeing that God hath promised to be our father and Saurior, let vs feare him, to y intent he may continue alwayes so. And this importeth y he wil haue a care of vs, during this mortal life of ours. And although we passe through many miseries, yet will he deliuer vs from them. Howbeit that his defending of vs in this world is not the chiefe benefite, nor the thing that we must stay vpon, but we must mount vp higher to y endlesse life. And so to be short, whensoever we think vpō the benefites that god hath giuen vs, let vs vnder stande that hee can well bereeue vs of them as soone as we abuse them, and pluck away our feathers y make vs so proude. For his bestowing of his benefites vpon vs, is not to the intent that we should despise him, & take occasion to stande in our owne conceits, & so be negligent and cal no more vpon him: but the blessings which we enioy tend to this end wee should daly and howrly haue y better regard of him, & lift vp our minds on high to yeeld him due thanks, and to glorifie him in our whole life. Now here vnto Moses addeeth, Thou shalt not tempt the Lorde thy God, as you sepea him in Masa. Hereby he meaneth y the people must not abuse gods patience. As if he should say, look wel to it my friends: although god deale gently with you, ye must not thank but your sins shal come to account, if you serue him not with all humility. If ye say, we be Gods friends, we neede not be afraid y he wil be angry with vs or work vs any displeasure, for we see how well he dealeth w vs: beware how ye daly go with him, for ye know what befell to your fathers in Masa. Therefore do no more so, but prevent the chastisements of your God, & before he arme himself against you, know him to be your iudge, and tary not till hee shewe forth the tokens of his wrath and vengeance by his deeds, but in y meane time while he vseth mildnes & gentlenes, consider y hee allureth you to repentance, & so let euery man be prouoked to amend his faults, that God may be honored by y mean. For if ye tempt him againe, he wil not bere it. He sharply punished your fathers in Masa: but you shal seele much greater & horrible punishment, if you go on stil. And let vs mark, that here he toucheth the story which is written more at length in the seuenteenth of Exodus. There it is saide that the people being in a drie place of the wilderness, did grudge and repine against Moses, because they had no drinke, crying out that they were betrayed, because there was no more water in the desert, so as it had bin better for them to haue taried still in Egypt, where were graues ynow to haue buried them in. God punished the people with the bytings of Serpents: but yet howsoeuer they feared hee had pity vpon them, and vsed mercie towards them, sending remedy conuenient for y same. And yet notwithstanding his will is to haue the name therof to continue stil, for a memorial to vpbraid the people with their vnthankfulness. It is his pleasure y it should remaine still, to the intent y the childre might know y their fathers were rebels: for y word Masa betokeneth as much as reptation. Now for y better vnderstanding of y things that are saide here, we must consider what it is to tempt God: for that is done diuers wayes. But chiefly it is saide that we tempt God, when we be too importunate in requiring more than is lawfull for vs, and when we will needs haue further trial of his power and abilitie than pleaseth him, so as we fall to spoyting of him as if we would say, Go to we shal see now whether God be mightie or no: let him do what wee will haue him to doe. When we go to work with such outrage, & haue no modestie nor stay of our selues, so as we consider not what is lawfull for vs, but wil needs haue God to please vs without awe or measure: then do we tempt him. And why so? This word Tempt betokeneth properly to assay or trie. See nowe, God is willing to vtter his power, howbeit not at our pleasure: neither were it reason that he should be subiect vnto vs. True it is that he vseth this amiable kind of speech, that he wil doe the will of such as feare him. But this will is ment, not of an inordinate lust when men take leaue to craue whatsoever commeth in their minde: but of the desire that is subiect and conformable to Gods ordinance, so far forth as he giueth vs leaue. And by that meanes God is glorified. It is not ment y he wil do whatsoever commeth in our head: for that would oftentimes turne to our vndoing. As for example, whē he gaue the people flesh: it had bin much better for them to haue died for hunger, than to haue crammed & glutted themselves after that fashion vnstably in despite of God. But God performeth our wil, whē we be obediēt vnto him, & haue respect vnto goodnes in al our requests, according as S. Iohn exhorteth vs to attempt nothing further than pleaseth him. If we doe so, God will also please vs. But if wee come malaperly with a losie countenance, to say I wil trie whether God can do this or no: [we shal come short of our desires.] What? Is it a conuenient fashion of dealing, that we should step forth so to trie God, & that we wil needs haue him to giue vs proofe of his power by making himselfe subiect to vs: is it not a diuelish malapertnes that carieth vs so away? Yes So then, we se now what is signified by this word Tempt, namely a trying of God, as though we doubted of his power or abilitie, & a repining at him & a charging of him with infirmite when he doth not whatsoever we lust, so as we measure him by the things that we perceiue with our eyes. That is the temptraion which is forbidden here. And inleede our Lord Iesus Christ is a good & iustifull expounder of this text. For he alledged it to beat back Satan, as is written in the fourth of S. Matthew. Yea and y diuell himselfe taketh y holy scripture to tempt our Lorde withall, facing him with this text, It is written that God hath giuen his Angels charge over thee, to beare thee vp in their hands, & not to suffer thee to dash thy foote against a stone. Wel then, here vpon we may gather, y God hath committed vs to the keeping of his Angels, so as we shal be borne vp by them, & preferred from all euill that may incounter vs. Wee must assure our selues of that. But yet it is saide therewithall, that they shall keepe vs in all our wayes, that is to say, which we haue to go in. Now then, let vs keepe on our wayes, that is to say, let vs looke about vs how God hath disposed our life, & let vs not attempt any thing rashly & vpon our owne head, but let euery of vs consider his own calling: & then we may be sure y<sup>e</sup> Gods hand shal alwayes be reached out ouer vs, and y<sup>e</sup> Angels of heauen shall trauele after vs: let vs not doubt of it. Neuertheles whatsoeuer come of it, let vs not passe the bounds & liſts y<sup>e</sup> he hath set vs, nor play the loce colts to say, I will goe trie this, or that: for y<sup>e</sup> were a tempting of God. Why so? For whosoever listeth not to take paines, but saith: is not God able ynough to maintain me? He trieth gods power too far. For why? God hath promised that his blessing shall be vpon y<sup>e</sup> handes of them that take paines. His will is y<sup>e</sup> lande should be tilled, and y<sup>e</sup> men should follow husbandrie, & other labors, euerie one according to his calling. And yet notwithstanding if they will needs refuse al this, & disdain to vse those ordinary meanes: is it not a tempting of him what hee can doe? It is all one as if I should step vp into y<sup>e</sup> pulpet, without vouchsafing to looke vpon any book, & fondly imagine to say thus in my self: tuth, whē I come thither, god will giue me ynough wherof to speak, & in the mean while I holde scoorne to reade, or to study beforehand what I shal speake, & come hither without minding how to apply y<sup>e</sup> holy scripture to y<sup>e</sup> edifying of y<sup>e</sup> people, by reason wherof I should play y<sup>e</sup> presumptuous foole, & God also would put me to shame for mine ouerboldnesse. In like case is it with al other things. So then we see in effect y<sup>e</sup> tempto God, is to be vnruely, and to omit the meanes which God giueth vs and setteth downe vnto vs, & to refuse to put the to their right vse, so as wee wil needs haue God serued after our owne fond liking, and make him as it were subiect vnto vs. And forasmuch as our Lord Iesus Christ alleged this same text against Satan: we see which is the true and naturall sense thereof.

Nowe then, whereas it is saide, Thou shalt not tempt thy God: it is al one as if Moses had said, my friends, beware ye play not mockholiday. When God is patient, and powreth not out his rigour vpon you at the first dash: thinke not that therefore ye shal scape scottfree, neither take occasion to fall asleepe & to flatter your selues for it: but lue in feare, and prevent the wrath which God hath not yet powred out vpon you, because hee spareth you. To be short, we be said to tempt god, when we abuse his benefites which we possesse, & which he hath put into our hands, & in y<sup>e</sup> meane while acknowledge not him to be the founder of them. For why? vnder pretence that God dealeth gently with vs, we beare our selues in hande that we may despise him. And that is a turning of his goodnes to the cleane contrary end that it ought to be appld. Doth not god apply himself to vs, of purpose to win vs, and to the end that we should haue his loue fo printed in our hearts, as we might be wholly knit vnto him and made one with him? But if euery of vs do contrarie: wise run at rouers, & deuour the goods y<sup>e</sup> he hath bestowed vpon vs: is it not a tempting of him? Yes. And aboute all things whereas it hath pleased him to impart vnto vs the doctrine of saluation: it is to the intent wee should take him for our father, and Iesus Christ for our shepherd, and that wee should hearken to his voice. Againe he hath taken vs as it were into his house, to the intent we should be his very householdfolke, applying our selues more and more vnto him, and bee vtterly separated from y<sup>e</sup> vnbeleuers, by dedicating our whole life vnto him. But on the contrarie part, if we will needs be vnruely, & yet in the mean while vaunt our selues of hauing the Gospell, inso much y<sup>e</sup> we feede our selues with this vaine hope to say, O ho, seeing we haue Gods word, he cannot but loue vs, for it is his power to y<sup>e</sup> saluation of al that beleue: I say if men dale after this sort, & abuse the name of faith to make a shrowding sheete of it, to the end they may giue them selues the more boldly to all naughtines: it is a tempting of God. For inasmuch as hee vttereth not his power at y<sup>e</sup> first dash by thundering downe vpon them: hee seemeth to them to be as a little babe & a weakling, & so they play with him [at their pleasure]. Therefore let vs learne to feare God: & although we perceiue not that he hath drawn his sword, bent his bow, & made readie his arrowes againt vs: yet let vs not tary till y<sup>e</sup> fire of his vengeance be kindled vpon vs, but consider that the ientee thereof shall be executed vpon all y<sup>e</sup> despisers of his maiestie, though they feele nothing of it for a time. Thus ye see how we be forbidden to tempt the Lord in the time of prosperitie. To be short, let vs learne to feare God while he beareth with vs. For if we say with these mockers, what I pray you? Doth not God shew himselfe gracious & fauorable towards vs, in that hee doth vs so much good? It is all one as if we scorned his power and should say, yea, it is true y<sup>e</sup> men threaten vs with Gods punishments, but where be they? we perceiue no likelihood of them. When we speake after y<sup>e</sup> manner, it is a defying of him, as though we would say, Let vs tary a while & see what he can do. Yea, it is moreouer as good as a bereauing of him of his power, and a making of him to be an ydoll: and is not y<sup>e</sup> (in effect) a denying that he is the iudge of the world? Wherefore to y<sup>e</sup> intent we may not tempt God, let vs learne to lue humbly and warily. Although we be at our ease & rest, & although there be no shew or likelihood y<sup>e</sup> god wil send any aduertise or affliction vpon vs: let vs not measure his power by our perceiuaunce, nor after y<sup>e</sup> which we see: but euē when his scourges seeme to be very far of from vs, let vs bee as much afraid of them, as if we felt the stripes of them already. Thus ye see in effect how we ought to put this text in practise.

Now whereas Moses addeth, Asye temptid him in Masa. It is all one as if he had said, seeing yee haue escaped for one brunt, come no more there. For whereas your God shewed himselfe mercifull at that time: his meaning was that yee should vnderstande, that hee listeth not to be tempted. Wherefore seeing he hath withdrawn his hande from you, let it not be an occasion to deceue you hereafter, that yee should take courage to tempt him any more: for when men prouoke him so often, it is not for them to looke for mercy and fauour at his hand.

Now we see to what purpose Moses alledged the temptation wherewith the Jewes tempt: d God in Mafa. And thereby we bee taught, that when wee haue done any fault, wee must bethinke vs of it, to the intent wee may doe no more so. And instead of taking occasion to grudge at GOD through impatience: we must humble our selues the more vnder his awe. When wee haue offended him after that sort, and obtained forgiveness: it is to the ende we should take the better heede all our lyfe after, and that the remembrance of our euil doing should abide printed in our hearts, vntill we haue shewed that Gods goodnes hath booted vs as well as his scourges and corrections. And therefore, to bee short, when God chastiseth vs, let vs beware that we receiue instruction by it: and when he forguieth vs, let vs looke that wee take such taste of his goodnesse, as may inflame our hartes and mindes to honour him the more. Whereas the vnbeleeuers doe mocke God when he spareth them, and make no reckning of it, but beare themselves in hand y they be discharged, if he punish them not out of hand: yee see that the faithfull must by all meanes stirre vp themselves to feare & honour God so much the more carefully and warily. When he chaisteth the vnbeleeuers, they fret and storme and grinde their teeth at him, and their rebelliousnes increaseth more and more, euen vntill it come to starke madnesse. Nowe then, whereas the vnbeleeuers are so fitwarde, y howsoeuer God deale with them they become still worse and worse: let vs thinke well vpon this, euen to returne into the right way, whether it bee that God lift vp his hand to chastise vs, or that he make delay & pitie our infirmities as not being willing to punish them at all: To this purpose is Mafa spoken of in this place. And so, to be short, when we haue committed any grieuous offense I meane publicly, so as there is any disorder among vs and God is offended: let vs bethinke our selues thus: Alas, seeing that God hath shewed himselfe a father for all our prouoking of him, and yet neuertheless receiued vs to mercie: let vs doe so no more. Seeing God hath pitied vs and reached vs his hand, euen when we deserued to haue bene destroyed, which thing he hath not suffered to come to passe: let vs beware & take heede that wee giue not too much scope to our lustes, so as they should make vs to slip from him, and to ouerthoote our selues so farre, as to run into the way of damnation. After this maner (say I) must the faithfull quicken vp themselves, bearing in minde that when they haue once ouertrot their selues, & forsaken the right way: they must call themselves homie againe to walk awfully euer after, and betake themselves into Gods hand, y he may guide them & not suffer the to be so ouerseene any more. Also we must doe the like particularly. When any man hath bin ouertreen for a tyme, and not haue dealt so warily as hee ought to haue doone, euen after hee knoweth Gods truth: let him bethinke himselfe thus: Alas, I haue bene vnthankfull to my God, and for as much as I haue started away from him, I am worthe to bee vtterly confounded: but yet hath not he suffered that to come to passe. Now then what is to bee done on my part? It is not mee that I should forget the faultes which I haue committed, but that I should thinke vpon them, and beare the bitternesse of them still about mee in my heart. After that manner must euerie of vs deale, say I: not as distrusting God, or to prouoke our selues to any despayre: but to reyne out selues the shorter, and to holde our selues the more in awe. For as soone as a man doeth but list himselfe vp, by and by he ouerthooteh himselfe if God let him alone. That is the thing which wee haue to note in this text, where Moses sayeth that they must not tempt God, as they tempted him once afore in Mafa. And for the same cause and to the same purpose also is it spoken of in the Psalme, where it is said, To day if ye heare his voyce harden not your hartes as your fathers did in the wilderness. This is spoken expressely of the temptation that Moses toucht here. See how the Prophet warneth the people, yea and that desirously, as if he should say, very well, if ye bee so teachable as to hearken to your God, seeing he doeth now exhort you to come vnto him, refuse it not: for this benefite shal not last alwayes to them that make delay and are neuer moued to obey him, but driue of from day to day when he calleth them. And therefore, if ye heare his voyce (sayeth he) now when God calleth you. He vseth there a vehemencie as though he could not finde words fit to exhort the people and sufficiently to prick them forward. In that hee saith, Goe to my freindes, bee well aduisid that you harden not your hartes: he sheweth what is the cause of all mischeife, and why we profit no better by Gods teaching of vs. Namely that besides that wee be full of naughtinesse, and so sinfully by nature, that whereas our hartes ought to be suitined to receaue that which God sayeth, it may seeme that wee intende of set purpose to harden them against him: we doe moreover fall to it, mocking against him with a certaine spitefullnesse, as if we would say, what care I to obey God? Shall I bee bridled of my will like a beaist? Beware of that sayeth he: for ye knowe what happened to your Fathers. The Prophet casteth them in the teeth with the thinges that had bene done by their forefathers in olde time, to the intent they shoulde not boast of their descending from the holy Patriarkes. Beholde saith he, your forefathers were rebels: & how the haue you continued vnto this day? Is it not through Gods mercie? Yes: for ye shoulde haue perished vtterly. Again, seeing your God hath pitied you being Abraham his race: thinke not that he will haue ye to runne backe againe, so as ye should bee alwayes newe to begin. For when he hath boine with you a while, he must bee faine to make you pay your arrearages all at once. Thus yee see that the way for vs to put this sentence in practise, is to vnderstand that when God shall haue pardoned our faultes ofentimes, yee shall haue iust cause to punish vs the more grieuouly: if wee cease not to prouoke him still, but will needs bee the boulder to doe euill, vnder pretence that hee hath not vsed extremity towards vs. If God see that in vs: hee can well call vs to account for all the things that hee had pardoned before. For his pardoning of vs is with condition, that we should humble our selues, and consider all our life after, how much we be beholden vnto him. If an offender haue obtained fauour, and thereupon he fall to spying of him to whom he is beholdē for his life, within a day or twaine after: doeth he not deserue to haue his former lewdnesse brought to remembrance againe, and to be reckened withall fro point to point, and to haue his vnthankfulnes laid afore him, for his abusing of the fauour y had bin shewed him? Ycs: and thinke we that our Lord will haue lesse right than mortall men? Thinke we then that his shewing of fauour vnto vs, is to the intent to make vs bolder to doe euill? No, but rather his dooing of it is to the intent wee should ale our life after beare our offence in minde and be forie for it: accordingly also as wee fee howe the good king Ezechias speaketh of the bitterness of his heart, when he sayeth, that he will bee mindefull of the euill and of the offence that he had committed. Not but that he reioyced in Gods goodnesse, but that yet neuertheless hee would beare it in remembrance, to the intent he might not let himselfe slip any more, nor be any more surprisid by the wylinesse of Satan.

Esa 39. 15.

Now after that Moses hath spoken so, he addeth: Ye shall diligently keepe the commandements, Statutes, and Lawes of your God which I set before you this day: that you may enter into the land which he promised to your fathers with an othe, and hee diuine out all your enemies before you. Here we bee put in minde of the thing that hath bene told vs before: that is to wit, that whereas Moses vseth many wordes to expresse the Lawe, it is no superfluous speech, but serueth to induce folke the better, to profite in the doctrine that is giuē them. As if he should say, Giue good care: for behold, your God taketh paines with you. Like as a schoolemaister taketh paines to teach the children that are committed to his charge: so doth God apply himselfe to you, giuing you his Law orderly and distinctly, to the end ye should not be greatly combered to vnderstand what he saith concerning his will. Here therefore are his Statutes, Ordinances, & Iudgements. As if he should say, the doctrine is set forth vnto you in good order, so that if you can finde in your hearts to hearken to your God, and to receiue y which he shall say, you need not doubt but you shall be taught faithfully by his word, & haue knowledge of all things y are good and conuenient for you. The first thing then which Moses ment to expresse by these wordes Iudgements, statutes, & Ordinances, is y our Lord taketh paine to teach vs whatfoeuer is good for vs, and y he vseth such order, as we cannot say that his word is too high and confused for vs. And therewithall his intent is also to hold me wholly to the pure obedience of the lawe, and to the simplicitie therein contained, as if he should say: My friends, Gods meaning is, not onely y ye should be attentiuē in hearing what he saith to you, but also y your onely wisdome should be to obey him, & not to inuent any nouelties, so as ye should think to serue him after your owne fanisie, according to the common fashion of me, who haue alwayes some foolish desire to change Gods word. No, saith he. If ye can beare in minde the lessons of the Law, ye shall haue statutes, Iudgements and ordinances, so as ye shall not want any thing whereby ye may be taught in all perfection. This hath bin expounded already heretofore: and therefore I stande not long vpon it. Neuertheless the repeating of it here againe by the holy Ghost, is not without cause: and therefore I must needs put you briefly in remembrance thereof, as oft as those wordes are set downe.

Now Moses saith expressly, That these Commandements, Ordinances and Lawes must be done & kept. As if he should say, that God will not haue his word to fall to the ground, His setting forth of it, is to the end that we on our side should be attentiuē to hearken what he saith to vs. And so let vs marke well that it is not ynough for vs to allowe Gods worde in speche, by saying it is true: but we must also be diligent in keeping it all our life long. And for further prooffe of that which he had said, he addeth, Thou shalt doe that which is right & good in the sight of God. Hercin he sheweth vs, that we must not doe whatfoeuer seemeth good to our selues, nor followe our owne good intentes, as they terme them. And he will set out this matter yet better in another place, which we shall see hereafter. For there he will forbid men expressly to do the things y seeme right in their owne eyes: for whatfoeuer seemeth excellent vnto vs, shall be condemned for abominable at Gods hand, as is said in S. Luke. Therefore let vs take good heed y we ouerthoote not our selues in our conceites to say, How so? Why should not God allow this for good, seeing we do it to such a purpose? seeing we be desirous to obey him? Yea, but how will he be obeyed? Not y men should be Iudges & Vmpers of the things y they do, to say this is good, or y is euill: he referueth y authoritie to himselfe alone. Now then, will we order our life aright? Let vs not open our eyes to be wise in our owne conceites, for we see that y hath cost vs deare. Wee see (I say) y our father Adam saw too much, when he could not content himselfe with the measure y was giuen him. And therefore let vs not be too sharpe sighted to say, I finde y this is good, & therefore it must be done. Cursed be such wisdome: for it is a diuillish pride. Will we then be allowed of our God? Let vs take good heed to that which he speaketh: for whatfoeuer is right in his eyes, must needs be allowed in the end: & the things which we shall haue imagined to haue bene best, shall be condemned when wee bring them before him. For why? He seeth more clearly than wee doe: he knoweth things which wee knowe not. And therefore he misliketh all our imaginations, & will haue vs to followe the things which he vtereth with his mouth, simply without mingling any thing of our owne. For the verie sacrifice that he requirereth at our handes, is that we should serue him obediently, and therewithall learne to distrust al our owne strength, wit, and reason, and not to presume presume vpon any thing that wee our selues haue inuented: (for all that euer our mindes can conceiue, is but follie, vanitie, and leasing:) but to bee well aduised that we doe the things which are good and right in the eyes of the Lord, that is to say, that we frame our whole life according to his commaundements.

But now let vs come to the promise. Thou shalt goe into the land [saith he] which the Lord hath sworne to thy fathers, to possess it. Here we see how Gods desirous to win the heartes of his people by gentlenesse, in setting the possession of the land of Chanaan before them, for a reward and inheritance. As if he should say, Truth it is that yee bee bounde to serue mee: but yet will I not haue yee to serue mee for nought: beholde, the recompence that is prepared for you, is that ye shall possess the land of Chanaan. But yet wee must alwayes marke with what condition. It was not y the people should lue there at restlike swine in a stie: but so as the land might bee as a pledge of the endlesse life, and that they might consider thus: God hath adopted vs to bee his heires: and therefore let vs mount vp hygher to the cuerlasting life. See heere how GOD telleth vs, that if wee serue him, hee will keepe touche with vs, so as wee shall possess the lande that hee hath promised vs. Nowe heere wee see first the thing that I haue touched already: that is to wit, that God stoopeth to mens rudenesse and infirmity, in promising them recompence though hee bee not bound thereto. Marke that for one poynt. But by the waye wee haue to marke also, that God bindeth not himselfe as though wee could deserue aught. For he saith not, I will giue you the land for the seruice you haue doone to mee, as a thing that you haue earned: but, you shall goe into the lande which I promised to your fathers. Heere are two things vttered couerly. The one is that God promised the lande of his owne meere goodnesse, and not as a due debt that had bene deserued at his hande. For the promise thereof had bine made before the people was borne: foure hundred and thyrty yeres before their departure out of Egypt, God had sayd vnto Abraham, this land shall be thine and thy feedes. Let vs note then that this people had not deserued aught at Gods hande, and that the reward which is mentioned heere, befell them not in respect of their workes. Marke that for a specially poynt. And God telleth vs also, that hee termeth the thing by the name of Hyre, [Recompence, & Wages.] which hee giueth vs onely of his owne free liberaltie, without being bounde thereto by any kind of meanes, and without any desert at all at our handes. And why? To the intent that men should bee prouoked to serue him, and not that they should become proude, or rather any thing vpon themselves which God should accept for payment or admit for any recompence. And this wee see euen in Abraham himselfe. For before hee had doone any thing at all God sayd vnto him, I am thine abundant recompence: Abraham, I haue giuen thee this land: I will bee thy God, and the God of thy feede after thee: I will be thy defender. Yee see then that all the promises which are possible to bee wished, were giuen of God vnto Abraham before he had shewed any signe of faith or of the feare of God. But when he was willing to haue sacrificed his sonne Isaac: our Lorde sayd I will blesse my seruaunt Abraham, because hee hath feared mee, and seeing hee had not spared his owne sonne for the loue of me, I will multiple my blessinges vpon him. And that was saide afore. But God giueth so much the greater beautie to his goodnesse, of purpose to strengthen Abrahams heart, not that hee intended to exalt Abrahams desertes that hee might presume of himselfe: but to make him know, my God hath of his owne mere mercie giuen me the thing y he promised me, I had the promise of it long agoe, and now he sheweth that he accepteth my seruice, in asmuch as he performeth the promise that he made to me of his owne free goodnesse. Thus we see howe we ought to take the texts of holy scripture, where god behighteth vs recompence. We must not conclude therevpon that wee deserue aught, or that our workes are of any valew, or that God is any thing bounde vnto vs: but that he doth it to quicken vs up & to harden vs the better to serue him, in as much as our labours are not lost before him, but are made account of and redound to our benefit. Nowe then we see what is y meaning of these wordes where Moses sheweth the people that y Lande had bin promised to their forefathers by othe, before they whom he speaketh to were borne.

Now for a conclusion let vs come to this saying, Thou shalt drive out all thine enemies before thee. Herein Moses doth the people to wit, that no let can hinder them from possessing the land, so they serue their God: True it is that the land of Chanaan had people in it at that time to keepe possession of it, & we perceiue how y spies brought word y they were Gigantes, and such as would haue swallowed vp the people of God. It should seeme therefore to haue bin impossible for the to haue set foote within y land. But God to Id them y although his people were barred from al entrance to mans vnderstanding: yet would he open them the way by his infinite power, so they inclined to serue him. Now remaineth that wee apply this to our own vse. First of all let vs mark, that whensoever God calleth vs to his seruice, his promising of reward vnto vs, (not onely in this transitory life, but also in the kingdome of heaven) is not to puffe vs vp with selfe-weening, or to make vs to beleue that wee haue deserued aught: but onely to quicken vp our slothfulness: and because wee bee so lasie in seruing him, his intent is to spurre vs forward by that meanes. Therefore let vs take courage: and seeing wee loose not our labour in employing our selues in Gods seruice, let vs goe to it diligently and lustily. And whereas he behighteth vs reward: let vs assure our selues it is not because our workes deserue it, but because that he of his owne infinite goodnesse taketh them in good worth, and giueth that title vnto them. Let that see: ue for one poynt.

And let vs marke heerewithall, that whereas God calleth vs to his inheritance, although he doe it freely: yet is it with condition that wee behaue our selues as trew children towards him, and consider that hee calleth vs vnto holyneffe. And in deede the very ende why hee calleth vs to bee his people and of his flocke, is not that he will haue vs to be intangled and held backe still in this worlde: but to sanctifie our selues vnto him that wee may liue holily vnder his obedience, for as much as he hath washed and clesed vs by the blood of our Lorde Iesus Christe. And Gods calling of vs thereunto, is not for our workes sakes, but for his owne mercie. Now if vnder colour heereof, wee will needes stand facing with him: I haue told you already what will come of it. Therefore let vs haue regard to matche the thinges together which are inseparable: that is to wit, the free goodnesse of our God, and the condition thereunto annexed, which is that hee be serued and honored at our handes. And besides this, although wee see neuer so great lettes, which may seeme to barre vs from all entrance into the kingdome of heauen, and that wee be cast vp here for a pray vnto Satan, and we haue so many enemies that our life is as it were in hazarde euery minute of an houre: yet let vs not cease to hope, and to beleue that our Lorde will keepe vs safe and sure, if wee walke in his feare. Then let vs not passe for all the worlde. Although it seeme that all thinges should be turned vpsidowne: yet let not all the troubles and inobserances which wee see in the world, stoppe vs fro going through to the end: but let vs reason thus with our selues, who is he that hath taken vs into his keeping? Is it not our Gods? Is it not he which hath promised vs the inheritance of the kingdome of heauen? Yes. Then is it his office to holde vs by strong hande. True it is that wee on our part are feeble: but yet his onely power will bee ynough to strengthen vs. True it is that we be inuironed with many enemies: but yet our God is a good shield, he wilbe an inuincible fortresse for vs, so wee put our trust in him. We haue his promise that hee will neuer sayle vs. Thus yee see that God hauing once begun the worke of our satisfaction, will goe through with it in suche sorte, as wee may glory that his calling of vs vnto him is not in vaine, nor to disappoint vs of our hope, wherein hee will haue vs to continue vnto the ende.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him that whereas heeretofore we haue abused his power and might too much, we may henceforth be more diligent in practising his iudgements and corrections, and so make our commodity of them, as the warnings which hee hath giuen vs may neuer out of our remembrance: and that as long as it shal please him to maintaine vs in prosperitie and quiet, we may be watchfull and stand vpon our garde, so as wee turne not from the right way, ne tary till he powre out his vengeance vpon vs, but endeavour to prevent it, as we bee warned to doe: and also that in alour lyfe we may continually so repent vs of our sinnes, as we may still trauell the better towardes him, vntill hee haue gathered vs fully to himselfe, to frame vs to the perfection of the righteousnesse whereunto wee tend as nowe. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs, but also to all people and nations of the earth, &c.

20 When thy child asketh thee in time to come, saying: What are these testimonies, Ordinaunces, and lawes which the Lorde our God hath commaunded you?

21 Then shalt thou say to thy chyld, Wee were Pharaose bondfolke in Egypt: but the Lord brought vs out of Egypt with a mightie hand.

22 And the Lord wrought signes and miracles great and euill, vpon Egypt, and vpon Pharao and all his house before our eyes, 23 And brought vs out thence, to bring vs in [hither,] and to giue vs the land which he had sworne to our fathers.

24 And the Lorde commaunded vs to keepe all these ordinaunces, and to feare the Lorde our God, that wee might alwayes prosper and liue as wee doe this day.

25 And it shall bee counted vnto vs for righteousnesse, if wee keepe and doe all these commaundementes before the Lorde our God, as he hath commaunded vs.

Here

Ere wee haue two reasons to marke why Moses commaundeth, that such as were to come after that time, should be tolde why God gaue his Lawe to the Jewes, and why he woulde haue them gouerned after that maner. The one is, that it is good reason that Gods name should be magnified in all ages, and that wee shoulde in deuour to the vttermost of our power, that it decay not with vs, but continue still vnappayred, and flori in the reigne, euen after wee be dead. The other reason is, that hee intended to quicken vp the Jewes to serue God with the better courage, by putting them in minde of the deliuerance which God had wrought for them: for needes must they haue bin too vthankfull, if that had not prouoked them to serue God. Now then the intent of Moses, is that those to whom he had declared the Lawe, should not onely in deuour themselves to serue GOD during their owne liues: but also finde the meanes that their children and successors should followe them in the same trace. And this lesſon belongeth' to vs as well as to them. For we know that God calleth vs with the same condition, not onely that we our selues should serue and honor him to our liues end: but also that we should haue a care to cause them that come after vs to doe the lyke. Verily there are very few that discharge themselves in that behalfe: but yet are we bound vnto it, and there will be no excuse for vs, if wee doe not our in deuour. Therefore let every man haue an eye to himselfe, and let vs not thinke it enough to haue serued God so long as wee our selues liue: but [that we must also find y meanes] that his name may continue for euer, and that his trueth may [alwayes] be knownen, so as although wee be taken out of the world, yet they that come after vs being taught by our meanes, may linke in with vs into the same fayth, and so fashion themselves thereunto, as God may alwayes be glorified & honored vnto the worldes end. And specially they y haue children ought to thinke that it is they to whom this warning is giuen. True it is that euery one of vs is bound thereto for himselfe, yea and we must teach cuc the most strangers: so as the man needeth not to be my sonne, or my nephew, or my kinsman, whom I should in deuour to cause to serue God & to be of the same faith and religion that I am of: but yet they which haue children ought to consider that they shall yeelde account for it, if they doe not what they can to hold them in the feare of God, and to seee them so instructed and stablished in the pure doctrine, as they may continue in it, and as the knowledge of Gods trueth may still be conuicied our from hand to hand. Thus yee see what we haue to remember vpon this place where Moses sayth, If thy childe aske hereafter what these commaundements, statutes, and ordinances meane.

Now there is also a second poynnt: which is, that Moses intended to stirre vp the people to honor God and to obey him, because they had bin deliuered by his mighty hand. Therefore it is all one as if hee should say, Bethinke your selues well of the good which your GOD hath done for you: for he hath shewed himselfe to be your redeemer: hee hath smitten the realme of Egypt, a people that did set greatly by themselves, yea and which was rich and wealthie, and where was nothing but all maner of pompe and glory to the worldward: and yet notwithstanding, your God hath loued you so dearly, that he hath not spared the Egyptians for your sakes, but hee hath smitten them with plagues, and powred out such vengeance vpon them, as is horrible to thinke of: Hee hath stretched out his strong arme to bring you to this land which hee promised to your fathers. Seeing then that God hath shewed himselfe so gracious and liberall towards you, and prevented you of purpose to be your father: is it not reason that you should giue your selues to him all your life long, and in deuour to serue him, and at leastwise shew that yee haue not forgotten his so great and inestimable benefites? Yes. And so wee see that forasmuch as the Jewes might be negligent in keeping Gods lawe: Moses renewed the remembrance thereof, and set their deliuerance before them, that they might be the better minded, and consider that they were bound, at leastwise to serue GOD in such wise, as they might acknowledge themselves to be the same people whom hee had once deliuered after a maruellous fashion, and with wonderful power. Like as at this day, if a man should speake to vs of the Christian religion and say, Beholde, our GOD hath vouchsafed to make vs partakers of the redemption which hee wrought in the person of his Sonne: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde be gathered heere together vnder his worde, to take him for our father and Sauour, because hee hath chosen vs to bee his people.

And whereas Moses declareth that the Jewes were deliuered out of Aegypt: hee meaneth to doe vs to witte, that God intended to shoule them out from all other nations, specially by assigning them the inheritance of the Lande which hee had promised to their fathers. Yee see then how they should haue sanctified themselves to the seruice of God, and haue held themselves in obedience to his law, because he suffered them not to be intermingled with y infidels, but made a seuerall nation of them alone by themselves. And hereupon we haue to note, y such as seeke counsell at Gods law, doe alwayes finde instruction, & our Lord procureth them ayde & help to bring the to the knowledge of the truth. It is sayd, If thy sonne aske thee, what meane these statutes? He presupposeth that the children are not so brutish, as at leastwise not to be willing & desirous to knowe why they vse such maner of seruing God. And wee see it is Gods ordinance, that the fathers should helpe their children. True it is that the fathers ought not to tary for that, but if they see their children to be despisers of God, or vnuly, and careless both of the saluation of their owne soules and of all Christianitie and fayth: they ought to correct such vices. But the matter which wee treat of as now, is that if children bee willing to learne and to profite, God here assigneth them their fathers to be their teachers and schoolemasters, to shewe them why the lawe was giuen. Herin then wee see, that if wee haue any good will to knowe the trueth, our Lorde will not suffer vs to bee disappointed, but will finde the means that wee shall know whatsoeuer hee thinketh profitable for our saluation. And although hee appoynt not mortall creatures to teach vs: yet will hee worke in such wise by his owne power, as wee shall not bee destitute of knowledge. But our owne slothfulnesse is the cause that GOD shutteth the gate against vs, and that wee abide still in darknesse lyke blinde wretches. For what is hee that vouchsafeth, to seeke after the will of his GOD? Wee bee giuen to worldly thinges to our owne pleasures, to our owne vanities, and to all manner of worldly businesse: and in the meane while God is let alone, and his lawe is forgotten. And therefore it is not to bee wondered at, that hee hardeneth vs in such brutishnes, and that there is so grosse ignorance in the world, as fewe folke haue the true taste and fauor of the doctrine of saluation, but rather wee see that all men despise it, and are so farre off from hauing any affection and zeale to the knowing of it, that they doe rather thrust it from them when it is offered them, and when GOD seeketh them, they runne from him. Sith wee see such vnthankfulnesse euerywhere, is it any maruell that our Lorde reuealeth not his trueth as hee would doe, if men were well minded to wardes it? It is true that God taryeth not till wee come vnto him, but rather performeth that which hee sayth by his prophet Esay, namely that hee appeareth to them that aske not after him, and that hee is found of them that seeke him not, insonuch that hee sayth to them that are farre off from him, Lo, here I am. Yet notwithstanding, men must not vnder this color that God reacheth them his hand, and draweth them out of the dungeons of ignorance before they euer thought vpon him, men (I say) must not flatter and sode themselves in their carelesnesse: but rather wee must learne according to this text, that whereas wee bee ignorant of the trueth, wee must at leastwise doe our induer to get knowledge of it, and resort to such as wee thinke that God hath reuealed more vnto, than to our selues. If wee doe so, and with all humilitie seeke to knowe the thinges that are auailable to our saluation: God will shewe himselfe to vs, and giue vs such meanes and helpes as he knoweth to be expedient for vs. And although mortall men faile vs: yet will hee so supply our want by the power of his holy spirit, as wee shall not continue still in darknesse, if wee seeke y<sup>e</sup> light: for he will not shut y<sup>e</sup> dore against vs if we knock, & do our induer to enter. Thus ye see in effect what we haue to remember vpon y<sup>e</sup> text.

Furthermore it behoueth vs to marke, that here God stetheth not the end of his commandements, what is ment by them and to what vse he hath appoynted the. He doth not onely shew, that the people were iustly bound to keepe the lawe that was giuen them, seeing that God had bought them so dearly. Here are two things. The one is that inasmuch as God hath giuen vs his worde, hee doth well deserue that wee should yeelde him obedience. Why so? Because wee his creatures, and hee hath voutsafed to gather vs together vnto him, to bee his people and to fight vnder his standard, and hath made vs to bee of his flocke and of his Church. Marke that for one poynt.

The other is, that wee should know to what end hee hath giuen vs his Sacraments, so as we haue the preceptes of his whole Lawe, which pertaine to the exercising of vs in his feare and in the hope of our saluation: and to what end he hath set such order among vs as wee now haue. Wee must knowe what is meant by all this. Neuerthelessse, this briefenesse will bee darkesome, if it be not declared better. When wee consider how God hath created & shaped vs, and moreover made vs after his owne image, and giuen vs witte and reason, and therewithall the hope of a better life, and finally hath voutsafed to take vs as his household folke: it sheweth vs that wee bee bound to submit our selues vnto him. For seeing hee is our maker: doe wee not owe him all obedience? Nay there is yet more: namely that in the person of our Lorde Iesus Christ his sonne, hee hath redeemed vs and made vs partakers of his Gospell, to the end that wee should bee guided by his hand. Now then, the first poynt is that when we haue knowledge, it must stirre vs vp to serue God, & to stick to the pure religion that is comprehended in his word. Howbeit this is not enough: but whē we be asked yet neerer, Wherefore y<sup>e</sup> promises of y<sup>e</sup> forgiveness of sins are giuen vs: [wee must answere,] Alas, it is because we be wretched sinners, & we should be continually in anguish and sorrowe of minde, if we knewe not that God is e<sup>t</sup>erred to be mercifull vnto vs of his owne meere grace. For hee cannot loue vs except wee be righteous: and wee shall neuer finde any holynesse in our lyfe, or perfection in our vertues: but it is through Gods mercie, which it pleaseth him to extend towards vs. And so now ye see whereunto the promises tend.

Againe, if it be demanded of vs why hee hath appoynted the order of prayer, as wel publique as priuate: it is for that euery of vs ought to inure himselfe to seeke all his succor at his hand. For wee haue not any good thing, wee be destitute both of wisedomme, strength, and rightrouinesse, wee bee worse than emptie, vntill our good God doe succor our needs: and the meane thereof, is to flee to him for refuge. To that end hath hee ordeined priuate prayer. And publique or common prayer is ordeined to the intent to assure vs the better, that hee will here the common accorde that is among vs, when wee bee come together as it were into one bodie: and therewithall wee make confession of our faith & exercise our charitie. By this meanes then we learne, why and to what end our Lorde hath set order in his Church, that is to say, what he meant to betoken thereby, and to what purpose it is to be referred.

If a man aske vs what is meant by Baptisme, and wherefore it was ordained: it is to the intent wee should know, that euen from our mothers wombe wee bring nothing but all manner of vncleanesse with vs, and that wee be full of infection and filth before the Lord, so as wee must be faine to bee washed, or else hee will not vouchsafe to auowe vs for his . And wherewithall must wee be washed ? With the bloud of our Lord Iesus Christ. That then is the way to make vs cleane . For as long as wee liue in Adam and in our owne nature, wee can doe nothing but euill . Wee bee so marred, as there is nothing in vs but vtter rebelliousnesse against G O D . Therefore wee must enter as it were into death, and into the graue, to be renewed, and our Lord must bee faine to giue vs a new vnderstanding, and a new heart, and he must so shape vs new againe, as we may no more be the same we were before, but bee (as yee would say) cast in a newe mould, and bee made new creatures, as the scripture vseth to speake of it . Thus yee see how wee may learne what Baptisme is, what it betokeneth, and to what end it was ordeyned.

As touching the Lordes supper: if it bee inquired of vs why wee come together to receiue a bit of bread: and a draught of wine: it is in way of acknowledgement that our soules haue neede of foode, no lesse than our bodies, and that as there is such frailtie in this present lyfe, as it cannot continue without the helpes of meate and drinke, so must our soules also bee mainteined after lyke sorte, by reason of the infirmitie that is in them . Neuerthelesse our soules are not nourished with the corruptible meates of this world, but it is the sonne of God that is our foode . Wee then haue Iesus Christ, who is our lyfe, it is hee of whome wee haue sustenance and nourishment, forasmuch as hee was offered in sacrifice for vs, and the bloud that he did shed for our saluation is our drinke. Thus yee see how we nowadays may learne whereunto y<sup>e</sup> ordinañces do tēd which God hath established in his Church, and to what end they be to be referred.

In lyke case was it vnder the lawe . For God ordeyned not the ceremonies without further consideration of some reason in them . It is true that hee meant to separate his people from all the heathen and vnbelecuers of the earth: but yet in the meane while, the washings which they vsed were done, to shewe that they were full of naughtinesse as well as wee, and that it stood them in hand to seeke the meanes to bee made cleane . The sacrifices were a wittnesse that they were worthy to bee condemned to euerlasting death, and that there was none other shift for them, but to flie to the sacrifice whereby they should be reconciled to God . The Sanctuary betokened that no man but onely Iesus Christ might enter into Gods kingdome, nor come nye it: and that by his meanes all nations haue access thereto, and that all such as are vnworthe in respect of their owne persons, are brought in thither by that mediator. To be shorte, all the ceremonies of the Lawe had some certeine vse, and serued to trayne the people to put their trust in the redeemer that was promised them . And that was the cause why Moses was commaunded to make all things according to the spirituall patterne which hee had seene on the mount . For Moses builded not the Tabernacle, otherwise than G O D had giuen him the patterne of it . And all was to shewe, that there was a conformable resemblance betweene the outward things, and the truth which was to be manifested in our Lord Iesus Christ . But in the text Moses speaketh but of the first, and that is the cause why I sayd, that it behoued vs to haue an eye to his meaning . For it was enough for him to say, go too my friends, you which haue seene the redemption that G O D hath wrought, you (say I) ought to consider how much you bee bound vnto him . Therefore make account of the doctrine of the Lawe, and frame your whole lyfe thereafter, that it may be as an acknowledgement of the deliuerance which you haue receiued at his hand. And when ye shall haue walked thereafter all the time of your lyfe: looke well to it that you reach your children also, so as Gods seruice may continue among you, and neuer decay nor bee abolished . That is the playne meaning of Moses.

Furthermore let vs vnderstand that wee must consider, that the Lawe was not inuented at the pleasure of men, neither was it founded by them: but God was the giuer thereof, who holdeth vs vnder his gouernement, and it is his truth which we followe, so as wee holde not any whit of things inuented by men . That is the thing whereon wee must rest, that we may not bee alwayes wauering and doubtfull . And hereby wee knowe how wretched the state of the papistes is: for they bee stubbornne and wilfull in their own imaginations. If a man aske the of who they hold their superstitiōs: they alledge their fathers, they alledge long antiquitie, they alledge y<sup>e</sup> common fashion of y<sup>e</sup> whole world: but in y<sup>e</sup> meane while they haue no certentie y<sup>e</sup> their doings please God, or y<sup>e</sup> he alloweth the, where as in very deed the thing y<sup>e</sup> God leadeth vs vnto is y<sup>e</sup> we should be sure that we haue not ne holie not any thing y<sup>e</sup> is brought vs at al aduantage: but y<sup>e</sup> the doctrine of our faith is y<sup>e</sup> pure truth. Seeing then that God commaundeth vs so to doe: let vs assure our selues y<sup>e</sup> to lue as becommeth vs, wee must haue this certentie y<sup>e</sup> wee be gouerned by Gods word, & that y<sup>e</sup> same is y<sup>e</sup> rule of our sayth, & that y<sup>e</sup> religion which wee sticke vnto is y<sup>e</sup> true religiō. Now therefore we may profite our selues by this text, sith we se y<sup>e</sup> meaning of Moses was, y<sup>e</sup> the people should know y<sup>e</sup> the Lawe was not deuised by men, but that God was the author of it. And euen at this day the Lawe must beare this sway with vs, y<sup>e</sup> wee must know to what purpose it was giue. Besides this, although there be nothing set down here concerning y<sup>e</sup> end wherunto Gods ordinañces doe tend: yet must we looke thereto. For all things are not spoken in one place: wee must take things in such order as God hath set them downe. In other places hee will teach vs what marke it behoueth the people to shoote at in keeping the lawe: but here the case concerneth the continuall seruing of God with reuerence, so as the people may knowe themselves to be wholly at his deuotion, and that therewithall he referueth to himselfe the authoritie of gouerning his people and of holding them in subiection. Those are the things which we haue to beare in minde.

Now let vs come to that which hee addeth in the conclusion: that is to wit, That God hauing deliuered his people, and brought them into the land that hee had giuen them, appointed them all his commandements. Hereby we see, that when God sheweth vs this grace, to gather vs into his Church, hee calleth vs not to be idle, but at the least to the ende we shoulde glorify him, as the thing whereof the whole Scripture speaketh. And these sayings, Behold, I haue purchased a people that shall sing my praise, Behold, I haue planted a vine and I wil be glorified thereby, and such other, are so often beateu into the peoples heads by the Prophets, as it ought to be a doctrine wellnough knowne among them. Nowe therefore Gods speaking after that maner, is to shewe that his intent in choosing that people, was to be honoured at their hands. And this belongeth much more to vs, forasmuch as God hath vttered a farre greater power in deliuering vs from the dungeons of hell in the person of his sonne. Let vs vnderstand then, that wee be baptized with this condition, to giue our selues wholly to our God: lyke as when Saint Paule treateth thereof, chiefly in the first to the Ephesians: he sayth that God hauing chosen vs before the creation of the world to be his children, hath also made vs partakers of the saluation that was purchased for vs by our Lord Iesus Christ, to the end that wee shoulde glorifie him which hath shewed himselfe so bountifull towards vs, and vsed such mercie. As often then as we remember Gods benefites, and specially his vntersing to call vs to the knowledge of his truth: Let vs ad this, namely that it is to the end that our life should be wholly dedicated to his honor and seruice, or else we doe what wee can to ouerthrowe Gods adoption, and wee labor to disannull it vterly: lyke as on the contrary part it is sayd that our calling is warranted by our walking in holynesse of life: for after that maner doth Saint Peter speake of it.

Finally Moses addeth, It shall be imputed to thee for righteousnesse afore God, if thou keepe his commandements as hee hath appoynted thee. In these wordes hee doth men to wit, that if they be desirous to be allowed of God, and that he should accept their seruice: they must not bring any of their owne inuentions, but be contented to doe simply whatsoeuer Gods worde affordeth, and whatsoeuer is contained there. That is the meaning of Moses. And whereas he sayth that the keeping of the commandements which God hath ordeyned, shall be imputed to men for righteousnesse before God: it is all one as if hee should say, my friendes, tell your children that if they swaue from Gods word contained in his Lawe, and turne away after their owne fancies, to doe what seemeth good to themselves: God will reiect it euery whit, and it shall be but as dung before him. For why? Hee alloweth obedience about all things. He intendeth not to giue mee leaue to deuise and inuent newe Lawes: but hee will haue them to be contented with that pure rule [of his Law], in such sorte as hee hath giuen it. Therefore looke not that God should accept you, or allowe any of all your doings for righteoufnesse, vnlesse it be conformable to his doctrine. For although men would faime haue things to passe in account which they themselves like of: yet wil God crosse them out euery one. For why? Their traueling is in vaine, vnlesse they can say, Lord we haue followed the way wherein thou diddest set vs. For so sayeth he by his Prophet Esay. Who hath required these things at your hand, saith he? When the Hypocrites make their brags, and thinke themselves wel discharged in being willing to serue God after their owne faneie: there needeth no more but this answer to disproue all their doings, who required these things at your hands? As if he should say, let him that did set you a worke, pay you: for as for me I will none of you, I disclaime ye, ye haue nothing to doe with me, seeing ye haue not serued me obediently, which is the principal seruice I require. And that is the cause also why S. Paul speaking of mens inuentions, addeth no more but this, that they be mennes doctrines. True it is, that they shall haue some faire colour, and some likelihood of religion, yea and there will seeme to be in them a perfection of all holynesse: but what for that? Seeing they proceed from men, they be no better than flat mockery.

And it is purposely said, Thy righteousnesse before God. Why so? To the intent that menne should no more beguile themselves in their owne opinion, as they be wont to do by hardning their harts when other men sooth them, or by standing in their owne conceits. For then they beare themselves on hand, that God hath no more authoritie to condemne them, but that the fond opinion which they haue conceived, shall be as a blocke to cast in his way. To the intent therefore that men should not yeelde to their owne imaginations and to the things which they surmise to be good: Moses sayth here, my friendes, what shall yee winne, by deeming it to be righteoufnesse to doe as the heathen doe, and to intangle your selues in their superstitious? For though the world lyke well of you for so doing: yet must ye come [to an after-reckoning] before the heavenly Iudge: for men be not competent iudges to giue sentence of that matter. And therefore [to be short] yee had neede to looke about you: how God will accept your doings. And hee telleth you that he wil not be subiect to mens willes, nor be so pleyable as to say: shall this be accounted good? Then must I agree to it. No no, hee will continue alwayes lyke himselfe. Therefore holde ye to that which hee commaundeth: for his worde must bee your whole wisdom, while the world foadeth it selfe with it owne inventions . Thus yee see what is meant by these wordes where Moses sayth , it shall be counted to you for righteousnesse before God , if yee keepe the commaundementes which hee hath appoynted .

But yet by the way here might bee made a question . For it should seeme that God sendeth men to their owne deseiuings to bee iustified by them . And on the other side S . Paul a- uoucheth that wee bee iustified by faith : that is to say , that wee bee accepted for righteous before G O D , through his onely free goodnesse , forasmuch as hee accepteth vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ . For it is written that A- braham beleueed God , and it was reckoned to him for righteousnesse . But here Moses sayth , that the keeping of the Lawe is imputed for righteousnesse . It seemeth then that men are able to purchase saluation by their owne workes , and so by that meanes are not indaungered vnto God . But wee haue two things to note here . The first is that whereas it is sayd that the keeping of the Lawe is righteousnesse before G O D , it is not meant thereby that men can become righteous by their owne workes : for then must they fulfill the lawe throughout in all poyntes . But now was there euer any creature found that discharged himselfe to God- ward ? No . Yee see then that wee bee all damned , and so bee quite bereft of the righteousnesse that was giuen by the Lawe . Wherefore let vs learne that the Lawe could well iustify vs before God , if wee could keepe it from poynt to poynt with- out any sayling . For it is written , hee that doth these things shall liue in them . If a man (say I ) could so order his lyfe , as hee might make his boast that hee had fully performed all that G O D hath commaunded him : hee should be righteous . And why ? For God which cannot lye hath made vs a promise , that hee will accept our workes for righteousnesse , so wee sayle not in the performance of any poynt of his Law . But now is there not any man that dischargeh himselfe so much as of any one poynt . There- fore are we all transgressors of the Lawe , and consequently wee bee all accursed . And wee must not imagine that it deserueth to bee allowed , when wee haue done but some peece of that which G O D commaundeth . No : for hee that miseth in any one poynt , is guiltie before God , and there remaineth nothing for him but death and cursednesse . For it is written , that whoe soeuer performeth not all the things that are contained in this booke , shall be accursed . Now then let vs learne , that whereas the keeping of the Lawe might bee imputed to vs for righteousnesse , if it could bee found in vs : wee bee vtterly depriued and bereft thereof . And why ? For there is not that man which trans- gresseth not the Lawe in some poynt or other : nay , not onely in some one poynt , but in all poyntes throughout , when wee haue caste vp our account . For wee neuer serue G O D with all our heart , with all our soule , and with all our strength as hath bin sayd heretofore . And even when wee doe any good workes to out- ward appearance , there is alwayes some cold- nesse , some slothfulnesse , or some one thing or other mingled with them , to hinder vs . And therefore the worke is still faultie . Thus wee cease not to breake Gods Lawe in all poyntes , so as wee must needs yeelde our selues guiltie , cōfessing that if God litted to iudge vs rigorously , hee should needes reiect vs . Now wee see that although the Lawe containe the true rule of righteousnesse : yet can it not make vs righteous , because of the weakenesse of our fleshe , as sayth Saint Paul in the seuenth to the Romans . It remaineth now to knowe , in what sense this is spoken : For it seemeth to be to no purpose , that God should promise to accept thē for righteous which keepe his lawe : and yet not- withstanding that all of vs should bee bereft thereof .

Howbeit wee must marke , that there is a re- fuge giuen vs which is to resort to the forgue- nesse of our sinnes , which is graunted vs in our Lorde Iesus Christ . Therefore when we haue acknowledged our selues to bee vtterly forlorne and damned in our owne nature , and thereupon repayre to our Lorde Iesus Christ , sewing to bee partakers of his righteousnesse , and to bee iusti- fied by vertue of the obedience which hee yeel- ded to God his father : then G O D not onely receiueh vs to mercy , and couereth vs with the perfection that is in our Lorde Iesus Christ , as with a cloake ; to the intent wee should obtaine saluation : but also taketh our workes in good woorth . And although wee performe not the Lawe , but come luytering aloofe after it , so as there is great store of vices in vs , where- with our workes are blemished : yet notwith- standing G O D accepteth them , and promi- seth that we shall not loose our labor , inasmuch that our workes shall be taken for righteous be- fore him . Albeit that they bee worthe to bee taken for sturke filth , because there is alwayes somewhat in them that God may condemne : yet this keeping of the Law which we performe ( vnperfect as it is ) shall not faile to bee taken for righteousnesse . The reason is , because Iesus Christ supplyeth our default . Then doth not our righteousnesse consist in the worthyneffe of our owne workes : but inasmuch as they bee sanctified in the name of Gods son , & forasmuch as we bee his members [ both they & ] we bee admit- ted for righteous , because of the obedience which hee yeeldd vnto God . And that obedience is communicated vnto vs , as if it were our owne . Thus yee see how the promises that are made vnto vs , doe assure vs that God will accept the thnges for righteousnesse , which we doe in- deuouring to serue him . For such promises are not vaine nor frutlesse , so our Lorde Iesus Christ bee our mediator , and performe that which wantech on our behalfe . For without that , all the lawe will serue vs to none other purpose but to condemne vs , as hath bin shewed afore .

Moreouer let vs make for the second point , that although the people had kept the Lawe of G O D : yet euen the very performance thereof was a record vnto them, that it stode them in hand to bee iustified by mercie and grace, and nor by their owne merites. For their sacrificing was a kind of protesting that they were worthie of death. There was neuer any beast slayne vnder the lawe, but the same was an authenti-call record that men deserued to bee damned at Gods hand. And thereby it behoued the faith-full to bee put in minde to resort vnto God, and that with such humilitie, as they sought their lyfe elsewhere than in themselves. In lyke case was it with their washings, and with all the rest of their ceremonies. The hauing of light in the Temple, was to shew that men are starke blind in themselves; and their hauing of the holy Lampes, and the oyle that God had ordeined for the same, and their anointinges, and such other things ought to haue made the people to consider thus with themselves: there is neyther vnderstanding, grace, vertue, nor any thing else in our wit, but wee must bee faine to borrow all things of the redeemer that was promised to our fathers, and of Gods spirit who is the fountaine and fulnesse of all good things. So then the keeping of the lawe sent the people backe to the grace of our Lord Iesus Christ, and serued for nothing lesse than to hold them still to those shadowes to put their trust in them. Lykewise at this day, sith wee vnderstand well which is the right keeping of Gods Lawe, wee see well enough that it is not for vs to presume vpon our owne deseruings, as these mad papistes doe, who vphold that they become righteous by keeping of the Lawe. They bee so caried away with that opinion, that they think not any more of Gods grace, neither doe they perceiue that the Lawe was giuen to holde men conuicted, & to driue them to come before their Iudge, as wretched offenders to seue for grace. They thinke not of that. Againe, they haue the terme Merit or Desert, which they vse like a drunken man that can discern nothing because he is o-uersotted and hath his eyes bleared: euen so play these wretched vnbelievers. But we for our part knowe that we haue to thanke our God for his infinite goodnesse, in making vs to vnder-stand that the true keeping of the lawe, is for men to condemne themselves by it, and to take knowledge that they haue nothing in them but

Eph. 4. 7.

utter stowardnesse, and that they must be faine to resort vnto God, and to betake themselves wholly to his mercie. And forasmuch as there is none other meane but Iesus Christ: they must get them thither, and know that God will be neither father nor Sauour vnto them, but by accepting them in the person of him in whome hee auoweth all his delight to bee. Thus the things which wee haue to remember vpon this text, are, first that if we will haue God to allow of our lyfe, wee must not doe what wee thinke good of our selues, but simply follow that which is commaunded vs in his Lawe. Howbeit foras-much as it is promised vs, that wee shall bee taken for righteous before him, if wee keepe his Lawe: and yet notwithstanding, all of vs are trasgressors of the law, so as our whole lyfe condēneth vs, & there is none of vs but hee may iudge by heartbitings of his owne conscience, that wee bee full of sinnes and offences: we must flee to the forementioned refuge which is, to beseech God to iustify vs of his owne free mercie. And besides this, when wee bee once grafted into the body of our Lorde Iesus Christ, let vs nor doubt but hee will make vs partakers of the fruite of his death and passion, so that although our workes be sinful, yet God will admit them: for righteous. But yet, that proceedeth of his free goodnesse, and not of any desert of ours. Finally forasmuch as wee knowe that the best workes which wee can doe, are worthe to bee condemned: let vs looke well to it that wee presume not of our selues, nor of our owne vertues: but let vs go and submit our selues with all humilitie to our God, praying him to worke so in vs by his holy spirit, as hee make the death and passion of his sonne auailable, whereby the euerlasting saluation is purchased for vs.

And now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him to voutsafe to print his Law in such wise in our heartes, as wee may bee able to keepe it, not of our owne power and motion, but by the guiding of his holy spirit: and that therewithall it may please him to beare with vs in our infirmities, vntill hee haue rid vs quite & cleane of all our sinnes, & taken vs vp into the euerlasting kingdome which hee hath promised vs. And so let vs all say, Almighty God &c.

When the Lord thy God shal haue brought thee into the Land whither thou goest to possesse it, and shall haue cast out manie Nations before thee, namelic the Hethites, the Amorrhites, the Chananites, the Pherezites, the Heuites, and the Iebusites, seuen Nations moe in number and stronger than thy selfe:

2 And when the Lord thy God shal haue deliuered them before thee: thou shalt smite them, and roote them out, and thou shalt make no couenant with them nor shewe them any fauour.

3 Thou shalt not alye thy self with them by mariage, thou shalt not giue thy daughter

daughter to their sonnes, nor take their daughter for thy sonne.

4 For shee would make thy sonne to go away from mee, to serue other Gods: and the Lordes wrath would kindle against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

their enemies, and to put them to death euerychone, yea euen the young children and all, without sparing any of them: and it is God that speaketh it. But we know that when he intendeth to exhort vs to mildnesse and mercy, hee alledgeth his own example. Ye shal reseebe your heavenly father (sayth our Lord Iesus Christ,) who causeth his day sunne to rise both vpon good and bad: and therefore doe good to such as are not worthy of it. Seeing that G O D hath not a better reason to perswade vs to shewe mercy, than by shewing vs what hee himselfe doth: it seemeth not in any wise conuenient, that he should prouoke vs vnto crueltie. For when hee sayth, ye shall kill all, yee shall leaue nothing, euen the young babes shall passe vnder the edge of the sworde: what is to be sayd to it, but that G O D had no pittie nor kindeheartednesse in that behalfe? But although it seeme so to vs: yet let vs learne to glorify him, knowing that the greatest rigor which is in him, is rightfull & faultlesse, yea eue although the reason thereof be not manifest vnto vs. And hereby let vs learne to beware, y we be not so bold as to iudge of God or of his doings after our own wit & imagination, For as soon as a thing seemeth good vnto vs, wee take it to bee so in deede: and on the contrary part, if wee fall to iudging of Gods ordinances at aduerture, & deeme them to bee euill because wee perceiuee not the reason of them: where is our obedience? Wherefore let vs learne to humble our selues in such wise, that if the thinges which God sayth doe not fitly agree with our vnderstanding: yet neuertheless wee receivee them with all submission and reuerēce, acknowledging that as there is nothing but all wisdome and righteousness in him, so it becommeth vs to yeelde to his good pleasure, and to confesse that whatsoeuer he ordaineth is the soueraine righteousness.

Againe, to the end that the thing which is set downe here may not seeme strange: wee must marke what maner of people they were of whom mention is made here. It is sayd, Thou shalt destroy the people whom I will deliuer into thy hand. Now if it be demanded whereof it came that God would haue none of them referred: Let vs haue an eye to that which had bin spoken foure hundred yeres afore: namely, The wicked- nesse of the Amorrhites is not yet come to his full ripenesse. In the time of Abraham these people were so malicious and spitefull in vexing that holy patriarke, as they went euē to let him haue water. Not that hee refused about to borrow any out of their poudes and fountaines: but that they would not suffer him to inioy the wellles that hee himselfe had digged in the desert places. Hee did no wrong to any man, and yet they were so cruell, that they would not suffer him to drinke of the water which hee had gotten by his owne skill and trauell. He was hunted from place to place, and yet hee had not done any man wrong. Againe all the countrie was ful of the contempt of God, all was full of wickednesse, robbrie, whoredome, and all maner of vncleanesse. To bee short, God seemed to bee asleepe in that hee punished not those nations which were so giuen ouer to all vngodlyncie and outrage. And if they that grudge at this text had liued in those dayes: they would haue sayd, how now? God promiseth to doe iustice, and to take vengeance vpon all the despisers of his maiestie: but there appeareth no such thing. If hee rule the worlde, and that his prouidence bee aboue all: how is it that hee suffereth so long the wickednesse that is in this people? After that maner doe the wicked alwayes take occasion to repine at G O D, and to complaine of him, and to finde fault with his doings. For if hee bee patient, they say hee is carelesse to punish mens offences and finnes. And if hee vse rigor: they say hee exceedeth measure, and that there is no reason in his doings, and that the same hastinesse of his, bewrayeth well that there is no mercy nor pittie in him. Lo how the wicked folke doe blaspheme God euery way. But let vs on our side goe to worke with another maner of modestie.

And first of all wee must marke well this sentence, as I sayd afore. Beholde, God telleth vs that although the Amorrhites and their neighbours were giuen to all euill, and were past amendment, so as there was no more hope to bring them to anie good: yet notwithstanding hee bare with them and made as though hee sawe them not. Hee sawe that they despised him, and were giuen to all idolatric, and therewithall made no conscience to steale and rob and to commit all maner of wickednesse: and yet for all that, hee sayd hee would not destroy them, [but beare with them yet further.] How long? not for halfe a score yeres, or for twentie yeres, or for a whole hundred: but euen vntil foure hundred yeres were past & run out. Was not y a variance long enough? Now in the end of the terme, when G O D had shewed that not onely hee himselfe knew, but also it appeared openly by experience to the whole world, that those nations were utterly past hope of recovery, and grew woorse and woorse vnder pretence that God handled them not according to their deserts: was it not meete that al length horrible vengeance should light vpon them? They had of all that long time heaped vpon the treasure of Gods wrath vpon their heades by abusing his patience: and therefore ought the rigor that he vsed against them, to seeme too excessive? Can wee say that hee was moued with ouersuddeine choler? Nay. Then let vs learne to restrain our selues in this case, and to keep our mouths shut, that wee vtter not a worde against GOD, but so bridle our mindes as we imagine not any thing of him but al iustice and vprightnes, confessing that whatsoeuer hee appoynteth to bee done, cannot bee but rightful, and that it becommeth vs to bee contented with his only will.

And let vs marke by the way, that when men take vpon them to repine against God, it is alwayes to their owne confusion. It is true y<sup>t</sup> at the first fight their cause may seeme very fauorable: for wee can so good skill to harpe vpon Gods mercie, that the rigor of his iustice is alwayes odious to vs. But yet for all that, when men haue pleaded their discourse to the full: is not God able to aunswere them in a word, as I haue declared already? What is y<sup>t</sup>? I wil haue these people vtterly rooted out: for they haue skorned mee. I had giuen the a good & fruitfull land to dwell in, & they haue deuoured my benefites without any acknowledging from whence they came. They haue spited me to the vttermost. I sent the some chastisements to correct them, but haue they amended for al that? I haue set lookingglasse of my wrath before them: but they stopped their eyes, they hardened their heartes more & more, & yet for all that, I haue bin contented to delay the punishment of the to the ende of foure hundred yeres. Behold, foure ages are come & gone: and ought they not to haue amended in so long time? Yes: but they be still at one stay. But yet must not this land bee alwayes infected with such filthinesse. I haue dedicated it to mine own seruice, I wil haue my name called vpon there, and iinted to plant my people there, that there may be a pure & holy religion: & should I leaue such rifferaffe among them? If there were none other reason but that ought not Gods seruice to be more deare than the liues of all the men in y<sup>e</sup> world: If we spare mans bloud, & say it is no small thing that a whole nation should bee so rooted out: I graunt that. But shall wee make so litte account of Gods honor, and of the religion whereby wee liue euerlastingly: shall we (say I) haue it in so small estimation, as to preferre mens liues before it? What a dealing were that? Do we not bewray that there is no loue of God in vs? Vnder color of gentlenesse and mercie, we would pluck God out of his seate, and that men should play mockeholyday with him, so as there should bee no more reuerence nor humilitie yielded to his seruice: & what a confusion were that? Therefore the way for vs to put this text in vre, is that when wee see that God is patient, and falleth not vpon the wicked at the first dash, nor powreth out his rigor vpon them to confound them: wee must not thinke that hee hath forgotten his dutie, and sitteth still in heauen:

but wee must rather consider that hee accomplisheth the saying which I alledged out of Genesis, namely that the wickednesse of the parties is not yet come to full ripenesse. Truly in our iudgement it were time that hee should worke, as soone as the wicked doe passe their boundes. For wee see how impatient wee be, and how wee breake out into heates when thinges goe amisse: in our owne opinion wee would thinke it good that GOD should thunder vpon them out of hand, and to our seeming he is ouerflow. Nay rather let vs looke vpon God, who taryeth patiently as hee hath done at all times, and is loth to execute his rigor, vntill hee haue shewed that the wicked are vtterly past amendment. True it is that sometime hee maketh no such tariance, for it is not for him to deale alwayes after one sort, neither is it for vs to bind him to any certeine Lawe, hee hath libertie to hasten his iudgements when it pleaseth him. But yet for all that, hee doth commonly delay them and put them off, and for the same cause is hee sayd to bee long suffering.

And wee must not thinke that GOD will not call them to account whome hee beareth withall: but after as hee winketh at them, so will hee dubble his vengeance vpon them, if they bee not touched with heartie repentance, when hee hath giuen them respite. But on the contrary part, when hee hath waited for the wicked a long time, if hee shewe greater rigor than wee thought hee would haue done, and punishe them with more extremite because they haue so dalyed with him, and despised his goodnesse, yea and euen turned it into an occasion of greater awelesinesse: I say if he be more wrathfull and sharpe than we thought he would haue bin: Let vs not thinke him to be too excessive, but let vs assure our selues hee hath iust reason so to doe, although hee make not vs priuie to it. Therefore when wee shall haue marked the examples that are in the holy scripture: wee will make this conclusion: That it is not to be wondered at though GOD vse the greater rigor towards those whome hee hath spared so long time together. For his goodnesse is too precious a iewell, to bee made a iestingstocke so of the wicked.

Furthermore let vs marke generally, that God will not be subiect to our surmisings, but he will haue vs to receiue his sayings and doings without scanning of them, and to take al thinges for good and rightfull which come of him, yea euen though our reason gainesay it. For we bee too sicke headed to iudge, and therewithall we be so foolish and rash, that to our owne seeming it is lawfull for vs to alledge our opinion, not onely to iudge of mens doings, but also to giue sentence vpon the determinations of our God, & vpon such execution of the as he doth ordinarily. But contrariwise it is shewed vs, both in this place & in all others: y<sup>t</sup> it is not for vs to aduaunce our selues so high, as to say whatsoeuer cometh at our tongues end: but we must receiue whatsoeuer cometh from God, wout any replying. Doth God then seeme cruell? Yet neuertheless let vs confesse

Num. 7. 4. 18.

confesse that he is righteous, and that he doeth not any thing but in perfect righteousness and equite. Besides this, let vs learne also to obey him in all pointes, by doinge the things that he commaundeth vs, euen though they goe against our stomackes. Sometimes men may (to their seeming) haue honest excuse, not to do the thing that is commaunded them. But what for that? It will not discharge them before God; for GOD will be wise for vs, and good reason it is that he should be so. For what a thing were it if men might alledge, Yea Lord, but what will become of such a thing? Such an inconuenience myght followe of it. If wee fall to scanning after that fashion: is it not as much as if wee should say that God was misadvised, and foresawe not all, & that wee haue a deeper and better settled forecast than his is? And were not that too too diuinish a blasphemie? Yes. And therefore let vs marke, that to rule our life aright, we must not enter into so many countersayings and disputations: but wee must vnderstand that our wisdom is to obey God simply. When Saul spared the king who he had ouercome, and the Cartel that was fallen into his handes: it seemed to him that he had colour good ynough to doe it. For his intent was to haue led the king in triumph, and that had bin as a spectacle to shewe Gods goodnesse towards his people. In deede so was it to Saules weening. And as for the Cartell, he refused them to haue made sacrifice withall: and that was a goodly thing to make men vnderstande, that God had giuen so noble and wonderfull a victorie to his people. All this went well then. Yea, if a man might haue beleued Saul in his owne imagination. But yet in the meane while he is reproued at Gods hand, and both he and his mercie bee condemned together, and the king is faine to be slaine by another before his face. For he himself was not worthe to be Gods minister, he was bereft of that office, and Samuell was put in his roome. And after ward it was tolde him, that the kingdom which he possessed should not descend to his children and posteritie, but should be conueyed vnto a stranger. Wee would thinke this geere very strange, but that it is shewed vs that Saul was ouer arrogant in taking vpon him to be wiser than he had leaue to bee: and in that as soone as a foolish toy tooke him in the head, he followed that rather than the commaundement of God. And was not that a taking vpon him to be wiser than God? And was not that a cursed pride? Yes: and therefore the condemnation which Samuel pronounced vpon him was iust. For it is meete that God should be glorified, and that wee should confesse that there is nothing to be amended in him, but that all mouthes ought to be opened, and to say: Lord, wisdom, iustice, equite, and vertue, are not to be sought for elsewhere than in thee. And therefore let vs practise this doctrin in such wise, as we be not more mercifull than God will haue vs to be, or than the rule which he hath giuen vs will beare. For there are that would faine vse mercy in mingling white and blacke together, and in making a hutchpotch of all things, vnder pretence that wicked persons should goe quite and skorfec. And what remaineth more, but that the righteous and good men should be condemned? And that is the cause why Salomon sayth, that he which quitteth the offender when hee sees him gilty, is as much to blame before God, as he that oppresseth the innocent. For our Lord hath ordaine, not onely that good cases should be maintained: but also that euill dealings should be corrected when they be found. And for the same purpose hath he put his sword into the handes of princes, Magistrates, and all other officers of Iustice, to the intent that leauidnesse should not bee mayntained in the worlde. Then is there no replying against this. And yet notwithstanding yee shall haue some that will complayne of men as bludfuckers, and as soone as any mention is made of the execution of Iustice, it is no better [with them] but crueler. Let such folke get them to God, and goe pleade against him, to see if they can get the vpper hand. And it is not onely the gallowes clappers that say so, I meane those whose fautes and crymes are manifest: but these Tauerhaunters or Alehou-knights which counterfeit the preachers. O they haue great skill to alledge gentleness and mercie: and it seemeth to them that I doe no more spare bloud than they do the wyne, which they guffel and quaffe vp without measure or reason. But such blasphemies or raylings doe touche God, and not men. For I heare what is spoken. Let those mastiffe dogs bark and gnarre as much as they list: yet is this doctrine which proceeded out of Gods mouth, sufficient to make them ashamed.

And herewithall let vs marke, that the mercy which God commaundeth, is to haue pitie of such as are going to destruction. Let that serue for one point. So as if it lay in vs, wee should be mindfull how to draw them out of the ditch. And when wee see them vterly wilfull, so as there is no hope nor meane to bring them backe againe: wee must be sory for them, for as much as we see they bee wretched damned creatures. Marke that for another poynt. Again, let vs beare with such as fall to repentance. But when wee see folkes hardharted and desperate, so as they haue conspired to fight against God to the vttermost: what mercie were it to mayncayne that? Lo heere another blasphemie, which is when men wilneedes be more pitifull than God. He is the welpring of all goodnesse, and hee sayth that we be euil, and that although we haue the greatest shew of goodnesse that is possible to be had: yet is it but a spark of the great and infinite perfection that is in him. But now, behold, there are newe Diuines which wil needes haue men to be mercifull. And how? Although a man be wicked, and the world seeth that he is full of venim against God, and ceaseth not to do euil, but the more he is borne withall the more he is full inflamed with malice: Yet [say they] why should hee not bee borne withall still? Let them aske that of God, and hee will tell them that there is no place for his mercie, but where there is repentance. True it is, that it is in him to giue repentance. But howloeuer the worlde goe, when his will is to vtter his goodnesse towards any man, he toucheth his heart that he may returne vnto him. Now then, shall we looke vpon such as are fully bent to blaspHEME God to the vttermost, and yet in the meane while talke to them of mercie still? Ought we not rather to spit in the faces of such villaines, which mocke God and his word to the full? Yes: and therefore let vs beare simply in minde, that wee must followe the things which God commaundeth, and that it is not for vs to alledge any thing at all in that behalfe.

Deut. 32. 35.
Rom. 12. 19.
Heb. 10. 30.

And on the other side let vs marke also, that God meant not to resigne his vengeance vnto men, & to giue them leaue to hurt their enemies when they shall haue offended them. Then if we do the worst we can to me when they haue grieved vs or done vs any wrong, vnder colour that God hath told vs that he would haue the vngodly rooted out: it is a taking of a false couert from the word of God. Therefore let vs note that wee must not be led with any affection, neither must we passe whether any wrong or hinderance haue bin wrought vs or no: for as long as mens minds run vpon their priuate griefes, they shall neuer serue God: but wee must haue this consideration with vs, of doing that which God commaundeth vs, without being moued by any fleshly moode. Marke that for a speciall point.

Deut. 12. 8.

Againe, let vs not deale further than God biddeth vs, but let vs bee faithfull executers of his words, & not stir one finger further than he saith, do thus or thus. To be short, he y giueth his enemy but a fillup, is gilty of murder before god. But he that putteth a wicked mā to death, not being led thereto by any wicked affliction, but because his office requireth it is iust and allowed of God, and his excecuing of such punishment is a sacrifice vnto him. According as wee see that Moses speaketh thereof, specially when the idolatrie that the people had committed was to bee punished, in which case he saith, Sanctifie your hands vnto y Lord. And how? What maner of holines was it wherof Moses spake there? It was y they should kill all the idolaters that had defiled them selues, & put the corrupters of y true religion to death, And whom commanded he to doe it? Euen y Leuites, euen those which ought to haue bin y mirrors of al pitie & louingkindnes. Euen the Priests whō God had dedicated to himselfe were neuertheless appointed to be the executers of y rigor. And vpon whom? Euen vpon their owne kinsfolke, and they might not beare with them. Seeing then that wee see this: let vs learne that such as do Iustice, (condicionally that they intermingle not their owne affectiones and reuenges, but in deuour to serue God & to execute the charge that is committed vnto them,) do sanctifie their hands in so doing, and the rigor which they vse is comendable. That is to say, if they haue compassion vpon y poore creatures that perish: then y rigor of theirs being so qualified, is an acceptable sacrifice vnto God. And on the contrarie part, if we doe but stirre one finger vpon displeasure for any wrong that is done vnto vs, yea or be but protoked to grunt at them y shall haue misused vs: by and by it is murthre before God. And so let vs learne, not to seeke fond excuses to reuenge our selues, vnder pretyce y God hath told vs that the wicked must be destroyed and rooted out: but let vs haue a good and well stayed zeale, so as we ouerhoot not our selues to say that me may step forth to do this or y on their own heads, but y they must tarie til God haue giue sentence, and then execute the same, as wee see is said of it in this text. Thus wee see in effect what we haue to remember, concerning the rooting out of those whō God knowing to be past amendment, would not suffer to welter any longer in their own dung, because he had borne with them ynough and too much alreadye.

And it is said expressly, God hath deliuered them into thy hand so put them to death. This is a watchword which he giueth to his people, to the intent they should the willinglier obey this commaundement. As if he should say, he that will giue you the victorie, willethe you to deale so. And is it not reason [then that ye should do it?] Yes, for howe should wee vse Gods giftes, but according to his will? So then, Moses confirmeth the doctrine that he setteth forth to the people: as if he should say, Looke about thee, thou must not dispose after thine owne pleasure, of them whō thou shalt ouercome. For if thou spare them vnder colour y thou hast subdued them, and that they be in thy hand, & that y hast conquered them: it wil cost thee right deare. For commeth the victorie of thy selfe? No: but it is thy God which hath deliuered them into thy hand. And for prooffe thereof, these nations are stronger and mightier than thou, yea and mo in number. How then could you discomfit them, if your God ouermaistred them not, & were not your Caprain, & fought not for you? If the victorie were not giuen you from heauen: how could you obtaine it? Nowe then, come not heere to make your vauntes, and to say, wee may now dispose of the victorie as wee list our selues. For it commeth of God, and therefore hee must beare all the sway, and you must vse such humilitie, as he may bee obeyed, and honoured for the thing which you knowe to come of him. Thus wee see now the intent of Moses.

And hereby we be warned, that in all things which GOD putteth into our handes, wee must beware that wee take not too great libertie, to vse his benefites at our owne pleasure. For it is good reason that hee shoulde alwayes haue so much credite with vs, as to shewe vs the lawfull vse of his benefites. As howe? Let vs take y comonest example of eating and drinking. When God hath giuen a man abundance of worldly goods, hee must not forget him to whom he is beholdē for them. For if he say, this is mine, I will doe with it as I list: it is a defrauding of God of the right that hee reseruethe to himselfe. It is true that wee may well terme the things ours which he hath giuen vs: howbeit, that is with condition that they must alwaies remaine at his deuotion, and wee vse them soberly and modestly as I haue saide afore, so as hee

may still be acknowledged to bee the Lord and maister of them.

Nowe were this well obserued, wee woulde not vnhallowe Gods beneficites after such sort as wee see most men doe. For there is no questioning whether GOD haue permitted or forbidden such a thing : but as soone as men haue power ouer it, by and by they thinke it is lawfull to doe with it what they list. And who shall let vs, say they? If thou finde none vpon earth to set himselfe against thee and to let thee: GOD can well ynough skill to call thee to account for thy itarcknesse, in that thou submittest not thy selfe vnto him, nor referrest to him the things that he hath giuen thee, to say that he shall alwayes ouerrule thee. So then let vs mark well this doctrine, namely that for as much as GOD sheweth himselfe liberrall towardes vs, and bestoweth his beneficites vpon vs: wee beeyed and bound with so much the straiter bond, to doe him homage for the things that he hath put into our handes, that is to say, to vse them accordingly as his word will beare. That is another point.

Now Moses addeth immediatly, Thou shalt not make any Alliance with them. Thou shalt not give them thy Children in marriage. For if thou give thy some in marriage to a daughter of the enemye, or to any of thyne enemies: shee will turne away his hart and diuice him to superstition and idolatrie: & then will the wrath of thy God be kindled vpon thee, and thou shalt bee rooted out. Heere our Lorde addeth another commaundement, which is that the Amorthytes should not haue any league or alliance with his people. Hee had saide afore, Thou shalt destroy all. And why? Because hee had tolde them howeit was his wil (as I saide afore) that that Land should be reserved to himselfe. And surely we see what befell his people, when they began negligent in executing this commaundement. For notwithstanding any thing that GOD had spoken to them, yet they forbore to conquer the Land which hee had promised them. This is ynough (quoth they), let vs holde our selues quiet, and let vs not spend our life in warre, And soby that meanes they left a great number of that people alue. But what came of it? They became as thorns in their sides, yea and as prickes in their eyes. Now then the reward which the Isralites had for not dooing the thing which God had commaunded them: was, that by leauing those idolatrous people alue, and by intermingling themselves with che, they felt them to bee as thornes to prickte them and to prickte out their eyes. For the enemies of God did bring the wretched Jewes into such captiuitie, that they were overlodged with the yoke of bondage, and there was no man that succoured them, vntill they had languished long time therein. And it is good reason that GOD should pay vs in such coyne, when wee will needes bee more louing and friendly than hee. Wee see what was sayde to Achab concerning Benhadad King of Syria, that bycause hee had not punished the partie whome GOD had commaunded to bee punished, hee should receyue the punishment vpon his owne head. Thou wouldest not punish him (sayth the Prophet,) and therefore must thou answer for him in his stead, and bee his borrowe. And in deede, it is not for nought that men doe commonly vse this prouerbe, Saue a theeft from the gallowes, and hee will helpe to hang thee. This prouerbe serueth not onely to condemne the vnthankefulnesse of such as haue receyued good at mens hands: but also to verifye the iust punishment of GOD: that is to wit, that if a man haue saued an offender by some wicked practises either for fauour, or for fond pittie, or for vaine-glorie, and so hindered iustice: hee himselfe must answer in his stead, and the partie that was saued from the gibbet, must helpe to leade him thither from whence himselfe was discharged. And when it falleth out so: wee must vnderstande that it is of Gods working. So then yee see howe GOD hath fitted by effect, that it was no small offence, that the Lande which hee had dedicated to his owne seruiue shoulde be still defiled with such abominations, and that Idolaters should bee mingled with the people which ought to haue bin holy.

Howbeit although the doctrine that hath bene set downe alicadye, might suffice: yee notwithstanding here GOD sheweth moreouer, that his commaunding that those Nations shoulde not bee referred nor suffered to lue, was not for naught. Why so? For if they lue with you (sayeth hee) you may acquaint your selues with them, and if yee make any allyaunce with them, beholde it is a plague, beholde it is a contagious disease that will come vpon you and your offspring, so as ye shall be corrupted and growe out of kind: and in the ende that will cause you to bee rooted out, and GODS vengeance which lay vpon that people will light vpon you, bycause ye haue not executed his iudgement as hee commaunded you. That in effect is the thing that is conteyned heere. And wee haue a good lesson to gather vpon this text: that is to wit, not to haue to doe with the wicked sorte, and with the despysers of God, according to this saying of Saynt Paulus, 2. Cor. 6. 14. that wee must not drawe the yoke with the vnbeleueers. For hee vseth the similitude of Oxen cuppled together. The yoke holdeth them so together, that looke which way the one draweth, the other must needes followe. In like case is it with men: They that fall into familiarite with the wicked, Doe cupple themselves with them, so as they bee led out of the way and marr'd by them, inso much that whereas they were as little Godes beefore, nowe they become starke Diuelles. Therefore let vs beware wee mingle not our selues with the despysers of GOD and with the wicked, vnlesse wee intende to become lyke them. Yet notwithstanding there are some to bee seene which are so fine bradded, that they will make God a Iyer.

For they beare me in hand that they may haunt the company of wicked men, & yet keepe themselves found from all corruption. Yea, but it is a token that they doe ill knowe themselves, when they beare themselves in hand that they be far other than God hath reported them to bee. Behold, God warneth vs of our frailtie, and telleth vs that if wee keepe companie with the wicked, they shall rather drawe vs to euill, than we shall bring them backe to good: and therefore it behouth vs to keepe vs out of their companie. And if we thinke the contrarie: what wil come of it? In the ende wee shall finde that all our weening was but fondnesse and follie: and therefore let vs rather learne to obey God.

But heere it might be demaunded whether it be not lawfull for the faithfull to haue any companie with the wicked. I told yee already that we must not goe beyond the bondes that God hath set. God giueth vs leaue to endeavour as much as is possible for vs, to bring them backe againe which are out of y way of saluatio. For as for the thinges that were spoken concerning the Amorrhites and the people that were their neighbours: they take not place so rigorously now-dayes, as though God gaue vs the sworde in our hand, to slea all that were against vs: but euery of vs must haue an eye to his owne state, and to the chardge which God hath committed vnto him. Magistrates are armed with the sworde, to punish those whom God bringeth to their handes, and to put this doctrine in vre. Let vs looke among vs what the holy Scripture telleth vs: namely that wee should bee fayne to get vs out of the world, if wee should not in any wise bee conuerfant with the wicked. For why? The whole earth is full of them, and therefore we must nedes dwell with them. But after what maner? In such sort as we haue neither acquaintaunce nor familiaritie with them. For those are the yokes that cupple vs together. When men fall to eating and drinking with the wicked, and creepe into acquaintaunce with them, and become friendes to them: it is not possible but that they must be corrupted, and God offended with it. That is a thing which we haue to marke concerning this text. Neuertheless, if we be in companie with the wicked: let it be for necessities sake, and so soberly as they may not bee able to infect vs with their naughtines, nor by any means turne vs aside from the right way, or frō the feare of God and honest behauiour of lyfe. Lo how farre forth we may be conuerfant with the wicked. But to intangle our selues with them, and to haue familiar acquaintaunce with them, is a manifest tēpting of God. And if we say there is such strength & stedfastnes in vs as they can not winne vs: wee deceiue our selues. Verily as who should say that God knoweth vs not better than wee our selues doe. Is it not a diuclish ouerweening when wee goe to worke after that fashion? And specially when wee fall to contracting of mariages with them, is it not as it were a plunging of our selues into naughtinesse? If a man see a dispiser of God which hath a daughter like hir father, and hee goes and matcheth himselfe with hir: is it not as good as an vtter renouncing of God? I goe and giue my daughter: and to whome? To a wicked man, to a naughtipacke that hath not one sparke of honestie in him, whose life is wholly out of order. I make the silly shepe a pray, and cast it into the wolues throte: and what a crueltie is that? Is it not all one, as if I sacrificed my daughter vnto Moloch? Yes: for he draweth hir away from obedience to God, to put hir into the hand of the deuill, and to turne hir vnto all naughtinesse. Againe, if a man match his sonne with a yong woman that is euill conditioned and an idolatresse, in whome hee seeth no religion nor vertue: is it not as good as if he should goe poison his sonne? True it is that the wife (to mennes seeming) hath not authoritie ouer her husband: But yet it is a deadly plague for a man to be matched with a wicked wife. For surely one woman of naughty behauiour, shall rather mar ten men, than ten good husbands shall win one Jewe woman that is set vpon wickednesse. And that doth experience shewe. The wife shall sooner marre hir husband by hir allurements and temptations I wor not how: than the husband shall reclaime his wyfe, and bring hir backe againe to good. And therefore let vs not thinke it straunge, that God should tell the Jewes heere, that if they giue their sonnes and daughters to the Amorrhites, Hethites, Chananites, Heuites, Iebusites, and such like people: they should by and by be turned away to idolatry.

And heereunto he addeth a threat, That they shall be rooted out: and that is according to that which I haue sayde already. For it doth them to vnderstand, that God will be continually among them. In deede it was a woord of singularity, that God would dwell among them: for they might call vpon him at their neede, and when they were distressed they might feele that he was at hande with them, and therefore that they needed not to feare their enemies. But yet for all that, it behoued them to know, that God being so neere vnto them, would not suffer himselfe to be despised. And therefore let vs beare away this lesson, that now specially seeing God hath vouchsafed to giue vs his word, wherby he assureth vs that he will be neere at hand to vs, yea and that he will haue vs to bee his temples to dwell in by his holy spirit: let vs learne I say, to giue our selues in such wise vnto him, that whereas there are finnes and infirmitie in vs, (as in deede there are mo than is requisite) it may please him to correct them, and rid vs of them from day to day. And forasmuch as hee hath taken vs vnder his protectiō, yea and made his dwelling place among vs: let vs bee stirred vp by meanes thereof, to lue in so much the greater awe, seeing he is become so neighbourly and familiar vnto vs.

Now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faulces, praying him to make vs so to feele the, as wee may learne to mislike of our selues for them, and as this cruised ouerweening may no more beare sway in vs to make vs lue after our owne liking, but that we may forsake our owne fleshly reason and wisdom, and couet nothing but to please him in all pointes and all respects: and that seeing he hath vouchsafed to shoule vs out from the wicked, and to deliuer vs from their corruptions, wee may learne to sanctifie our selues wholly vnto him, and to profite more and more in his feare, to the end that his glorie may shine forth in vs, & we be more & more confirmed in his free adoption, wherethrough hee hath chosen vs to be his childre & heires for our Lord Iesus Christs sake. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

5 But thus shall yee doe vnto them. You shall beate downe their altars, and breake their pillours: yee shall heawe downe their groues, and burne their Images with fire.

6 For thou art a holy people to the Lord thy God. The Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be his peculiar people aboue al the nations of the earth.

7 The Lord hath not set his loue vpon you, nor chosen you bycause ye were moe in number than all other nations, seeing you be the least of all nations.

8 But for the loue which the Lord beareth you, to keepe the othe which hee sware to your fathers, the Lord hath brought you forth with a strong hand, and deliuered you from the house of bondage, euen from the hand of Pharao King of Egypt.

Esterday wee sawe howe God forbad his people to aly themselves in any wise with the Infidels, and specially with y people that dwelt in the lande of Chanaan. Forasmuch as it was

Exod. 25.8. & 29.45.
said that God had chosen that lande to the intent that his name should be worshipped there: it was his will to haue it purged from all the filthinesse and infections, which had reigned there too long time afore. And after hee hath spoken of the folke, he addeth also that he will haue all y tokens and markes of ydolatrie that were in the countrie put quite away. For like as it behoued the Iewes to worship God purely, without intermedling any of the superstitions of the heathen: so did it also behoue them to keepe the order in such wise as God had set it downe, and to put away all things that were contrarie to the true religion and seruice of God, so as there might be no mingling nor corruption. Wee see now in effect, that the doctrine which is contained here, is that forasmuch as God had giuen his people the land of Chanaan: hee would haue it cleare from all abominations, and his seruice to be so set vp, as all the ceremonies of the heathen and vnbelecuers might be taken away, and nothing be mingled with it besides his owne Lawe. And y is the cause why hee speaketh expressly of Altars and Groues. For as wee see that men haue no end nor measure in deuising of fashions to serue God withall: there was not that Groue but they made some deuotion in it. And like as men builded Abbeyes, Pryories, and Chappels in the Popedome: so went the world among the paynims, and the Iewes followed the same trade, as we see. But that was not for want of warning; for God had prouided sufficiently for them, that they might not set their minds vpon such paltry. But what? Hereby it appeareth howe harde it is to holde men in the pure simplicitie of Gods seruice. Neuertheless, howsoeuer men fare, it is tolde vs here, that such as will serue God vncorruptly, must abstaine from the things that are deuised and forged by ydolaters, and stick to the pure doctrin which God hath ordeined, and not adde any thing to it of their owne, or which they find here & there, or which y world hath foolishly brought in: All those things must bee laide down, if we will serue God purely. But yet let vs mark y there were two reasons why God commanded the Iewes to break downe the heathen mens altars, & to destroy their ydols. The one was to the ende that his people should not be prouoked and tempted to wickednes & superstition by looking vpon them: for we be so fraile, y we be caried away as soone as we spie any mark of superstition. I said euen now that it is a harde thing to hold men fast in pure obedience to god as in respect of his seruice. Why so? For their eares doe alwayes itch to heare some newe doctrine: & although none be brought them from elswhere, yet their minds are so rouing, y they cuer couet some newe thing or other. Now then if wee haue any occasion to tempt vs vnto euill, or to any corruption of Gods seruice: wee be ouertaken by and by. God therefore perceiuing that his people might bee inclined to ydolatrie, and that they would yeelde to it out of hand as soone as they spied any occasion: willed them to wipe away all such things. Beware (saith hee) that yee suffer not anye of the markes of the ydolaydolatries that haue reigned hitherto there : for if any of them come in your sight, ye shalbe as it were ratiſhed, and ye will be following of them. So then, ſuffer not any thing that may make you to ſtumble, or that may comber you, ſo as the way ſhould not be leuell before you. Haue you none other ſignes than thoſe which I haue appointed you, and let them ſerue to confirme you in my worde. Let the things which I haue taught you bee as a burning Lampe to giue you light : and if yee haue neede of helpes, let the Sacraments and Ceremonies contained in my Lawe ſuffice you : but take heede to your ſelues that yee haue no ſtumbling blocke. For though ye haue nothing to hinder your going on in the right way : yet may yee euen of your owne nature turne aſide from it : and what will ye then doe, if any occaſion of euill be offered you? That is one point.

Another is, That Gods will was to haue that Lande as it were dedicated to himſelfe, and y his people ſhould ſhew how much they abhorred ydols, by ſuffering none of the things to remaine which the heathen men had kept before. God then ment to trie the zeale of the Iewes, when he commaunded them to make cleane riddance of the ydols: and by that meanes he intended to inure them to abhorre ydols, and all things that belonged to them: ſo as they might ſhewe not onely that they purpoſed to worſhip the onely one God, but alſo that they could not abide his glorie to bee any whit abated. Nowe we ſee the two reaſons that God had an eye vnto in this place. And nowe muſt we apply them to our owne benefite. For although ſome woulde reſtraine this to the Iewes, as though it belonged not to vs in theſe dayes : yet was it not Gods intent to ſpeake for any one time onely. And in deede, (as hath bene declared in the fiſth chapter,) let vs looke into our owne hartes, and euery man examine himſelfe, whether hee finde himſelfe more ſtedfaſt and ſtrong to withſtande ydolatrie, than the Iewes and other Nations were. For ſurely that curſed ſeede is ſo rooted in all men, as there is none of vs all but hee may keepe a ſchoole of ſuperſtition, without hauing any ſchoolemaſter to teach him. Wee be ſo forward, that although no bodie ſeduc vs, yet we rather tende ſtill to ſome corruption, than holde our ſelues in the pureneſſe of gods ſeruiſe. What is to be done then, ſeeing that ydolatrie is ſo rooted in our nature? If occaſions be offered to drawe vs away, is it not like as when nettes are ſpred before birds? And wee bee ſo vnconſtant, that we tumble into them immediatly. And therefore as for them that thinke themſelues to haue ſuch conſtance & ſtrength, that although they haue images, Chappells, and ſuch other things, yet they ſhall not hurt them at all: they tempt God, and experience ſhewes it to bee ſo. Therefore there is no better way, than to know our infirmities, and vpon the knowledge thereof, to vie the remedie that God hath giuen vs. If a man perceiue himſelfe to haue a weake head, ſo as he is not able to beare three glaſſes of wine but he ſhall be ouertaken : if hee drinke without diſcretion, is he not as badde as a ſwine? Doeth he not tempt God? Ought he not to thinke vpon the default that is in him, and to prevent it? Yes. Nowe it is certaine that in this behalfe we haue ſo weake braines, that we ſhal by and by be made dronke with ſuperſtition, yea and as good as bewitched with ſuperſtition, ſo as there wilbe no diſcretion in vs, but wee ſhall goe on ſtill to ſecke further occaſions and meanes of it: and is not that a manifeſt ſpiting of God? It is a point therefore which ought to bee well marked, that G O D knowing the weakeneſſe which is in vs, is not willing that wee ſhoulde haue images, altars, and ſuch other things to ſeduc vs, but that all ſuch things ſhoulde bee wyped out from among vs, to the intent there may not bee any thing to hinder vs from giuing our ſelues ſimplic vnto God.

But nowe let vs come to the ſeconde reaſon.
 20 It is not ynough for the faithfull to reſtaine from all ydolatrie; but they muſt alſo ſhewe that they abhorre and hate all things that are againſt Gods ſeruiſe : And to the vttermoſt of their power they muſt endeavour to haue them all wyped away, ſo as the remembrance of them may be rooted out, that they may neuer bee ſpoken of any more. For elſe what zeale haue we to the honour of God, when we ſee ydols ſet vp in ſteed of him, and looke vpon things that ſerue to corrupt and deſace the true and pure religion?
 30 If wee doe but laugh at them, and take them as ſmall trifles, or as childrens gancies : is it not a token that we eſteem the honour of our God no more than a thing of nothing? For if our deſire to haue God glorified, were as earneſt as it ought to be : ſurely it would wound our hearts to ſee ydols ſo ſet vp in his place, and to ſee men beare him of his maieſtie to attribute the ſame to deade creatures, and that ſo precious and holy a thing as religion is, ſhould be ſo marred, corrupted & turned vpside down. When theſe marks come before our eyes, ſurely if we haue any one droppe of good zeale, it muſt needs vex vs and grieue vs : and wee muſt to the vttermoſt of our power deſace all thoſe ſignes and marks of ydolatrie, and cauſe Gods honour to be maintained vnappayred. And in deede, when hee requireth that wee ſhoulde make confeſſion of our faith vnto him: this alſo is comprehended therein. For 40 as the mouth ought to vtter what is in our hart, Rom. 10. 10. that is to wit, that wee haue but the onely one God which hath redeemed vs : if wee yeeld him ſuch record with our mouth: our outward doings muſt alſo be anſwerable thereunto, ſo as both ſeete and handes tend that way. [If we were at that point,] wee woulde nor wittingly and willingly ſuffer any ſuperſtitions, if it lay in vs to abolish them. But yet there is a thing in it, which is that Moſes commaundeth the people expreſly, to doe it when they bee come into the Lande which God had appointed the to inioy for their inheritance. For if we be in a ſtraunge Countrey where wee haue no authoritie: it is not in our power to put downe ydols, neither doeth this commaundement ſtretch thereunto. It is true that in paſſing through places where ydolatrie is vsed, we must sigh and mourne, and thinke our eyes to bee as it were defiled with the sight of such wickednesse contrary to the honour of god, so as it must grieue vs and vex vs at the heart that we bee druen to see such sights. And forasmuch as our hands be tyed, and we haue not any souerantie or authoritie in the place or Countrie where such superstitions reigne: we haue no more to doe, but to pray God to put to his mightie hande, and to destroye it euery whit: and in the meane while to holde our selues quiet. But if we haue authoritie: then behold, Gods voyce crieth out, vp vp, such abominations must not reigne any longer. When yee bee come to the Countrie which your God giueth you to possesse: then let all such geere bee put downe.

Nowe then, out of this text wee must drawe a rule: which is that according as God giueth abilitie, wee must indeuour to haue all ydolatrie and all the tokens thereof vtterly abolished both publickely and priuately. As howe? When a Countrie is at libertie, and our Lorde hath planned his word there: such as beare sway and haue authority, must find y<sup>e</sup> means that all such things as haue corrupted the true religion, may be abolished & brought to nought. If they doe it not: it is a negligence which God condemneth. And if a man will put downe ydolatrie: it is not ynough to saye, no man shall worshippe ydolles any more: but all things which imbedded the purenesse of the Religion, must bee quite and cleane wyped away. As for example, if men should keepe still the Altars that were in the time of the diuclish Masse: what a thing were it? Wherof serued they, but to committe abominable trecherie against God, so as there shoulde remaine neither faith nor feare towards him, so long as such abomination indured? The Altars serued to sing their Masses on. By meanes whereof the death and passion of our Lorde Iesus Christ was vtterly defaced, in spite of the redemption that he had wrought. In somuch that if it bee admitted that Iesus Christ was sacrificed dayly: it is all one as to reiect the benefite that was purchased vs by his death and passion.

Nowe then if the Altars were suffered to stande still: were it not a retyning still of some memoriall of the leawdnesse which ought to mislike vs? Yes: for otherwise what were our zeale? When wee call to remembrance that wee haue hearde Masse in times past, and had cast our selues into that dungcon: wee ought to bee sorie and to craue pardon for it, and to bee abashed at the blindnesse wherinto wee were false, wherethrough wee became so beastlie, as to goe seeke our saluation by renouncing the redemption that was purchased for vs long agoe by our Lorde Iesus Christ, and to make our selues partakers of so diuclish a thing: If we ought to bee afraid in our selues to thinke of it. And if the Altars shoulde haue stode still, had it not benee as it were a spiting of God to play mockeholiday with him after that fashion, that whereas wee had shrinke away from Christianitie, wee bee neuer a whit sorie for it, nor grieued at all to see the badges thereof? And in verie dede the lewes were cast in the teeth with their retyning still of those things, as who shoulde say they weleered still in their owne filthinesse. And if a leawde woman that had giuen her bodie to dishonour for a time, shoulde afterwarde reioyce to see still the markes of her whooredome: were it not a signe that shee repented not at all? Yes: and euen that is the cause why this exception is purposely added, that when the kinges went about to serue God, and had beaten downe the ydolles, yet they helde still some relikes of thgm, and this blemish sticketh expressly vpon them, that God mislyked them: as if hee shoulde saye; they were not worthy to bee allowed without exception, but bee druen to beare this marke of reproch always in their faces, that they had not throughly clenfed the lande from the former superstitions, when they left the groues standing still. If a man say, why, and was that so euill a thing? Are not trees the creatures of God? Yes: but when men shall haue misused them and put them to such heathenish vncleannes as to spyte God with them: then must they bee wyped quite and cleane away. Men must not take ouer much libertie in that case: for our nature is too much giuen to euill of it selfe, (as I saide afore) without anye intycing of it thereunto. Thus yee see howe wee ought generally to induour to abolishe all superstitions, and all things that may serue thereto.

And likewise particularly, let euerie man looke well to his owne house, that hee retaine not any thing which may couer any wickednesse, or which is not fully agreeable and conformable to the simplicities of Gods worde. For as manie as dispence with themselues in that case, shall seele it turne to their ruine in their ende. Wee see howe it befell to Gedeon who was chosen of God, and by whom so many noble deedes were done. Onely because he made an Ephod and caused a certaine deuotion to be set vp: there ensued great destruction after his death. And after the same manner wee see howe a great number doe keepe still their chapels. If they haue any Castle or great houle, there must bee a chappell for a memoriall of their aunceters, in remembrance that there was such a thing, and such an antiquitie. They then which will needes haue some remnant after that fashion for vaine glorie, must seele at length that they haue couered a fire, which shall consume themselves and their children, as the dede of Gedeon was the cause of the vndoing and destruction of his Image, as I saide afore. And therefore let vs beare in minde, that wheresoeuer G O D giueth vs power, wee must so hate all the markes of superstition, as wee must doe what wee can to wype them out: y<sup>e</sup> they may no more be had in remembrance. And let vs alwayes thinke vs of the two reasons which I alledged before. Now for cōfirmation hereof, Moyses addeth thus

1. Kin. 15. 1. 4. and 22. 44. & 2. King. 3. 3. & 14. 4.

Iudg. 8. 27.

the people of the Iewes are holy, and that they ought to dedicate themselves wholly vnto God: euen because they had bene chosen (saith he) to bee a peculiar people in the whole worlde. Whereas he saith that the Iewes are a holy people: hee meaneth that they ought to be separated from the Heathē and Infidels. For if wee take example at those to whom God hath not granted such grace as hee hath done to vs: is it not as good as a trusting of the priuledge vnder foote which hee hath giuen vs? Beholde, God sheweth vs his will, and hee vouchsafeth to haue his worde preached vnto vs: and is that to no purpose? is it for nought? Whereas God commeth downe vnto vs, and communicateth himselfe so familiarly vnto vs: doeth that honour which he doth vs, and that grace which hee vouchsafeth to vs towards vs, serue to no vs: nor profite? Surely it ought at leastwise to sanctifie vs vnto him, that is to say, to make vs redy to say, Alas Lord, we were miserable creatures, and thou vouchsafest to retain vs to thy selfe: therefore behold, we be here, gouerne thou vs, and let vs be thy flocke. But nowe if we tall to desling of our selues with the superstitions of the heathen: is it not a renouncing of the priuledge that God had giuen vs? Is it not a forsaking of the couenant whereby hee had knit and vnited himselfe vnto vs? Yes. That then is the cause why Moses addeth heere, that the Iewes are a holy people. As if hee should say, Looke to your selues, for God hath shouldered you out from all Nations, and hee hath called you, euen by shewing you that you shall bee his heritage, accordingly also as he hath giuen himselfe to you. Nowe then if yee goe and take example at these blinde wretches, so as ye alledge, Our neighbours doe so and so: what a thing is that? Your neighbours are straungers to God, they be as wilde beasts, God hath not vouchsafed to behold them with pitie and mercy, to deliuer them from the brutish ignorance wherein they be. To be short, yee haue them as mirrors of Gods wrath and rigour. Al they that perish do shewe you what you were, and what you shoulde be stil, if god had not reached you his hand. Now therefore acknowledge that benefite, and take no more example at those whom God hath forsaken, and to whom he hath not granted the like fauour as he hath done to you. Thus much concerning the Iewes. Now remaineth that we apply this doctrine to our owne vs.

What is it that maketh vs a holy people to our God? Euen his worde. For it is saide, you be cleane because of the worde which I haue preached vnto you. Ye see then that the mean whereby God sanctifieth vs to himselfe, that is to say, draweth vs out of the common perdition of all the children of A dam, and taketh vs to be of his owne household: is his vttering of his will vnto vs. And so to be short, it is (as ye woulde saye) a solenne consecration or hallowing of a people by God, when hee vouchsafeth to haue his worde preached vnto them. Wee neede not goe seeke the gewawes of poperie to make a dedication or hallowing: for the meane whereby God dedicateth his temples, is by sending his ministers to preach his doctrine faithfully: and it is also the meane whereby we be hallowed vnto him. Nowe he hath granted vs this grace: Wee see howe the wretched Papistes are gone astray, and runne gadding ouer the fields without keeping of any way. They hop, they trippē, they stumble, and all to their owne ruine. They haue no light, but are as blinde wretches in the mids of darkenesse: and in the meane while, behold, the Lord our God maketh his daysonne of righteousnes to shine vpon vs, for Iesus Christ sheweth himselfe to bee our redeemer. Sith it is so: what ought we to doe? Ought we not at leastwise to consider, to what end and purpose Gods worde is preached vnto vs, and euery of vs to gather vnder his hande to say, Lord, rule thou vs? Yes: but what? There are verie fewe which thinke vpon that. For we would be more afraid to defile our selues with the filthnesse of papistrie than we bee, if this doctrine were well printed in vs, that seing God hath separated vs from them, if wee intermedle our selues with them newagainē, it is all one as if wee mingled heauen and earth together, of purpose to turne the whole order of nature vpside downe, & to make a hotchpotch of all things, that there might bee a horrible confusion. For surely there ought to bee a greater difference betweene Gods children and the vnbeleeuers, than there is distance betweene heauen and earth.

True it is that we must be faine to be mingled together one with another as long as we liue in this worlde: but yet is it no faide for nought, that Gods children are citizens of heauen and pilgrims in the worlde. Although they bee conuerfant here beneath: yet must they not be tyed to it, but they must goe on still as in a strange cuntry, knowing that their abidingplace is a boue, and that God hath chosen the with condition that they should goe thither. Therefore when such as haue known Gods truth, doe fall to mingling themselves with ydolaters, and will not be separated from them: it is all one as if they went about to peruert the whole order of nature. But this doctrine hath more neede to bee thoroughly well minded, than to bee preached with long speech. The thing then which Moses ment by these wordes, is this: Yee be a people that is hallowed to the Lorde: that is to say, Although we were of Adams cursed race, although we came of wretched Infidels: yet notwithstanding our Lorde hath vouchsafed to draw vs to him, and to choose vs to be of his household: and therefore it is good reason that wee shoulde be separated from the rest. Hath hee done so, by making vs partakers of the doctrine of his Gospel? Then his wil is to haue vs dedicated to himselfe, and that wee shoulde bee his temples. So then let vs looke well to it, that wee continue in this state, and that we doe not wilfully disanull Gods adopting of vs, nor consent to any thing that may put vs out of his house. For when wee forsake Gods Gospell through falshood, wee doe what wee can to cut our selues off from the bodie of Iesus Christ, and to disherite our selues of the heavenly kingdom, and to banishe our felues from It , when wee make no conscience nor remorse of intermingling our felues with ydolaters and with their desings . What iouer hee is that giueth himselfe the bridle to goe to the superstitions of the Papistes , and to communicate with them : it is al one as if he canceled the deede of the inheritance which God hath giuen him . And y<sup>e</sup> deede is not written in paper nor in parchment , but it is sealed by God in our hartes , and is his will that scales and markes therof shoul I also bee in our bodies . Then [ in so doing ] we blot out the writing wherby God adopted vs for his children & heeres , and ( as I said ) we banish our felues out of his kingdom , and cut off our felues from the body of our Lorde Iesus Christ . For if we be members of Gods son , we must not goe & do homage to ydols , nor defile our bodies ( which are y<sup>e</sup> temples of the holy ghoist ) with such filthines & abomination . But as oft as we com to heare Gods word , we must thinke thus with our felues : Behold , my God hath made me holy , that is to say , he hath separated me from such as are ouerwhelmed in their owne vnclannes : and shall I now worke him spite : What a condemnation wil it be to me , y<sup>e</sup> my God hath so hallowed me , and I on the other side doe vnhalowe and defile my selfe with all leawdnes , reiecting y<sup>e</sup> priuledge that he hath giuen me ? Is it not a making of war against him , when I will needs after that sort disappoint the good , which hee had offered me of his owne infinite mercy ? Yes .

And Moses addeth expressly yet further , That it was to the intent that this people should be separated from all the rest of the world . If God graunted his grace commonly & without exception to al people , to haue his worde preached euerywhere : yet ought we to be sanctified vnto him , because he taketh vs out of the corruption of Adam , and from the ruine wherin al of vs are by nature . But when as he chooseth one Nation , and lyeth himselfe to y<sup>e</sup> same , and in the meane while letteth all y<sup>e</sup> rest goe : it serueth to giue the greater beauty to his goodnes : like as no wad ayes , our hauing of y<sup>e</sup> pure doctrine of y<sup>e</sup> Gospell , is as a corde wherby God draweth vs to him , and wherby he vouchsafeth to be made one wth vs , as I said afore . The worlde seeth how he letteth the wretched papists run at rouers , so as their eys be stopped & they see not one whit , nay rather they turne quite & cleane away from the way of saluation . We see it . And what is to be done , but y<sup>e</sup> inasmuch as god setteth such beauty vpon his mercy : such comparison shoul make vs the willing to serue him , & to lue the more warily , for feare of turning away from him , seeing he hath vouchsafed to prefer vs before others , though wee haue not deserved it ? But what ? So faire are we vnable to profite our felues by such goodnes of God y<sup>e</sup> we rather make it an occasion to take leaue & libertie to do euill . For wh<sup>e</sup> we haue y<sup>e</sup> examples of the vnbeleuers before our eyes : we thinke we may do the same things that they do . But that is far of from thinking vpon that which Moses saith here , Your god ( saith he ) hath sanctified you aboue al other nations of y<sup>e</sup> earth . As if he should say , Who be you ?

For ye be no better than other Nations : and yet neuer theles , your god hath vouchsafed to sanctifie you . Now therefore , be you the more careful to bridle your felues , & to keepe you vnclified , and meddle no more with the wretched vnbeleuers y<sup>e</sup> are wholly giuen ouer to their owne vnclannes , because your God neuer drew them vnto him . Thus yee see why Moses compareth here y<sup>e</sup> Jewes expressly with y<sup>e</sup> heathen . Likewise in these days , forasmuch as God hath preferred vs before y<sup>e</sup> wretched papists , we must beware y<sup>e</sup> we walke the more circumspectly vnder his obedience , assuring our felues y<sup>e</sup> he wil not haue such a benefite despised , as is his vouchsafing to take vs into his house , and to communicate himselfe so familiarly vnto vs as he doth . But yet to expresse this grace y<sup>e</sup> better , Moses addeth that this people was chosen . As if he should say , indeede it is an inestimable dignitie and noblenesse for you to be chosen to be the people of God , so as no Nation of the earth can boast themselves to haue bene exalted to such degree of honor : but yet beware that you be not proud of it . For your sanctifying at Gods hand , came not of your owne purchase , but of Gods choosing of you : it came of him . Therefore let the praise thereof be yeilded vnto him : & assure your felues ye be the more beholden to him , in that he hath shewed such mercy towards you . Wee see then y<sup>e</sup> the word choose which Moses setteth down here , serueth to magnifie Gods grace y<sup>e</sup> was spoken of before , to y<sup>e</sup> intent y<sup>e</sup> the people should be the more prouoked , & ( as it were ) raiued to serue God . And for the same purpose he setteth down a long discourse , Wherefore it is ( saith he ) that your God hath loued you , & knit himselfe to you ? For this manner of speeche , ( namely y<sup>e</sup> God knitte himselfe to men ) importeth very much . And why doeth he so , saith he ? What hath moued him therto ? Was it for your owne sakes ? Or did you put your felues forward vnto it ? Was it because ye were a greater nation than any other ? Was it in respect of y<sup>e</sup> , that God was moued to choose you rather th<sup>n</sup> any of the others ? Had you deserved it on your part ? No no : but it was ( saith he ) because hee loued you . Nowe this worde Loue importeth here , first that God respected not any thing in men why hee shoul choose them , but that his owne free loue sufficed him in that behalfe . Hee loued you , that is to say , seeke not any cause or worthinesse in your felues : hee contented that our Lorde hath chosen you of his owne free goodnesse before al others , though ye were no better th<sup>n</sup> they . Now we see all Moses meaning .

And although this matter cannot be discoursed throughout : yet must we note y<sup>e</sup> Moses spake here of Gods election , to the intent y<sup>e</sup> the people shoul be y<sup>e</sup> more humbled , and y<sup>e</sup> the same humbling of them shoul ingender an affection and zeale to serue God according as he was known to th<sup>e</sup> . Therefore when there is any talke of the grace y<sup>e</sup> God hath shewed vs in enlightning vs , & it is told vs that he hath adopted vs to be his children & of his Church : wee must needs match this with it , y<sup>e</sup> our hauing of al these things is not by our owne purchase , nor for putting of our felues fourth by any verue or good minde y was in vs: but through Gods feeling of vs at such time as we turned our backs vpon him. Now by this meanes we be humbled, & we haue need of it. For as soon as men haue any incling of any good nelle y is in them felues: they iue wel of it & stand gasing at their owne fethers like Peacocks: but in the meane while they consider not, that they rob and bereaue God of the praise that is due to him. Therefore whensoever there is any speaking of Gods grace, it is requisite for vs to be put in mind of this matter, to y end we may not imagin our felues to haue deserued aught on our owne fide, or that God respected any good disposition that was in vs: but assure our felues that nothing but his free loue moued him to doe it. When we be so humbled: then must we needs be spoyled of our owne reason, or else become starke beasts, if wee take not corage to serue God and to dedicate our felues wholly vnto him, to say, How hap peneth it that whereas we were cursed and damned creatures, our God hath sought vs out, yea euen from the dungeons of death, & hath opened vs the gate of the kingdom of heaue, calling and drawing vs dayly thither: & yet in the mean while we be ithful in seruing him? And specially sita we see y whereas the moit part of the world goeth to destruction, and the wretched Infidels are so blinded that they be let alone in the darknesse of their ignorance, God in the mean while watcheth early and late ouer vs: what ought we to do, when hee vseth such special loue towards vs? Ye see then that this humility must leade vs to a care and warenes to serue God, and to gather our felues wholly vnder his wings, acknowledging y the more we be bounde vnto him, the more we must shew by our deeds that we impure all to his mere goodnes, and are willing to yeeld him the praise thereof as he deserueth. Thus yee see wherunto the things are to be referred which Moses speaketh heree.

Eier. 31. 28.

And herewithall let vs marke, that whereas it is said, that the people [of Israel] were not the greatest of other Nations: vnder one kinde, he comprehended all the rest. As if he should say, there was neither dignitie nor worthinesse in you, why God shoulde choofe you rather than any other Nation. For it must be vtterly rooted out of our hearts, to imagine that God findeth any thing in vs, which may moue him to loue vs. For vntill such time as men bee quite rid of selfeweening, they shall neuer be able to glorifie God as they ought to do. And although wee be late it not with open mouth, that there is some defect or excellencie in vs: yet notwithstanding we fall asleepe in such selfe soothing, as we imagine that there is still some value in our felues. And therefore it behoueth vs to enter purposely into our consciences, and to cleanse them in such wise as wee leaue not any one drop of pride & presumption there: to y intent that whic we haue thoroughly serched and sited all that is in vs of our nature, wee may know there is not any thing that may purchase vs grace and fauor at Gods hand, nor that can be acceptable vnto him, but that wee be naked and vnpurueyed of all goodnes and glorie, and finally that we haue nothing in vs but vtter filth and vncleannesse. When examination is made after y maner: then shall men bee disposed to receiue Gods grace, and to glorifie him for it when they shall haue receiued it. Then let vs learne to vnderstand wel, that the searching of all that euer is in vs to the hard bottome, (so as we foster not any imagination of selfe worthinesse, but perceiue that God findeth vs vtterly vnhappy and accursed, so as we might be vtterly forlorne and damned, and wee haue not any thing of our own but such as prouoketh Gods wrath and vengeance against vs:) commeth of the grace that god hath granted vnto vs. When we be come to y point: then must we come also to the loue that Moses speakes of here.

Rom. 3. 22.

And to the intent to shewe the better, that the said loue is freely bestowed: he sheweth out of what fountaine it springeth. Euen of this (saith he), that it is Gods will to performe the othe which he made to thy fathers. And hereafter he wil say, that their fathers also were chosen freely. But let it suffice vs that in this place God putteth the people in minde of the covenant that was made with Abraham, before the people, to whom he speaketh, were borne. Hereby he sheweth that the cause of our election, came not of our owne deseruing. For what is it that wee did before we were borne? If it bee faide that God foresawe what manner a ones we would be: yet did none of all that moue God to choofe this people: for they were so hardhearted & stubborn a people, as hee could neuer weald them. What manner of ones did they shew themselves to be at their going out of Egypt? Howe did they acknowledge Gods grace in y deliuerance that he had wrought for them? The scripture yeeldeth vs record good ynough of it. And yet notwithstanding God ceased not to take them full for his people. Wherein he ment to shew vs, that his vttering of his goodnes towards vs, is not in any respect of our deseruings. And indeede, the holy ghost was not so ill minded, as to haue concealed such a thing from vs, but that if our Lord had foreseene any goodnes in vs, and y the same had caused him to choofe vs: hee woulde surely haue told vs of it. But what? As for such as bable that God chose vs according to his foreknowledge, & that he knew we should haue some good disposition in vs: they shew themselves to be worse thā beastes, so far smuch as they consider not that all men are alike, sauing that God putteth his grace more into one than into another, and y we must not imagine that we haue some thing i wote not what of our own. Who is he (saith S. Paul) which putteth the difference, to make these excellenter than other men? It commeth not of our felues: then must we needs haue that making of God. And so it is not for nought, that Moses telleth y people, y the onely caute why they were chosen was for y God loued them, which loue made him to vtter y same loue, eue before such time as they to whō he spak, were born or bred, so as he sware aforehand to their fathers, y he would take them for his people. Seeing it is so then, let vs know y when we be beaten downe in our felues, we must consider that the wellspring and fountaine of our saluation, is the infinite goodnesse of our God, & that he ment not to regard our deserts, but to vse his owne free goodnes as we call it, that is to say, not to sell any thing vnto vs. Neuerthelesse it was his will to loue vs. And wherefore? Because it pleased him. Nowe let men goe and furnishe I wote not what causes in this case, for they shall confound all by it: but let vs take hold of the onely good wil of God, in y<sup>e</sup> it pleased him to choos<sup>e</sup> 10 vs and to leaue others.

And now let vs kneele downe in the presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs feele them more and more, and to induour dayly to know them, that we may be sory for them and amend them: and that therewithall we may haue an eye to the covenant which he hath made with vs, to y<sup>e</sup> end to answere to his call, that we wander not heere and there like straye beasts, but that seeing he is willing to hold vs vnder his obedience, and to gather vs into his flock, wee may be satisfied vnto him by meanes of his word, which benefite it maye please him to make to preuaile in such wise in vs, as it may bee a furtherance to his glory, and wee be brought more & more to forsake the lusts of our flesh and of the worlde, & to offer our selues vnto him in sacrifice both aliuē and dead: Aluē, that the power of his holy spirit may vtter it selfe in vs [by making vs] to followe his commaundements cheerefully: and dead, that we may be ready to goe out of this world, whensoever it shall please him to call vs hence. That it may please him to grant this grace, not onely to vs but also to all people and Nations of the earth, &c.

7. & 8. The Lord &c.

9 Knowe yee therefore that the Lord thy God is the God, [euen] the faithfull God which keepeth couenant and mercie with a thousand generations, to such as loue him and keepe his commaundements.

10 And yeeldeih payment vnto such as hate him before his face, to make them perishe. And hee will not forflowe to recompence him that hateth him [euen] to his face,

E saw yesterday, that the cause why Moses saith here expressly, that God chose one certain people, & made not that grace common to all the world: was to humble those to whom god vttered himselfe, to the ende they should knowe that it besell them not for their desertes, nor through their owne purchase: but through the onely goodnesse of God. And that is the cause also why Dauid speaking of this people, saith, the sonne of Abraham Gods welbeloued, the seede of Iacob his chosen. Those two wordes are matched together, to shew that that people was shouled out from all other Nations, not for any worthinesse that was in them: but by reason of free election, and to expresse Gods goodnesse and loue towards vs the better: and therefore doeth he send vs wholly thither. Truth it is that in this place he speaketh of the generall election of the whole people, in that God had adopted them. And that is well worth the marking. For in calling Abraham, God extended the promise of saluation vnto his whole linage. Hee said vnto Abraham, I wilbe the God of thy linage after thee. Heere then is a generall election (as they terme it) of the whole people, inasmuch as God separated them from the rest of the world, telling them that hee rooke them for his inheritance and Church, And in very deede, the signe of circumcision was as a scale, to warrant al the offspring of that race, that God was their sauour: and so, that was such a grace as was common to all the children of Abraham. Howbeit, there is another second election or choosing, which is (as ye would say) streiter: namely, that out of y<sup>e</sup> same linage god chooseth whom he thinks good. And herein there is no contrariety. For we must consider y<sup>e</sup> degrees which the holy scripture setteth downe, when it speaketh of all mankind. It sheweth y<sup>e</sup> they be alienated or estranged from God, and consequently from the hope of saluation: by meanes wherof all men euen from y<sup>e</sup> greatest to the least are damned. Now God draweth out of them whom he listeth. And to the intēt his grace should be y<sup>e</sup> better knowne, hee chose one linage. And whose linage? Euen the linage of one man in whom there was no hope of illue. For when God said to Abraham, I wilbe y<sup>e</sup> God of thy seede after thee: how many children & childrens children had he? He had not one, neither sonne nor daughter. He liued a long tme after ere hee begate Isaac. He was old and drooping, and his wife was barren, so as there was no more hope of illue. And for y<sup>e</sup> same cause, whē the prophet Elyā intēded to vprайд the Israclites wth their vthankfulness, & with their pride & lustines which they we in, by reason y<sup>e</sup> they were growen to so great a multitude: & contrariwise with their vnbelicfe when they were fewe in number: Looke backe (saith he) to y stone which you were hewen out of, look back to your wel head. What people had Abraham? He was all alone. And was your mother Sara fruitfull? Nay contrariwise God was faine to giue her a child by myracle which these neuer looked for, insomuch that it seemed incredible to her when she was told it. Seeing it is so: assure your selues (saith y prophet) yee haue no cause to make any bragg, forasmuch as God hath shouled you out after that fashon. And for the same cause also doth Moses say in this text, If a man compare your state with the state of other Nations, he shall finde y the other Nations are multiplied by y order of nature: but your father Abraham was all alone by himself, yea and an old man & drooping, & readie to creepe into his graue. Ye see then y god chose a people which was not, of purpose to magnifie his free fauor & to make it the more manifest. Verily he accomplished y thing which S. Paul speaks of in treating of the same Abraham y is to wit, God chose the things which were not, & called them forth to giue them their being. S. Paul telleth vs y we haue (as ye would say) a luely picture in y person of Abraham, to shew vs howe it is y God maketh vs any thing, and exalthe vs to honor. For (saith he) what was Abraham? A poore creature halfe dead. Was his Image in any state? Did it flourish at that time? No, but it was more likely that he should neuer haue had any issue at all. Then let vs learn y god guideth the things which are not, and bringeth them forth to giue them being; and so y hope of the faithfull concerning their saluation, lieth not in themselves, but they look for it at Gods hand. As touching our selues, truly we be nothing: but God vttereth his power to giue vs being. And so ye see, y through his goodnes we begin to hope for life euerlastingly in his kingdom. Thus then y first degree of election, is y God chose the lineage of Abraham, notwithstanding y it was forlorne as well as all the rest of the world. And hauing done so, he stayed not with that grace: but forasmuch as a great nuber were estranged & as it were cut off fro y line of Abraham: he pulled backe also whom it pleased him.

Rom. 9. 6-7. And that is the cause why S. Paul saith, that all they which come of Abraham according to the flesh, are not reckened for his lawfull children, I mean to Godward, in respect of y spiritual inheritance y was promised to the true lineage. And for y same cause S. Paul alledgeth y saying y is written in the 25. of Genesis, namely that the elder shall serue the yonger, accordingly also as it is said by y prophet Malachie, Iacob & Esaw were both of them the children of Abraham: & what is the cause why Iacob was receiued, and Esaw refused so a god disheried him, and vouchsafed not to establish any Church in his offspring, but that as many as came of the line were mingled with the heathen, and belonged nor at all to the body of Christ? Whereof came this? To whom that a man impute it? It is to be vnderstood, that (as saith S. Paul) God had giuen sentence of them before they were borne. For Iacob and Esaw were twines, and their Mother Rebecca bare them both at one birth: and at that time what could the one deserue more than the other? God refused the elder to whom belonged the honor of first borne, yea, by order of nature: but God shewed that his grace was about nature. So then, Iacob was chosen, and Esaw refused. To whom shall a man impute al this? Brought they any strength and vertue of their owne (as saith the prophet Micheas) for the which God esteemed the one more than the other? Should the Iewes (which came of Iacob) set vp their bristles against God, to saye that they were nobler than other men? No, but they ought to yeeld the honor to Gods free fauour, acknowledging that to be y onely cause of their saluation, and y they haue not any thing of their owne wherefore they should be preferred before other men. Heerein we see that God hauing chosen a people in general, doeth notwithstanding reserve libertie to himselfe, to choose out of that people whomsoever he listeth, & to refuse y rest. And so as I haue declared already, there is one election which god maketh generally: and another [particularly] of those whom he vouchsafeth to take for his children & heires. Nowe then, it is of Gods free election, y we haue his word purely preached vnto vs, and y we haue his gospel & Sacraments. And euen therein we haue cause to confesse y he hath shewed himselfe liberal vnto vs. For by what title is y gospel giuen to vs, rather thā to such as make greater account of themselves than we doe, and which are not inferior to vs as in respect of the world? Why doth God leaue great kingdoms & principalities, and nations of renowne: & choose a litle nooke, & a smal number of people, to say that his worde shall be preached there? When it raineth vspon vs, and al y rest of the world abideth still in drought: is it not to be concluded that God hath liberty to doe good to whom hee listeth? And is it not his only loue, wherto we be behelden for it? Yes. So then, when the Gospel is preached in a place, and it hath the warrant of God giueh men saluation: (as when we haue baptisme & the Lords holy supper ministred vncorruptly) we may say it is an election that God maketh. But yet for all y, in the meane time hee reteineth to himselfe whom he thinketh good, to the end that men shold not trust to the outward signes without faith & obedience, knowing that although we haue bin chosen to be of the bodie of the Church, yet if we make not our profite of that election, God can weynough cut vs off againe, & reserve a smal number to himselfe. And although there be some great multitude of vs which contes al v one mouth y God hath chose vs: yet can we not therefore say y he auoweth vs for his childre, except we liue in purenes of faith, & haue ratified y couenit which god hath made with vs. And so let vs vnderstand y Gods liberality sheweth it selfe after all sorts to vs, and y therefore wee haue the iuster cause to loue him: more and more, & to yeeld him all praise. For haue we his word? It is a free gift aforehand, whereby he hath bound vs vnto him. Haue we his sacraments? They be the badges of his fatherly election: we haue not deserued any of all these things. But aboue all, when it pleaseth him to imprint the certainetic of his promises in our hearts by his holy spirit: then is it a speciall adoption, then doeth hee shewe vs that wee bee of the little number whome hee hath reseeded to himselfe. And so (as I sayde afore,) wee see that in all respectes wee must keepe our mouths shut from bragging of any thing: and on the other side haue it open to magnifie Gods goodnesse which he vttereth towards vs.

Nowe herevpon Moses addeth, That God will keepe covenants to a thousand generations of them that loue him: yea through his mercie, saith he. For as much as he treateth of the generall election: therefore he exhorteth the people to bethinke themselves aduisedly. Note ye (saith he) that for as much as God hath promised your father Abraham to be the God of his seede after him: he wil not faile you. But yet for all that, looke ye walk warily, for the covenant is made with condition, that ye must be found and haue a right meaning heart. Therefore thinke not but that your God can driue you out of his house and out of his Church, if he finde you vnworthie of the benefit which he hath offered vnto you. With y meaning doeth Moses speake, when he putteth here a difference betweene them that loue him and keepe his commandements, and them that hate him. Now by these wordes we be taught, y when God offereth vs his word, it is already an allying of himselfe to vs, & a giuing of vs a record of our saluation: but yet doth it not follow y we may therefore be carelesse. Nay rather we must be quickened vp to embrace y promises which he sendeth vs, so as we may rest wholly vpon them, and be steadfastly settled in them all our life long. That is a thing wherevpon it behoueth vs to think. True it is that God layeth open his heart vnto vs whē his word is preached vnto vs: there we be put in minde of his loue, and also haue full assurance of our saluation. But yet must y word enter in vnto our heart, & preuaile with vs: which thing is not done but through faith. And so let vs vnderstand y Gods electiō is as it were defecated by vs, vnlesse we be cōstant & continue steadfastly in it to y end.

But yet Moses noteth here againe, that this Cōuenant which God maketh with them y beleue him and obey him, is of his owne Mercie, least we should imagine that God respecteth our desertings, as we see that men are commonly giuen to think: in so much y if they meeete but with a syllable which seemeth to tell them y they may deserue I wote not what: they be puffed vp with pride, and beleue wonders of themselves. That is the cause why Moses saith expressly, y God wil performe his cōuenant & mercie. And he sheweth wherē in this cōuenant consisteth. It is not y wee on our side do bring any thing why he should loue vs: but y he is mercifull vnto vs, as we see is said in the hundred & third Psalmie. True it is y euen there God requireth that wee should feare him, & indeuour to keepe his commandements. But yet howsoeuer the world go, he sheweth vs alwayes that the thing which wee must vnderstand of him, is that he vlieth piue in handling vs gently through his grace, and not according to our deserting. Therefore let vs beare this saying well in minde and weigh it thoroughly, where Moses telleth vs that the cōuenant which God maketh with vs, lieth wholly in his goodnes and no where else: and that it is not for vs to puffed vp our selues with foolish presumption, as though we were worthe of such a benefite, or as though God did but recompence vs: but that wee must alwayes looke vp to his goodnesse, so as when wee come vnto him, wee do nothing else but say, Alas Lord, we be iure that thou receiuest vs to mercie as wretched creatures, and therefore vouchsafe to haue regard of our miseries, by sheding out thy mercie vpon vs. That is the thing whereof we be put in minde in this text.

Nowe furthermore Moses sheweth howe we may keepe Gods commandements: y is to wit, by hauing y things which haue bin treated of heretofore. And they be maner of speeches which import so profitable doctrine, y it is good to renew y remembrance of them, whē the text offereth occasion therof. Moses therefore meent to do vs to vnderstand, that to abstaine frō doing of euill, & to keepe the things contained in the law to outward show, is not all y we haue to doe. As for example, if a mā haue not blasphemed the name of God, if he haue not led a disordered lyfe, if he haue not bin an adulterer, a theefe, a quarreller, or a periured person, but haue lued honestly: all this will not suffice him. For why? Such seruice may be by constraint, so as the partie shall not obey of his owne free will, nor delight in submitting himselfe to Gods righteousnesse, to frame his life thereafter. That is the cause why Moses beginneth here with Loue. As if he should say, that y beginning of good obedience to Godward, and obliuing according to his Law: is to determine w our selues to delight in nothing more, thā to yeld our selues to him with al obedientnes, & to make that our whole pleasure, accordingly as wee see how David protesteth, that Gods Law was more sweete and pleasant vnto him than honnie: and not only that he did let more store by it, than by gold & siluer: but also that he embraced it w such loue, as he gaue not himselfe to the pleasures of the world, nor was carried away with wicked affections to doe euill: but gaue himselfe wholly to well doing, and to walke according to Gods wil. So then, to offer willing sacrifices vnto God, let vs remember what is said in this text, and what hath bin treated of already heretofore: namely that before there is any speech of the keeping of Gods commandements, Loue is set downe in the first place, because wee haue neede to giue our selues first vnto GOD, and to haue our hearts (as ye would say) fast tyed and knit vnto him, ere we can indeuour to behaue our selues according to his lawe and righteousnesse.

But nowe let vs returne to the matter that was touched before. Moses sayeth That GOD will keepe Cōuenant, yea euen with a thousand generations of them that loue him. As if hee should say, When God hath once planted his word: hee continueth that grace, not onely till the decease of those to whome he speaketh, but also to their children and their offspring. Nowe then let vs looke about vs, and wheras wee perceiue Gods grace in that he hath vouchsafed to referre vnto vs his word which was in maner abolished, and will haue the same now preached vnto vs: if wee (I say) perceiue his goodnesse in that behalfe: let vs also hope that hee will continue the same towardes our children which hee hath begonne towardes vs, if wee serue him by dooing the things that hee commaundeth vs. Ye see then that the goodnesse which God sheweth vs in his word, must not make vs slouthfull and carelesse: but rather bee as a spur to pricke vs forward vnto him, that his holy covenant bee not broken on our part: and through our default.

Furthermore whereas he sayeth, Knowe thou that thy God is God, yea and a strong God: thereby he meant to separate the liuing God from all the idols which the world hath forged in a lages. And it is a text well worth the noting. For wee shall neuer serue God with all our heart, neither shall wee be able to trust in him and to rest vpon him, vnlesse we be sure that he is almighty, and that he onely is God. No doubt but the vnbelieuers may well beare themselves in hand for a tyme that their religion is good, and the worlde seeth how willfull they be in that behalfe: but yet all is but stubbornnesse whatsoeuer they make of it. And therefore it behoueth vs to be fully resolved and perswaded of this, that wee must not haue a flying faith, so as our hoping to be saued is but an aduerture. For we must alwayes beare in minde, how S. Paule saith that we must know whom wee beleue, and that God is a faithfull keeper of that which wee haue committed vnto him. Then if we know not that our God is one, and that he is alone, and that he is the verie true God: we shall be alwayes wauering and our faith shall haue no stedinesse. That is the cause why Moses saith expressly, Know thou that thy God is the God. As if he should say, Consider in what state the wretched heathen men and such as giue ouer themselves to superstition are. It is true that they wil talk ynough of God: howbeit, y<sup>e</sup> is but roungly, they knowe not who he is. But it is not so with you. For seeing that your God hath taught you, and discovered himself to you: he hath certified you of his wil, and shewed you that ye need not doubt but your religion is such as you ought to sticke to. Now then, swaue neither one way nor other, neither halt ye, but go on right forth, seeing you be sure of your religion. Marke that for one point.

Howbeit, for as much as wee see men giuen to follow their own fantasies, which notwithstanding doe but tend to their owne destruction: we must remember by this text of Moses, that vntill such time as we be sure that the God whō we worship is the true God: wee shall euer bee intangled in some one thing or other. And albeit that we doe our indeour to serue him, at leastwise to our seeming: yet is it nothing, it is but faining, and that hope or trust is but a besorting of our selues. Wel may we haue some opinion: but as for to haue a setled faith, so as we may glorie that our saluation is laide vp in God, and that he will keepe it safely because he hath taken vs to himselfe: it is vn-possible that we should haue any such certaintie, vnlesse wee can say with Saint Paule, I knowe whom I haue beleued, and he will be a faithfull keeper of that which I haue committed vnto him. So then, let vs put such difference betweene the liuing God, and all the idols which men haue forged of their owne braine: as he may be knowe alone aboute all others. And that we may loe doe, let vs learne to deuise nothing of our owne head. For as soone as wee father any thing vpon God which is not in his owne word: it is all one as if wee did set vp an idoll: for by that meane we disguise him. Therefore wee must loe sticke to the liuing God, to the ende we may bee his people, and hearken quietly to so much of his will as he sheweth vs by his worde: as it may suffice vs to haue so much knowledge of him as he hath reuealed by his word, without seeking any further. For as for those that are so bolde as to take leaue to say, I weene this is good, and why should not God take this or that in good worth? and in the meane while haue no warrant of the holy scripture: I say they forsake the liuing GOD, and turne away after idoles. For what else are the imaginations of men, but verie idoles to detace the true Maiestie of the onely God? Thus much concerning this place.

Moreouer Moses termeth God Faithfull, to shewe that like as afore, he attributed strength vnto him, (for the Hebrew word that he vseth commeth therof:) so must we also haue his truth before our eyes and in our remembrance, to the end to leane vnto him & to referre our selues wholly vnto him, knowing that Gods strength serueth not to abate vs, but that whensoeuer it is spoken of, it is matched immediatly with mercy, to the intent we should be drawn vnto him, and come to him with a cheerefull courage. Then is it not without cause that Moses hath set down Gods truth here, of purpose to hold the people in obedience to him. And heereby wee be taught, not to preace into Gods priuities, and to dispute of things that are too high for vs, yea and vtterly vncomprehensible: but rather that wee must rest vpon his word and truth, which he hath reuealed vnto vs. True it is that we must bee fully perswaded of this point, that GOD chose vs in his euerlasting purpose, not because wee were worthe of it, but because it pleased him so to doe: and that there is none other cause therof but onely his good pleasure, as the holy Scripture sheweth vs. And so let vs vnderstande, that although wee haue Gods worde: yet will God haue pitie on whome hee will haue pitie, according to Saint Pauls alledging of the same text, to shewe that albeit the multitude of people to whome the Gospell is preached be neuer so great, yet God referueth whome he listeth to himselfe, and it is meete he should so doe, and yet notwithstanding we haue cause to glorie him howsoeuer things goe, without attempting in any wise to grudge at it. But haue we knowe that? Would we be assured of our saluation? We must refo. t not only to Gods grace, but also chiefly to y<sup>e</sup> promises wherby he vttereth his loue towardes vs, as is said alreadie.

Ro. 5. 10. 18.
Eph. 1. 7.

Yee see then that the cause why Moses doth in this place attribute the title of Faithfull vnto God, is to the end that when folke will be sure of their saluation, they should not enter into foolish imaginations, but looke vnto Gods woord which is before their eyes, whercupon they may be bold to rest. So then let it content vs that our Lorde allureth vs to him, and that the death & passion of our Lord Iesus Christ together with his righteousnesse is set afoore vs, so as wee know that by that meanes we may be reconciled vnto God, to the end y<sup>e</sup> our sins be not imputed vnto vs, but that we may be acceptable vnto him. Seeing that this is set down vnto vs: let vs take hold of Gods faithfullnesse which Moses speaks of here, and let vs not thinke that God offereth vs such a benefite to deceiue vs, but that he doth it to the end that we should glorifie him in the middes of our miseries, and that although wee bee sicke fraile creatures: yet we may say that the life of Iesus Christ belongeth vnto vs, and that wee be already lifted vp to sit with him in the kingdome of heauen. Thus yee see what we haue to beare in mind concerning the woord Faithfull.

Eph. 3. 6.

Now for a conclusion Moses addeth a threat, saying: that God also will require like for like to suche as hate him, yea euen to their faces, & that he wil not foreflowe. In this place there is some darksomnesse in the wordes of Moses: for hee interchaungeth the number. God (saith hee) will yeild recompence to such as hate him to his face, or before his face. Then doth he shift the number, & it seemeth that whereas he sayth they hate him to his face, he ment to say that wee spyte God or hate God to his face when wee fall out into disorder and are so rebellious, as it should seeme that we would run against him, and desie him to be at open warre with him. But for as much as that woord is repeted twice, and in the end it appeareth that Moses spake of the faces of the transgressors: no doubt but it is a chaunging of the number, as the holy Scripture is commonly wont to doe. Therefore the very meaning of it, is that God will require them to their faces, by making the hatred to turne backe vpon themselves. Other some take it as though it were spoken of their lifetime, that God will not only punish the wicked and the despisers of his Lawe, after this present life: but also execute his vengeance vpon them aforehande to the sight of mens eyes, so as we shal be prouoked to feare him, by y<sup>e</sup> sight of y<sup>e</sup> punishments which he wil fore execute vpon the disobedient. Other some take it that God will require it to his face, as though it were sayd y<sup>e</sup> whereas he spareth the wicked in this world, it is to the end to ouerthrowe them and destroy them vterly afterward, according as it is sayde by the prophet, that God pampereth those whom he punisheth not out of hand, like as men doe fette an Ox or a swine when they intend to kill him. And the prophet vseth that similitude, to the intent wee should not enuy the wicked, when we see them prosper. For is an Ox or a Swine to bee ennyed, which is fatted but to the slaughter? and which shall haue his throte cut when he is once fatted? Now then, God hand-

Ier. 12. 3.

Ieth the wicked and the despisers of his maiestie after such a sort, as he may seeme to loue them: but it is to hasten them the sooner to their destruction. And truly this is a good and profitable lesson: but as touching the present place, if wee read all the wordes of Moses throughout, there is no darkenesse at all in them. For why? he addeth, God wil not foreflowe to require them that hate him, euery man in his face. And so Moses ment in effect to shewe, that men may be past shame in rebelling against God: but yet in the end they shal find that they haue too rough an aduersarie: and therefore God must be faine to pull them by the beardes to make them y<sup>e</sup> more ashamed. It is true y<sup>e</sup> as now they vtter great brags, and it shold seeme that they would make God ashamed, and put him to the foyle: but he can well skill to ouermatch them in such wise, as they shal be faine to receiue their payment in their owne persons, yea and euen in their faces, according as it is sayd in the fifteteenth psalme, I wil reprove thee to thy face. And in that place God pleadeth expressly against hypocrites. How now, sayth hee? Becommeth it thee to take my name in thy mouth? Thou boastest thy selfe to bee myne: and thou wilt needs play the preacher, and desile my holy law with thy stinking mouth. Now when thou doest me such iniurie as to take vpon thee to be a prophet, and to speake in my name, and in the meane while doest match and accompany thy selfe with whoremongers, quarelers, and raylers: what will come of it in the end? When I haue borne with thee a while, I will reprove thee to thy teeth, saith he. Hee vseth ther the word Face as he doth here in this text: but it is a common speeche in our language, to say that it is spoken to a mans teeth, face or heade. That then is the naturall sense of Moses.

Psal. 50. 16.

ex. 21.

And heere we be warned to humble our selues before God, and to stoop in such wise as we prouoke him not to wrath through our hardnesse & shamelesnesse, so as he should shewe himselfe to be our aduersarie, to require vs to our face, that is to say in our owne persons, by being driuen to come before him to bee punished according to our desertes. Then let vs not harden our hearts against our God, but let vs learne to cast downe our eyes when he speaketh vnto vs. It is true indeed that wee ought to lift vp our heades when wee heare the promises of his goodnesse, so as saith mult make vs to stie aboue the cloudes. But yet doth not this let vs that wee should not still bee ashamed in our selues, and haue an eye to our owne wretchednesse, and learne to bee sorry for it, and thereupon labour to liue in the feare of God, & bowing downe our neckes continually to receiue his yoke, and to beare it patiently. Thus yee see what we haue to marke as in respect of this word face, where it is sayd y<sup>e</sup> God wil recompence them all to their faces, which doe hate him.

But heere by the way a man might make a question, concerning this saying of Moses, that God wil not foreflowe to pay them to their faces, which hate him. For it is commonly scene that the wicked doe spend all their daies and all their whole life in prosperitie, so as it shoulde seeme that God is willing to please them in all things, in so much that it is sayd of them in the psalme, that they goe on in continuall prosperitie vnto their death, and pine nor away as the children of God doe. Howe then is it saide that Num. 14. 18. God wil not forsowe, seeing hee is long suffering: And men may see it with their eyes, though it were not toulde them in wordes. These Psal. 103. 8. two things agree very well. For although God winke at things for a tyme, and punish not the wicked out of hand: when all is welreckened, the respite that hee giueth them will not bee so long, but that it shall euer bee true, that suddain destruction shall ouerwhelme them. And for prooffe thereof, when the wicked say, Peace,

 1. Theff. 5. 3. all is safe: then shall the suddaine storme fall vpon their heades. When they thinke themselves to haue made a composition with death: then shall they bee ouertaken as a woman that falleth in labour of child ere shee bee aware, because shee mistrusted not that the houre or instant of hir trauell had bin so neere at hand. Eue after the same maner doth God ouerwhelme all such as shall haue abused his patience, when he hath borne with them for a tyme. Now then although God shew not himselfe a iudge to them so soone as we would: yet doeth he not faile to destroy them without foreslowing. Therefore let vs haue an eye to the shortnesse of our life, least we fall asleepe: and let vs vnderstand, that although God make not hast after our opinion: yet notwithstanding hee foresloweth not, because he forgetteth not the offences which he winketh at, and which hee punisheth not out of hand. Let that serue for one point.

And let vs mark further, that God hath not indented with vs so as we may say he ought to let vs alone vnpunished vntill death. For although hee execute not his iudgements all after one rate: yet doth he often punish the wicked euen heere, and shewe vs examples before our eyes, to teach vs to stande in awe of him, as the prophēt speaketh of it. Seeing then that God will alwayes shew himselfe to be our Iudge, both during this mortal life, & after our death: Let vs not delay our returning vnto him from day to day, but let euery man quicken vp himselfe, & walke carefully, forasmuch as if any man fall asleepe, if he wil be wel wakened againe, he must be faine to see this saying of Moses before his face, That God will pay them all home which do hate him. Truly y<sup>e</sup> wickedest creatures that be will not say they hate God: but yet it is so in dede. And for prooffe therof, all such as are desirous to haue liberty to liue naughtily, to giue themselves to all iniquitie, could find in their heartes that there were no God in heauen to iudge them. To bee short, if we loue God, wee take pleasure in goodnesse. But we cannot loue him without his Iustice: for they be things which cannot goe afunder. Therefore let vs conclude, that as long as wee doe euill wee hate God. And why? For inasmuch as we bee loth there should bee any order or gouernment in the world: wee would not that he should be acknowledged with his righteousness and goodnes. Now then, when the wicked doe giue themselves the brydle to despise God and to transgresse his commaundements: they coulde finde in their heartes to haue him plucked out of heauen if it were possible. Wherefore let vs marke well, that God doeth not without cause auow, that al such as breake his commaundements are his deadly enemies, inasmuch as they be against his Iustice, without the which he cannot be God. And therefore let vs beare in minde the thing that hath bene declared already, namely that if wee purpose to obey God, we must honour him in such sorte, as we may like well of his Iustice and mislike of euil dealing: & that although we fall into it through infirmitie, yet we may pray God to lift vs out againe, and so to holde vs vp by his power, as our whole seeking may be to submit our selues vnto him, and to forsake all our owne affections and euill lustes in such wise, as we may bee reformed according to his righteousness, and consequently obey his holy Law.

Now let vs cast our selues downe in y<sup>e</sup> presence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faultes, praying him so to beare with vs in the, as he vse not y<sup>e</sup> rigor towards vs which we haue deserued: but y<sup>e</sup> of his infinite goodnes he reache vs his hand, & print his word after such sort in our hearts, as it may take roote there, and wee neuer swaue any way from it, nor he suffer such blessing to become vnprouitable through our fault & vnthankfulness: but that we may make it auailable, by receiuing the promises of our saluation, to continue stedfastly in them vnto the end, and by shewing our selues willing to bring to passe y<sup>e</sup> God may be honored & serued, not only as long as we liue, but also after our de cease, so as they y<sup>e</sup> come after vs may continue in exalting & magnifying his glorie, that he may be worshipped on all hands with one comon accord, vntill he haue rid vs quite and cleane from all the vanities and corruptions of this world, & made vs partakers of the glorious immortality which wee possess: not as yet but by hope. That it may please him to graunt this grace, not onely to vs but also, &c.

11 Therefore keepe the commaundements, and Ordinances, and Lawes which I com-

command thee this day to doe them.

12 And it will come to passe, that because yee haue heard these Lawes and kept them and done them, the Lord thy God wil also performe the couenant and mercie vnto thee, which he sware to thy Fathers.

13 And he will loue thee, and blesse thee, and multiply thee: & he wil blesse the fruite of thy wombe, and the fruite of thy land: thy corne and thy wine, and thine oyle, and the increase of thy kine and the flocks of thy sheepe, in the Lande which he sware to thy Fathers to giue thee.

14 Thou shalt bee blessed aboute all nations, and there shall not bee either male or female barren among you, or among thy Cattell.

15 The Lord will take from thee all diseases, and all the euill plagues of Egypt which thou hast knowen. Hee will not lay them vpon thee, but vpon all those that hate thee.

E see here againe the thing that hath bin treated of already heretofore: namely that God indueoth to draw vs to him by gentleness. It were enough for him to shew vs his will: howbeit for as much as our nature draweth the cleane contrary way, he setteth his promises afore vs to win vs withall, & to prouoke vs to serue him the better. Therefore whensoever God promiseth to blesse vs, & to mak vs to prosper so we serue him: thereby we be put in minde of y singular goodnesse & loue which he beareth towardes vs. For is he bound to doe it? Nay, ought not euery of vs to streine our selues, (yea eue about our power,) to serue him? Are we not bounde thereto by nature? Yes: and therefore let vs marke well, that whereas God vouchsafeth to tel vs that if we serue him he will be fauorable and mercifull vnto vs: his fo doing proceedeth of his own mere freegoodnesse. And if that moue vs not: the worlde may see what our vnthankfulnesse is. But yet by the way let vs marke well, y his promises should stand vs in no stead, if our Lord supplied not our defaults, I mean euen whē we be burt minded to serue him, for else should we come farre short of y perfection y is required of vs. All his promises then should nothing boote vs, if he did not beare with vs: and so is he faine to vse double grace towardes vs. Howbeit to y intent y things may be the better vnderstood: let vs see first of all how it may agree, y God should blesse vs of his owne freegoodnesse, & make vs to prosper: & yet notwithstanding march it with this condition, y we serue & honor him. For at the first sight there seemeth to be some disagreement in it. If God loue vs without respect of our desertings: there ought to be no issues nor conditions in the matter.

But he putteth them to it, as we see in this text: yea & all the whole scripture is full of the same doctrine, namely that God recompenceth euery man as they shall haue serued him. How can it the be, that God should both haue respect of our life: & also loue vs of his owne free mercy? Let vs marke well the wordes that Moses vseth here. For he sayth that God will performe his couenant and mercy according as he hath promised, if he be honored and serued. In saying that God will performe his couenant and mercie, he sheweth vs well that we must not begin at our owne seruice, as though we would bring any thing vnto God to moue him to loue vs: For whereupon is his couenant grounded? Euen vpon his mercie. Now the let vs see what his mercie is, & where-to it ought to be referred. First of all, it is his choosing of vs. Although wee be vtterly froward, & delerue to be shaken off at his hand: yet doth he take vs into his fauor. This is it already a great and inestimable mercie, that although God find vs lost and damned creatures: yet he vouchsafeth to take vs for his people, aduaucing vs to such dignitie as to be of his household and Church. Now when he hath so begun, he must be faine to hold our still: that is to say, he must be faine to like well of vs continually by reason of the same free fauor which he beareth vs, and all for our Lorde Iesus Christs sake. So then, God maintaineth his mercy towardes vs, by cause he pirieth our wretchednesse and miserie. And although we be not wortie to be receiued: yet doeth he accept vs. And wherefore? Because he loueth vs in the person of his only son. But there is yet more: that is to wit y he vseth mercy towardes vs, in bearing with our imperfections, and by that meanes accepteth our seruice, so that although it be faultie and haue always some blemish in it: yet notwithstanding he admitteth it of his owne goodnesse. Now we see what the couenant importeth, which Moses speaketh of here: namely that first and foremost God receiueth vs to mercie, euen without finding any thing but vter cursednesse in vs. And secondly, that he continueth his fauor towardes vs for loue of his only son, notwithstanding y he might find iust cause in vs, to shake vs off and to hate vs. And thirdly, that he accepteth our workes & taketh them for good, so as although they be (as ye would say) but halfe done, and haue alwayes some faulte mingled with them: yet notwithstanding he ceaseth not to admit them as if they were righteous and found, and all by vertue of the said couenant, as I haide afore. Now then we see it is no inconuenience, y God should blesse vs and make vs to prosper when wee haue serued him: and yet notwithstanding that his louing of

vs should bee, not for any woorthinesse or desertes of ours: but for his owne free goodnesse sake, without any other reason that wee can alledge, than that he hath chosen vs and made vs partakers of the righteousnesse that is in our Lord Iesus Christ, that thereby all our sicknesses may be couered and hidden.

But as soone as the ignoraunt fort doe heare of the woord Condition, they beare themselves in hand that God maketh some payment, & that when he sheweth vs any fauour, he doth it in recompence of our desertes. And by that meanes the wretched Papists doe blind themselves with vain presumption, & quite ouerthrow themselves by perking vp after that fashion against God, & therefore they must at length be cast downe in their ouerboines. For wherunto do they leane? Beholde (say they,) God telleth vs that he will blesse vs if we serue him: therefore it followeth that all the promises which he maketh are conditionall. Yea, but they haue ill studied the holy scripture, when they cannot discern betweene the promises as they be set downe in the Lawe, and the things that God addeth to the to supply our default. For if wee take the promises so rawely: that is to wit, that God will blesse none but them that serue him: wee shall all of vs be shut out from hope. For which of vs serueth God with all his heart and with all his soule as God hath expressly commaunded vs? Nay contrariwise we drag backward, and by nature wee be deadly enemies vnto him, because all y<sup>e</sup> thoughts and affections that are in vs doe fight against his will. Then are wee so farre off from being able to serue him as wee should doe, that wee make war against him, and cease not to prouoke his wrath against vs. Nay veyly, euen when God hath reformed vs by his holy spirit, so as he hath giuen vs some good disposition: wherethrough wee be inclined to serue him, and to be short, wee shew that his spirit reigneth in vs by subduing of our vices and of the wicked lustes which are in vs by nature: yet come we stil far short of the marke which wee should tend vnto. It is true that wee will trauell thitherward, as all the faithfull doe, whose chiefe regard and principall desire is to serue God: but yet doe they finde themselves so sore combered as maketh them to thudder at it. When they bee about to stirre one finger forward, the rest of their body drawes backward. It is much if they can but trayne themselves: that is to say, if they can get forward a litle & coldely. And therefore they be driuen to sigh & grone, and to condemne themselves, beseeching God to vouchsafe to hearken them better, and to take away all the lets that are in themselves. For he that is perfectest, condemnerh himselfe most: in so much that the true perfection that is in me during this mortall lyfe, is to knowe the euill that is in vs and how wretched we be.

On the contrary part, as for those that make themselves idols, bearing themselves in hand that they bee come already to the highest toppe of perfection: they burst themselves with pride, and doe but through a secret filthinesse within, whereby they bewray that they knowe not yet what it is to loue God and to serue him. For otherwise they should neuer bee so blinded with mad selfetrust, as to beate themselves in hand that they bee throughly righteous. Seeing then that although we in deuet neuer so much to serue God, we shall go limping and dragge our legges after vs: let vs bee sure that God shall neuer bee in daunger or det to any of vs, but rather wee shall be condemned in all our workes. We may well alledge, I was willing, and I did mine in deuet: but that is not all that wee haue to doe. For the will shall alwayes be found very weak, so as if wee haue one good affection, there shall be a dosen euil ones for it. And so by that meanes al of vs should be disappointed of the hope that God giueth vs by his promises, if they should be taken so rawely & according to the naked letter where it is sayd: If yee serue mee, I will doe yee good. But nowe let men streine themselves as much as they list: when they come to their audit there will bee so many abatements, as will shewe that all Gods promites can stand them in no stead. And therefore they must come to y<sup>e</sup> second remedie, which is that God supplieeth our defaultes: and that although all our workes deserue naught elsie but condemnation, yet notwithstanding God accepteth them and taketh them for good, of his owne fatherly goodnesse: and not of any dutie that hee is bounde vnto. Then let vs not bee so blinde as the wretched papistes, who when they heare that God addeth any condition to his promises, doe by & by step vp with their ergoes, and fall to defcantiing of their owne free will and deseruings. But contrariwise, let vs assure our selves that when God speaketh to vs in such order of speach as is shewed vs here, although hee come to vs with gentleness: yet doth it nothing auaile vs, vntill he vse his owne meere mercie to saue vs through-out, not for any desert of ours, but because it pleaseth him so to doe. Marke y<sup>e</sup> for a special poynt.

And therewithall let vs marke also, that if the good which God doth to men in the things that concerne this transitory lyfe, doe proceede of his mercie: much more reason is it that the im mortall heritage cannot be gotten by our owne strength, but that God must be fauine to giue it vs of his owne meere liberalitie or free gift. And wherof speaketh Moses in this place? He sayth, God will blesse thy Castell, God will blesse thy Corne, Wine, and Oyle. All these are transitory things: and how is it that God prospereth vs in them? By his mercie, saith he. And he sheweth expressly that Gods couenant proceedeth not from any other spring, nor hath any other roote than that, no not euen in cases concerning this flightfull lyfe and these transitory things. Now if in promising to prosper vs in our Castell, in our Landes, & in the bread which we eate, God haue not an eye to any worthinesse of ours, but onely vouchsafeth to shew himselfe a liberrall & kindehearted father towards vs: what will hee doe in cases concerning the making of vs partakers of the heavenly glory? I beseech you, can wee alledge any desertes in that behalfe? No: for then should Oxen & kine be of more estimation w<sup>h</sup> him than than mens soules . Therefore let vs marke well the things that I haue touched : namely that wee may well vnderstand aforehand howe greatly God loueth vs , by his promising of reward & reeompence for our workes . For he doth it not of any dutie , but to win vs by gentleness and louingnesse . Yet notwithstanding let vs vnderstand moreover , y the same shall neuer boote vs a whit , vnlesse our Lord proceede yet further in shewing himselfe liberall towards vs : namely y after he hath receiued vs to mercie , eue vs which were vtterly lost & damned , he doe also loue vs for our Lord Iesus Christes sake , and thereupon beare with all the imperfections y are in vs without intending to impute the to vs , so as our workes may please him , although they deserue it not . For that is verified euen in these base things beneath . When we take our repast of the bread wherewith we be sustained : wee must acknowledge that the same commeth of y meere goodnesse of our God . And likewise when we haue done our indeuour to serue him , [wee must acknowledge] that he is not any whit beholden vnto vs for it , but ( which more is ) that the good affection which we haue , is giuen vs of him , and yet that all this is nothing , because there is some fault in it . Therefore it must needs be , that Gods receiuing of vs into fauor , is not for that he oweth vs any thing , but for that he loueth vs . Now seeing that God will haue his mercie knowe in these corruptible things : what will hee haue done in the euertlasting saluation of our soules ?

But here might a question be moued , that seeing God respecteth not our merites when he doth vs good : why vseth he this manner of speech which we reade here in Moses ? There are two reasons . The one is , that he intendeth to make vs feele his grace y better , by drawing vs to graunt that none of al y things which he beighteth vs could take effect , if our workes should be respected , & therefore that he must be faine to bury all our finnes , & to accept vs of his owne freegoodnesse . This would be somewhat with y darkness , if it should not be layd forth more at length . His saying ( in effect ) , is that whereas God telleth vs , that if we serue him , he will blesse vs and prosper vs : his intent is that euery of vs should examine himselfe , and consider at what point wee be with him . And when we once know y in stead of seruing him , we doe prouoke him against vs & greene him , as though wee had conspired to doe vs of wilfull malice : & when we once knowe that we bee so greatly in his daunger euen by nature : then will all vaine selfestruff bee beaten downe in vs , & we will haue none other minde , than to resort to y mercie that is promised vs , and to flee thither for refuge , so as we shall be quite & cleane bereft of y sonde opiniõ which we had conceiued of our owne workes , & not thinke the any more to be meritorious . Thus ye see what we haue to note for the first reason .

The second is y forasmuch as God hath pitied vs , he beareth with our workes , & intendeth not to sift them with rigor , but admitteth the for good & acceptable , though there be many infirmities & vices in the . But yet for al y , wee must vnderstand y he will not so beare w our infirmities , y we should take leaue to abuse his mercie : for then should we deale too lewdly . And yet neuertheless it appeareth by experience , y as soone as men heare y God forgueth the their finnes , & saueh them of his owne goodnesse , they difference y themselves , & take leaue to doe euil : & vnder colour y they bee freed fro y bondage and cursednesse wherin they were by nature , they ouer shoot the felucies into all disorder . But God wil not be so mocked , he wil not haue the goodnesse which he vseth towards vs , to be made an occasiõ of sinning . For our Lord Iesus Christ is come to destroy y kingdom of Satan , as it is shewed vs . So then , although God wil haue vs to impute al y good which he doth vs , vnto his free mercie : yet doth he put this condition to it , y he will haue vs to serue him . Although the inheritance which is promised vs depend not vpon our owne workes : yet will hee haue vs to be his children to it , seeing he sheweth himselfe to bee our father . Although it become vs not to looke for any thing in respect of all y seruice y wee doe him , forasmuch as we be well assured that they be not of such value as we can rest vpon the : yet notwithstanding inasmuch as God hath called vs to him into y way of saluatiõ : he wil not haue vs to fall kicking against him . His Church must not bee a Hogscote , but a temple dedicated to his honor . So then , seeing God hath adopted vs , wee must liue as his childre , so as wee may shew y he hath not called & inuited vs to y inheritance of y heauily life in vaine . For if we can finde no fauor in it , are we not worthe to be banished & shut out of it ? Yes . Again , if we go thitherward , ought we not to despise these transitory things , and to passe through this world as strangers , & not to be wedded to this earthly trash ? That the is the second reason why our Lord addeth y condition that he will be serued & honoured at our handes . And therefore let vs learne in fewe wordes , y when we haue done homage to our God for our euertlasting saluatiõ , & for all the tẽperall & transitory goodns y he bestoweth vpon vs in this world : it behoueth vs to vnderstand , y his adopting of vs to be his children , is to y intẽt to be honored by vs , & his calling of vs into his Church is to the end we should be as his household folke & not as wild beastes , seeing wee be of his flock . For he will haue such sheepe as shall hearken to his voyce . And y is the cause why it is sayd expressly in this text , Ye shall keepe all the statutes , commandments & lawes which I set before you so doe them . As if hee should say , among the other giftes of God , we haue his word which is an excellent treasure . And it is not giuen vs onely to y end we should but heare it & allow it in our wordes : but to the ende we should frame our liues thereafter . Seeing then y God vouchsafeth to teach vs , & stoopeth so lowe as to do y office of a scholemaster & teacher towards vs : are not we too vnthankful if we hearkẽ not vnto him ? And let vs marke wel , that wee bee none of his disciples , vnlesse wee obey his doctrine , and make it our acceptable to vs . For otherwise it is but as if we heard a song y delighted our eares , as is sayd of it in Ezechiel . And finally it is a goodly worshipping of God , for vs to say that he hath forgone well . Nay his will is that wee should utter another melodie correspondēt to his voice which is, that we should shewe by our whole lyfe, that hee hath not taken paynes with vs in vaine, nor lost his time, in declaring his will vnto vs.

And now furthermore Moses addeth, keepe them: yea (sayth hee,) and God will blesse you: and afterward hee addeth againe, that hee will loue vs. Surely by these wordes it may be deemed at the first sight, y<sup>e</sup> God looketh whether men will do their duetie or not, ere hee loue them. But I haue tolde yee already how the promises of the Lawe doe serue first of all to bring men to right humilitie, that they may know themselves to be as they bee, and quite rid and discharge themselves of all self-trust. When that is done, then know they y<sup>e</sup> Gods calling of them is with condition, that they should serue him: and that if they inforce themselves so to doe, they please him, so that although their doings be vnperfect, yet will hee not faile to accept them, because hee imputeth not the vices vnto them wherewith they bee interlaced. And moreover we may gather vpon these wordes of Moses, that the seruice wherof hee speaketh here, goeth not before Gods blessing and the fauor that hee promiseth vs: for doe wee loue him before hee loued vs? We cannot make the holy Ghost a liar which speaketh by the mouth of Saint Iohn. It is not (sayth hee) for that we loued God first: but God vouchsafed to receiue vs into his fauor, at such time as we were his enemies. And all the scripture is full of this. Now then, seeing it is told vs here that God will loue his people, if they haue a care to keepe his commaundementes: let vs note that it is not meant, that men can preuent God and drawe him to them first of all: but that (as is declared vnto vs here) it is all one as if hee should say, I haue loued you freely, and I will loue you still, and yee shall feele my loue in such wise, as yee may inioy it and possesse it for euer. But yet for all that, let vs beware that wee deceiue not our selues, as they doe which confesse that God loueth vs of his owne free goodnesse, but yet we must secondly bee worthe of it. For wee must alwayes come backe againe to that which I haue touched already: namely that vnlesse God beare with vs, and shewre away all the spotted that are in our workes, the thing that is spoken of here, shall neuer bee accomplished in vs: but contrariwise it shall alwayes turne vs to some greater shame, to shewe vs, Go to, behold, your God hath abaced himselfe so much as to tell you that if yee serue him, hee will be fauorable and mercifull to you. For of whom is it long now, that you be vnhappy, that hee curseth you, that hee refuseth you, and that hee persecuteth you? cometh it not of your owne fault? yes: You your selues then, are to be blamed for this, that you be not beloved of your God. It should (say I) be layde to our reproche, if God pardoned not the faultes that are in our workes. So then let vs make that his loue is alwayes free in our workes, howbeit that hee will not be mocked, nor haue his goodnesse abused, nor abide that men should take libertie to doe euill when they see him so gentle and freehearted towards them: but contrariwise will haue vs to bee answerable againe on our side, so as we giue not deafe eare to him when hee speaketh to vs; but that when hee hath bin so gracious to vs as to declare his will vnto vs, we also should shew that his so doing is not in vaine, & y<sup>e</sup> he is not disappointed of his purpose. But what? We see how stubborn men are for all that: and whatsoeuer God tel them or shew the, although they haue their eares beaten dayly wth such warnings, yet notwithstanding they continue stil lyke themselves in their wilfulnesse. Beholde, God promiseth to blesse vs, so we serue him. Now there is no man but hee woulde faine prosper. We could well finde in our heartes that God should stee all our necessitie; and that hee should giue vs meate and drinke: we could finde in our heartes to be cloathed at his cost. But in y<sup>e</sup> meane while, who is he that bethinketh himselfe thus: this is y<sup>e</sup> meane whereby I must inioy Gods blessing? Nay we drawe cleane backe, and it should seeme that our whole seeking is to be reape our selues therof, and to cut off God by y<sup>e</sup> way, or rather so to stoppe the entrie & issewes of his grace, as it may neuer come at vs. Behold, God will haue vs first of all to liue vprightly, faithfully & in his feare: & thereupon hee promiseth to blesse vs. On the contrary part, men giue themselves to filching, stealing, robbing, & crueltie, seeking by all means to pick out one anothers eyes. There is no mention of the feare of God: to be short, they would y<sup>e</sup> all might goe to hauocke. In so doing we renounce Gods blessing, so farre as in vs lyeth, and it seemeth to vs y<sup>e</sup> we cannot take a better way to prosper, than by seruing the duell. Wherin it appeareth in how cursed plight we be. And whence springeth it, but of that we giue no credit to Gods promises? For if we beleue God to be foothfast in good earnest: surely we would be rauished at this saying of his, I will make you to prosper. But forasmuch as our vanities doe carry vs headlong the contrary way: it maketh vs to imagin that we win more by doing euill, than by seruing God. Neuertheless this vnbeleefe of ours shall be righte deere paid for, specially when it is matched with such blasphemie, and wee doe our God so much wrong as not to beleue his word: & moreover, when as in stead of acknowledging him to be the Author of all goodnesse, and coming to drawe of the fullnesse of his grace, we doe nothing else but make our selues strangers to him. Seeing then that we fail to prouoking of him so by all meanes: what remaineth for vs, but to be bereft of his blessings, yea and that he, as though he were our enemy, pursue vs euen to the vttermost? But truly a man may still perceiue an incalimable goodnesse, in y<sup>e</sup> he ceaseth not to doe vs good, when hee is so prouoked by vs, & that wee cease not to kindle y<sup>e</sup> fire of his wrath: but yet in the end we shall finde that this doctrine was not in vaine. It is true that a man shall not alwayes perceiue the thing that Moses sayth here: that is to wirt, that God prospereth them that serue him. For yee that see y<sup>e</sup> such as are desirous to doe best, and employ the felues in the trueth, are miserable folkes, afflicted diuers wayes at Gods hand, and haue not halfe their fill wherewith to susteine them. Again, they shall be tormētēd with discaises, or elle they shall haue many reproches & iniuries wrought them in this world, & (to be short) they shall be in continual languishing. On the contrarie part, ye shall see the wicked prosper: ye shall see them in credit and estimation: they shall cram themselves with all excesse: and they shall haue such abundance, as may make euen their heires to burst. These things are to be seene. Howbeit we must note, that when the good are so afflicted, it is first because they haue not yet serued God as they ought to doe. But why doth God scourge them, more than the wicked which rush out into all naughtinesse? it is because he intendeth to chastice the fatherly. To y end that their soules may be saued, he chastiseth them in their bodies. Again, in sending afflictions, Gods intent is not alwayes to punish men according to their misdeedes: but also to try their patience, and to withdraw them from the world, to the intent they should not be too much intangled in it: and his will is to humble them, that they may know themselves as they be, & be sorry for it. So then forasmuch as God hath many causes to afflict y faithful: he will not haue vs to make one egall rule of it, & to say that he punisheth them according to their misdeedes. But wherefore euer he doe it, let vs note that if God should vtterly destroy the he had iust cause so to doe, & hee should doe the no wrong. Neuertheless we must haue an eye to that which Sain Paul sayth in the eight to the Romans, and be contented with it, namely y all things turne to the welfare of them that loue God, so as they serue not to turne them aside, or to pluck them away from their saluation, but rather be as helpes to further it. Marke y for one poynt. And yet notwithstanding it is euidently seene, that Gods grace faileth the not in the afflictions and miseries which they indure. True it is that they finde themselves in paine, & the things are harde and grievous for them to beare: but yet there is alwayes somewhat to sweeten them, they haue still some comfort at Gods hand, which serueth to make them vnderstand y hee blesteth and prospereth them. If he should giue them no more but one bit of bread: yet haue they such an inward ioy, as they can better thanke God for it, than y wicked can doe [for great abundance,] who fret themselves inwardly, in somuch that although they labor to bring themselves a sleepe that they might not haue any remors of conscience to trouble them, & striue euen against nature, that they might be as it were senselesse: Yet doeth not God ler them so rest, that they can be so merry at the heart euen with their abundance, as the stille faithful ones are with their poertie, who holde themselves contented from mortowe to mortowe, waiting to be sed at Gods hand, & referring themselves wholly vnto him, & calling vpon him. And againe, although they haue not all that they would wisly et thinke they thus w themselves, well, yet doth not my God cease to watch ouer me, & therefore I betake me to his prouidence, and rest my selfe vpon him. Thus yee see howe the faithfull cease not to be blessed of God, though the world see not Gods benefites so apparantly in them.

But let vs come now to the vnbeleuers. It is true that God sheddeth out his temporall benefites vpon them, so as they be healthie, & haue abundance of goods, and so forth: but yet shall all these things be turned into a curse to them. If a man demand whether the hauing of bodily health, & also wherewith to finde a mans selfe, be not the blessings of God: yes verily be they. But yet must we note that as in respecte of the faithlesse, & of the despisers of God, they turne to their harme, because they be foule & vnclen, & doe desire Gods benefites with their handling of them. Needs must it bee then that the order of nature is turned vpside downe in this behalfe. For inasmuch as the wicked & the vnbeleuers are full of filth & vnclenness: they can not touch any of Gods benefites, but they must needs betray them and marre them. And therefore all must needs turne to their condemnation. Againe, we see how the world goeth. Haue theeues (I meane such as are giue to deceite & fleecing) haue they gathered inach together? They haue tormented themselves all the tyme of their lyfe: & what ioy haue they had of them? God taketh vengeance on them: for they be inflamed w such greedinesse of them, as they be neuer in quiet: & besides y, they cannot doe good w their euil gotten goods. But in the end, do they once dye? Then goes all to hauock againe. For the worlde sees how the duell hath libertie to ouerthrowe, euen such as a man would haue thought to haue bin well grounded, & that they shold neuer haue decayed to the worldes end. A man would wonder to see how they be destroyed in y turning of a hand. Yea and morcouer, the goods which they haue raked together for their children, become as halters to hang them withall, so as they become miserable euen in the sight of the world, & men behold the signes of Gods wrath & vengeance in the, whereby it is well known that he neuer leaueh men vnpunished for the contēpt & wrong which they doe to his maiestie, in rushing forth into all disorder, in somuch y if hee punish not the fathers themselves, he layeth the execution of it vpon their children, how long euer he make delay. So then let vs marke that it is not without cause that God telleth vs hee will blese such as serue him, yea euen to the worldward. And that is y cause why Sain Paul saith, that the feare of God hath promisses, not onely of y euerlasting liue, but also of this earthly life: so as if we liue in the feare of God, wee shall not onely be sure of the inheritance which hee hath prepared for vs aboue: but also y euen as long as we liue in this world he will giude vs and keep vs vnder his protection, & not suffer vs to want any thing whereof hee knoweth vs to haue neede. Trueth it is that God wil alwayes be our karner, because he knoweth we be too much giuen to these earthly things, from the which he intendeth to pull vs away, to the ende we should haue the better skill to lift vp our heades to heauen, and to seeke after the goods that are prepared for vs there. Therefore whē God reftreinet his benefites as we see he doth, that is to say, when he giueth vs them in smal & slender portion: it is to the intent we should not be hindered to keepe on our way stil in going right forth vnto him. Thus ye see what we haue to marke in this text. And therefore if we serue our God, let vs not dour but he wil bleſſe vs euen to the worldward, and make vs to prosper better than ſ̄ wicked, yea and although we see them puffed vp with pride, although we see the tryumph in pomp & brauery, & although we see the swimming in their pleasures: let vs tary patiently a litle while, & we shall find ſ̄ God dahed not w̄ vs, whē he promised his blessing to such as ar willing to serue & loue him.

And especially let vs marke well howe he telleth vs here expressly, that he will bleſſe vs in our issue, and in the increase of your Cattell. I pray you, if the fauor which God sheweth vs do extend euen to the brute beastes, so as the marke of his fatherly good will towards vs shall bee printed in them: what wil he doe to our ſclues & to our childrē, and to the things ſ̄ touch vs much neerer? For in deed me mult make this cōparion of our bodies with our ſoules. If God haue a care to feede theſe wretched carkeſſes heere: what wil hee doe for vs when we be reſtored into his glorie? If he haue a care of our mortall bodies: what wil he haue of our ſoules, which are fashioned after his owne image? But let vs returne to the preſent matter. If God vouchſafe to haue care of our cattell, as of our Oxen, our Affes, and our ſheepe for our ſakes: what care wil hee haue of our perſons? What care wil he haue of our children, which are heires of the promiſed ſaluation, and are adopted to belong to his cōuenant, ſeeing it pleaſeth him to chooſe and adopt vs to be his people? For hee doth not onely ſay, come vnto me: but alſo I will be the God of thy children after thee vnto a thouſand generations. But what we be worthe to be left deſtute of al Gods promiſes: and it were much to, if we could by that meane bee brought to right repentance. Let vs ſee if Gods bleſſing be to be found among vs nowadayes: as it is promiſed. In deed it is to bee marueled (as I haue declared already) that God is ſo patient towards vs. For are we woorthie to be maintained here one minute of an houre, conſidering the outrageous offences which we commit dayly againſt him? No: and yet notwithstanding, although he ſpare vs, although he tarie for vs, and although he ſcourge vs not as we haue deſerued: yet neuertheleſſe, we ſee how we doe partly languiſh. Some decay and conſume theſclues by litle & litle: ſome periſh vitely out of hands: & otherſome pine away as if they were almoſt dead of cold, as men terme it. And what is ſ̄ cauē hereof but our druing away of Gods grace & bleſſing? Again we need not to go to our Oxen, our horſes and our ſheepe to weet whether God w̄ draw his hand & grace frō vs or no: Let vs but looke vpō our children in what plight they be. Gods receiving of their fathers into his fauor, ought to bee as a looking glaſſe of his goodneſſe towards the:

but yet ought it to be much better knowē in the children, ſo as it might be ſayd, Lo here a bleſſed ſeede. For Gods vouchſafing to take ſ̄ fathers vnto him, was of purpoſe to vtter his mercie yet more in their childrē. But cōtrariwiſe, let a man looke vpon their children, & he ſhall be driuē to conclude, ſ̄ we be as good as baniſhed frō Gods bleſſing, & from al ſ̄ proſperitie which he promiſed to his people. And no maruel though it be ſo. for ſ̄ world ſeech wher at ſ̄ fathers are. Their intent is not to edify the in the feare of God: for it ſhould ſeeme that they be loth ſ̄ their childrē ſhould ſhame them by becomming honeſter n̄e than they. And to ſay ſ̄ truth, they bring the vp in all lewdneſſe: and is it not meete then ſ̄ God ſhould ſhew himſelf a iudge: Where are ſ̄ fathers nowadayes, ſ̄ make ſ̄ feare of God their mark to come at in teaching their children? In deed they be willing enough to haue their childrē aduanced to ſ̄ worldward, & to lay for the ſ̄ they may want no wealth, but in the meane while, as for to haue an eye vnto God, to ſay, I will dedicate my childrē vnto him, I will haue them ſo brought vp as he may be rightly honored by them: it is the furtheſt end of all their thought. Needes therefore muſt we be bereft of the benefites that are promiſed here, and baniſhed from them.

Furthermore, whenſoever it is told vs ſ̄ our Lord prouoketh vs to returne vnto him: let vs vnderſtād ſ̄ ſeeing he loued vs freely when we were yet his enemies: it muſt needs be ſ̄ he will much rather loue vs now ſ̄ he is reconciled vnto vs. Yea, but yet muſt ſ̄ be in reſpect of our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, & for his ſake. We muſt not ſeeke any worthineſſe out of ſ̄ perſon of him ſ̄ is called Gods welbeloued ſon: for it is only he ſ̄ hath ſatiſfied ſ̄ painmet of all our detts, which thing it lay not in any creature to do. Yet notwithstanding let vs aſſure our ſclues ſ̄ it behoueth vs to indeuer to doe well, knowing ſ̄ God wil not haue vs to abuſe his mercie. For ſeeing he hath adopted vs to be his childrē: let vs yeeld him ſ̄ honor ſ̄ is due to our father. And beſides ſ̄, although our workes be vnperfect, and wee doe but offer him things which are not worth ſ̄ accepting at his hād: yet doth not he ceaſe to lyke v. cloſ vs in ſ̄ things ſ̄ we do to ſerue & honor him w̄ ill, & we ſhall not be diſappointed of ſ̄ benefis ſ̄ he hath promiſed vs. But yet muſt we impute all to his mercie, and we muſt lue in ſuch ſort in this world, as we may be out of doubt ſ̄ he wil haue regard to maintain vs euē in this preſent lyfe, & to giue vs whatſoever he knoweth to be meet for vs. Therefore let ſ̄ ſerue to make vs to finde ſuch taſt in his goodneſſe, as it may tolle vs on ſtil further & further, ſo as we may be able to goe through w̄ a cheereful heart, to the ſpiritual bleſſedneſſe that taryeth for vs aboue, wherof we haue but onely a taſte as now by faith and hope.

Nowe let vs kneele downe in the preſence of our good God with acknowledgement of our faults, praying him to make vs ſo to feele them, as we may learne to be ſory for them better than we haue bene, and to turne wholly vnto him, and to reforme our whole lyfe after ſuch a ſorte, as wee may ſeeke nothing but to giue ouer our selues all wholly vnto him, and to frame our selues to his holy will as he hath declared it

The Lx. Sermon, which is the fift vpon the senenth Chapter.

16 Thou shalt consume all the nations which the Lorde thy God giueth thee. Thine eye shall not pardon them: neither shalt thou serue their Gods: for that wilbe thy decay.

17 If thou say in thine hart, these nations are moe in number than I, how may I driue them out?

18 Be not afraide of them: but remember what the Lorde thy God did to Pharao, and to all the Egyptians, 19 That is to wit, the great tryals which thine eyes haue scene, and the signes and wonders, and the strong hand and stretched out arme, wherewith the Lorde thy God brought thee out. So will the Lord thy God doe to all the nations of whose face thou art afraid.

Matt. 5. 44.
45.

Orasmuch as we bee exhorted to become lyke God in gentlenesse & mildnesse, and that he wil haue his children known thereby in this world: it should seeme y the thing which Moses sayth here, is not agreeable thereunto. For euen the heathen could well skill to say, that there is nothing wherein men resemble God more, thā in gentlenes and louingkindnes, when they giue themselves to doe good. But in this place heree is nothing but rigor. God will haue them to kill all without sparing of any thing: it seemeth then y there is some contrarietie in this matter. No: but (as I haue declared heretofore) although God execute his iudgements, and appoint men to be the doers thereof: Yet is that no let, but that we may in the meane while bee kindehearted in our selues, and haue pitie and compassion euen vpon them that perish. Nowe on the one side, if God mioyne a thing to be done: it must be done without gainesaying. And yet in the meane while we must followe the rule that is giuen vs generally: namely to loue our neighbors though they be not worthe of it, yea euen such as hate vs, and to incoeuor to doe them good, & to ouercome them by doing good for cull. But this will be the better vnderstoode, if wee take the matter by partes.

Deut. 6. 1. 2.

First we must cal to minde here what hath bin declared vpon the sixth chapter, that is to wit, that it is not for vs to measure Gods iudgements after our fancie, for we must needs graunt, that sometimes they bee as a bottomlesse pit: but yet for all that, they cease not to bee rightfull still. Then that we not alwayes see the reason of Gods doings: but yet must we lyke well of them without gainesaying. For it is good reason that all creatures should hope to him, and that he should not be bound to veld any account. And therefore when the thing that God commaundeth vs seemeth strange: let vs hold our mindes in awe and subiection, and yelde God so much honor, as to confesse that he is righteous & iust though we perceiue it not. Let that serue for one point.

Againe when we see him vter such rigor towards others, as to vs may seeme excessive: therein let vs acknowledge his goodnesse and mercie towards vs: for hee might doe the lyke to vs. Or what or of whom is it long that we perish not, as well as they vpon whome God powreth out the extremitie of his rigor: It is certein that our finnes haue well deserved that as much should befall vs: but God beareth with vs of his infinite goodnesse. Therefore let vs sit and in awe, For though God vse goodnesse and patience towards vs as now: yet hath not he forgotten our faultes, except wee our selues doe beare them in minde. And therefore let vs vnderstand y God might iustly destroy vs, and thereupon let vs cal our selues home to him, and preuent the thing y is to be feared, y is to wit: least he should stretch forth his arme to consume vs. So then, the executions of Gods iudgements ought to be as warninges vnto vs, to enter into the knowledge of our finnes, y when we haue giuen God thanks for bearing with vs, wee may learne to returne home to him againe.

But yet notwithstanding, when we haue well considered all things: [wee shall finde that] it was not without cause that God commaunded his people to roote out all the folk that dwelt in the land of Chanaan. For he had already born with them a long time, as hath bin declared. Shall we thinke it strange, y after God had rayed foure hundred yeeres for men y were despisers of his maiestie, & giuen to all naughtinesse: he should in the end haue no more pitie vpon them, but will them to be vtrelly wiped out of the world? But such were all those nations. For although they were malicious and sroward already in the time of Abraham, and it was apparent that the land was infected with their filthinesse: yet did God auow, that their wickednesse was not yet come to the full growth. And therefore hee delayed his wrath, not for the space of halfe a score yeeres only, but full foure hundred yeeres together. He let them alone in ease and rest and they waxed stil woofe and worse, and hardened more and more. It seemeth that Gods goodnesse gaue the more libertie to doe euill. Therefore it was high time for God to pur forth his mighty hand then or neuer to destroy them, seeing hee found them so farre past grace. And in deed, we can well skil to desire God to punish the wicked, and it greueth vs that he should beare with the, & if he make delay, we thinke hee is too patient. Againe, if hee vse rigor after his long tariance: the we cry out that he is too feaure, and we ask if he could not deale otherwise thā so. To be plain, there is no measure in vs. For if God satisfy not our desires, we fal to cōplaining, one while of his ouergreat gentleness, & another while of his ouergreat seueritie. And if he execute not such vengeance at y first dash as we would wishe, we thinke he is a sleape, & that hee dissembleth too much. And dayly we here such murmuringes as these: What meanes he by this? Why doth hee forbear so long? Againe on the other side, if God come with his power to punish men according to their deseruing: then, alas how comes it to passe y God (who reporteth himselfe to be so patient & pitifull,) doth now shewe himselfe so rigorous against vs? Yea, but we consider not that while our sinnes prouoke his wrath, & while we stack vp wood to kindle the fire of it, he allureth vs to repentance by gentleness. For he giueth vs leasure to return vnto him, to the end we should aske him forgiuenes. And if we doe not so, must he not then shew himselfe to be our iudge? In like taking were the people of whom Moses maketh mentiō here. For Gods intent was not to punish the wout iust cause: sentence was giue vpon the aforehand in y time of Abrahā. And now there are foure hundred yeeres runne out since: and is not y a terme long enough? did these nations amend of all that time? Nay, contrariwise they cesed not to giue theselues ouerto al naughtines, & because they were not corrected, they became the worse: & y more stubborne, & their malapernesse increased more & more. Now the God executeth y sentence which he had giuen vpon the foure hundred yeere before: for hee knoweth y they be past remedie. And therefore let vs learn to glorify him in his iudgements, & whereas we see y reason of the, let vs not cease to conclude wout disputing (yea euē when we perceiue not y reason of the) y he is iust & righteous, and y he weicht his workes in such balance, as there is no fault to bee found in them, and that if wee chance to checke against them, we shalbe confounded in our blasphemie. And so ye see what we haue to remember.

Againē, whē God listeth to execute his rigor: Ictnor vs allege his mercie to him. True it is y in resorting vnto him we must alwayes beseech him to voutsafe to receiue vs to mercie, & al our prayers must begin & end w this confession, y if God vsed not his goodnesse wee shoulde be vndone, & there would be no more hope of saluation for vs: & therefore it standeth vs in hand to flee for refuge to Gods mere mercie. But the thing y I speake of as now, is y we must not reply against God when he listeth to deale rigorously w vs: for there is none of vs al, but he could finde in his heart to make God to stoop to his lure. Let vs beware of such presumptuousnesse, & rather doe him the honor to say y his iustice is vnblameable in all points & all respects. And forasmuch as it is so we haue to note, y whensoever God punisheth y wicked, it is not enough for vs to confesse y he doth it iustly: but also if he commaūd vs to execute his iudgements, we must doe it, & we must shut our eyes at all things. For as for him y will be more pitifull thā God: although he be cōmended of men, & that his doing haue some shewe of vertue: Yet doth he most leawdly blasphemie him which is y fountaine of all goodnesse. The man y pretendeth to be more mercifull than God: is worse than the diuell. For why? What are we? Let vs make comparision between God & vs. Behold, God will haue vs to execute rigor: & we will needes call him back to mercie: now is not that a spiring of him, as though wee would spit in his face if we could? Yes: for there is nothing more peculiar to him than his goodnesse. Let vs take away his goodnesse from him, & he is no longer God. Shal we imagine God to be but sonic dead thing? Nay, when we speake of God, we must vnderstand y al goodnesse is in him, & that we haue none at al in vs, but by smal peeces, such as it pleaseth him to bestowe vpon vs. Now then, if a man wil needes say, I wil vse mercie, when God forbiddeth him: what a presumptuousnesse is y? So then, let vs marke well in this text, that it is not enough for vs to confesse that God doth iustly punish whom he listeth, but also y if he list to giue vs the charge & cōmission to execute his iudgements, we must goe through w it wout skanning or gainesaying. And therefore in matters of Iustice, men must forbear their own opinions & wils, & not be so ouerweening, as to take leaue to do what they thinke good, or to turn aside one way or other: but haue a regard to followe the rule that our Lord giueth them, assuring themselves that the authoritie of Iustice is tyed to the thing which he sheweth, and that his putting of them in that cōmission, is to the intent they should repress & punish euil doers, and maintaine & defend good folke. Seeing it is so: it is meete y y vse therof should be therater.

Moreouer, as cōcerning these nations whom Moses speakech of: Let vs marke that besides the other crimes & enormities which they had cōmitted: there was also a contempt of God, which was vtterly intollerable. In deece, we will make no great reckoning of that: but yet doth GOD make reckoning of it, and hee passeth not what we haue imagined: for all our imaginations are corrupted. Whē God doth once set vp his iudgment seate: we may well pur forth our opinion, but y thing which God hath ordeyned must stand, & not be repealed. Now the let vs note, y whensoever Gods honor is lightly esteemed, then must rigor be vsed rather thā mercie in y behalf. And we must call to minde y example y is rehearsed in y first booke of kinges; namely of Achab who would needes shewe mercy to Benhadad king of Syria.

Syria.

Syria. And there is expressly this saying, that whē Benhadad came to him to ſew for mercie, al that euer he ſaid vnto him was no more but this, that the kings of Iſrael were mercifull and kind heard.
 And behold, that goodly vertue of clemencie ouercame his heart: by meanes wherof wheras God commaunded him to execute rigour, he ſhewed mercie. But it happened vnto him as he had deſerued. And why? For the Syrians had committed horrible blaſphemie againſt God & ſcorned him, ſaying: He is y God of y mountains, but
